WISE artists will weigh well before consenting to broadcast (for perhaps more than once—if that even) for one excellent reason: the state of the broadcasting art is far from being perfected. Transmission is not yet unvaryingly of the best, nor is reception always excellent. The consequence is that, together with the not infrequent presence of static, the singing voice and any other music instrument are not always reproduced with reasonable fidelity.

Suppose, for purposes of illustration, an artist consents to broadcast and the conditions are not of the best. A relatively poor impression is made upon the hearers . . . hundreds of thousands, in any average broadcasting, and now and again millions. Can that not operate to the financial disadvantage of the artist? It can, for it already has.

There are many angles to this broadcasting situation. The cautious artists will have nothing to regret in thus conducting themselves. Let the project be worked out more completely before it is launched. Just now it smacks of a kind of haste which may leave a wake of regrets.

LAWRENCE TIBBETT, an American baritone, finds himself far more important today than he was prior to last Friday evening, when he "stopped the show" at the Metropolitan Opera House by some singing and acting that made a striking impression on those attending the first performance of Falstaff presented by the Metropolitan management in fifteen years.

Mr. Tibbett deported himself with commendable modesty in the matter of taking a curtain call. He is said to be a sensible young man, and married. That fact should prompt him to view his experience with a serious mind, because his future can be helped or marred by the way he turns to account the attention he has drawn to himself.

While this gifted artist deserved the recognition he received it is a fact that some of his singing (regardless of its effect upon the audience) was technically of a character dangerous to the beauty, security, and longevity of his voice. For Mr. Tibbett "opened" certain tones which should have been delivered in a "closed" position, and he forced those tones at times until it seemed as though they might break.

The "passage" of the baritone voice is as necessary to develop to a smooth and well ordered state as it is for the soprano, tenor, mezzo-soprano, contralto, or bass. Few singers effect their transitions smoothly, so that the blending of the tones on lower and higher pitches is accomplished as it rightly should be. Mr. Tibbett has far too fine a voice and too splendid a talent to overlook certain principles which he must recognize, understand, and conquer if he is to rise to real heights and stay there. And one of those principles, incidentally, is the exercise of vocal restraint.

NEW YORK is conscious no doubt of its indebtedness to certain individuals for some of the distinctive musical things which are put in its way. A novelty here, another one there; each for the most part unlike the others, yet part of the chain that links them all together.

During recent years Kurt Schindler and the Schola Cantorum which he trains and conducts in concerts have been contributing factors to the interesting music morsels accepted and partaken of eagerly. There has followed usually some reminiscence of the fortune thus bestowed; so Mr. Schindler has come gradually to assume a rather special place in Gotham quite his own.

The announcement of a performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera-legend Sadko, and on the same program the more extended music drama Briseis, by Chabrier, held a Christmas-tide flavor . . . since the date set was soon after the late hanging of stockings—actual and metaphorical.

THE "SOLD OUT" sign greeted those late-comers who arrived at Carnegie Hall near the scheduled starting hour expecting to secure tickets. That was enough to stir the more the anticipations of those who were already assured of their places. Musicians and others who have the faculty of knowing pretty much what is excellent and the reverse were present, which gave Mr. Schindler enough stimulus to put forward his very best foot.

But try as he unquestionably did, things did not move with the degree of smoothness which was necessary to a satisfactory interpretation of either of the works. The opinions of the newspaper reviewers appear elsewhere in this issue of the Musical Digest, and they tell a reasonably accurate story.

I do not know whether sufficient rehearsals were had; it seemed, from the character of the performance, that uncertainty dwelled. Surely Mr. Schindler experienced difficulty in keeping his forces moving in their proper ways. And Briseis could have been cut materially . . . to decided advantage, so far as the auditors were concerned.

TWO of the numerous soloists who were outlined boldly in their accomplishments of the evening were John Charles Thomas and Dusolina Giannini. Such singing as Mr. Thomas offered last Tuesday evening is of a high enough order to dwell upon because so little as good is heard nowadays. His climax in the Song of the Venetian Merchant was made thrilling through means so legitimate that it will not soon be forgotten by those present who had discernment. It was vocalism and interpretative artistry far and away superior to what Mr. Thomas achieved only a few days before at a Plaza Hotel morning musicale.

If this baritone will adhere to the line he maintained so steadfastly throughout his Sadko endeavors he can make for himself a wholly unique place. He is preparing for a year of opera in Brussels (beginning next summer); and it is possible for him to take ultimately in the world of opera a most important place—provided he does certain specific things and refrains from indulging in vocal artificialities which cannot remain in the resources of a truly great artist.

MISS GIANNINI is manifestly endowed with voice. It is like rich cream and just as thick. Nor has the singing talent been withheld from this young woman. She has the inherent understanding of the meaning of a song, and as time goes on she will acquire, I am sure, that degree of authoritativeness which is now one of the elements which makes the best which Mr. Thomas offers so impressive.

Some of Miss Giannini's phrases caused sensitive spines to tingle; and occasionally, when a top tone got free, there was a hint at the natural soaring quality which this soprano's voice possesses.

I had hoped for more from Marguerite d'Alvarez, for where is there a finer contralto than hers? The late Jeanne Gerville-Reache had a similar one; but her use of it was altogether different . . . and there was a technical consistency which lately has been lacking in the singing of Mme. d'Alvarez.

Now and again she sent forth a phrase in the upper reaches of her voice that was of sterling fineness. Almost at once thereafter she lapsed again into big and improperly produced tones—many of them on low notes in which the singer resorted to the "open chest" in a fashion which prohibited her true resonance and, I regret to state, interfered somewhat frequently with the true pitch.

ENGLISH-TEXT devotees must concede that Mr. Schindler's version of the Russian original was not all they would have liked. But putting a foreign libretto into English, keeping it the while singable and otherwise appropriate, is a bit of a task. Finding equivalents in our tongue for words in another—and preserving at the same time the accents—is something of a trick, which is not always to be achieved even by the most capable who turn their hands to that form of work.

Briseis was sung in French, and did not suffer thereby.

KOCHANSKI

"A large house displayed increasing enthusiasm throughout the recital." —Lawrence Gilman in the N. Y. Tribune-Herald

Copyright, Gute Kunst

W. J. Henderson, Sun, December 15.

"There were opportunities in plenty for the display of Kochanski's vivacious talents. This artist's sound qualities of ripened musicianship blended with a rapier like temperament and an unusual program provided an afternoon of rare enjoyment."

Irving Weil, Journal, December 15.

His performance of this music (Suite Populaire Espagnole) was the high spot of the afternoon. The suite was played with a complete grasp of its difficulties and an equally full exposition of its spirit."

NEW YORK RECITAL

CARNEGIE HALL

DECEMBER 13th, 1924

Lawrence Gilman, Tribune-Herald, December 14

"Kochanski is rapidly making it clear to attentive concertgoers that he is to be ranked among the most admirable violinists now before the public. He is a superb technician. He plays with a tone that is most always transparent, distinguished and beautiful; his bow arm should be the envy of many a well-advertised fiddler; he responds to beauty and mood like a poet and he phrases like a musician."

Deems Taylor, World, December 14

"The young violinist brought his usual skill and artistry to a generous and exacting program."

Olin Downs, Times, December 14

"These melodies (Suite Populaire Espagnole) fiery, caressing, capricious as the case may be, are idiomatic for the violin and they were presented with feeling and brilliancy by Kochanski."

W. P. Tryon, Christian Science Monitor, December 15

"People who like violin playing, but who are willing to give their time and money only to the most accomplished kind, can count on that kind from Kochanski."

Journal of Commerce, December 15

"Kochanski once again demonstrated his masterly musicianship. It was an afternoon of good violin music interpretated by a genuine artist."

Season 1925 1926 Now Booking

Concert Management GEORGE ENGLES

Aeolian Bldg., New York

Three Novelties Are Given in L. A. Concert

Rothwell Conducts Program of Goldmark, Honegger, Malipiero and Brahms.

Los Angeles, Dec. 24.—Walter Henry Rothwell introduced three novelties at the concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra last Friday afternoon. Rubin Goldmark's Negro Rhapsody, Honegger's Pastorale d'Ete, and Francisco Malipiero's Impressioni dal Vero were offered as a contrast to Brahms' Second Symphony, which closed the program.

The prevailing sentiment among the reviewers seemed to indicate that, although the modern works proved interesting, they served only to emphasize the value and beauty of the Symphony. The Goldmark piece, according to Carl Bronson of the Herald, is a "cleverly orchestrated piece," and Edwin Schallert of the Times found it "a sonorous and really beautiful composition" with a "good deal of emotional urge." Bruno David Ussher of the Express dismissed this work by a pupil of Dvorak as "a bright piece" needing little comment. It was called a "forceful, virile work in high color tension" by Jose Rodriguez of the Record.

This writer thought the Honegger Pastorale the best of the three novelties, possessing "unquestioned beauty and much poetry." The Examiner chronicler termed it "a bit of precocious urbanity." Mr. Schallert said it created a mood "unostentatious and very charming."

Of the Impressioni dal Vero, Mr. Bronson wrote that it was "a very beautiful piece of scoring and did not fall short of its composer's intent in the hands of orchestra and director." The reviewer in the Examiner thought it "an almost conventional nocturne." This chronicler's remark that the Brahms Symphony under Mr. Rothwell's baton, "became beautifully articulate, its complexities resolved into beauties" was indicative of the general enthusiasm with which the reading was received.

The fifth "pop" concert under Mr. Rothwell's direction was, according to the Daily News "a distinguished success." Three numbers were given for the first time in Los Angeles; Variations on a Russian Theme, Czibulka's Fly Minuet, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's The Bumblebee. Other numbers were Rabaud's Procession Nocturne, Mendelssohn's Wedding March, and Tschaikowsky's Marche Slav. Z. Earl Meeker, baritone, was the assisting artist.

Offer Choral Composition Prize

The People's Choral Union of Boston is offering a prize of $100 for the best part song for mixed voices with piano accompaniment which is submitted in conformance with certain conditions. The text and music must be spirited and joyous in character, singable, and not too complex. The length is to about ten minutes in performance. The competition is open to all American citizens, and the judges will be musicians of standing, whose names will be announced later.

Muri Silba Soloist With Hertz

Cecilia Hansen Plays at Pop Concert; Denishawn Dancers and Sophie Braslau Appear

San Francisco, Dec. 24.—At the fourth Friday concert of the season the San Francisco Symphony, conducted by Alfred Hertz, was assisted by Muri Silba, pianist, who played the E minor Concerto of Chopin. The program included also Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Respighi's Ballad of the Gnomides.

Mr. Woodman in the Call first of all praised Miss Silba, who, he wrote in his review, displayed "artistry" in her playing. Of the Ballad this reviewer said that he would like to hear it repeated. Mr. Woodman found the Beethoven fresh and pleasing as ever, and Ray Brown reported in the Chronicle that the Pastoral was never read more freshly by Mr. Hertz. Mr. Brown described the Respighi as a "polychromatic piece of Italian modernism, harmonic daring, and most original and interesting orchestration."

This commentator praised Muri Silba for her interpretation of the Chopin, and the Examiner writer, Mr. Mason, concurred, reporting Miss Silba as an artist with "a rare gift of expression." Mr. Mason said besides that the Pastoral was "admirably done," and that the Gnomides Ballad was "a musical treat."

The third municipal popular concert was given by Mr. Hertz and the orchestra last Friday evening. The interest of the occasion was centered in the soloist, Cecilia Hansen, violinist. Concerning her playing Ray Brown wrote in the Chronicle that Miss Hansen "won her audience, and scored a big success." The Herald reviewer called her a great artist, while Mr. Mason reported: "She played the Beethoven Concerto with a sort of spiritual fragrance." There was an audience of 10,000 in the Civic Auditorium to hear the popular program, which included also the Phedre Overture, Tschaikowsky's Francesca da Rimini, and Schubert's Unfinished Symphony.

Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn and the Denishawn Dancers opened a week's engagement at the Curran Theatre on December 15. That they made a deep impression on the public was shown by the large audiences which greeted them at every appearance. To quote Mr. Woodman, "Ruth St. Denis is a superb artist, and Ted Shawn gave an exhibition of plastic posing in the Adagio Pathetique which was as fine as could be done."

One of the leading recitalists who have recently appeared in San Francisco is Sophie Braslau, contralto. The reviewers and audience praised her in such a manner that her managers arranged immediately for a second concert for the end of December. Ray C. Brown said: "Her voice is as rich as ever in its gamut of color from a flaming red to a crystalline blue, and as broad in its range from the depths to the heights." Mr. Mason wrote frankly that "Braslau alone of our American contraltos has the absorbing interest and earnestness which goes with art of the highest kind."

"A singer of immense powers" was one of the phrases used by Charles Woodman in his report of the concert of Miss Braslau. M. J. C.

IN THE effort of the National Federation of Music Clubs to give the musical public a fuller knowledge of what the American composer is doing in the field of opera Clarence Gustlin, American pianist, is aiding with the "interp-recitals" which he is giving all over the country. The operas being presented in Mr. Gustlin's lecture recitals include The Echo, by Frank Patterson; Castle Agrazant, by Ralph Lyford; Alglala, by Cecil Fanning and Francesco de Leone.

The above photograph of Mrs. John F. Lyons, President of the Federation (left), Mr. Gustlin, and Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, was taken before Mr. Gustlin started on his tour of New England.

Pianist and Violinist in Concert

A joint recital was given at Aeolian Hall, December 28, by Richard Singer, Hungarian pianist, and Andre Polah, Dutch violinist. The Sonata for piano and violin by Sylvo Lazzari, with which the artists opened the concert, made "a very effective ensemble," to quote the Times. This writer spoke of the warm applause with which Mr. Singer was recalled, and lauded Mr. Polah for his technique, as well as his "full, vivid tone coloring, spirited interpretation and expressiveness." The other newspapers did not carry analytical reports of the concert.

"One of the finest voices ever heard in Richmond."

Richmond Times-Dispatch.

CECIL ARDEN

Mezzo-Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company

Featuring on all her programs

CARMEN'S DREAM

(IN COSTUME)

A Fantasy for Voice and Piano, especially arranged for Miss Arden by Buzzi-Peccia.

On that fatal night that Don Jose leaves with Micaela and the last notes of the toreador's songs are heard growing fainter and fainter, Carmen, alone, exhausted by the emotions of the day, somberly brooding in her corner, falls into a heavy sleep. As she dreams, all her experiences in love, its joys and sorrows pass through her troubled mind like phantoms of remorse.

Available for a Few Engagements in April and Spring Festivals

Address: Management of CECIL ARDEN, 27 West 67th St. — Trafalgar 3746.

Musical Chicago En Courant

Choruses Take Place of Recitalists During Christmas Concert Lapse; A Pair of Modernists.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Dec. 30.

CHRISTMAS WEEK brought with it an unwonted quiet in the concert halls. The choral societies and the opera dared compete with the love of the home during the week, and the symphony orchestra also resumed activities after its pre-Christmas rest.

Annual performances of the Messiah by the Apollo Musical Club and the Swedish Choral Society drew large audiences. Owing to the illness of Harrison Wild, conductor of the Apollo Club, Edgar Nelson conducted the two performances of that group as well as of his own Swedish Club. A feature of these concerts was the engagement of local singers for the solo parts. This was a popular measure. Among those who proved their right to sing the difficult Handel music were Herbert Gould, Elsie Arendt, Anna Burmeister, Louise Harrison Slade, all well known in the local churches and concert halls.

ANOTHER Chicagoan who spent a busy week was Leo Sowerby. He played his own piano Concerto with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. At the same time a jazz piece of his was in performance in New York under Paul Whiteman. As it was impossible to be at two places at once, Mr. Sowerby delegated the baton to the hands of Mr. Whiteman, and himself remained to receive the plaudits for his concerto with Mr. Stock.

Sowerby's growth as a composer has been of interest to all who have watched his progress. As the first beneficiary of the American Prix de Rome, he has just completed three years' residence in Rome. During that time he has composed much and played his own works in many places. These appearances have included recitals in London, Rome and Florence and a participation in the Salzburg Festival.

His piano concerto is a revised version of an earlier work which originally contained a part for solo soprano voice. Both the work and his playing thereof have improved immeasurably. A real modernist is Sowerby, with an almost uncanny knowledge of the modern orchestra, and a genuine individuality.

A SECOND modernist now in Chicago is Henry Eichheim, whose mode of thought as to the tempered scale is so untempered by his Oriental investigations that one is almost appalled at his reasoning. Not, however, at his music. His particular interest in Chicago at present is in the coming performance of some of his works by Allied Arts, Inc., an organization which includes Eric DeLamarter and some twenty-five players of the Symphony Orchestra and Adolph Bolm's Ballet Intime. Mr. Eichheim will conduct several of his own pieces and a ballet for which Mr. Bolm has arranged an old Chinese legend. For this latter composition Mr. Eichheim has brought a number of native instruments, many of whose names are entirely unknown.

AT THE Chicago Civic Opera things are looking up. Good performances beget good houses, and particularly choice Christmas fare was planned to beguile tired Christmas shoppers away from their comfortable firesides.

Louise was superbly done with a quartet including Garden, Ansseau, Baklanoff (for whose return Chicago is giving thanks) and Maria Claessens, best of operatic mothers. The character bits of the Noctambule scene were done in a way to make one regret the omission of the Atelier scene with its atmosphere and musical value. Incidentally it is so much a keynote of the Montmartre scene following that the story seems quite incomplete without it.

THE IMPORTANT debut of the week was Hidalgo, Spanish coloratura, last heard in Chicago fifteen years ago, when she was an immature girl with a voice of great promise. Her performance of Rosina in the Barber on Thursday last convinced all of the present maturity of her art. Her manner is quite free. In fact, no inhibitions of any sort were visible either in her acting or singing. Quite the most Spanish of the Chicago roster of Rosinas, Miss Hidalgo fitted into the merry whirl of the comedy cast—Chaliapin, Schipa and Trevisan—perfectly. Chaliapin added to the gaiety of the occasion by an interpolated "Merry Christmas" in his monetary arrangements with Dr. Barthalo.

Friday night brought a hearing of the Chicago company's most popular opera, Otello. There is a reason for this, or, to be exact, there are several reasons. Not only is the opera in itself a reason, but there was a cast to sing and enact it as Shakespeare and Verdi must have intended. Tenors with the voice and size to sing Otello are rare. Since Slezak, only Charles Marshall has succeeded in being completely satisfying in the part. . . . Add Raisa with her singing of the prayer in the last act. . . . And then there was the malign Iago of Joseph Schwarz.

Glenn Gunn called it the "world's best cast."

THE POPULAR priced children's performance of Hansel and Gretel on Sunday afternoon brought joy to the hearts of children young and old. Maria Claessens' witch was fearsome enough for all, and her transition into gingerbread was greeted with shouts of glee. The important event of the afternoon was the debut of two talented stage children, the Hansel and Gretel of the show. Helen Derzbach, just seventeen, was a most bewitching Gretel, with the aplomb of years to come. Edith Orens, scarcely older, was a quieter contrast to her (his) vivacious sister. The performance was the company's first production of the year in English.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Romeo and Juliet—with Mmes. Mason and Claessens; and Messrs. Hackett, Formichi, and Cotreuil; Mr. Polacco conducting.

TOMORROW

Lucia di Lammermoor—with Mme. dal Monte and Messrs. Schipa, Rimini, and Lazzari; Mr. Polacco conducting.

THURSDAY

Werther — with Mmes. Garden and Freund; and Messrs. Ansseau and Kipnis; Mr. Polacco conducting.

FRIDAY

Traviata — with Mme. Muzio and Messrs. Schipa and Schwarz; Mr. Cimini conducting.

SATURDAY

Trovatore (matinee) — with Mmes. Muzio and Homer; and Messrs. Lamont and Formichi; Mr. Weber conducting.

Rigoletto (evening)—with Mme. Macbeth and Messrs. Hackett and Formichi; Mr. Weber conducting.

Louise Has First Chicago Presentation of Year

Chicago, Dec. 25.—Charpentier's Louise was given its first presentation this season by the Civic Opera Company last evening with Mary Garden, Maria Claessens, Fernand Ansseau, and Georges Baklanoff in the leading roles. In spite of the fact that it was Christmas Eve, there was a large audience which applauded vigorously.

Glenn Dillard Gunn wrote in the Herald Examiner that years have failed to dim Miss Garden's "remarkable interpretation." He thought that never before had she been more convincing in the role, nor had she sung the part better. Of the same opinion was Edward Moore of the Tribune who said that she proved herself "just about the ideal Louise, so much better in the part than she was last season."

According to Mr. Gunn, Mr. Ansseau "sang brilliantly," Mme. Claessens "added to the remarkable interpretation of the part of the mother, which is one of the reasons for her enduring fame," and Mr. Baklanoff "quite consoled us for the loss of Dufranne." Mr. Moore agreed that "there was some remarkable co-operation by three other excellent artists."

The conductor was Giorgio Polacco.

Marshall and Schwarz Appear in Otello

Rosa Raisa Sings Part of Desdemona; Roberto Moranzoni Directs.

Chicago, Dec. 27.—The performance of Otello by the Civic Opera Company last evening with Charles Marshall, Joseph Schwarz and Rosa Raisa in the leading roles evoked warm and ringing applause from the newspaper reviewers. Karleton Hackett of the Post wrote that Mr. Marshall, who gave "a forceful and dignified" portrayal of the Moor, sang "with rich, solid tones." The performance of Iago by Mr. Schwarz was "superb," according to Mr. Hackett, marked by "imaginative force" and "vocal command that brought out every shade of meaning." Mme. Raisa, he continued, "played the role with a sincerity that gave it appeal."

The response of Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner was even more enthusiastic, and he did not hesitate to state that the opera was performed "by the finest cast that could have been assembled in the world." Of Mr. Marshall's work, he was particularly laudatory and said that but once in a generation is such a voice as his heard—"one with the power and range demanded by this role in the possession of an actor who comprehends the nobility of drama."

Mr. Hackett did not find Mme. Raisa, except in the last act, in good voice, but Edward Moore of the Tribune wrote that she was "lovely, gracious, of high breeding and serene manner."

Mr. Gunn found the smaller parts trusted to most efficient artists and other writers agreed as to the excellence of the whole performance. In the cast were also Maria Claessens, Jose Mojica, Lodovico Oliviero, Alexander Kipnis, Antonio Nicolich, and Gildo Morelato. Roberto Moranzoni conducted, to quote Mr. Hackett, "with authority and gave a richly colored reading of the score."

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Solfitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

MARCELLA ROESELER
DRAMATIC SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA CO.
AVAILABLE FOR CONCERTS—ORATORIOS—RECITALS.
Address personally--Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. C.

M U Z I O
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Two Chicagoans Debut in Hansel and Gretel

Edith Orens and Helen Derzbach Sing Title Roles; Mmes. Claessens and Lenska Appear.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Two young Chicagoans made their debuts with the Chicago Civic Opera Company in the title roles of Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel yesterday afternoon. They were Edith Orens, seventeen, and Helen Derzbach, eighteen. Others in the cast were Maria Claessens, Augusta Lenska, William Beck, Gladys Swarthout, and Lucie Westen. Frank St. Leger conducted, and Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner congratulated him "on his fine reading of the score" and the orchestra "on their beautiful and sympathetic response." Maurice Rosenfeld of the News said that he "interpreted the difficult score with authority and musical insight."

Edward Moore of the Tribune expressed himself as delighted with the work of the two debutantes, and asserted that "they have possibilities quite out of the ordinary." Mr. Gunn was "astonished by their musical gifts, their vocal attainments and their pronounced talent for the stage." They were also congratulated by him for their "faultless English" and excellent diction. Agreed as to their vocal and histrionic ability was Mr. Rosenfeld, but Karleton Hackett, although expressing admiration for the attainments of Miss Orens and Miss Derzbach found their singing "came rather faintly to the ear" and cautioned them against taxing their voices until they had further matured.

Of others in the cast, Mr. Moore wrote: "Maria Claessens was a splendid witch, William Beck and Augusta Lenska made altogether human characters out of the father and mother; and there was some highly attractive singing in the single solos contributed by Gladys Swarthout as the sandman and Lucie Westen as the dewman." Mr. Gunn stated that Mme. Claessens "sang the part brilliantly;" that Mr. Beck sang with "fine and resonant tone;" that Miss Lenska displayed "tonal richness;" that Miss Westen made her solo "a beautiful moment;" and that the vocal honors of the performance went to Miss Swarthout for "the glowing tone, the detailed evaluation of the text, the appreciation for the beauty of the English in her song." On the other hand, Mr. Hackett considered the performance "unsteady" and the singing below average.

The opera was followed by a group of divertissements, under the direction of Serge Ourainsky, assisted by Mlles. Elisius, Milar, Nemeroff, Shermont, and members of the Pavley-Oukrainsky ballet.

AUGUSTA LENSKA

Whose Appearances in Contralto Roles in Her Present First Year With the Chicago Opera Are Creating a Deep Impression.

Elvira de Hidalgo Sings Role of Rosina in Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 28.—In the repetition of the Barber of Seville at the Opera on Christmas night Elvira de Hidalgo sang the role of Rosina. Edward Moore, reviewer of the Tribune, called this "a flashing performance" of the part. He recalled her singing of the part fifteen years ago on the same platform, and commented on the present maturity and personality of Miss Hidalgo. Mr. Moore added: "I have seldom heard such astonishing feats of coloratura singing performed with less apparent effort. Her voice runs higher, truer, easier than in almost anyone you would care to name. At that it is sub-acid in quality, belonging to the clarinet rather than the flute type." He referred to Miss Hidalgo's acting of the part as rather "rowdy."

Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner was "impressed most with this singer's ease. Nothing causes her to exert herself. In every range her voice is equal. It floats on the breath, the tone perfectly poised, instantly at her command in any volume required, as flexible as a clarinet and as brilliant." At the same time Mr. Gunn reported that the voice was not one of "sensuous beauty nor one of great potentialities of expression." He felt that the "edged tone" tended to be always of the same quality.

Reading Hears Messiah

Reading, Dec. 24.—The first concert of the Reading Choral Society, conducted by N. Lindsay Norden, presented Handel's Messiah last Thursday evening. The soloists were Grace Kerns, soprano; Nevada van der Veer, contralto; Judson House, tenor, and Fred Patton, bass. Carroll W. Hartline was the organist.

Sowerby Plays Own Concerto in Chicago

Is Soloist With Symphony; Swedish Choral Society Sings Messiah.

Chicago, Dec. 27.—Leo Sowerby played his piano concerto as soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra nearly five years ago. Yesterday afternoon he played it again. In the interval, according to the Tribune reviewer, he has done "several things to the score and many to his piano playing, all tending toward betterment."

This writer found the concerto "audacious and jaunty" and interesting because of its "devil-may-care impertinence." Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner called it "adventurous." It had poetic appeal, said Mr. Gunn, although it avoided sentimentality, and altogether he considered it "wholesome music, too, with a stimulating humor." Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that he discovered in the work "an unmistakable sign of emotional feeling . . . a warmer lyricism and a more intense manner of expression" which were not apparent at its first hearing.

"The lyric element has come out more strongly and there were moments of great beauty . . . it is vigorous, fresh and exciting," wrote the Post reviewer. This chronicler stated that Mr. Sowerby "played it brilliantly," and the Tribune reviewer observed that he had added to his playing "an easy, fluent manner to the rollicking energy that he always had before." Mr. Gunn asserted that he was "an exceedingly efficient pianist, well supplied with technique, tonally resourceful, authoritative in manner, a personality."

The other numbers on the program were Bach's D major Suite, Humperdinck's Overture to Hansel and Gretel, and Borodin's Second Symphony. Frederick Stock, to quote Mr. Rosenfeld, "conducted the program with his usual musical mastery, and gave Sowerby sympathetic support in the concerto."

The Swedish Choral Club gave a performance of The Messiah last night in Orchestra Hall. Edgar A. Nelson conducted. The soloists were Else Harthan Arendt, Alvene Ressegue, Arthur Boardman, and Herbert Gould. In the words of the Herald Examiner commentator, the chorus had "fine spirit and commendable technical qualities to commend it. Mr. Nelson is a conductor whose fine native gifts have been ripened by experience." The Post complimented the chorus and director for the way in which the parts were "clearly defined and firmly woven together."

Damrosch Returns to New York Symphony

Toti dal Monte Is Soloist; Ravel Work Has American Premiere.

The New York Symphony Orchestra started the New Year again under the baton of Walter Damrosch. and with Toti dal Monte, coloratura soprano of the Metropolitan and Chicago operas, as soloist. Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, Saint-Saens' transcription of Schumann's Evensong, the entrance of the fauns from Pierne's ballet Cydalise, and Ravel's Alborado del Gracioso were played.

Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail commented that Mme. dal Monte had "edited" Mozart in her singing of his Queen of the Night from The Magic Flute. F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune stated she again proved herself the possessor of a voice "of notable range, fluency and carrying power." To Caro Nome, according to the writer in the World, she brought "that quality of a genuine personality—eager and more than a little plaintive." The Times reviewer said in her voice, "ringing high notes, rapid runs, light staccati, and all the apparatus of the coloratura soprano are present, and are employed with musicianship."

The Ravel work received its first American presentation. "Exotic and modern," it was called by the Times, and Mr. Perkins liked its "variety of coloring and atmosphere, bright and vivid in the opening and closing sections, more veiled and delicate in the middle."

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

KOLITSCH
NEW YORK RECITAL
CARNEGIE HALL
January 27, 1925
Management
Antonia Sawyer, Inc.
Aeolian Hall, New York

GIANNINI

A GLANCE at her list of engagements this season and at t to prove that Dusolina Giannini is one of the most sough

Press Comments from a few Cities in Giannini's

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., NOVEMBER 4, 1924

If there is a singer of the gentler sex with a nobler voice than Dusolina Giannini or who has more perfect control of her instrument than this young American artist, she remains unknown to this community.

Let us hope that Giannini will become an institution with us, for she represents the highest development of American vocal art of the present time and there is no singer native or foreign who in sheer glory of voice can rival her.

Minneapolis Tribune.

She heads the list of American singers of today and is bound to lay the world at her feet.

Minneapolis Journal.

I shall never forget Giannini nor will anyone else who heard her last night.

Minneapolis Daily Star.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, NOVEMBER 7, 1924

Not within recent years has a dramatic soprano crossed the concert horizon whose upper register is so clear, so powerful, and so penetrating without that objectionable intonation that is the stumbling block of every ambitious singer. Fervor marks her rendition.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

Giannini fully justified the extravagant praise which had been lavished on her.

Cincinnati Times-Star.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., NOVEMBER 10, 1924

Her voice was more perfect than Farrar's, younger and more vibrant than Galli Curci's, the equal of Onegin's in power, as perfect in tonal quality as Jeritza's. In fact she was the best of those artists personified in one person.

Montgomery Journal.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., NOVEMBER 12, 1924

Few large voiced artists sing with such facility and frankness.

New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Her art in using her voice cannot be criticised. She is a facile and deeply emotional artist, with an individualistic interpretation that is stirring in its ferver.

New Orleans Item.

UTICA, N. Y., NOVEMBER 19, 1924

She has youth. She has personality. But over and above everything else she has the true ear for music and the voice for expression. She captivated the audience with her first tones and held them until the last encore was ended. She is Giannini.

Utica Daily Press.

CHICAGO, ILL., NOVEMBER 25, 1924

She sang with a voice which easily identifies itself as conspicuous, and with a spirit which we like to hear in the recital hall, and do hear whenever a born singer comes along.

Chicago Journal.

The interesting young Italian needs no press agent, for she is her own advertisement and propaganda.

Chicago Evening American.

In her diversified selection of numbers there was versatility of style, musicianship of high order and a vocal rendition that deserved much praise.

Chicago Daily News.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 1, 1924

She has a marvelous voice and what is more she uses it like a great musician. She proved the most admirable new singer heard here in many years.

Boston Globe.

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

STEINWAY PIANO

Season 1925 - 1926 Now Bei

Exclusive Management: DANIEL MAYER, Ae

A list of Giannini's engagements 1924-1925

(her second season since her debut)

Morristown, N. J.	Morgantown, W. Va.
Oswego, N. Y.	Pittsburgh, Pa.
Oberlin, O.	*Philadelphia, Pa.
Kenosha, Wis.	*Pinehurst, N. C.
*Minneapolis, Minn.	Savannah, Ga.
Cincinnati, O. (2)	Columbia, S. C.
Montgomery, Ala.	St. Louis, Mo. (2)
*New Orleans, La.	Rochester, N. Y.
New York City (6)	Aurora, N. Y.
Utica, N. Y.	*Syracuse, N. Y.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	Marietta, O.
Danbury, Conn.	Providence, R. I.
Chicago, Ill.	Northampton, Mass.
*Buffalo, N. Y. (2)	Montreal, Can.
Boston, Mass. (3)	Holyoke, Mass.
*Washington, D. C.	Havana, Cuba (3)
*Baltimore, Md. (2)	Troy, N. Y.

*Reengagements from the previous season.
Including 5 reengagements from the previous season.

ss comments below is sufficient rtists before the public today.

Itinerary

Miss Giannini made last evening a rarely favorable im-ssion. May we hear her soon again, and often there-r.

Boston Post.

he was adept with phrase, rhythm, accent, transition, se and climax—the whole elaborate rhetoric of such a
sic. Her tones were shapely, full-throated, flowing and tic.

Boston Evening Transcript.

WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 2, 1924

Dusolina Giannini, soprano, probably the youngest great st now before the public, thrilled and enthused a capac-audience yesterday afternoon in Poli's Theatre, when gave a song recital, her first one here. Her voice is born of Italy, with the golden quality, the warmth and clarity found more frequently there than anywhere.

Washington Herald.

BALTIMORE, MD., DECEMBER 3, 1924

Giannini undoubtedly ranks among the foremost so-nos on the concert stage. Her voice is strong, fresh vibrant. Her tones are full and round. Her vocalizais well nigh perfect and she is a versatile linguist, as wn by her repertory of songs in six languages.

Baltimore News.

PITTSBURGH, PA., DECEMBER 11, 1924

Miss Giannini made her local debut in a manner that es no doubt as to the singer's worth. Not for some e has such enthusiasm attended the first singing of any st in Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh Press.

Booked

Hall, New York

VICTOR RECORDS

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

The Beethoven Association

An extra-subscription concert was given by the Beethoven Association in Aeolian Hall the evening of December 29. The artists who appeared were the Flonzaley Quartet; Harold Bauer and Myra Hess, pianists; Louis Graveure, baritone; Bronislaw Huberman, violinist; and Felix Salmond, cellist. Mr. Graveure was accompanied in a group of Brahms' songs by Arpad Sandor.

Ernest Newman of the Post asserted that "it is too rarely that one hears ensemble playing so perfect in its finish as this." The same high standard established at the beginning of the concert by the Flonzaley Quartet, he continued, was maintained by the other artists. The Haydn Quartet in D minor was played, according to Deems Taylor of the World, with their "wonted flawless skill" by the Flonzaley Quartet. W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that they brought to the work "their well known richness of tone, warmth of style and clarity of enunciation."

Bach's Harpsichord Concerto in C minor, transcribed for two pianos by Mr. Bauer was, said Mr. Henderson, "excellently performed" by Miss Hess and Mr. Bauer. Deems Taylor referred to it as a "beautiful performance" and Olin Downes of the Times wrote that they "collaborated with admirable agreement, with musicianly enthusiasm, and tone that matched well in sonority and color."

In spite of a "limited tone color," Mr. Newman found in Mr. Graveure's singing "the nicest feeling for style and the finest phrasing." Olin Downes felt that he sang "with understanding and sincere feeling," while the reviewer in the Herald Tribune found him in good voice, "accentuating the high lights of his numbers and producing a tone of caressing softness for quieter passages."

Mr. Huberman, Mr. Bauer, and Mr. Salmond closed the program with the Beethoven D major Trio. Mr. Henderson wrote that they "gave themselves with devotion to the performance of this work," and Mr. Downes called them three "virtuosos, who however exalted the composer in a manner not always the virtuoso's custom. The pianism of Mr. Bauer and the noble, rich tone of Mr. Salmond were especially worthy of praise." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail considered it "an orthodox program" with orthodox performers. He did not care for Mr. Bauer's transcription of the Concerto.

Ruth Breton With Philharmonic

Henry Hadley conducted the Philharmonic concert the afternoon of Dec. 28, at which Ruth Breton, violinist who made her debut here earlier in the season, was soloist. Miss Breton played the Glazounow Concerto, and the orchestral numbers were Ballantine's Garden of Hellas, Berlioz's Roman Carnival, and Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony. These numbers, according to the Times reviewer, were "conducted with authority and eloquence" and were warmly applauded by the audience.

The concerto was rendered by Miss Breton, to quote the Telegram-Mail chronicler, "with exquisite finish." The World writer said that the work "could only emphasize her finely tempered, full throated tone and her calm, unswerving belief in herself and her instrument" and that the young artist met the tests of this show piece "brilliantly." Miss Breton brought to the piece, wrote the Sun commentator, "much more interest for the listener than is usually the case when it is heard. Her tone was rich, though infrequently there was some loss of color, and her double stopping, as in the long cadenza, of clarity and correct pitch."

The reviewer in the Times found evidence of "her temperament and her inborn talent for her instrument and thought that she redeemed much of the conventionality of the piece "by her feeling and her warm and brilliant tone." In the Herald Tribune she was lauded for "the musical quality, her poised and modest bearing, and the sincerity of her artistic attitude." Ernest Newman of the Post thought the playing of both orchestra and soloist in the concerto "dry and labored."

Concert Course in Ridgewood

Ridgewood, N. J., Dec. 28.—Sylvia Lent, violinist, will be the next artist in the Ridgewood Recital Course, managed by Edwin B. Lilly. Miss Lent will play on January 20. Elly Ney, pianist, opened the series on December 5. On February 17 Mr. Lilly will present the Opera-Comique in Flotow's L'Ombra, and a joint recital of Ruth Rodgers, soprano, and Carlos Salzedo, harpist, will close the course on March 20.

Florence Easton as Elsa

The third performance this season of Lohengrin at the Metropolitan Dec. 26 was marked by the first appearance of Florence Easton in the role of Elsa. Pitts Sanborn commented in the Telegram-Mail that few of Mme. Easton's parts "suit her so well vocally, temperamentally, physically, and rarely does any singing woman get so completely into the skin of a part as Mme. Easton does. . . . A large share of her success in imposing the illusion of Elsa comes from the quality of her voice and her skillful and sympathetic treatment of the music."

Alison Smith of the World considered that her appearance, as usual, "brought a perfectly poised and technically excellent interpretation with all the resourcefulness which belongs to a skilled singer who so perfectly understands her business." The writer in the Herald Tribune praised Mme. Easton's performance "both from the point of view of voice and action; her Elsa was vividly lifelike, convincingly emotional and her singing, if not absolutely flawless, preserving a high standard."

Inga Orner-Giuseppe Lombardo

Inga Orner, soprano, and Giuseppe Lombardo, tenor, gave a joint recital the evening of December 28 in Aeolian Hall, New York. Miss Orner, who sang among others a group of songs by Grieg, "sang with not a little artistry of phrasing and expression, but a voice somewhat subject to tremolo," to quote the writer in the Herald Tribune. The Times reported that, although Miss Orner was suffering from a cold, "which prevented the full use or appreciation of her voice," she made up for this by "infusing plenty of expression into her numbers."

This observer found Mr. Lombardo's lyric tenor used "in the most sentimental manner." According to the Herald Tribune, he displayed "a strong voice, rather rough as to tone." The Sun commended both singers for their interesting program of operatic airs and said that it was well received by a large audience.

Concert of Italian-Americans

Five young Italian-American artists were heard in a concert, under the direction of Frank Salerno, at Town Hall Dec. 28. Those who took part were Frank Cirillo, violinist, Astolfo Martini, baritone, Anna Lodato, soprano, Josephine Guaiano, soprano, and Pasquale Ferrara, tenor.

Paul Whiteman's Orchestra

Two novelties were offered by Paul Whiteman at his concert for the benefit of the Maternity Centre Association at the Metropolitan Opera the afternoon of December 28. These were Leo Sowerby's new work, Synconata, and Rudolf Friml's Chinese suite, Po Ling and Wing Toy.

Deems Taylor wrote in the World that the Sowerby piece "gives evidence that its composer has studied the possibilities of the jazz orchestra with good results," although he considered its substance "not nearly so interesting as its color. It lacks definiteness and clarity and seems wanting in melodic invention." The Sun reviewer thought the new work revealed "little originality in thematic material or construction, but there were suggestive possibilities of sardonic humor and some fine weaving of rhythmic elements." According to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, it "was effective in its syncopation, and skillfully and variously used."

In the opinion of the writer in the Sun, Mr. Friml's score "was a skillful treatment of some pleasant and not very impressive themes."

Sasha Culbertson

In Carnegie Hall December 29, Sasha Culbertson, violinist, gave his first recital here this season. The Times reviewer commented on his "fine, wholesome technique, thoroughly dependable, spirited and sensitive" and added that he played the Beethoven Kreutzer Sonata "with remarkable veracity and pliant strength." According to this writer, Mr. Culbertson "spared no pains" to keep his performance "on the level of high artistic interpretation."

The World commentator lauded his "tone of exceptional volume and good technical command" but found no "overwhelming distinction" in his performance. His "full and sonorous" tone, the "smooth quality of his legato," and the "dignity and restraint" of his style were accorded due praise by the Sun chronicler, although "his interpretation did not convey any great sense of breadth or distinction." Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail considered Mr. Culbertson "not without musical feeling" and with sufficient technical ability, but gained no impression from the concert of "virtuosity, emotional warmth, or prevailing distinction." Max Rabinovitch, accompanist, proved "an able associate" according to the Times.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving
Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

FREEMANTEL

Virginia Carrington Thomas Mus. Bac. A. A. G. O.

AMERICAN ORGANIST AND COMPOSER

"Technical capacity—knowledge of the organ."—New York Herald-Tribune.
"Musicianship was admirable and brought warm applause."—New York Sun.
"Well chosen program—clever Canon by herself—admirable technic and her registration was clever and varied."—Musical America, N. Y.
"Gifted organist—interpretations showed sincerity of feeling—smooth, sure, execution."—Musical Courier, N. Y.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Private Recitals CONCERTS Dedications

NOW BOOKING

Address 562 Fifth Ave., New York.

Another Kind of Music Drama

The Old Plot Ever Repeated: Hope and Success, Hope and Failure.

THRILLS, chills, hopes frustrated and hopes realized, a stage drama, but not one that you pay to see. That is the other sphere which prevails at a tryout at the Riesenfeld Theatres when dancers and singers and musicians from all over the country present their cherished talents for the approval of Josiah Zuro. Mr. Zuro, who not long ago commenced the season of his Sunday Symphonic Society of free concerts in the George M. Cohan Theatre, is director of presentation at these music-movie places, the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion, and it is his approval that must be gained before the opportunity to perform on the stage of one of them can be won.

The hour of the tryout—it may be at eleven in the morning, when the doors of the theatre are still closed, or at midnight, when they are locked for the night—the would-be Pavlowas and Carusos are at hand, waiting in their costumes, or rehearsing privately for the grand moment. Here is a girl of sixteen with long limbs and the sprightliness of a colt. There is one of life's tragedies, a woman who has been trying out for about fifteen years in various theatres without success. A pianiste with a shock of black hair talks earnestly with her companion. A Russian baritone glances through his press notices for assurance.

At last Mr. Zuro arrives. There is an expectant buzz of conversation.

"Who is first?" The little girl dancer. She whirls on her bare toes, her scant red tunic clinging to her. She extends her foot, higher, higher, but she is nervous, she trembles and the pose is spoiled. She is finished.

"Thank you," Mr. Zuro calls. The child looks pleased.

Next is the oldish woman. Her voice is unpleasantly cracked, but she sings Solvejg's Song with a daring befitting a Galli-Curci. To her, too, he calls a "thank you." By this time the other applicants know it for a phrase.

The Russian strides on the platform and surveys his tiny audience with an assurance that is something like contempt. He has chosen to try out with a song about a flea. His gestures, his facial expressions, are more animated than those of Chaliapin, but the voice —only too painfully agsent.

The black haired piano player kisses her friend for luck. She plays a Chopin waltz, as soothing as moonlight. Mr. Zuro, who has been talking with his secretary, stops to listen. It is over, and by request she plays a mazurka, a lively little thing that sets feet to tapping. The secretary is dispatched to ask the girl to wait after the tryout.

Now three dancers appear, the pupils of a famous ballet master. They dance the pathetic story of Columbine and Harlequin, the girl fluttering like a pale blue butterfly. They, too are asked to wait.

Of the three or four thousand who try out in the course of a year less than forty are adjudged worthy of a position, though this does not mean that all of the small number will find steady employment at any of the three theatres.

We asked Mr. Zuro, after the tryout, why so few qualify.

"It is no discredit to American singers and dancers that so small a percentage of them gain recognition," he said, "since most of them have no right to the name. Many of the singers have what I call a vocal complex. They want to sing, they are bewitched by the glamour of singers and they think that they can sing. So they spend many years and dollars on a fruitless search for a voice.

"Once I was young and foolish enough to tell some of them the truth. I don't any more. It is useless.

"The stage of the motion picture theatre offers to singers an opportunity that no other playhouse can give. In one week a singer appears before twenty-eight different audiences. In an entire season of opera he may appear about fifty times. In the movie theatre there is no time for nerves. A song lasts no more than three or four minutes. There can be no warming up, no preliminaries. It must be spontaneous combustion. A concert singer usually opens his program with a song familiar to him so that he may regain his poise. Here he must make his impression with the first note.

"Every motion picture theatre has on hand a small group of performers who can be worked into prologues at the short notice we sometimes get. Some of my best prologues were conceived, rehearsed and presented in less than four days. Unless I had beside me a force on whom I could call I would be absolutely lost. This training is invaluable to the artist because it teaches him adaptability."

The motion picture theatre is an excellent stepping stone to opera, Mr. Zuro believes. In fact, some of the shining lights of the Metropolitan and Chicago Opera companies have appeared under his direction at the Rivoli and Rialto. Mario Chamlee, Greek Evans, Jeanne Gordon, Anne Roselle, Mary Fabian and Emanuel Liszt are only a few of them.

Photo by Elzin Studio
JOSIAH ZURO

Three Artists at Next Plaza Concert

Nina Morgana, Elsie Janis and her company, and George Liebling will be the attractions at the fifth of Andres de Segurola's artistic mornings at the Hotel Plaza on Thursday, January 8. Miss Morgana will sing the waltz song from Mireille and a group of shorter numbers including Mr. Liebling's Thou. Miss Janis, assisted by Walter Verne-Pidgeon, baritone, and Robert C. Farley, pianist, will offer character songs, duets and impressions of stage favorites. Mr. Liebling, who will make his second New York appearance of his short visit here from abroad, includes his own composition, Nocturne, on his program.

The sixth and last artistic morning of the year will take place on January 22.

Brooklyn Music Reviewer Dies

John N. Brockway, dramatic and music editor of the Brooklyn Standard Union since 1892, died on December 28 in the Masonic Hospital at Utica, where he had been a patient for several months. He was seventy-eight years old.

Fritz Reiner Leads Bartok Suite No. 1

Flutist Is Soloist in Cincinnati Pop Concert; Thuman Course to Start.

Cincinnati, Jan. 1.—Bartok's Suite No. 1, which last season was presented by Fritz Reiner for the first time in America, was repeated in Cincinnati at the popular concert of the orchestra last Sunday afternoon. The reviewers were unanimous in approval of the Hungarian moods and characteristics of the Bartok work, and they wrote also that Mr. Reiner was again most happy in its interpretation.

Carl Adams, writing in the Enquirer, called the harmonic structure of the modernist's suite "daring and uncanny." The other numbers on the program were popular in spirit, Weber's Euryanthe Overture, Strauss' Wienerblut Valse, the Bacchanale from Saint Saens' Samson, and the Fantasie Caprice on themes from Rigoletto, arranged by Mr. Lovreglio. In this last composition Ary van Leeuwen, flutist of the orchestra, was soloist. The applause of the audience made it necessary for him to play an encore.

The artist series of concerts arranged by J. Herman Thuman is to commence here this month. The course comprises a performance of Tosca by the San Carlo Opera Company on the 8th, a recital by Reinald Werrenrath on the 13th, and a concert by the Bauer-Huberman-Tertis-Salmond quartet on the 21st. B. G.

Nineteen Soloists at Metropolitan

Nineteen soloists, the opera chorus, orchestra, and stage band, all under the direction of Giuseppe Bamboschek, appeared at the Metropolitan Opera Sunday evening concert on December 28. The singers were Mmes. Peralta, Roeseler, Ryan, Telva, and Ruth; and Messrs. d'Angelo, Schutzendorf, Picco, Tibbett, Didur, Rothier, Gustafson, Wolfe, Altglass, Chamlee, Oehman, Bada, Meader, and Paltrinieri.

GRADOVA Concert Pianist
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Duo Art Records Steinway Piano Fisk Building New York

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

RE
JOHN McCORMACK

"Musicians must admire McCormack for one thing in particular, and that is his constant effort to maintain in his singing of classics the purity of art. Had he been content to follow easily the caprices of a public which prefers him in lighter songs, it would have been sad. We are glad to say that although Mr. McCormack draws the most applause for his singing of ballads, his greatest and most enduring triumph has been, and is, mastery of Bach and Handel."—The Syracuse Herald.

"It is much to be hoped that many 'Handel and Mozart singers' were in attendance to learn what they should do."—The Boston Herald.

Master School of Musical Arts

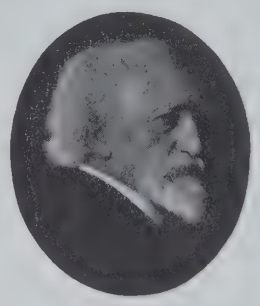
OF CALIFORNIA

LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF, Director

ALICE SECKELS, Manager

TO bring world famous Master Teachers of music to California and to help needy and talented students to receive teachings of these great masters is my aim in endowing the Master School of Musical Arts of California in memory of my parents.—Alice Campbell Macfarlane.

CESAR THOMSON
Violin



By arrangement with the Ithaca Conservatory, N. Y.

LAZAR S. SAMOILOFF
Voice

COMPLETE courses will be given in

SAN FRANCISCO

and

LOS ANGELES

between May and September, 1925.

For dates and particulars write: Master School of Musical Arts, Fairmont Hotel, San Francisco, California.

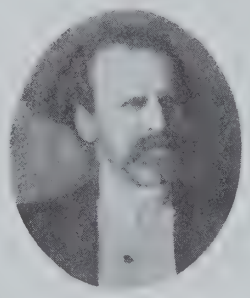
Los Angeles inquiries: L. E. Behymer or Rena MacDonald, Auditorium Bldg., Los Angeles, California.

W. J. HENDERSON
Lecturer

JOSEF LHEVINNE
Piano

By arrangement with the American Conservatory of Chicago.

SIGISMUND STOJOWSKI
Piano—Composition



JULIA CLAUSSEN
Voice

© Underwood & Underwood

ANDREAS DE SEGUROLA
Operatic Department

FELIX SALMOND
Cello and Chamber Music

EMIL J. POLAK
Coach

© Underwood & Underwood

ANNIE LOUISE DAVID Harp

SAMUEL GARDNER
Violin

© Matzene

A. KOSTELANETZ
Accompanist

EACH Master is offering two scholarships. The Master School of Musical Arts provides for additional scholarships to needy advanced students of exceptional talent.

CALIFORNIA is the Italy of America. Nowhere in the world are climatic conditions more favorable for summer study.

The Official Piano Is the Baldwin

Metropolitan Offers Year's First Africana

Rosa Ponselle, Gigli, and Danise Sing in Leading Roles; Serafin Conducts.

Meyerbeer's L'Africana was performed December 27 by the Metropolitan Opera Company for the first time this season, with Rosa Ponselle and Beniamino Gigli in the leading roles. Others in the cast were Adamo Didur, Paolo Ananian, Queena Mario, Angelo Bada, Giuseppe Danise, Leon Rothier, Marion Telva, Vincenzo Reschiglian and Max Altglass. Tullio Serafin conducted with "facility and finish," in the words of the World reviewer.

Ernest Newman wrote in the Post: "It speaks volumes for the intelligence of Mme. Rosa Ponselle's acting (one takes, of course, her excellent singing for granted) that she could keep us interested in such a character as Selika." She won the applause of Olin Downes of the Times "first because of the superb quality of her voice, secondly because, although her artistry does not match her natural vocal endowments, she has improved as a singer in late seasons and has, at moments, hints and flashes of the grand manner." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail found her in "particularly good voice." The writer in the Herald Tribune said Miss Ponselle sang with "marked effectiveness" and "proved in excellent voice."

In the opinion of Mr. Downes, Mr. Gigli "preserved in a vital, plausible, even beautiful, manner the traditions of the opera." Mr. Newman thought he sang his music "very agreeably," but noted "signs of strain in fortissimo passages." According to Mr. Sanborn, the tenor is "singing better and better." Mis Ponselle, Mr. Gigli, Mr. Danise, and Mr. Rothier received laudatory comment in the Sun.

This writer added: "In fact, the opera was generally well sung, and all the value its music possesses was disclosed under the capable baton of Tullio Serafin." The World agreed that the conductor, "through sheer force of musicianship, managed to give the production form and continuity." This reviewer considered that it was "beautifully sung" by Messrs. Gigli and Didur and Mmes. Mario and Ponselle.

Mr. Danise and Mr. Didur, wrote the Herald Tribune chronicler, were "thoroughly at home in their parts, vocally and otherwise." Mme. Mario was "vocally acceptable" and Messrs. Rothier, Didur and Ananian "fulfilled the duties of the bass roles with conscientious artistry," in Mr. Sanborn's opinion. Mr. Downes thought that Mme. Mario "sang with intelligence, but the role requires a greater voice." Mr. Danise received particular mention from Mr. Newman for his "excellent study."

The settings by Joseph Urban and the ballet received due praise for their effectiveness from the reviewers.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Two Novelties Sung By Schola Cantorum

Kurt Schindler Conducts and Five Singers Are Soloists With Chorus.

The Schola Cantorum, Kurt Schindler conductor, gave the first concert of its season in Carnegie Hall on December 30. The soloists were Dusolina Giannini, Marguerite d'Alvarez, Mario Chamlee, John Charles Thomas, and Leon Rothier. The program was made up of the fourth act of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Sadko and the first and only act of Chabrier's Briseis.

The reviewers liked the Rimsky-Korsakoff excerpt, which received on this occasion its first presentation outside of Russia, better than Briseis, which has had one previous presentation here. Olin Downes of the Times wrote that the first "fascinated the audience by its prevailing freshness and folk-spirit, by the strength and savor of the choral writing, and by the orchestration." Of the other, Deems Taylor of the World said: "The scoring is good, sometimes brilliant, and the music bears the stamp of sincerity in every bar; but it somehow does not 'get there.'"

Dusolina Giannini, according to W. J. Henderson of the World, knew her music and sang it well; Mme. d'Alvarez was "excellent" in Sadko, and "quite in her element" in the other; and Mr. Thomas sang with "sweep and vigor." Mr. Downes wrote that "the soloists were in most cases highly accomplished;" Miss Giannini's "art and talent" were displayed to excellent advantage; Mr. Chamlee was more fortunate in Sadko than in Briseis, where his tone was poor; Mr. Thomas was in good voice; and Mme. d'Alvarez inclined to a "too open tone." Ernest Newman of the Post wrote that Mr. Chamlee, Mr. Thomas and Miss Giannini "sang fluently and agreeably." According to Mr. Taylor, Miss Giannini and Mr. Chamlee sang "earnestly and mellifluously;" Mr. Thomas showed "fine authority and carrying power of projection;" and Mr. Rothier, "of course, had fine diction and style."

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail thought Mr. Thomas' voice "magnificent" and said that much of Miss Giannini's singing "equalled in beauty the rare gift of voice." Mme. d'Alvarez, he thought, delivered some of her phrases "with a beauty indeed memorable."

Mr. Schindler's forces, "kindled by his own devotion and enthusiasm," to quote Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, "gave a performance of both works, the Russian and French, that was remarkable for its zeal and its vitality. There was nothing perfunctory in the singing of either chorus or soloists or in the playing of the orchestra." Mr. Taylor wrote that "the chorus did superbly . . . singing with freshness, enthusiasm, and impeccable intonation," and that Mr. Schindler conducted "with excellent authority and effect." Other writers were in accord with these statements.

MORIZ ROSENTHAL
Gave His First New York Recital of the Season Last Sunday Afternoon.

New Year's Eve Students' Concert

Henry Hadley made his last appearance of the season as conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra when he led the fourth students' concert in Carnegie Hall on New Year's Eve. The program included Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, William H. Humiston's Southern Fantasy, Edward Ballanetine's From the Garden of Hellas, and Mr. Hadley's Salome.

Musicians Honor Damrosch

New York musicians of the Bohemians' Club, one hundred members of the New York Symphony Orchestra, together with their wives, and other musical artists were among the seven hundred persons present at a dinner at the Hotel Biltmore on December 28, which was given to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of Walter Damrosch's conductorship of the Symphony Society.

Queena Mario's Mother Dies

Rose Tillotson, the mother of Queena Mario, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, died suddenly last Tuesday in her apartment at the Hotel St. James, New York. Funeral services were held on Friday and many artists of the Metropolitan roster atttended.

Hutcheson Plays Chopin

In the fourth concert of his series of seven historical recitals Ernest Hutcheson played a program of music of Chopin in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the afternoon of December 28.

Two Soloists Play at Sokoloff Pop Concert

Merle Alcock Is Praised by Reviewers in Cleveland Recital Appearance.

Cleveland, Dec. 29.—At the popular concert yesterday afternoon of the Cleveland Orchestra, conducted by Nikolai Sokoloff, Elvin Schmitt, pianist, and Jascha Veissi, violinist, were the soloists. The novelty on the program was Rimsky-Korsakoff's Overture to The Czar's Bride. A potpourri of themes from Puccini's La Boheme was Cleveland's first tribute to the memory of the composer. Other numbers played were the Wedding Music from Lohengrin, a Strauss waltz, and Sibelius's Finlandia.

Mr. Schmitt played Schumann's Concerto in A minor and overcame its technical problems, according to Wilson G. Smith of the Press, "with an ease and brilliancy which forecasts a highly promising future." Archie Bell of the News found "color in his interpretation, a fine reading of values." James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer agreed that Mr. Schmitt evidenced great pianistic ability. Mr. Veissi was called by this writer "a distinctly gifted young man" and Mr. Smith lauded his "ample and facile" technique, his tone, "while not large, which, nevertheless, has the quality of smoothness, and withal a certain vibrance that gives expression to the subtler moods of interpretation."

Merle Alcock, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was the soloist at the first concert of the thirty-second season of the Singers Club, under the direction of its new conductor, J. van Dyke Miller. In the words of Mr. Bell, Miss Alcock "repeated former successes in Cleveland. She has a fine voice of velvety texture, and she uses it to advantage. Also it might be noted that her stunning stage appearance is no disadvantage." Mr. Smith was of the opinion that her singing of Annie Laurie was "her most finished and artistic work. Her voice is one of voluminous quality and makes its appeal more through its sonority than any warmth or sympathetic quality."

There was much commendation in the papers for Mr. Miller's work. Mr. Smith found the success of the concert largely due to his "personality and dynamic force" which inspired the men to vocal accomplishments above anything they have previously done.

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NE W YORK CITY

On The Music Highway

JOSEF LHEVINNE will give his final New York concert of the season at Carnegie Hall next Monday evening. Among the numbers on the program will be Joseph Marx's Albumblatt and Walter Nieman's Singende Fontane, which will be played for the first time in America.

The sixth Biltmore Musicale will be held in the ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel, New York, Friday morning. The artists appearing are John Charles Thomas, Mary Mellish and Alberto Salvi.

A concert in May at Carnegie Hall will bring to a close the season of Rhys Morgan, Welsh tenor, now on tour in the West.

A third New York recital by Flora Negri will be given at Aeolian Hall on February 1.

The Schola Cantorum of New York at its second subscription concert in Carnegie Hall on February 24 will present a program of a capella music from Great Britain, Spain, Germany, Sweden, Switzerland and America which will include many novelties. The soloists will be announced later.

Jeanne de Mare gave the last of three lecture recitals on Present Day Musical Paris (with comparative glances toward the past) last Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Dunlevy Milbank, New York City.

Abingdon, Va., and High Point, N. C., will hear Cecil Arden on January 21 and 23 respectively.

Among the January concerts of Emily Stokes Hagar are appearances in Atlantic City next Thursday and in Johnstown, Pa., January 22.

Lionel Tertis, English violist, has arrived in the United States to fill a concert tour which consists of twelve engagements in January with the Instrumental Quartet made up of Harold Bauer, Bronislaw Huberman, Felix Salmond and himself; five appearances with the New York Symphony Orchestra, two with the Chicago Symphony and other recital engagements.

This evening at Town Hall, New York, Marguerite d'Alvarez will give her first recital of the season with Morton Howard at the piano.

In the Artist Series Course of the Florida State College for Women, May Peterson, soprano, recently appeared as recitalist.

Ruth Rodgers will give her first New York recital of the season in Aeolian Hall on January 27, assisted at the piano by Isidore Luckstone.

Anna Carbone will give an organ recital at Aeolian Hall Thursday evening. Bach, Palestrina, Fontana, Yon, Debussy and Wagner will be represented on the program.

Olga Samaroff has been engaged for a concert at the Waldorf-Astoria on January 28 for the benefit of the Diet Kitchen Association. This will be Mme. Samaroff's fifth appearance in New York during the current season. In January she will appear with three orchestras, the Chicago, the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia.

A recent arrival in New York was Chevalier Marco Enrico Bossi, Italian organist and composer, who came to this country as a guest of Rodman Wanamaker to play a series of recitals on the Wanamaker organs in Philadelphia and New York.

The Rubinstein Club of New York, of which Mrs. William R. Chapman is president, are presenting William Wade Hinshaw's Opera Comique Company in The Marriage of Figaro this afternoon at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. There are to be present 150 music club presidents from the various music organizations of New York and its vicinity.

The Students' Association of Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has just booked Georges Enesco, violinist, for its concert on February 21.

Berta Morena, soprano of the Munich Royal Opera, sailed for America on the Majestic on December 31. Mme. Morena will make a concert tour as well as being guest artist at the Metropolitan Opera House in Wagnerian roles. Her debut will be made as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conducting, in Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia on January 13, 14 and 15 in a special Wagner program.

This will be Mme. Morena's first appearance here since she appeared with the Metropolitan Opera Company in 1912.

Sylvia Lent, violinist, who has been heard this season as soloist with both the Chicago and the New York State Symphony Orchestras, has been invited to play at the White House in Washington on January 29.

Arriving last week on the Olympic was Julia Claussen, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan and Swedish Royal Opera. Mme. Claussen returned to America to fulfill both opera and concert engagements. In addition to her appearances with the Metropolitan, she will have several guest performances with the Philadelphia Civic Opera.

Ernest Schelling will make his Boston debut as a conductor of concerts for children on January 10. His New York series with the Philharmonic Orchestra starts on January 24.

The Musical Art Society of Hampton Institute, Newport News, opened its season December 9 with a recital by Hans Kindler, cellist, who was assisted by the Hampton Institute Choir of sixty voices and the Hampton Institute Glee Club of thirty voices under the direction of Dr. R. Nathaniel Dett. Emanuel Balaban accompanied Mr. Kindler.

Nevada van der Veer, contralto, will give her annual New York recital at Town Hall on January 14. The program will be made up almost entirely of modern works.

Tomorrow afternoon in Aeolian Hall, Ellen Ballon, pianist, will be heard in recital. She will give groups by Liszt, Bach-Busoni, Jonas, Chopin and Liadow.

Royal Dadmun recently sang in three performances of The Messiah in four days. He appeared with the New York Oratorio Society on December 25 and 27 and in Providence on December 28.

The January concerts of Flora Greenfield begin in Waterbury, Conn., next Sunday. She will be heard in New York the following Friday, in Cleveland on January 25, in Erie, Pa., two days later, in Rochester on the 29th and in Pittsburgh, Pa., on January 31.

Marion Hovey Brower will give a song recital at Town Hall on the afternoon of January 10. Her program includes songs by Handel, Mozart, Haydn, Schumann, Saint-Saens, Verdi, Rachmaninoff, and Tschaikowsky.

In her American debut as an orchestra conductor, Ethel Leginska will lead the New York Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Friday evening in the following program: Weber's Oberon Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Bach Concerto in F minor for piano and orchestra (with Miss Leginska at the piano), her own Two Short Poems for orchestra after Tagore (first time in America), and Wagner's Overture to Die Meistersinger.

Under the auspices of the Bureau of Lectures of the Board of Education, of which Dr. E. L. Crandall is director, Oliver Denton, pianist, gave a recital Sunday night at De Witt Clinton Hall, New York City. Charles D. Isaacson, founder and sponsor of these free concerts, presided. Other artists on the program were Astrid Fjelde, young Norwegian soprano, who will make her concert debut at Aeolian Hall later in the month, and Charles Bennett, tenor. Walter Golde and Ida Nachmanowitz were the accompanists.

Gustavo Carranza will give his first New York piano recital in Aeolian Hall this afternoon. In addition to Beethoven, Chopin, and Brahms, there will be on the program a group entitled Four Cuckoo Clocks, by Daquin, Arensky, Godowsky, and Carranza.

Fraser Gange has made four appearances in New York during December, two of them with the New York Symphony Orchestra. He will be heard again in New York with the same organization on January 22 and 23 in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

At the Elk's Memorial Concert in Port Chester, N. Y., December 7, Amy Ellerman was heard and on December 14, Miss Ellerman appeared in New York in Verdi's Manzoni Requiem.

Richard Hageman will make his second appearance this season as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Philharmonic Orchestra on January 25.

Early in February, Helena Marsh will make a tour of the Pacific coast.

A few weeks ago, Henri J. van Praag, violinist, gave his first public recital at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, Cal. The occasion marked the twenty-fifth anniversary as a conductor in the life of Mr. van Praag, who is one of the leaders in local musical circles. There were two groups of solos by George Shkultetsky, Russian basso cantante.

The Junior Branch of the Washington Heights Musical Club held an open meeting on December 20 at which William Seeber, Lucy Palermo, Anne Hopkins, Irene Griffiths, John Blumers, and Mary Palermo appeared.

Louise Homer started the New Year with a joint recital with her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, at Springfield, Mass., on January 1. On January 7 Mme. Homer appears in Lansing, in Urbana on the 14th, Toledo the 16th, and Booneville on the 19th.

The date of Robert Imandt's violin recital in Plattsburg, N. Y., for the benefit of the Children's Home of New York State has been changed from this Saturday to Friday. This recital will precede the one to be given in Montreal on January 12. On January 22, Mr. Imandt will be heard in his second New York recital.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Give Faure Opera as Memorial

Film Outdraws Music at Paris Opera; Meistersinger and Moiseiwitsch Recital Feature Week.

Paris.

In commemoration of the death of Gabriel Faure the Opera-Comique produced his Penelope entirely restudied. Despite the fact that the whole presentation was gone over in fresh rehearsal, the shortcomings which were reported in previous performances cropped up again.

The faults of scenery were most notable. The acts were not given an atmosphere which fitted the action during them. Not sufficient advantage was taken, particularly in the third act, of the possibilities presented by the animation and movement of the score, so that despite the liveliness which the composer intended the result was merely dullness.

The reviewer of Comoedia criticized severely the choice of cast, and wrote that the majority of the ensemble were so unsuited to their parts both vocally and histrionically that detailed judgment of their singing was out of the question.

Composer's Friend in Title Part

As an act of esteem for the late composer, the management gave the title role to Mme. Croiza, the original Penelope, who was a very intimate friend of the composer. In the premiere of his opera Faure chose this singer because she combined the singing and impersonation of her roles so perfectly. She always has been praised for the care with which she keeps from sacrificing expression to effects of display. Besides she has specialized in the singing of Faure's music. Her Penelope was emotional, sympathetic and well sung.

The other exception to the remarks of the unfavorable Comoedia commentator was the leading tenor, Lapelleterie, who was new to the role of Ulysses. Muratore has usually sung this part in Paris. His voice was in excellent form, and he received rounds of applause at the end of each act. It is rumored, incidentally, that Lapelleterie is studying the part of Tristan for the next presentation of the Wagnerian opera at the Opera-Comique. Verdier, who otherwise would have sung in Tristan, is at present seriously ill.

M. Ingelbrecht was the conductor, and he brought out the effects of the score with feeling and understanding.

Paris Public Favors Cinema

Figures given out by the box offices of the Paris Grand Opera and the Opera-Comique would indicate that the Parisian public is more willing to spend money on motion pictures than on opera. During the last week in November there were six opera performances at the former theatre and two displays of the Government motion picture, Le Miracle des Loups. The matinee performance of Le Miracle had the highest box office receipts of the week, 45,155 francs, and the presentation that evening was next, 44,144.

Oddly enough Wagner's Meistersinger ran the cinema the closest race of all the operas given. The box office took in 40,652 francs at that performance. That week Faust drew 35,750 francs, Aida 30,834, and L'Heure Espagnole together with Giselle 33,121. Samson and Dalila had the poorest house of all at the opera that week, with only 19,163 francs taken in at the box office.

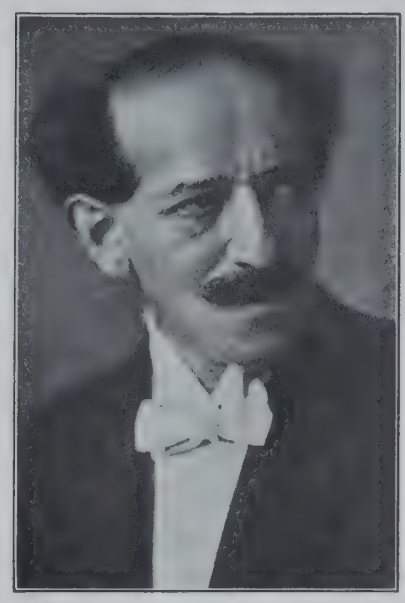
At the Opera-Comique the best house of the week was that which attended Bizet's Carmen. The receipts amounted to 25,870 francs. At the performance of Lorenzaccio at a Thursday matinee only 13,942 francs were taken in.

Meistersinger Popular

The figures indicate that the estate of Wagner and particularly of his Meistersinger has changed much since before the war, when it was not one of the most popular of the operas in the opera repertory. The revival of the work last week which drew such a large audience deserved the success which it made. It was given in all its grandeur and splendor, and nothing was stinted by the management toward making the presentation worthy of the composer. The large stage was used to its best advantage, and it would be difficult to say in which act the scenic effects were finest or most appropriate. Nuremberg could hardly have been painted more vividly than the scenes at the Grand Opera portrayed.

The singing also was of a high grade, and in particular Yvonne Gall distinguished herself with her ingenuous interpretation of the part of Eva and with her good singing. The interpretation of the role cleverly avoided the sickly sentimental. Yvonne Gall depicted a jovial country lass devoid of any profound sentiments.

Paul Franz as Walter von Stoltzing sang his old role in a masterly manner, and was convincing in his acting. The veteran Wagnerian, M. Delmas, has often been heard at the Grand Opera in the part of Hans Sachs, and he has almost always showed to his best advantage in it. Delmas' Hans Sachs is not an ordinary, crude cobbler with a certain amount of education and idealism; he is a refined and gentlemanly artisan, a practical philosopher, whose thoughts and dreams are far from his worldly work, who inwardly does not submit to his fate of continual drudgery.



GEORGE LIEBLING
Pianist, Will Be One of the Artists on the Program of Mr. de Segurola's Next Artistic Morning at the Plaza Hotel in New York on Thursday.

Delmas Vocally Good

Vocally M. Delmas is quite at home in the score of the Meistersinger, and his baritone is excellently suited to the music. His singing in the third act was worthy of all the credit which it won, and it was admirable in the delicacy of its sentiment and expression.

M. Couzinou stood with his colleagues in the excellent quality of his singing and acting. His unusually interesting and amusing interpretation of the part of Beckmesser won the audience. This interpretation of the well known role is also unusual The Beckmesser of Couzinou is by no means an old crabbed nuisance devoid of brains. He is rather a poor musician with a tenacity for misled ideals.

In his singing M. Couzinou excelled anything that he has done at the opera this season so far. His beautiful baritone was at its very best, and gained from the part almost every effect of which it is capable. The applause at the end of each act was as great for him as for any of the other leading members of the cast.

In the role of David a young tenor by the name of Rambaud made a good impression. His acting was easy and unrestrained, and his singing revealed a voice of pleasant timbre and resonance.

The performance was directed by Philippe Gaubert, and in no respect did he appear to better advantage than in the orchestral part of the opera. The entire performance indicated that Wagner has returned to the French stage in full force; there are few companies which could have put last week's performance at the Grand Opera in the shade.

Moiseiwitsch in Recital

Prominent among the recitalists of the week was Benno Moiseiwitsch, who gave the first of his scheduled series of three concerts in the Salle Gaveau. At his first concert the pianist played Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue in a manner which the reviewers judged remarkable, and displayed similar mastery in Beethoven's Appassionata. The reviewer of the Paris Daily Mail said of his playing of a Schumann Fantasy, "The music was particularly well suited to M. Moiseiwitsch's style, and he brought out admirably its poetic side."

The program was closed with a Liszt transcription from Wagner which caused great applause. The pianist was compelled to add a number of encores before the audience would disperse.

K. H. STOTTNER.

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Music Conditions Bad in Vienna

State Opera Shaken by Strauss Resignation and Volksoper Lacks Support; Concerts Continue.

Vienna.

The resignation of Strauss, reported in detail in the last Vienna letter, appears to stand, but unofficially it seems that the case is not yet closed. Franz Schalk now functions alone as Director of the Staatsoper, but there are voices in growing numbers which are calling for a speedy return of Strauss. At present Director Schalk avoids showing what he can do as sole ruler of the State Opera, his ill health being offered as the reason for his inactivity.

The search for more conductors continues. It is impossible for the State Opera to get along with only three leaders, especially now that it is giving performances in two theatres. The difficulty is particularly great since the State Opera is not able to pay very much even for the best man. Despite everything negotiations continue to be carried on with Egon Pollak, of Hamburg, and with Bruno Walter. Egon Pollak is shortly to visit Vienna as guest conductor of the State Opera in a revival of Verdi's Falstaff. Karl Muck will be here during January, 1925, also, and he will be guest leader in a whole Wagner cycle.

Volksoper in Difficulties

At the Volksoper the situation is worse than ever, if that is possible. The private persons who are supporting the theatre have had lately to give contributions anew practically every week, and they wish to pay no more money. Contracts are being neglected, the orchestra is threatening to go on strike, and it is hardly understandable that opera is being played there at all.

Lately the Volksoper has begun negotiations with a new group of supporters, who demand as part of their agreement that Leo Blech take the place of Director Stiedry. This proposition may not go through, since the new group has not too much money at its disposal.

During the last few weeks Pietro Mascagni has led several guest performances at both the leading Vienna opera houses. He showed himself again serious and thoughtful, if not too pronounced in his abilities or methods. The public, consisting largely of Italians who prize Mascagni highly as a composer, gave him ovations on all of his appearances.

Puccini Mourned

Incidentally both the Volksoper and the Staatsoper are planning shortly to give memorial concerts for Puccini. He was very highly considered in Vienna where he lived for a time and where his works had their established places in all the operatic repertoires.

The only recent operatic novelty presented in Vienna was the revival of Weber's Die Drei Pintos. Mahler some years ago worked over this work together with a grandson of Weber, Karl, who at that time was an officer in the Austrian army. Mahler worked the score out of sketches of the composer and themes of others of his compositions, and Karl Weber altered the text to fit. To a certain extent Mahler did some original composing, but he wrote strictly in the fluent, genial style of Weber. At this most recent performance Gottfried Kassowitz was the leader, and he produced the work with distinct and strong ensemble although there was from time to time a dilettante strain in it.

The Austrian Republic finally decreed that the centenary of the birth of the native composer, Anton Bruckner, be celebrated officially. The memorial concert was given jointly by the Municipal Chorus, which for more than one hundred years has been celebrated for its quality and tradition and for which Bruckner was once official organist, by the University, by which he was given an honorary degree, and by the Philharmonic Orchestra of Vienna.

Recitals Poorly Supported

The meanness of the music situation in Austria at present continues. The economic situation in the country is such that our conductors and musicians can make livings only if they go abroad for their tours. The concerts in Austria are very poorly attended. Full houses are the exception and empty ones the rule. The people are reluctant even to accept free tickets because of the incidental expenses that the trip to the concert halls entails.

The most popular concerts at present are the orchestral subscription programs of the Philharmonic and the Konzertverein. Dirk Foch is conducting at the latter and has made an excellent impression ever since he took the place of Loewe. As guest conductors we have been hearing Knappertsbusch from Munich and Dr. Rudolph Siegel from Krefeld. The latter has proved himself a leader of technic and spirit, and he adds interest to his program by always bringing with him something novel.

His most recent importation was the Pfitzner Violin Concerto, a pleasing piece of music which was ably played by the sixteen year old violinist, Max Rosthal.

New Hindemith Cello Sonata

The novelties of the other recent concerts are quickly reported: a cello sonata by Hindemith which was played at the first concert of the season of the Austrian Society for International New Music; new songs and piano pieces of I. M. Hauer; and, most important of all, the new (third) String Quartet of Zemlinsky. The last piece was played excellently by the Buxbaum Quartet, and it displayed great boldness of harmony and form. Nevertheless it was approved by the critics whose bias is usually in favor of conservative music.

A concert of the Vienna String Quartet proved that that group, consisting of Kolisch, Rothschild, Dick, and Stutschewsky, has still its old following, and deserves it too. The first violinist became lately the son-in-law of Arnold Schonberg.

Together with Stutschewsky, Kolisch appeared in an evening of music for violin and cello too, and played among other things an interesting duet for violin and cello by the temperamental and talented young composer Hans Eisler.

A number of repeat concerts by artists of international reputation were also among the recent musical fare of Vienna. Among them were Battistini, the seventy year old singer, Maria Ivogun, and Jadlowker. Battistini not only drew a full house at his recital, but also he is a great drawing card at the Staatsoper.

Considerable praise was given Kathleen Parlow on her return, and there were concerts also by the singer Maria Ranzenberg; the cellist, Cassalo, a student of Casals; the German pianist Frida Kwast-Hodapp, who played again many works of Reger and Pfitzner; the Swiss organist Karl Matthael, and the pianists Isserlis, Paul Emerich, and Friederich Wuhrer.

PAUL STEFAN.

Busoni Work Played in Mainz

Mainz, Dec. 14.—Ferruccio Busoni's Piano Concerto, Opus 39, for piano, orchestra, and men's chorus, had its premiere here this week with Edward Weiss as soloist. The orchestra was directed by Herr Konig, and the chorus was the Mainzer Mannergesangenverein. The performance will shortly be repeated in Mainz and in Weisbaden.

Cyril Scott Writing Opera

London, Dec. 18.—Cyril Scott is engaged in writing a second opera entitled The Saint of the Mountain. The libretto is his own. The work is designed to be a sequel to The Alchemist, which is to be produced in Essen in January. Mr. Scott is planning to compose a violin concerto also.

Foreign Notes

Vienna, Dec. 12.—Pietro Mascagni has signed a contract with the Vienna State Opera, his engagement to extend over two months, during which he will conduct various Italian works, among which La Traviata, Aida, Le Trouvere and L'Ami Fritz.

He will also during his sojourn in the Austrian capital conduct his new operetta Si at the Burg Theatre.

Paris, Dec. 14.—Ganna Walska has just signed a contract with Messrs. Durano and Audier, managers of the Nice opera, to appear at that opera during the present season in Madame Butterfly and Tosca.

London, Dec. 4. — Elgar's The Shower and Granville Bantock's Awake, Awake, were the test pieces at the fourth annual Cumberland Festival held at Millom in November of which Harvey Grace of London was adjudicator. There were 800 entered in the competition.

London, Dec. 8. — Theodore Otscharkoff conducted the first Westminster popular concert of the new London Orchestra on November 27. The Prelude Dramatique by Frederick d'Erlanger was given its first performance.

London, Dec. 20.—Herbert Howells is at work on a piano concerto for Harold Samuel, to be produced for the first time at the concert of the Royal Philharmonic Society next April 27.

Paris, Dec. 21.—Serge Prokofieff has just finished a quartet for oboe, clarinet, viola and double bass.

Paris, Dec. 21.—Maurice Ravel is about to finish an opera-comique in two acts, called L'Enfant et les Sortileges.

London, Dec. 21.—Mark Hambourg, pianist, suffered a slight accident the other day in which he sprained his left ankle. He was billed to appear in concert at the Queen's Hall here, and in order not to disappoint his audience he had himself carried to the piano on the platform in a wheelchair. Immediately after this recital Mr. Hambourg left for Maidstone to play at another concert.

FLORENCE EASTON
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

British Opera Accepts Endowment

Company Closes Annual Tour; Reported Loss of $100,000 for the Season.

London.

The British National Opera Company has weathered another serious crisis—involving a deficit of £19,147 for the year ending last August—by putting on foot a new scheme for a "trusteeship" and accepting substantial aid from the Carnegie United Trust. The guarantee to be provided by the Carnegie fund—already a large benefactor of British music in other fields—is said to be the first subsidy ever given to opera in the history of English music. As to the new "trust" plan, as far as appears from statements of the company officials, it will be much along the lines of the Chicago opera reorganization which resulted two years ago in the formation of the Civic Opera Company.

The B. N. O. C. has been on tour in the midlands, Scotland, and Wales since October, finishing up at Leeds a few weeks ago. The first hint of serious trouble took the form of adverse reports as to receipts in Glasgow, where a local guarantee had to be called on. After the close of this season—the sixth in the company's history—a report was issued embodying this ominous statement as to prospects:

"Whatever steps may be taken to place opera in English in this country on a firm financial basis the fact remains that, without a subsidy or a substantial increase of public support in the shape of regular patronage, reinforced by donations or subscriptions with or without local guarantees in addition, the B. N. O. C. must inevitably find it difficult to pursue its policy of seeking to augment the national appreciation of all that is best in music without undue regard to box-office returns."

Trust Comes to Rescue

Within a day or two came the rumor that the Carnegie Trust had agreed to guarantee the company against loss in the production of a number of approved operas which could not be produced with any hope of commercial success, but which, it was felt, were of educational value. Confirmation took the form of a statement transcribed from discussion among certain directors of the company.

"The B. N. O. C. has already submitted to the Carnegie trustees a list of six such operas," it was announced, "which they wish in the interests of musical education to produce, but which it would be inadvisable to produce without some protection against loss. The question of finance is a very uncertain problem. One can never be sure from one visit to another what will take on with the public of a town. If we could be sure which operas would draw the public we could make a financial success of every visit, but the public changes. We have to pay our way as a commercial company, and we are up against all this. Of course, opera has long been subsidized in other countries. This is the first thing of the sort here, however."

Then, at the annual general meeting of the company on Dec. 19, reports were made showing the full seriousness of the crisis, but at the same time setting forth the hope of the company in its new trusteeship plan and in the aid granted by the Carnegie funds. The loss for the year, which has been cited above, is very nearly $100,000; but the total losses of the company from its inception to date come to £33,789, or, roughly, $1,500,000.

Refused to Lower Standards

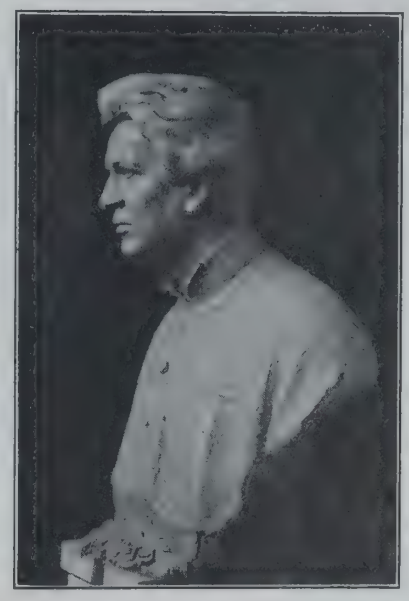
In presenting this disheartening report to the shareholders, Mr. Paget Bowman, the advisory director, said that the Board had rejected the alternatives of giving up the venture or of greatly lowering the standards of production, in favor of setting on foot the foundation of a National Trust for the furtherance of British opera. They hoped that its very nature would make a wide appeal, and that many would be willing to entrust their money to distinguished and impartial trustees, who would retain the capital of the fund and apply, ordinarily, the income only for the furtherance of the work.

The scheme had been favorably received by persons in high and influential positions, and he had great hopes that before long the fund would be a substantial one and firmly established. It must necessarily be a very large one—£500,000 at least—and as time must elapse before it was big enough to provide a substantial income, there would be opened very soon a "Trust Income Endowment Fund" into which all small sums of money would be paid.

In addition, the Board of Directors had started a system whereby each city that the company visited would ultimately form an annual guarantee fund against loss on the periodical opera seasons which were given there.

A few days earlier another bid for popular financial support in the interest of a music venture was made in a public meeting by Mr. Isidore de Lara, who is still promoting his scheme for a great Imperial Opera House in London, to cost £2,000,000, and designed to seat 4,000 people at prices ranging from one to five shillings ($0.25 to $1.25). I have already recounted how Mr. de Lara believes that such an auditorium would draw large enough audiences to make opera in the capital self-supporting. The meeting was enthusiastic, but how much actual cash has flowed into the coffers of Mr. de Lara's trustees is not known.

P. L.



THROUGH the initiative of Maria Carreras, a pupil of the late Ferruccio Busoni, a movement is under way to collect funds to place in the Liceo Musicale of Bologna a bust of the great Italian pianist. The sculptor chosen to model this bust, which is represented in the photograph above, is Valmore Gemignani. Mme. Carreras has sought the aid of nearly all the leading pianists of the present day in this project of a memorial for Busoni and already has been assured the support of George Boyle, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Rudolph Ganz, Percy Grainger, Ernest Hutcheson, Vladimir de Pachmann, and Ernest Schelling.

Pizzetti Directs Memorial

Milan, Dec. 18.—Ildebrando Pizzetti directed a concert to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the House of Rest for musicians by Giuseppe Verdi here not long ago. The funds of the home have benefited by several million lire tnrough the performances of Verdi's works.

Italians Honor French Basso

Paris, Dec. 20.—Marcel Journet, French basso who is at present appearing in leading roles at La Scala in Milan, has just had conferred upon him by the Italian Government the rank of Chevalier de l'Ordre de la Couronne.

Lauri Volpi Sings in Two Operas in Bologna

Bologna.

The leading tenor roles in Andrea Chenier and in Favorita at the Teatro Comunale here have just been sung with success by Lauri Volpi. In Chenier, in which he sang on its first presentation of the year at the Comunale, Lauri Volpi was supported by a cast which included Margherita Sheridan and Carlo Galeffi. The conductor of the evening was Failoni. Although all the principals and the setting were praised and reported equal to anything which Bologna has seen or heard in the past, Lauri Volpi especially won the plaudits of the audience and the reviewers.

The commentator of the Resto del Carlino said: "How the tenor sang the classic music of Andrea Chenier it is difficult to describe. Adjectives reporting it must all be extreme. One can merely report the event. Lauri Volpi sang, and the public could not once await the end of his selections without bursting into applause."

In the third act Signora Sheridan shared approval with Lauri Volpi in the duet with Gerard, and Galeffi also pleased with the warmth and richness of his voice.

Lauri Volpi made a similar impression in La Favorita, and received from the Mayor of Cesena a personal letter of appreciation of his singing of the role of Fernando.

Russian Opera to Tour Germany

Berlin, Dec. 18.—In February, 1925, a Russian opera troupe, under Issai Dobrowen, will tour Germany, performing Boris Godunoff, Eugen Onegen, Pique Dame, Damon, Zarenbraut, Schneeglockchen and Dubrowsky.

Give Zemlinsky Novelty

Berlin, Dec. 12.—A musical comedy in one prologue and two acts by Alexander Zemlinsky, Kleider Machen Leute was recently produced at Dusseldorf. It was written before the war and is not modern in style.

Dutch Conductor Guest in Paris

Paris, Dec. 18.—Two concerts by the Pasdeloup Orchestra of Paris were directed by Albert van Raalte, director of the opera at The Hague this month.

Mme. Landowska's Mother Dies

Paris, Dec. 30. — Eva Landowska, mother of Wanda Landowska, pianist and harpsichordist, died suddenly here today in her apartment.

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

FLORENCE MACBETH
Leading Coloratura Soprano
Chicago Civic Opera Company

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE American Academy in Rome has announced its fifth annual competition for its Walter Damrosch Felllowship in Musical Composition. This is the fellowship which was awarded three years ago to Randall Thompson. Candidates must file with the Secretary of the Academy not later than April 1 two compositions, one either for orchestra alone or for orchestra with a solo instrument; and one for string quartet, or for some ensemble combination, such as sonata for violin and piano, a trio for violin, cello and pianoforte, or possibly for some less usual combination of chamber instruments. The compositions must show facility in handling larger instrumental forms, such as the sonata-form or free modification of it. A sonata for pianoforte or a fugue of large dimensions will be accepted, but not songs or short pianoforte pieces.

The competition is open to unmarried men who are citizens of the United States, but the Academy reserves the right to withhold an award in case no candidate is considered to have reached the desired standard. The stipend is $1,000 a year for three years with an additional allowance of $1,000 a year for traveling expenses in visiting the leading musical centers of Europe. The winner will have the privilege of studio and residence at the Academy, and opportunity for six months' travel each year.

Guy Maier, pianist and teacher, photographed with a group of his students in repertory and interpretation at the University School of Music, Ann Arbor, Mich., where he is head of the piano department. Mr. Maier is standing in the center (rear), and at the extreme right are Albert Stanley and Earl V. Moore, past and present musical directors of the school.

The first Symphony Concert by the orchestra of the Kansas City Conservatory of Music was given in Ivanhoe Auditorium on December 14. The orchestra, which consists of seventy members, was conducted by Arnold Volpe, director of the Conservatory. The assisting soloists were Helen Swan, soprano, and Carl Zimmerman, pianist. Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Massenet's Scenes Napolitaines were among the numbers played.

According to the writer in the Kansas City Times, it was a most creditabe performance and Mr. Volpe "held his forces together remarkably." In the Journal he was [illegible] praised "both for his reading and Leo conducting of the whole performance." The soloists also received commendation in the press.

The Christmas concert given by and for the older pupils of the David Mannes Music School on the evening of December 20 was under the direction of Giulio Silva, whose ensemble singing class and solo vocalists were assisted by Melville Smith at the organ and the senior string orchestra. There were played nine excerpts from Haydn's Creation Oratorio, beginning with the orchestral overture and ending with the chorus The Heavens Are Telling. Thirteen excerpts from the Bach Christmas Oratorio were given as the second part of the program. The children's concert and party on the following Monday afternoon brought forward ten little soloists, one of whom had had her first lesson in October, and the elementary and junior string orchestras, which played the Pastoral Symphony from The Messiah and also Haydn's Toy Symphony. In the latter the string players were assisted by the younger piano students, who manipulated toy drums, horns, cymbals and other toy instruments.

The Schola Cantorum of Lawrence College, Appleton, Wis., gave its first concert of the season on the evening of December 14. One hundred and fifty selected singers comprise the membership of this organization.

Under the leadership of Dean Carl Waterman they sang the Saint Saens Christmas Oratorio and several choruses appropriate to the Christmas season.

Soloists were B. Fred Wise, tenor, of Chicago; Mrs. R. E. Widrig, contralto, of Green Bay; Isabel Wilcox, soprano, and Carl McKee, baritone, of Appleton.

Lawrence Memorial Chapel was filled to capacity, and the audience gave evidence of keen enjoyment of the Christmas music. The Lawrence Conservatory orchestra supplied accompaniments.

The Easter Music Festival will take place April 12-13. The Festival Chorus of three hundred singers will sing The Messiah and Haydn's Creation, accompanied by orchestra.

Handel's Messiah was presented by the University Chorus of the University of Wyoming, assisted by the University Orchestra, on December 14. George Edwin Knapp conducted, and the soloists were Agnes Clark Glaister, soprano; Vera Neely, contralto; George Edwin Knapp, tenor, and Samuel E. West, bass.

Pupils of Isidore Braggiotti gave a recital December 8 in Steinert Hall, in Boston. Frances Burr Mitchell, soprano, and Henry Lynskey, tenor, were, according to the Globe, "especially effective" in the duet from the balcony scene of Romeo et Juliette. Others appearing were John S. Codman, baritone; Marion Stanley, soprano; Aimee Spurr, mezzo-soprano; Roger A. Nye, tenor; Leland Gates, tenor; Philip Wadsworth, bass; Celia W. Eames, soprano; Charles A. Henry, tenor; Morris L. Brown, baritone; Pauline S. Machie, soprano; Grace Purinton, soprano; Harry Marcou, baritone; Isabel Parkman, soprano; Annie Howard Stubbs, mezzo-soprano; Helen Harris, soprano; William Ellis Weston, R. Percival Parham .and Ernest Harrison, accompanists.

A recital of songs and original monologues for the benefit of the Hospital Music Committee of the New York City hospitals was given a few weeks ago by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Rogers. Justin Williams was at the piano. Mr. Rogers sang two Ravel songs, and others by Massenet and Clayton Johns.

The week before Mr. Rogers was heard in a song recital at Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn.

A Miracle Play, based on the old Miracle plays of the twelfth century, was produced on December 16, 17 and 18 in Cincinnati by Miss Minnie Tracey for the benefit of the new Victory Boulevard Catholic High School.

The production began with a prologue, called Four Women of Holy Writ, portraying Miriam, Rebecca, Ruth and Deborah. The Birth of Christ was announced by the Angel of the Annunciation, played by Lillian Sherman. Tableaux of the Birth of Christ, posed after paintings by Corregio and Raphael, were given, and the music from Paul Bliss' Miracle Play was played by the Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Walter Heerman. The epilogue was a vision of Christ saying, "Suffer little children to come unto me." The performance ended, as was customary in the old plays, with the cast joining in singing praises.

W. Otto Miessner, director of the Miessner Institute, Chicago, gave twelve hours' instruction in his Melody Way Method of piano playing to teachers and music supervisors on January 2 and 3.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

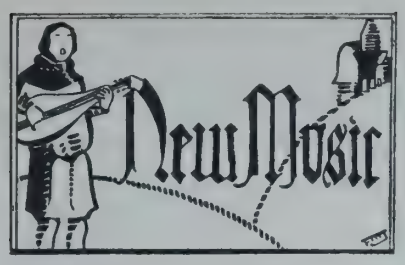
Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

V. TREVISAN Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



A NUMBER of new vocal compositions have been issued by the Theodore Presser Company, Philadelphia. Two of the new songs are by Charles Wakefield Cadman, his Reeds, and In the Garden of Sahara, both for high voice. The former is a melodious ballad of love, with considerably more rhythmic subtlety and device than is usually to be found in pieces of this sort. The latter is Oriental in its flavor, and includes a wordless passage for voice of marked individuality and impressiveness.

Mana-Zucca's Love You Are My Keeper has the qualities of seriousness and profundity which have marked this composer's other compositions of the sort, with an accompaniment which is skillful in its suggestion of harmony by chromatic figurations. This also is for high voice, as is the last of the new quartet of Presser issues, Eternal Light, by A. Buzzi-Peccia, a composition of religious fervor, supported by an accompaniment that is diatonic in harmony and even in rhythm.

Two more numbers in the extensive Schirmer Scholastic Series have been received. Pascual Roch's Modern Method for the Guitar consists of three volumes of over one hundred pages each, and takes up the study of this instrument with a completeness usually applied only to major orchestral instruments. Besides, technical studies the work contains a number of accompaniments for well known melodious songs, mostly of Spanish origin.

Angela Diller and Elizabeth Quaile edit the Fourth Solo Book for the Piano. It is an anthology of compositions for pupils of middle grade. Schumann, Krebe, Czerny, Rebikof, Handel, Corelli, Haydn, Bach, Grieg, Heller, and Rameau are among the names which one reads in the table of contents. Aside from the excellence of the selection from the point of the musical and educational quality of the works selected, the editors have displayed good judgment and pedagogical knowledge in the phrasing, dynamics, and fingering. Teachers will find this work uncommonly useful.

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

Eighteen Pianists Give Benefit Concert

Eighteen pianists under the direction of Walter Damrosch appeared in an ensemble recital at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, last Tuesday evening in a concert for the benefit of The Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. Those who played were Guy Maier, Ernest Schelling, Lee Pattison, Sigismund Stojowski, Guiomar Novaes, Josef Lhevinne, Alexander Brailowsky, Ethel Leginska, Myra Hess, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Harold Bauer, Germaine Schnitzer, Yolando Mero, Mischa Levitski, Carl Friedberg, Ernest Hutcheson, Alexander Siloti, and Elly Ney. Olga Samaroff, who also was announced to play, was not able to be present.

The program commenced with Saint-Saens' Variations on a Beethoven Theme in which the pianists played the parts singly, and joined together for the fugue. The concert took on an air of humor when Mmes. Hess, Leginska, and Mero played the overture to La Dame Blance at a single piano, with Messrs. Bauer, and Schelling hovering behind them to turn the leaves of their music. From then on the audience divided its mood between enjoyment of the music and amusement at the banter on the stage.

The program included Chabrier's Espagna in a two piano version played by Messrs. Maier and Pattison; Schumann's Carnival, in which each of the pianists was soloist in a number and all joined together for the Davidsbundler March; variations by Liadow, Borodin, Rimsky, and Cui on a Chopsticks Theme, played by successive couples; Rossini's Gazza Ladra and Schubert's Marche Militaire, played ensemble.

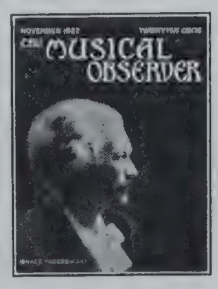
A player piano and a piano roll of the playing of fourteen artists were auctioned off with Walter Damrosch and Joseph P. Day functioning as auctioneers. The piano was bought by Thomas Cochran for $22,000, and the roll by Cornelius N. Bliss for $2,000. The latter sum was sent to the pianist and composer Maurice Moszkowski, who is an invalid in Paris. The house was filled to capacity.

MME. MARIE GABRIELLE LESCHETIZKY
Widow of the Famed Russian Teacher Whose New York Debut, Postponed on Account of Illness, Is Scheduled for Jan. 13.

Russian Choir With N. Y. Symphony

At the younger people's concert of the New York Symphony Society on the afternoon of December 28 at Carnegie Hall, New York, Vladimir Golschmann conducted, and the Russian Symphonic Choir, directed by Basile Kibalchich, assisted.

"Music & Letters"
FOUNDED 1920
The British Musical Quarterly
100 pages: 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
"Music and Letters is the best thing of its kind that is published, and forms a valuable addition to the library."—Musical Standard, August 23rd, 1924.
LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)

MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)

SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).

FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....

COVENT GARDEN AND THE ROYAL OPERA, by Richard Northcoat (published by the Press Printers, Long Acre, London), is a detailed history of the leading opera houses of the history of music. The chronological data are prefaced by a historic sketch of the three Covent Garden Theatres since the first was opened on December 7, 1732.

These dozen pages of history, amply and colorfully illustrated, combine the facts of the career of Covent Garden with interesting incidental material of human interest: more or less detailed accounts of the riots, fires, ovations, criticisms, popular tastes, and managerial difficulties of which the history of that interesting theatre is full.

After this prefatory material comes the body of Mr. Northcoat's work, a summary from season to season of all the performances presented at Covent Garden from 1888 until the winter of 1924. Besides the statistics reporting the works given each year and the number of performances, there is supplementary information concerning the more important events each year, the opening of a season, the advent of a great singer, a gala cast, and so on. The information is limited to facts about complete performances. The ballet activities of the theatre are little considered; the stress is upon the singers.

"In the annals of Opera and Drama," writes Mr. Northcoat, "there is no more interesting history than that of Covent Garden. At one or other of the buildings that have occupied the site the world's leading singers have been heard in the foremost operatic compositions; and practically all the great actors and actresses have appeared on its stages, where also numerous English plays—now regarded as classics—have been seen for the first time."

The fascination of this "interesting history" Mr. Northcoat has reproduced even in his short historical preface, and although the rest of the material is statistical the freshness and interest of the book is maintained by the intrinsic magic of the names which are written on every page, and by the completeness of the gallery of illustrations in which are included in costume nearly all the operatic celebrities of the periods in which Covent Garden flourished.

B. Z.

SUMMY'S CORNER
A work that has received the highest commendations, even to the extent of being pronounced the best work ever published on the subject is Harmonic Material and It's Uses
by
ADOLF WEIDIG
Price, $3.00, plus postage
Published by
Clayton F. Summy Co.
429 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Tibbett the Young American Baritone Who Made So Much of His Role in Falstaff That His Auditors Insisted on His Taking a Curtain Call at the Premiere Revival at the Metropolitan Opera House Last Friday Night

Photo by Mishkin.

Radio Music Stirs Managers

(Continued from page 1.)

The Musical Digest, "that this is a matter between the Victor Talking Machine Company and the artist with whom it has a record-contract. We have no knowledge except by hearsay of the specific broadcast reservation clause in any contract between an artist and the artist's manager.

"It is true that I have gone to several managers, though not all, to inform them, as an act of courtesy, of our intentions in this experiment. We have approached the artists direct because we felt it was fitting for the artists to secure the consent of their managers to broadcast, and failing in that to do as the artists deemed best.

"When the period is reached which produces proof that the broadcasting experiment has increased business to such an extent that we would feel so warranted, we would say to an artist: 'We would now like to make a proposition for further broadcastings, not of an experimental nature, on a sound financial basis.'

"In that event," continued Mr. Child, "and if the artist thus approached were to say 'yes' we would ask the artist to arrange the business details with his manager.

"The attitude of the Victor Company in this experimental broadcast matter has been one of business courtesy, to inform the concert manager of the Victor's new plans and its desire to carry out such an experiment. We have had and still have the feeling that we had and have the right to take up the matter with the artists themselves, leaving to them the adjusting of the details with their managers."

New York managers interviewed by a representative for The Musical Digest all coincided in the general expression of their views. They hold that the time of broadcasting, the period of the year, and the frequency are the three elements chiefly at issue.

It has been suggested that the safest time for broadcasting, during any regular concert season, would be at an hour prior to eight o'clock in the evening. Several managers believe that broadcasting could serve many constructive interests if it were conducted between May 1 and September 15 each year, or on Sunday evenings, when concerts throughout the country are practically nil.

The New York managers, members of the National Musical Managers' Association, held a meeting Saturday afternoon. President George Engles had no statement to make.

Incidentally, the statement of theatre managers concerning the threatened danger to their business was followed, last Friday, by a rise in several radio corporation stocks, in one instance—that of the Radio Corporation of America—by an advance of thirteen points.

Neither Miss Bori nor Mr. McCormack had ever sung into a microphone previous to last Thursday; and this is said to have caused the early portions of what they sang to be less effective than their later selections. The presence of static, it is said, interfered with perfect broadcasting conditions.

The experiment was nevertheless keenly interesting to vast numbers of persons. It is not yet known how completely the Victor company will be able to carry out its advertised plans to broadcast in the future those artists whose services over the radio are controlled by their managers.

The next Victor broadcasting will take place the evening of January 15 next with Frances Alda and Miguel Fleta, soprano and tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
POLA NEGRI in
"EAST OF SUEZ"
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"TOMORROW'S LOVE"
With AGNES AYERS and PAT OMALLEY
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
"WIFE OF THE CENTAUR"
With JOHN GILBERT, ELEANOR BOARDMAN and AILEEN PRINGLE
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

The wind bloweth and listeth (the radio wind) . . . stirred up, it might be said, by Calvin Child of the Victor.

* * *

Are you a music artist? If so do you favor broadcasting? All in favor say "aye;" contrary "no." The ?'s have it.

* * *

Yes, John McCormack and Lucrezia Bori admit they experienced stage fright at the outset of their introductory broadcast efforts—when they looked at the microphone and realized suddenly that a few million people formed their unseen audience. It appeared, however, to wear off as they went along.

* * *

Written and oral managerial refusals of permission for the Victor Company to broadcast artists scarcely carry the weight which an injunction might. Eh, what?

* * *

In the midst of all the fuss comes Erich Siemon of the Wolf and Sachs Concert Management of Berlin bringing Willem Furtwangler to this country. Mr. Siemon admits he likes this country and its progressive methods. He will remain here for two months.

* * *

It begins to look, from reports received from this same Berlin, as though Eleanor Painter had made a pronounced impression in her two appearances at the Staatsoper, in Madama Butterfly and Oberon. Miss Painter, by the way, has deserted for good the light opera stage. She will remain in serious opera, which, by the way, was her first professional love.

* * *

Another New York visitor during the past few days has been Conductor Fritz Reiner of the Cincinnati Symphony. And also, it should be said, Mrs. Reiner. They attended, incidentally, half a dozen New Year's Eve supper parties.

* * *

The New York Philharmonic Orchestra musicians took to their hearts, and at once, Mr. Furtwaengler. The real test of a conductor comes, by the way, at his first rehearsal . . . not during his first public appearance.

* * *

Dynamic Phil Miner has another mark to his credit—The Miracle production in Cleveland. Some of his friends advised against so huge an undertaking, but—and now there is every indication that the income will meet the very large budget of expense.

* * *

Florence Easton's death scene in the finale of Madama Butterfly at the New York Metropolitan last Wednesday evening was one of the most convincing pieces of acting seen in opera in a long time.

* * *

Busy Sigmund Spaeth is busier these days than ever. He has taken further responsibilities in broadcasting each week, from Station WOR in Chickering Hall, a resume of New York music activities during the preceding seven days and telling what interesting is to happen during the week to come.

* * *

Dr. Lindsay Norden and Mrs. Norden of Philadelphia ran over to New York last week to hear the Boston Symphony, and to observe Conductor Koussevitzky in action.

* * *

Speaking of conductors, Mme. Ethel Leginska has become one. Thus do we have another pianist who is able to lead an orchestra.

* * *

Seen on Broadway Saturday morning—snow piled six feet high in the gutter in front of the Metropolitan Opera . . . a few blocks away a shop window displaying men's straw hats.

* * *

Willem Willeke and his associates, the Elshuco Trio and South Mountain Quartet, are planning to present all of Schubert's chamber music next summer at their Sunday afternoon concerts at Pittsfield, Mass.

* * *

The Chicago Opera Company has secured an injunction restraining the Dollars-for-me Feodor Chaliapin from appearing in Washington prior to his scheduled engagement there with Samuel Insull's organization. Perhaps the Russian singer may learn a lesson through that experience.

* * *

Rufus Dewey, one of the best known publicity promoters in the music profession, has gone to Cleveland to take charge of matters there for the Chicago company which were to have been performed by Ben Atwell, whose illness made it impossible for him to carry them out.

* * *

The Prussian Academy of Arts and Sciences has conferred on the Munich composer, Hans Pfitzner, the decoration Pour le Merite.

* * *

A Stamford, Conn., preparatory school for boys offers scholarships to athletes and musicians. Music would seem to be getting on.

* * *

Lawrence Tibbett has received from Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, a congratulatory letter. Lawrence can preserve it . . . for his grandchildren, if one fine day he should come to have them.

* * *

The Workers' Educational Orchestra (a New York organization) has places for one hundred men and women—who must be working people—who will receive instruction and practical opportunities. The business address of this orchestra is 151 East Eighty-third street.

* * *

Igor Stravinsky arrived in New York last Sunday. More froubles for Arthur Judson.

MUD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Ships and Shoes--- and the Violin
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 13 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic and Leipzig Gewandhaus orchestras, is winning distinguished successes in his American debut in a series of appearances as guest leader of the New York Philharmonic Society.

Bulletins of News

Last Sunday evening's Metropolitan Opera concert, in New York, provided a feature in the first public appearance on the stage of that institution of Carmela Ponselle, sister of Rosa Ponselle who has for some years been a member of the Metropolitan company.

Miss Carmela Ponselle's devotion to the career of her sister, which prompted her to forgo her own ambitions in order to advance those of her sister, has occasioned praise, and her appearance in a Metropolitan Opera concert is one of the measures of her reward.

In the O Don Fatale aria, from Don Carlos, Miss Carmela Ponselle evoked from the audience warm applause, and more applause was forthcoming after her singing, with her sister, in a duet for soprano and mezzo-soprano from Aida. There were several recalls for the Misses Ponselle. Lawrence Tibbett, the American baritone who made such a fine impression in Falstaff, roused his auditors and was frequently recalled. Ralph Errolle, American tenor, likewise impressed well.

Cyrena Van Gordon, a leading contralto of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, received recently three letters demanding money. The final communication asked that $500 be delivered to the messenger, a taxi-cab driver. When brought before the police and questioned he pleaded innocence in the matter. Miss Van Gordon is reported to have engaged a bodyguard to protect her.

A reception in honor of Josef Hofmann, the pianist, was given Sunday evening by Frederick T. Steinway in Steinway Hall, New York. It was for men alone, and served as a sort of farewell to the historic Steinway Hall, in East Fourteenth street, where many of the greatest music artists were first heard in this country in earlier days. The guests included one hundred seventy-five of the foremost musicians and others active in representative music affairs.

Dinorah, the sixth among the eleven novelties and revivals planned for the New York Metropolitan, will be sung on the evening of January 22 with a cast including Mmes. Galli-Curci, Alcock, and Ryan; and Messrs. Tokatyan, de Luca, d'Angelo, and Altglass. Although Mme. Galli-Curci made her New York debut in this opera at the Lexington Opera House in 1918, it has not been sung at the Metropolitan since 1892, when Marie Van Zandt had the leading coloratura role.

Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan, who is ill with typhoid fever in his New York home, has passed the crisis of his sickness, and is steadily improving, his physicians announce.

Hoogstraten Re-engaged For Next Stadium Season

WILLEM VAN HOOGSTRATEN has been engaged by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for his fourth season at the Stadium this summer. He will conduct for five weeks and his engagement will be supplemented by that of several guest conductors with whom negotiations are pending.

Mr. Van Hoogstraten has also been engaged as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra for five concerts during Leopold Stokowski's coming winter vacation. He will lead the Philadelphia organization in its own city on January 16, 17 and 19; in Washington, January 20, and in Baltimore, January 21.

Splendid Artists Are to Broadcast

Continuation of radio broadcasting by the Brunswick and the Victor companies is announced by those organizations, from New York stations controlled by the Radio Corporation of America and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The Brunswick Hour of Music will take place this evening, and will be linked by land wires with Washington, D. C., and Schenectady stations. Karin Branzell, contralto, and Fredrich Schorr, baritone (both leading-role Metropolitan Opera artists), Max Rosen, violinist, and the Brunswick Concert Orchestra, Walter Rogers conductor, will furnish the program.

William A. Brophy, Director of Laboratories for the Brunswick, stated that following Brunswick's broadcasting of internationally famous artists (the first done by any phonograph company) there had been received numerous letters from listeners-in commending highly the quality of transmission and reception. "As a consequence," declared Mr. Brophy, "Brunswick will continue broadcasting."

A change in the Victor broadcasting set for Thursday evening next—which will be linked with seven other stations—will provide the appearance of Frank La Forge, pianist, in place of Miguel Fleta, the Metropolitan Opera tenor previously announced. Frances Alda, a leading Metropolitan Opera soprano principal, the Victor Concert Orchestra, and the Florentine Instrumental Quartet will also be on the program.

Several New York managers stated to The Musical Digest that they had been assured by their artists—most of whom have contracts with Victor to make records—that those artists would not broadcast, for the present at least.

Injury Postpones Singer's Debut

Owing to an injury to her foot suffered in a fall with her horse yesterday in a rehearsal at the Metropolitan, Mme. Nanny Larsen-Todsen, Swedish soprano, will not make her debut as scheduled in Tristan and Isolde this Thursday evening. The injury is not serious.

Stravinsky Conducts N. Y. Philharmonic in His American Debut

Russian Composer Arouses Varied Comment in Program of His Own Works.

PREMIERE OF SCHERZO

One of the most brilliant concert audiences of the season filled Carnegie Hall Thursday night at the first American appearance of Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, in the role of conductor. Mr. Stravinsky led the Philharmonic Orchestra through a program of his own works, which included the transcription of the Song of the Volga Boatmen, the Fireworks Fantasy, Le Chant de Rossignol, the L'Oiseau de Feu Suite, the Pulcinella Suite and Scherzo Fantastique (marked first time in America).

Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune that Mr. Stravinsky "conducted his scores with complete confidence, of course, and with rather more of technical competence and address than one had looked for . . . he has a clear and forcible beat, and an admirable sense of rhythm." His readings, continued Mr. Gilman, were traditional. "They excelled in their extraordinary vitality, their rhythmical power and flexibility; in finesse and clarity, in tonal balance, in nuance, they left something to be desired."

Other reviewers were even less enthusiastic. Ernest Newman was surprised that he did as well as he did. "Conducting is obviously not his metier, but he generally managed to get the broad effect of a passage." Of the man as a composer, Mr. Newman wrote "the plain truth is that he is no longer in front of us but, in a great many respects, very much behind us." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, he conducted "in a dull and uninteresting manner, with nose in the score." W. J. Henderson of the Sun stated that "Mr. Stravinsky is a highly interesting personage in the world of music, but he is not a good conductor" and added that he is "without question now the foremost man in the realm of music" and that his best compositions "have magnificent virility, amazing picturesqueness and dazzling orchestral splendor."

The Scherzo and Pulcinella Suite did not evoke any great enthusiasm on the part of the reviewers. Mr. Gilman dismissed them as having little value, and Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail agreed that the latter is "music of little importance, poaching on circus preserves." The Scherzo, according to Mr. Downes, is "a piece of brilliant instrumentation by a student mastering his business with precocious rapidity." Deems Taylor of the World, thought it "a charming orchestral tour de force, with little of the savage intentness or sardonic remoteness of the later Stravinsky."

The orchestra was praised by several writers. Mr. Gilman wrote that "the orchestra played the difficult, tricky music with virtuosity, sensitive responsiveness and tonal beauty."

Bruckner Symphony Is Played as Memorial

Stokowski Conducts Joslyn and Eichheim Compositions in New York Concert.

At the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday evening Leopold Stokowski observed the centenary of Anton Bruckner by playing his Seventh Symphony. The novelty on the program was the War Dance from Henry Joslyn's suite, Native Moments. Another work by an American composer was the Japanese Nocturne from Henry Eichheim's Oriental Impressions. Sibelius' tone poem, Finlandia, concluded the program.

The following statement made by Olin Downes in the Times exemplifies to a great extent the analytical comment of the symphony: "The Seventh Symphony is a stirring and at the same time an almost vexatious experience to a listener. Uplifted by the lofty ascent of the theme, which is like celestial portals opening to reveal wonder, he suddenly descends to futilities, to fussing, to the piling up of sonorities to tremendous climaxes, with apparently nothing to say when the top is reached; to the endless repetition of things not worth the saying, cheek by jowl with great bursts of power and a vision at times apocalyptic."

In spite of this feeling, the reviewers commended Mr. Stokowski for playing the work, and enthused over his reading. Deems Taylor wrote in the World that "Mr. Stokowski's penetrating and sympathetic reading and the fine playing of his orchestra could not manage to write Bruckner's music for him." The first two movements have "splendid stuff" in them, according to Ernest Newman of the Post, and "Mr. Stokowski—who was in excellent form last evening—and the orchestra made them very beautiful and very impressive." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail considered the reading generally "vital and spirited." Lawrence Gilman said that it was played "devotedly and with eloquence."

Mr. Newman considered the War Dance " a vigorous piece of work that seemed to me—so far as a stranger is competent to speak on such a point—refreshingly American." Mr. Gilman referred to it as "brief and amusing—a not particularly adventurous experiment in syncopated rhythms and mildly jazzed scoring." To Mr. Taylor it was "primitive, brazen, and at times engagingly vulgar; nothing very momentous, but the work of a musician who is not afraid to be himself, and who knows his orchestra." W. J. Henderson of the Sun observed that it seemed to him like good dance music, and Mr. Sanborn scored it as "poor jazz, lumbering, ponderous."

The Japanese Nocturne was called "really lovely" by Pitts Sanborn, and Mr. Henderson remarked that it was "good music, with picturesque color and insinuating charm" and should be heard oftener. To Mr. Downes it is "a very charming patch of color" with Mr. Eichheim's impression interpreted with "rare tonal felicity."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Fedora—with Mmes. Jeritza, Guilford, Alcock, and Dalossy; and Messrs. Gigli, Scotti, and Martino; Mr. Papi conducting.

THURSDAY

Tristan and Isolde—with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen (debut) and Branzell; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

FRIDAY

Rigoletto (matinee)—with Mmes. Galli-Curci and Gordon; and Messrs. Fleta, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Jenufa (evening)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Meader, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

SATURDAY

Falstaff (matinee)—with Mmes. Alda, Bori, and Telva; and Messrs. Gigli, Scotti, Tibbett, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Andrea Chenier (evening)—with Mmes. Ponselle and Bourskaya; and Messrs. Fleta and Danise; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Marta—with Mme. Alda and Messrs. Gigli, Didur, and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

Taucher and Schorr Make Metropolitan Season Debuts

Curt Taucher and Friedrich Schorr made their first appearances of the season at the Metropolitan on the afternoon of December 3. The rest of the cast was the same as in previous performances. Jeanne Gordon, who was scheduled to take Frances Peralta's place as Venus, was ill, and Mme. Peralta returned in her part. The Sun reported that Mr. Taucher impersonated Tannhauser admirably, and the Post reviewer found him "most satisfactory." The latter review spoke of Frederick Schorr as a "most pleasing Wolfram."

According to the Times both the tenor and baritone returned in good voice, and the Telegram-Mail reported that although Mr. Taucher did not start at his best he improved as the evening proceeded. In the opinion of this commentator "the lyric quality of Mr. Schorr's rich baritone is always heard to advantage in Wolfram's music." The World observer said, "Mr. Schorr as always made a tender and sympathetic figure from the luckless Wolfram and Mr. Taucher was vocally touching as Tannhauser." The Herald Tribune spoke of the beautiful singing and acting of Mr. Schorr.

Tovey Leads in Edinburgh

Edinburgh, Dec. 18.—In the second concert of the sixty-second session of Reid Orchestral Concerts Professor Donald Francis Tovey conducted the Reid Orchestra, now in its ninth season, in a program which included Haydn's Salomon Symphony No. 2 in D, Glazunoff's Scene Dansante, and Brahms' Second Symphony. George Parker was the assisting artist in a Bach aria and in Gustav Mahler's Kinder-Totenlieder.

May Korb Sings in Newark

Newark, Jan. 7.—May Korb, soprano, was heard in recital recently at Wallace Hall under the auspices of the South Park Presbyterian Church. The Newark Evening News lauded her refinement of style, and excellence of technique.

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Furtwaengler Makes U. S. Debut

Leads N. Y. Philharmonic in First Guest Concert; Pablo Casals Is Soloist.

The first appearance of Wilhelm Furtwaengler, conductor of the Leipsic Gewandhaus and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, took place in Carnegie Hall January 4. According to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, he "achieved one of the most substantial successes in the history of local music." Pablo Casals, cellist, was the soloist in the Haydn D major Concerto. The other numbers were Strauss' Don Juan and the Brahms C minor Symphony.

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that the performance of this symphony "swept everything before it by reason of its vitality, the irresistible and unbroken current of its rhythms and the spirit of greatness and heroism that informed every measure." It was, wrote Mr. Downes, the "most thrilling" performance in his experience. W. J Henderson of the Sun asserted that "it was a noble reading of a noble symphony," and that the conductor set out to reveal Brahms, and not himself. It was to Mr. Sanborn "genuinely a re-creation—an experience like hearing and completely grasping a master work for the first time."

Mr. Furtwaengler's reading of Don Juan, in Mr. Henderson's opinion, was "brilliant" with "passion, splendor, even tempestuous climax." In it Mr. Downes discovered "fire, freshness, and youth." His sincerity as a musician was agreed upon by all the reviewers, even Ernest Newman of the Post, who thought him lacking in imagination. "He represents," wrote Mr. Newman, "the best type of German Kapellmeister—soundly schooled, thoroughly master of everything in his art that can be taught or learned, but without anything that could be called genius, or even, in the more critical sense of the word, individuality."

In direct opposition to this was the prevailing opinion of the conductor. Mr. Downes wrote that he was not, in any sense, "a man of routine. There was a communicative fire in everything that he did, flame that burned clear and bright within." Although slightly more reserved, Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune said that Mr. Furtwaengler "is one of those rare conductors who possess the great style . . . he has the stride, the gesture, the address, of a major prophet." Mr. Henderson wrote that he gave the "conviction of solidity, learning, temperament and the power to lead men," and in the entire program his rhythm "was admirable in its sharpness and correctness. His sense of balance seemed impeccable, and his phrasing was fastidious in its articulation."

Mr. Casals, wrote Mr. Sanborn, played the concerto "with that consummate art for which he is renowned." In the words of Mr. Downes, the cellist played "with the warmth and transparency of tone, the ease and finish, the feeling for the fine proportions of the score and for the bonhommie of this delightful composer, which were to be expected of such an artist." W. J. Henderson said he played it in "perfect Haydn style" and "received from Mr. Furtwaengler and the orchestra an excellent accompaniment." This writer also commented that the orchestra "played as if inspired" in the Brahms symphony.

Nina Morgana, Chamlee, and de Luca Sing in the Barber

Nina Morgana as Rosina, Mario Chamlee as the Count, Giuseppe de Luca as the Barber, and Mr. Rothier as Don Basilio were the leading members of the cast which sang Rossini's Barber of Seville for the second time this season at the New York Metropolitan under the direction of Gennaro Papi on the evening of January 3. Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that the performance was lively, and the Post reviewer agreed that the cast "kept the fun going and everybody seemed pleased."

This commentator called Miss Morgana "a vivacious and tuneful Rosina," while the Telegram-Mail reported her as being "dainty and spirited in action and of a charming vocal freshness." The Herald Tribune writer agreed that the singers and Mr. Papi presented "a lively, most appreciated performance," and described Miss Morgana as "an agreeably vivacious Rosina in very creditable voice."

The cast included also Mme. Mattfeld and Messrs. Malatesta, Reschiglian, and Paltrinieri.

Varied Program at Metropolitan

Erna Rubinstein was the guest artist at the Sunday evening concert at the New York Metropolitan on January 4. She played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and a group of solos. The program included also excerpts from Rigoletto and Romeo and Juliet, sung by Mmes. Morgana and Guilford, and Messrs. Tokatyan, Ballester, and Mardones. Mr. Bamboschek conducted.

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Metropolitan Revives Falstaff

Presentation Is Hailed Unusual Success; Settings and Direction Share Praise With Cast.

The revival of Verdi's Falstaff at the Metropolitan on January 2 proved the outstanding success of the New York operatic season thus far, was the consensus of both the audience and the reviewers. In the cast were Antonio Scotti, Lawrence Tibbett, Beniamino Gigli, Angelo Bada, Giordano Paltrinieri, Adamo Didur, Lucrezia Bori, Frances Alda, Marion Telva and Kathleen Howard. Tullio Serafin conducted.

W. J. Henderson of the Sun called it "one of the triumphs of Mr. Gatti-Casazza's administration" which brought glory to all concerned in it. It was not only "a fine revival," wrote Deems Taylor in the World, "it is a rattling good show and ought to have a prosperous career . . . Last night's production was a triumph of expert stage direction." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune was agreed that it was one of the organization's "finest achievements . . . The cast, the resourceful and efficient stage direction of Mr. von Wymetal, Mr. Urban's tasteful settings, the orchestral performance under Mr. Serafin all contributed to an ensemble that was full of life and color and variety."

According to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, Mr. Scotti brought to the role "his long experience, his artistic authority, his command of style." His performance, said Mr. Gilman, was a "masterpiece of rich and subtle characterization" and Deems Taylor found his characterization "consistent and extraordinarily detailed," conveying the impression of the "pompous and amorous old scoundrel" with "grace, simplicity and economy of means." Mr. Scotti's voice, continued Mr. Taylor, "took on a mellowness and richness that were a revelation." To quote Mr. Henderson, the role "presents one of his most successful characterizations."

Lawrence Tibbett, young American baritone who sang the role of Ford, received an extraordinary ovation at the end of the second act, when the audience demanded that he take a curtain call alone. As Mr. Taylor put it, he "suddenly came into his own last night with a performance of amazing vocal richness, vitality, and dramatic resourcefulness . . . His acting was even more of a revelation." Mr. Gilman wrote that "his magnetic and authoritative performance in the Inn scene of the second act took the audience completely captive" and added that he deserved his ovation for a performance that was "irresistible in its fire and grace and skill." In Mr. Sanborn's opinion the impersonation was "worked out with penetrating intelligence to the minutest detail; it was as notable for distinct, unforced, expressive diction, for artfully varied tone color, and for skillful phrasing of the music, as for its dramatic accomplishment, and it all hung together." Olin Downes of the Times was impressed with the sincerity, dramatic feeling, and "excellent vocal quality" of his work. In the opinion of Ernest Newman of the Post, it was one of the "subtlest" pieces of acting this season at the Metropolitan.

Full praise was accorded Mr. Gigli by Mr. Taylor for singing "delightfully" and acting "with becoming self-effacement." Mr. Henderson stated that he "showed his artistic quality by assuming the part and performing it excellently." Mr. Sanborn agreed, and Mr. Downes referred to "his customary beauty of tone." Marion Telva received several commendatory notices for the excellence of her work. According to Mr. Henderson, she has progressed "in vocal art as well as in acting" and was a competent Dame Quickly. Mr. Taylor said that she made the character a "fetching soubrette." According to Mr. Downes, her impersonation was "admirably sung, acted with utmost humor," and gave "further and important evidence of her unusual talent . . . Her voice and histrionic ability were conspicuous."

Mme. Alda's voice "was delightful in the music of Nanetta," wrote Mr. Sanborn, and Mr. Taylor thought she sang "exquisitely." The "relishing impersonation" of Mrs. Page by Mme. Howard delighted Mr. Sanborn. To quote Mr. Taylor, she proved that "a good actress can make a good part out of almost anything." This writer found Miss Bori "charming." More enthusiastic was Mr. Henderson, who wrote that she was an "entrancing vision of beauty and grace. The adorable soprano was created for this role. She looks it, sings and acts it. She is the very champagne of the comedy, and in no other opera has she acted with such a sure command of technique. The music is all favorable to her style and she sings it delightfully." On the other hand, Mr. Sanborn found her voice unsuited to the role.

Of the others in the cast, Mr. Taylor wrote: "Mr. Bada was a capital Caius, and Messrs. Paltrinieri and Didur had an uproarious time as Bardolph and Pistol." Agreed was Mr. Henderson that their work was praiseworthy.

The sets, wrote Mr. Taylor, "may be placed among Mr. Urban's best work." The other writers agreed as to their charm. Mr. Serafin received due praise for his conducting, which, in Mr. Taylor's words, was done "with pace and precision, and skillful balance that were the life of the evening." Mr. Downes said he "exerted an authority, a flexibility and incisiveness of style in his reading which seemed to leave nothing in the score unrevealed."

MARION TELVA

Added to the General Success of the Recent Revival of Falstaff at the Metropolitan by Her Portrayal of the Role of Dame Quickly.

Ganz Conducts Christmas Concert

St. Louis, Jan. 1.—At the Christmas concert of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rudolph Ganz, Giuseppe Martucci's Notturno and Novelleta were heard here for the first time. The other numbers were Schumann's Manfred Overture, Brahms' Fourth Symphony, and Casella's Italia Rhapsody. Richard Spamer wrote in the Globe-Democrat that the Martucci numbers deserved "a permanent place in the orchestra's repertoire; the first as an inspiring tone painting, with the true nocturne atmosphere, the second as an example of recent orchestral structure, acceptable in form, sensible in intent and grateful to the ear."

Verbrugghen Leads Messiah

Minneapolis, Jan. 4.—Henri Verbrugghen conducted the St. Paul Municipal Chorus on the evening after Christmas here in a performance of Handel's Messiah. The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra assisted. The soloists were Grace Kerns, soprano; Amy Ellerman, contralto; Judson House, tenor; and Fraser Gange, baritone.

Montemezzi Sails for New York

Genoa, Jan. 6.—The composer Italo Montemezzi was a passenger on the steamer Conte Verde, which sailed for New York today. Signor Montemezzi is the composer of The Love of Three Kings and other operas. He is accompanied by his wife.

To Play Primitive Music

Harriette Cady will give a program of primitive music at the Princess Theatre, N. Y., January 20. Old instruments will be shown and descriptions of them given.

Spalding Is Soloist With Gabrilowitsch

Detroit Hears Borodin's Third Symphony; Handel's Messiah Is Sung.

Detroit, Jan. 2.—Albert Spalding, violinist, was soloist at the New Year's Day concert of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ossip Gabrilowitsch. C. J. R., writing in the Times, lauded him as "a finely gifted musician, an artist of imagination, great power and glittering brilliance." His rendition of Mozart's Fourth Concerto, and the Saint-Saens Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso was done, according to this reviewer, "with consummate skill and served admirably to display his virile and polished technique."

In the same vein were the remarks of Charlotte M. Tarsney of the Free Press, who wrote that "his range of technique, his poise, his intellectual grasp of a number, his beautiful quality of tone, and the refinement of style he displays in his work, all mark him the thorough artist." Cyril Arthur Player wrote in the News that he believed Mr. Spalding to be a "virtuoso who enjoys making music more than he cares to show off his adequate technical proficiency."

The novelty of the concert was Borodin's unfinished Third Symphony. Other numbers were Dvorak's Carnival Overture and the Overture to Strauss' Die Fledermaus. In the orchestral sense, wrote Mr. Player, the Borodin number "was admirably done." C. J. R. and Charlotte M. Tarnsey disliked the insistent reiteration of the theme which became monotonous.

Last Sunday evening Handel's oratorio, The Messiah, was given its first presentation as an annual event by the Symphony Choir under the direction of Mr. Gabrilowitsch. The soloists were Richard Crooks, tenor, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Nevada van der Veer, contralto, and Fred Patton, bass. To quote C. J. R. "all proved themselves well schooled in this particular branch of music." Other reviewers commended their work. Victor Kolar, assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, trained the organization, which, with the assistance of the Musical Art Society of London, Ont., gave the concert.

N. Y. Again to Hear Borovsky

A recital will be given at Aeolian Hall on January 29 by Alexander Borovsky, Russian pianist, who made his debut in New York last season.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 13

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Contractual Rights

The late J. P. Morgan once said that he often loaned money on his faith in personal integrity. The word of some men is as good as their bond; and that fact, becoming widely known, has on occasions become a priceless asset.

Among persons and organizations who conduct their relationships honorably a contract is regarded largely as a memorandum in writing of an agreement, available to be referred to in the event that something arises over which there is a misunderstanding. In any such circumstance a reading of the contract—if all that should be included in it has been clearly defined—usually settles the dispute.

Contractual rights are generally respected by men of business. They are recognized as of fundamental importance to the stability of a nation; they must be upheld if the foundations of a people are to be preserved.

It has come to the notice of The Musical Digest that the Victor Talking Machine Company regards as of minor consideration agreements which certain music managers assert they have with their artists wherein the former are granted the authority to accord or to refuse permission to those artists to broadcast their art over the radio.

Calvin G. Child, a Victor director, stated to the editor of The Musical Digest that he was aware only by hearsay of the existence of such broadcast reservation clauses in contracts between managers and artists; and that even where they obtained he "felt it was fitting for the artists to secure the consent of their managers to broadcast, and failing in that to do as the artists deemed best."

Certain artists who were first approached by Mr. Child to cooperate with the Victor company in its broadcast experiment consented without consulting their managers. They did so, they later explained, on the assumption that they were conferring a courtesy to an organization with which they were doing business. It did not occur to them that consequences viewed as carrying large import might be involved.

Mr. Child seems to hold that a consent, thus pledged, binds the artist to fulfilling the oral agreement to broadcast for the Victor company . . . despite any managerial objections, based on a clause in the manager-artist contract which requires the latter to secure the consent of the former to broadcast. He takes the stand that an artist, who happens to have in the contract with his manager a broadcast reservation clause, has no just reason for withdrawing a consent to broadcast, regardless of subsequent managerial interposition. Mr. Child's contention is that the failure of the Victor company to broadcast an artist after a published announcement so to do will place that organization in an embarrassing position (and Mr. Child as well).

It would appear that all this difficulty might have been avoided had Mr. Child consulted first with the managers of the artists whose services were desired in the Victor broadcast experiment. If managers who control the broadcast privileges of their artists object to their broadcasting (for reasons deemed for the best interests of the manager, the artists, and local managments which give concerts throughout the country) such objection deserves to be respected.

There is involved apparently a matter of contractual rights. If they are clearly set forth in a contract, and legally sound, no difficulty should be met with in upholding them.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

THE newspaper representatives present at Stravinsky's first American interview who had expected to find in the Russian composer an eccentric personality were immediately and completely surprised. He showed a genial disposition and friendly hospitality.

By all odds the most striking thing about the Russian composer is the lucidity of his thought. Never in an hour of answering questions did he cease to be clear, logical, and thoroughly sensible. And he was witty too. It was a pleasure to listen to his conversation, for from beginning to end he knew what he was talking about.

THE remark that made the biggest hit with those present was Stravinsky's assertion that he hates modern music. The writers hailed it with glee, and promised to use it next day for their leads.

"The term," said the composer, "is merely a formula. It is a principle which compromises those who subscribe to it."

The natural question then was about the status of the music of Stravinsky himself. "It is not futurist," he said, "or modern. It belongs to our own day. I write the way one must write now. I have no moral or political ideas in mind. The 'modernists,' many of whom are said to be disciples of mine (they are very nice and very foolish) write to shock the Bourgeois. I don't aim to shock the Bourgeois any more than to please the Bolsheviki. I can imagine Bourgeois persons liking my music and Bolsheviki disliking it, and vice versa. That isn't the point. I write my way, the way that my material at the moment demands, and the result is what counts."

THEN in a double-barreled burst of French and German (Stravinsky knows no English) he explained what is the rhythmic style of the present day. He spoke of the minuet with its pleasant, even rhythm; a sort of march. Then he turned to Chopin: "If one were to ask Chopin of what an octuple meter consists he would reply, 'One, two; one, two; one, two; and one, two; or one, two, three, four; and one, two, three, four.' All that is different now," continued Stravinsky. "We simply don't do music that way any more, as much as we may be able to appreciate what is already written.

"In our day an octuple rhythm is nothing so simple as it was with the Classical and even the Romantic composers. A series of eight beats now can be grouped one, two, three; one, two, three, four, five; or one; one, two, three, four, five, six, seven; or one; one, two; one, two; one, two, three,—anything that added up will make eight.

"The poets write free verse with longer and shorter lines; so do the musicians write longer and shorter measures."

STRAVINSKY illustrated again the folly of grouping all radicals and "incomprehensibles" in one hazy class. He showed that the distance between himself and the composers of quarter-tone music, for example, is perhaps as wide as between the latter and Tschaikowsky.

"I am not qualified to speak about quarter-tone music," said the Russian. "I was brought up with the ordinary diatonic scale in my ears, and I cannot hear these quarter-tone distinctions. I have listened to some of the music of Haba, but—I don't know. . . . It was like Brahms—Brahms a little out of tune.

"What is the limit to this experiment? I hear that already they are writing music for eighth tones, for sixteenth tones."

The question is valid for Stravinsky too. What is the limit of his rhythmic complication and novelty of instrumentation? It is not a very good question. There are no limits in music except what the listener can learn to like. And that can be even the sound of a choir of steam whistles blowing fortissimo.

FEW composers seem to have calculated as much and as consciously as has Stravinsky regarding each of his compositions in turn. He explained clearly his motivation in the Symphony of Wind Instruments. He was composing an elegy to Debussy. He wished the music not to lament, but to sing with the clear cold voice of the a capella choir in hollow medieval cathedral vaults.

"The philosophies of religion are uncompromising," said Stravinsky. "Good is good, and evil is evil. God is the basis of a fixed solid world. It was this religious solidity that I wished to suggest in the Symphony (which is not a classical symphony, but simply the singing together of a number of instruments). Therefore the music was written to be played without arbitrary nuance or interpretation. It must simply sound out clear, balanced, and unemotional.

"You know," said the composer further, "there are many kinds of errors in music. Sometimes one sounds a wrong note; that's too bad, but it is not very important. But errors of accent and of phrasing, misinterpretations which make a composition sing differently from what the composer intended—they are very grave."

STRAVINSKY spoke at length of his plans here and abroad. At present he is not composing. For that he needs time, care, privacy, and lack of any distraction. He has a new piano sonata, which, according to his custom, he is withholding from publication for some months, but of his future plans he would say nothing.

Also he expressed no favoritism among his compositions. "What I am writing at any given moment is what absorbs and interests me most. Then I think that it is the only and the greatest thing in the world."

INCIDENTALLY, in the interview which appeared in The Musical Digest a fortnight ago in which Carlos Salzedo spoke of Igor Stravinsky, the impression was given that Mr. Salzedo was doing preliminary work to aid in the preparations for the first New York concert of the composer which took place last Thursday. In fact Mr. Salzedo has been aiding in the preparation of the presentation of Stravinsky's Renard at a concert of the chamber music of the Russian at Aeolian Hall, New York, late this month. At this concert, which will be managed by the Auxiliary Board of the New York Philharmonic Society, the composer will play the piano, and a number of members of the Philharmonic Orchestra will take part.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Ships and Shoes—and the Violin

Carlos Sedano Is a Versatile Artist Whose Thoughts Often Stray to Automobile Racing and Tennis

by KAY KENNEDY

A YOUNG MAN who likes tennis, fox-trotting, American girls, cross-word puzzles, and whose ultimate ambition in life is to race in the Indianapolis Speedway—this is Carlos Sedano, Spanish violinist, who has, in the last few months, made New York and Boston debuts.

Sports were the first thing of which Mr. Sedano spoke. It was not hard to see that this subject absorbed a great deal of his attention. Apparently not even the demands of his art have kept him from the lighter interests of ordinary youths. He is particularly fond of tennis (he has won a tennis championship in San Sebastien), but it is auto racing that is dearest to his heart. When he spoke of it his face lighted.

"Auto racing—ah, that is glorious! Afraid? Why should I be? When one is racing there is no time to think about being afraid. No time to think about anything—just to feel yourself rushing through the air. Some day I hope to have a concert in Indianapolis so that I can at least see the speedway. Think of racing there!" His quick smile and boyish enthusiasm are well calculated to make one forget that this eager, dark-eyed young man who carries the burden of his twenty-one years so lightly is an honorary member of the Circle of Beaux Arts, has played three times by royal command before the ruling house of Spain, and once before the King and Queen of Belgium. Tall, broad-shouldered and lithe, he is an ideal type of athlete. In fact, he confided that he has just the same measurements as Georges Carpentier.

"Of course, I like New York—no, it is not my first visit. I was here for a while when I was studying. But in the winter here I cannot play tennis." His eyes roamed sadly to the window, from which could be seen a few listless flakes of snow fluttering past, only to die a watery death under the automobiles which purred up and down Fifth avenue. It was one of those half-hearted winter days with which New Yorkers are only too well acquainted, and certainly one not suited to tennis or any other sport. The young Spaniard did not allow himself to be depressed by the weather for very long.

"But," he continued, and he straightened the perky little polka-dot tie which matched the handkerchief protruding from his pocket, "after all, one can dance in the winter as well as in the summer. One can always dance! Tango? But, of course." Mr. Sedano, we learned later, has won two medals with his sister for tangoing. "It is the fox-trot that I like though." His shoulders swayed. "Is it strange that I love your country? I have had such a good time here, and people have been so kind to me. And the American girls"—he threw up his hands in his enthusiasm.

And Sedano has enthusiasm. It bubbles forth in his conversation and makes each subject under discussion take on vitality and importance. He possesses not only the lively exuberance of youth, but an intense interest and joy in life. It is this zest for living which enables him to throw himself with equal avidity into his music and—let us say, auto racing. In spite of his complete poise and charm of manner, there is in him an entire lack of that air of sophisticated ennui so popular with young men in their early twenties.

CARLOS SEDANO

Leaning across the table eagerly, Mr. Sedano continued: "The American girls are so attractive, so beautiful, so unusual! But it is hard to understand them. Coming over on the same boat with me there was a young girl—a flapper, you say—traveling alone. She drank and smoked.

"It is not becoming that a young girl should do these things. And that they should work"— Sedano spread out his hands, which, in spite of their slenderness, give the impression of physical strength, in a gesture of complete and final bewilderment.

"The trouble is," he continued in a confidential tone, "your American men do not appreciate their women. In Spain our girls stay home to be admired and taken care of and married."

Although these sentiments have the faint, yet unmistakable tang of mid-Victorianism, Mr. Sedano is distinctly modern. He even confessed to the pastime of cross-word puzzling, a pastime unmastered because, although his English is excellent, it does not embrace such obscurities as a two letter word for a two-toed sloth. Remembering a wasted hour of a recent evening, I seized my opportunity to ask him for a seven letter Spanish word for work. I was rewarded with "travajo."

"Just what do you plan to do this winter, Mr. Sedano?" I asked, as the conversation threatened to become just another of those "what is a three letter word for a—"

He smiled broadly. "Why, have a good time, of course. Seriously? Well, I have my third New York recital February 2, and then I shall go to other cities. I will be going home in May to spend the summer with my family and to finish my law course."

My astonishment must have been apparent, for again he smiled. "Oh, yes, I am almost a lawyer. My father had intended that I should have a diplomatic career, and I have been studying law privately in accordance with his wishes. You know, I did not come over here with the plan of making a concert tour. My father is director of the Spanish mint and came to America to buy machinery. I came, too, renewed my acquaintance with musical people—and here I am!"

Carlos Sedano was born in Madrid and from the time he was three years old has played the violin. First under his mother's tutelage until he was seven and then, having passed the severe tests, at the Royal Conservatory at Madrid. Here he stood at the head of his class of thirty pupils, and at the final examination he was awarded first prize. When he was fifteen years old he played the Wieniawski Concerto with the Madrid Philharmonic.

About a year and a half ago Sedano came to this country to study. Last summer he returned to Spain for a series of concerts, but came back to the United States after a few months.

Chaliapin Injunction Modified

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Feodor Chaliapin was given the sanction of the courts to appear in the opera Faust in Washington January 26, as the result of a ruling last Thursday by Judge Hugo M. Friend.

The ruling modified a temporary injunction granted a week ago by Judge Ira Ryner at the request of the Chicago Opera Company, and which restrained Chaliapin from appearing in Washington on that date.

Chaliapin and his agents, however, are restrained in Judge Friend's order, from advertising his appearance in Washington between now and the date he sings there.

The temporary injunction was asked by the opera company on the ground that if Chaliapin sings there January 26 he would violate his contract with the company and would hurt his drawing capacity when his opera company appears in Washington in February.

Stoessel for Worcester Festival

Worcester, Jan. 7.—Albert Stoessel, conductor of the New York Oratorio Society, violinist and composer, has been engaged to succeed Henry K. Hadley, recently resigned, as conductor of the Worcester Music Festival. Mr. Stoessel is a native of St. Louis, where he was born in 1894 and where he obtained his early musical training, which he followed with study under masters in Europe.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

JEANNE GORDON as Laura

IN LA GIOCONDA

as seen by VYVYAN DONNER

at the recent Ainslee Gallery Exhibition on Fifth Avenue

THE COMMENTS OF THE PRESS

"Her rich dark voice and her beauty of face and form were ravishing. What a lovely picture Miss Gordon made as the center of this never-to-be-forgotten scene."

New York Post, December 22, 1924.

"Jeanne Gordon gave out some noble contralto utterances as Laura, and was especially felicitous in her observance of musical phrasing."

New York American, December 20, 1924.

"Jeanne Gordon's Laura is nicely conceived, and the second act prayer was a bit of fine singing."

Brooklyn Eagle, Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 24, 1924.

"Vocally fresh and youthful, a quality of the slenderest Delilah in some years."

New York Times, December 21, 1924.

"Miss Gordon, Venus, made a clear voiced and a beautiful one."

Deems Taylor, The World, November 6, 1924.

"A stunning and vocally opulent 'Dalila.'"

New York Commercial, December 22, 1924.

"She was able to employ the sensuous beauty of her tone in a way that gave an interest to the lines they did not inherently possess."

New York Times, November 7, 1924.

"It was in the garden scene . . . as Marina, most charmingly sung by Jeanne Gordon, that the audience arose to enthusiasm."

New York Mail-Telegram, November 7, 1924.

MANAGEMENT:

NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Knabe Piano

Victor Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

A BIT OF LIGHT needs to be let in on the recent Lawrence Tibbett episode at the New York Metropolitan Opera House. The Metropolitan management hasn't a particularly easy row to hoe. Criticism is thrown at it from every direction. Accusations, many of them having no basis whatsoever in fact, are made. One of them, it now appears, is that the aforementioned management did its best to keep young Mr. Tibbett from taking a curtain call alone after he had impressed his auditors so vividly during his big scene in Falstaff, in the role of Ford.

That subject is still being discussed in various quarters. The Know-It-Alls maintain that nothing save the insistence of that Falstaff audience to "have" Tibbett, finally brought the baritone before the footlights while the curtain was being held for the succeeding scene.

Perhaps the situation may have suggested, to the imaginatively inclined, some such things; there had been an even twelve minutes of curtain calls, participated in by Antonio Scotti, Mr. Tibbett, and Marion Telva; Mr. Tibbett, stepping aside on several occasions to allow Mr. Scotti to make his exit, had been the recipient of instantly increased applause; murmurings had begun to become audible from different parts of the half darkened auditorium.

SUCH EXPRESSIONS as, "You see, no American has a chance in an institution dominated by Italians," and "What did I always tell you?" were heard. So the applause swept on, until the desire of the assemblage was gratified.

I hold no special brief for the Metropolitan Opera Company. It has been the object in the past of adverse comment in this column, and it will continue to be—when further such occasions arise. But those of us who are Americans, and who plead for fair play, should not be unwilling to extend it where it is due . . . and this instance happens to demand it.

What of Miss Telva, who sang and acted a Dame Quickly which was so admirable that in point of strict merit it deserved recognition prior to that accorded Mr. Tibbett? Did that Falstaff audience appreciate the quality of her vocalism, the smooth and warm timbre of her voice, the excellence of her acting?

It did not.

It was impressed chiefly by Mr. Tibbett's tour-de-force at the close of his monologue. There had been finer singing done before that by this artist . . . phrases splendidly delivered, which were far and away superior to most of those in his concluding effort. Yet these were not the qualities provocative of the hand-clapping outburst. It was the high notes, and the loud tones, which "brought down the house."

Let there be no misunderstanding as to the ability of the majority in any Metropolitan audience to differentiate keenly between what is truly fine and what is not. They simply do not know. Give them something with a sensational twist and they go mad. But a bit of bel canto singing appears beyond their abilities to appreciate. It must be so, otherwise we would have more fine singing at the Metropolitan and less downright yelling.

NOW as regards the chances given Miss Telva and Mr. Tibbett. Who gave them their opportunities to appear in the characters of Dame Quickly and Ford? Who indeed but Mr. Gatti? Nor was that opportunity supplied without opposition. Both Conductor Serafin and Stage Director von Wymetal were dubious concerning the capabilities of these young artists to perform satisfactorily the tasks which Mr. Gatti decided to assign to them.

That, I happen to know, is the truth.

I also happen to know that at the general rehearsal several of the New York daily newspaper music reviewers, who were present, heard and observed what these singers did. They must have realized that those roles had been sung at the last previous Metropolitan revival of Falstaff by Louise Homer and Antonio Pini-Corsi, the latter creator of Ford when Falstaff was first produced.

Did those newspaper men say an approving word to Mr. Gatti for having opened the doors to two Americans? They did not. Nor did they give to Miss Telva in their reviews the credit due her.

All of which indicates that there usually are two sides to every story, that the one dished up to the public is often the wrong story.

CATCHING FLIES with vinegar is a tedious and not always successful undertaking. Sugar generally serves as a better lure. Vinegar perhaps for the stubborn insects—once they are cornered where a quantity of the fluid can be poured over them.

It looks as though Cal Child, of the Victor, came recently to New York carrying a big stick. He came temporarily out of his retirement as head of the Victor artists' department to put over its broadcast experiment; and he appears to have been, and still to be, bent on doing that little thing, regardless of whose head he swats with that big stick.

He has succeeded, at any rate, in antagonizing thoroughly most of the New York managers of artists. That isn't like Cal; not at all like him. His methods usually are smooth and quiet, and accompanied by dulcet and pleading tones. He appears to have used them to advantage with the artists, then, when he looked in upon the managers—a few at least—to have beetled his brows and indulged in ominous growls tantamount to warnings that whoever interfered with his particular, pet, and choice project to make Victor pre-eminent in the radio broadcast field would be in for trouble with one Cal Child.

WELL AND GOOD so far. But what is the answer to be? Does the Victor imagine that it can hog-tie the New York managers? Does it nurse the belief that the radio is suddenly and mysteriously to replace concerts? That with its sale of talking machine records, it can develop a position to enable it to offer the leading artists whose record service it controls some such proposition as: "Broadcast exclusively for us and we'll pay you as much money as you make in concerts"?

If such an offer ever were made, and accepted, it would be equivalent to the artist's farewell as a future public attraction. It might work for a year, possibly for a longer time, then—.

Nothing of permanent value is going to be gained by the Victor's pursuing a dictatorial attitude in this radio broadcasting experiment of theirs. Nor by disregarding any just contractual rights held by a manager for the broadcasting services of the artists.

The New York managers could take their case to the people of this country in the public press and by a clear presentation settle the issue, forever, with dispatch.

One other little piece of Victor tactics: It announced the John McCormack-Lucrezia Bori broadcasting on New Year's night as the first hereabouts by artists of international fame. Mr. Child made that statement for public print knowing, full well, that the Brunswick company had previously broadcast Florence Easton, Elly Ney and Mario Chamlee . . . all artists who have appeared under foremost auspices in this country and in Europe.

Respect for the rights of others and truthfulness would better be given a free rein in this radio broadcast situation. If they are not there is likely to be a fight, one likely also to go to a finish.

WHATEVER difficulties exist in the present radio broadcast situation will—as I observed in this column last week—eventually be ironed out. So potential a field as this one must in time be harnessed adequately, and in a manner dispensing justice to all.

Indiscriminate broadcasting, by too many organizations, will gradually, no doubt, give way to a more orderly procedure. A few companies should broadcast, and they should reach an agreement as to time and methods which will serve and protect the needs of all concerned.

Let Sunday nights as suitable occasions be considered.

Also, during any music season in this country, the afternoon hours.

And—the period from May 1 to September 15.

Lastly, it is imperative to decide upon adequateness of fees to artists, and how they are to be distributed.

THERE is danger in permitting the radio-set-owning public to become convinced that when they purchase, or build, radio-sets that they acquire with such ownership the privileges of being entertained gratuitously.

For to allow that assumption to prevail means the creating of an army of dead-heads. The concerns which make their profits from the manufacture and sale of radio-sets would do relatively little business if they could not provide entertainment. So theirs is the first in the distribution of the expense which must be attached thereto.

Perhaps the government will finally take a hand in matters. At the moment the radio field is not organized, in so far as broadcasting in a systematic and economically satisfactory way is concerned.

It has been suggested that one possible means of payment by the public using radio-sets is by placing a tax on tubes and crystals. That might work at present, or until there is found some substitute for them . . . if that were to happen.

One day the few interests then active in radio and broadcasting will probably meet and agree upon a program satisfactory to the majority. In the meantime there will be endless discussion, a multitude of theories and much predicting that must be largely a matter of guessing.

A CONFERENCE on co-operation was held last Wednesday afternoon in New York's St. Regis hotel. Mrs. Harold Vincent Milligan, chairman of the department of music of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, presided. The guests of honor were Mrs. John S. Sherman, recently elected president of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs, and Mrs. Charles Dickinson, president of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs.

The purpose, as I understood it, was to agree upon a starting basis for cooperation amongst the various music and art organizations with the view to bettering the conditions of artistic understanding throughout the country, to encouraging and aiding in providing opportunities for those Americans justified in striving for careers, and in otherwise helping in practicable ways our music artists and stimulating a further sense of discrimination amongst the public at large.

Nothing definite so far as I was able to learn, was agreed upon at the meeting. There were some interesting talks—by Miss Emma Dunn, of the American Society of Arts and Letters, Franklin Robinson, chairman of the American Orchestral Society, Howard Barlow, conductor of the American National Orchestra, Havrah Hubbard, of the American Institute of Operatic Art, Mrs. Abram Wolbarst, of the City Music League, and Arthur J. Morris.

WILHELM FURTWAENGLER appears to have made one of the strongest impressions, at his debut appearance as a conductor in this country. A final estimate upon his versatility can scarcely be reached until the visiting musician has appeared under various sets of conditions, and has conducted works by different composers of various schools and periods.

By the end of his engagement with the New York Philharmonic the extent of Furtwaengler's resources should have been made apparent. If he holds the ground he has gained there may be an interesting outcome to his experience here.

FEW MUSIC SEASONS in New York have offered so much variety, so much in the way of novelty of all kinds as this season. Newcomer personalities, unexpected situations, and the presentation of compositions altogether intriguing have come forth.

Yet some people assert, and persist now and again in emphasizing, that there is nothing new under the sun.

AFTER EXAMINING the statistics gathered from the member clubs of the National Federation of Music Clubs by Mrs. William Arms Fisher, chairman of the board which has made a survey of Federation accomplishments, one is moved to believe that very definite progress is being made musically in this country.

This data indicates a substantial growth in various fundamental ways. Yet there is talk to the effect that music is not in its best estate throughout the nation.

Every indication points to the most generally prosperous year—for 1925—which the United States has known since the armistice. Music is certain to be benefited as a consequence. It would not be in the least surprising if decided gains were to be recorded during the coming few months, and that 1925-1926 is to make a record to crow over.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Mme. Yolanda Mero

Yolanda Mero, Hungarian pianist, returned to New York for her first recital of the season on the afternoon of January 5 in Aeolian Hall. The program, which was devoted entirely to Chopin and Liszt, was rewarded with applause and flowers by the large audience. Mr. Herbert Peyser in his review in the Telegram-Mail represented the opinion of the commentators: "Mme. Mero's art has prospered with the years. Her playing, without losing its invigorating exuberance, has acquired a grace, a fluency and a poetry of nuance it did not formerly possess."

Alison Smith wrote in the World also that Mme. Mero "has gained immeasurably in subtlety and shading and lost none of the buoyant Hungarian vigor" which she had in the past. In the opinion of the reviewer of the Post there was displayed in the recital "understanding expression ably supported by a faultless technique. She proved her mastery of the mechanics of the piano, bringing forth the contrasting tone values of the compositions in their fullest beauty."

The Times report shared this enthusiasm, but included the belief that Mme. Mero showed to better advantage in the Chopin than in the Liszt, while in the Sun it was reported that "brilliant technical powers, good tone and intelligence were displayed in all she did." The Herald Tribune report was in accord in substance with the other reviews, although this writer found the dynamics at times abrupt.

Miss Lea Epstein

Lea Epstein, a violinist from Argentina who appeared in a New York recital last season, returned for a concert at Aeolian Hall last Wednesday evening. She was accompanied by Adelaide Zardo. The Times observer gave her credit for a "nice round tone," and said that she reached an effective finale. He held out hopes of her being a "capable artist" with a little more experience. The Herald Tribune reported: "Miss Epstein produced a tone of good size in sustained passages, generally smooth, but not always free from cloudiness. Her interpretation of the Grieg sonata seemed ever reserved."

"She has a commendable finger technique and a confident if not desirably elastic bow," said the reviewer of the Sun. "But her tone was dry and frequently cloudy. She played without spirit or imagination, so that she seemed to us as one repeating a lesson." The reviewer of the Telegram-Mail dismissed the performance of the evening as "amateurish and insecure" in a program which "would have tested the abilities of any seasoned violinist."

Mme. Marguerite d'Alvarez

Marguerite d'Alvarez, contralto, gave her first recital of the season at Town Hall last Tuesday, with Morton Howard at the piano. According to the Sun reviewer, Mme. d'Alvarez was in very good voice and did the program "full justice." Especially the French and Spanish numbers, wrote this chronicler, were "admirably sung . . . colorful and rich in the weaving of unusual rhythmic designs."

This writer found her tone coloring "exceptionally opulent," although her voice was, at times, "uneven in the transition from one register to another." The Times considered her voice "very effective" in its lower and middle registers, but uncertain in its upper reaches.

The Post commentator admitted that Mme. d'Alvarez's voice was not at its best, but added that her interpretative skill and the "richness and volume" of her tone made amends for moments of uncertainty regarding the pitch. Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail was disappointed in the recital. "Here and there," he wrote nevertheless, "the greater d'Alvarez broke through the vocal handicap and the preposterous program."

Alison Smith wrote in the World that "her voice again cast its familiar spell of provocative charm and exotic glamour; there were moments, especially in the higher intervals, when she sacrificed perfect intonation to the intensity of her expression."

Miss Ellen Ballon

"Her recital of piano music in Aeolian Hall yesterday (Wednesday) revealed Ellen Ballon as the possessor of a fluent technique and a good sense of pianistic style. Her touch is firm and generally clean cut, and she manages an excellent volume of tone without pounding," wrote Deems Taylor in the World. Still, this writer believed, Miss Ballon can and will improve, for he found her "dynamic range limited" and matter-of-factness in her pianissimo.

The reviewer of the Telegram-Mail found "no lack of energy in Miss Ballon's playing," but he qualified that she played better later in the program than in the beginning. The Sun report agreed with Mr. Taylor's opinion regarding the pianist's range of shading and dynamics, but it summarized the recital as follows: "Miss Ballon displayed a few deficiencies in matters of temperament and a lack of color in some of her phrasing, but her playing as a whole was sound and intelligent, marked by authority and confidence."

An improvement over her playing in her last New York appearance was observed by the Herald Tribune reviewer, who approved Miss Ballon's technique, but found her interpretative powers not equal to it.

Mme. Anna Carbone

Anna Carbone gave an organ recital at Aeolian Hall last Thursday evening. Her concert included works by Bach, Palestrina, Debussy, Fontana and Pietro Yon. Alison Smith of the World observed that this program "gave ample evidence of the comprehensive musicianship of this really excellent performer." The writer continued that "from the Bach Toccata and Fugue she drew the fullest warmth and one color of this noble instrument and the Sonata in D minor by Fontana and Le Petit Berger by Debussy were achievements of subtle interpretation and technique, particularly in the deft and skillful pedal work."

Mme. Carbone was spoken of as having "marked talent" by the Herald Tribune writer, who wrote that her playing was "marked by thorough knowledge of her instrument, technical skill of hands and feet and expressive ability."

Percy Grainger

Percy Grainger played in his only New York recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 5. His program included in the way of novelty four small pieces of Balfour Gardner which the reviewers found of little importance. Mr. Henderson summed up his impression in the Sun: "Mr. Grainger's art remains sturdy and even aggressive. His style is more lyric than it was in his early days here, but without doubt his playing is at its best in pieces with clear cut and incisive rhythms."

Both Mr. Henderson and Mr. Peyser, the latter of the Telegram-Mail, thought that Mr. Grainger did not show to best advantage in the Bach Fantasia, although they believed that he improved in the following fugue. Mr. Newman wrote in the Post that the pianist adopted a light staccato which gave the fugue a "girlish" character, but he added that nevertheless he liked the entire recital because "Mr. Grainger's gusto is always infectious, and his playing is so clean and lucid."

Writing in the World Alison Smith commented, "Mr. Grainger played with eager, characteristic power and command," and she found the recital "invigorating." In the opinion of Olin Downes, commentator of the Times, there was in the playing "the same admirable clarity and singing quality of tone, the same supple wrist and finger mechanism, the same clear understanding and sure delivery," but nevertheless he felt a certain grandeur and depth missing from the interpretations. The writer of the Herald Tribune felt that Mr. Grainger "was in fine form" with his "usual blend of crisp clarity and notable power."

Shattuck-Maier-Pattison

Arthur Shattuck, Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, together with an orchestra composed of sixty members of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Ernest Schelling, gave a concert in Aeolian Hall January 4. Three first performances in New York were given: Selim Palmgren's The River, played by Mr. Shattuck; a Concerto for two pianos, wood-wind, brass and percussion, by Arthur Bliss, composed for Messrs. Maier and Pattison, and played by them; and a Scherzo for two pianos and orchestra, by Edward Burlingame Hill. The program opened with C. P. E. Bach's Concerto for two pianos and orchestra, played by Messrs. Maier and Pattison, and ended with J. S. Bach's Concerto in C minor for three pianos and strings, played by the three soloists.

In the World, Alison Smith referred to the "smoothly unified hands" of Messrs. Maier and Pattison. The Times writer wrote that the Bliss work "skyrockets brilliancy, vivacity and humor . . . a technical tour de force, this piece is distinctly audacious and amusing. The performance was equal to the music. The pianists gloried in its extravagance and brilliancy."

The Palmgren Concerto, according to this reviewer, was marked by "too great length, lack of conciseness and proportion, and, after all, the infrequent presence of a really original musical style." This writer, however, praised Mr. Shattuck for playing it with "excellent musicianship, with modesty and scrupulous respect for the composer and, particularly in the late pages, as the pianist's confidence grew, with abounding virtuosity." The Herald Tribune commentator remarked on the "scarcity of ideas for the length of the music" and added that Mr. Shattuck played it with "skillful zest." This reviewer found the Bliss Concerto "a spicy work of distinctly modern flavor" played "excellently" by Messrs. Maier and Pattison.

The Hill Scherzo was called "a light, agreeable piece" marked with jazz flavor, by this writer. The Times reviewer labeled it the most "polite jazz" he ever heard. In this writer's opinion "this was an entertaining evening first and last." This seemed to be the consensus of the other chroniclers.

Singer Obtains Divorce

Kathleen Howard, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has obtained a divorce from Edward Kellogg Baird, lawyer and former president of the Century Opera Company, it was learned last Thursday. The report was confirmed by Mme. Howard, who said she obtained the decree last December in New York State.

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

New York Symphony

Myra Hess, pianist, made her first New York appearance of the season at Aeolian Hall the afternoon of December 28 as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra. Vladimir Golschmann, guest conductor, again led the orchestra. The program included Weber's Freischutz Overture, excerpts from Rameau's Castor and Pollux, Beethoven's G major piano Concerto, with Miss Hess at the piano, Roussel's The Spider's Banquet, and Stravinsky's L'Oiseau de Feu.

Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that Miss Hess played with "her customary musical skill," and W. J. Henderson of the Sun found that she played the concerto with "much beauty of tone and crystalline clearness. It was a reading admirable in conception and artistic in presentation . . ." Her interpretation, in the opinion of Mr. Downes, was marked by "consummate refinement and sense of proportion, with the truest poetic feeling in the slow movement, and with a rare sparkle and humor when these qualities were called for."

The reviewer in the Post remarked on "her wonted clarity of tone, sparkle, brilliancy and poetic feeling." Deems Taylor of the World spoke of "that vaguely defined quality commonly called musicianship—the interpreter's attitude toward the music" that made for the distinction of Miss Hess' performance. Mr. Sanborn and Mr. Henderson found an occasional discrepancy between orchestra and soloist.

Mr. Golschmann was lauded by Mr. Henderson for continuing "to disclose a genuine gift for wielding the baton." His reading of the Berceuse, according to the Herald Tribune reporter, "was one of the best things he has done here—a little masterpiece of tenderly imaginative interpretation." Olin Downes wrote: "The orchestral performances were distinguished by more brilliancy, technical precision and fineness of nuance than Mr. Golschmann had attained at previous concerts of his present visit."

Two Artists in Russian Program

Andre de Prang, Russian violinist, who made his debut last season, and Nina Tarasova, interpreter of Russian songs, appeared in a recital in Town Hall, New York, on the afternoon of January 2. According to the report of the Herald Tribune "Mr. de Prang exhibited technical skill and a tone of no little warmth, which suffered slight drought in some of the rapid notes of the finale." The same reviewer said that Mme. Tarasova sang with her "usual effectiveness." The program was opened by a talk on Russian art by Mme. Marie Jonesco, who spoke in French. The other newspapers did not give analytical reports of the concert.

Mme. Claire Dux

The "unusual novelty and modernity" of the program sung by Claire Dux, soprano, at her first recital of the season in Aeolian Hall January 5 were commended by the Times reviewer. Mozart, John Alden Carpenter, Deems Taylor, Carew, Hadley, Korngold, and Strauss were among the composers represented. According to this same writer, throughout the program Miss Dux "displayed her sound knowledge of the principles of her art, her sense of rhythm, her good taste as an interpreter. She was at her best in songs of a fanciful or piquant style, which she sang with charm and style; with a clear, if relatively small tone, and the manner of a musician."

The Post thought the "fresh and pleasing lyric quality of her voice added charm to her songs . . . there was infinite variety in her expression." In the opinion of the Sun commentator, "her delivery had much charm of sentiment and intelligence, but with certain vocal deficiencies. Her voice, of much beauty in the middle range, sounded well in her first numbers, but later there was some faulty tone placement and loss of pitch." Her songs were "charmingly sung with a fine and true instinct for their varying moods," wrote the reviewer in the World, and the Herald Tribune reporter found her voice in general, "clear, fluent, and expressive" with high notes which are fuller than before, although at times she showed an effort to sustain them. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail was more reserved and said that only at times did Miss Dux sing "in something like her old form." Her accompanist was Bruno Seidler-Winkler.

Miss Ethel Grow

A fire a few doors from Aeolian Hall, New York, last Tuesday night delayed the concert given by Ethel Grow for some time, and the audience was somewhat diminished for a time by the inability of many concert-goers to get past the fire lines. Miss Grow's all-American program was warmly applauded by those who did hear her. Alison Smith of the World found these songs "all delivered with Miss Grow's usual enthusiasm," although she felt that the program "would have benefited by brevity." The Herald-Tribune reviewer said that her voice "seemed of good size and somewhat variable in tone, with occasional periods of unsteadiness, while some climactic notes rang full and clear. She showed expressive capacity." Charles Albert Baker was the accompanist of the concert, which was given under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club.

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The program for the fourth New York concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on January 4 was changed at the last moment by the illness of Serge Rachmaninoff, who was to have played his C minor Concerto. The Bacchanale from Tannhauser was substituted. Other numbers were the de Falla Suite from El Amor Brujo, Haydn's G major Symphony, Till Eulenspiegel, and Ravel's La Valse.

Ernest Newman of the Post, Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, and the reviewer in the Times agreed that seldom is there heard such a reading of Till as that given by Serge Koussevitzky. To Mr. Newman it was "a highly individual and curiously fascinating reading . . . one of amazing imaginative and pictorial vitality." Mr. Gilman ranked it as among the finest he had ever heard, and the Times chronicler thought the reading "reached the finest essence of the work" and "in its fineness of quality, its logic, its flexibility of pace and nuance, with nevertheless compactness or coherence, impressed us anew with the wonder of the achievement, and the true genius which inspired it."

This writer considered the playing of the de Falla Suite "a triumph for composer and conductor . . . the instrumentation has a warmth and vividness, at times a stabbing brilliancy, at other times a depth of shadow." Mr. Newman wrote that the music had "all de Falla's highbred charm and nervous grace," and the Sun reviewer thought Mr. Koussevitzky played it "in sudden, urgent gusts of brilliant recklessness."

The Times commentator asserted that it was "the most effective concert Mr. Koussevitzky has given here." Mr. Gilman commented that the conductor was "uneven" and "undependable," and added that the finale of the symphony "was Mr. Koussevitzky at his best—light wristed, sensitive, inimitably deft, a master of style."

Miserendino in Violin Recital

Illuminato Miserendino gave a violin recital in Town Hall, New York, on the afternoon of Dec. 6. The Herald Tribune report said, "Mr. Miserendino showed, as last season, a competent technique and a tone of rather limited volume, sometimes smooth and songful, but sometimes apt to cloud over." The Times reviewer considered the performance "unequal," although the violinist was applauded at every pause and added that Mr. Miserendino "was heard to best advantage in a group of shorter pieces, which he played earnestly and conscientiously."

Alton Jones

A young American pianist, Alton Jones, who was soloist with the American Orchestral Society last year, gave his first New York recital January 2 at Aeolian Hall. Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail wrote that he played the three Brahms intermezzos with "understanding and style," although he did not seem "wholly able to encompass the scherzo." In his opinion, Mr. Jones possesses "an autheitic piano talent that reveals itself in a well developed technic, a varied and musical touch and a grateful range of tone color."

The Sun reviewer wrote: "He has an admirable finger technic, clean and fluent, and he shows a good rhythmic sense. His tone last night, frequently good, lacked something at times in mellowness and delicacy, but his intelligence and repose were greatly in his favor." In the Times, the concert was referred to as "an event of dignified musicianship and personal success for the young artist." The writer in the Herald Tribune observed that "technical fluency and proficiency marked Mr. Jones' playing; it was clear cut and lucid; vigorous, but not overweighted," and that he gave the MacDowell Sonata a "spirited, expressive interpretation."

Gustavo Carranza

An unusual program was given by Gustavo Carranza, Mexican pianist now living in New York, at his first Aeolian Hall recital last Tuesday afternoon. It included four Cuckoo Clock pieces, one each by Daquin, Arensky, Godowsky, and Carranza; Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 110; some seldom played Chopin selections, and sixteen waltzes and the E flat Scherzo by Brahms.

In the Beethoven, a trick of memory compelled Mr. Carranza to read from the printed score. The encouraging applause after this mishap seemed to dispel his nervousness, and in the ensuing numbers, according to the Sun reviewer, he displayed "much good finger work, musical tone, and taste, and intelligence." His "able delivery" of the Brahms numbers was especially commended by this commentator. The Times reported that "so ably did he control his modest demeanor and determination to win a hearing that an American audience not only stayed through the matinee, but prolonged each group of pieces with encores." In the Herald Tribune he was commended for "neat, skillful technique" in the earlier numbers.

Cornell Clubs' New York Recital

The Cornell Musical Clubs ended their holiday tour with a concert in Town Hall, New York, on the evening of December 3.

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building
Copley Square, Boston, Mass.
and
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

ALMA BECK
CONTRALTO
For Bookings of Season 1924-1925 address
Alma Beck
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., N. Y. C.
or
Lucy N. Shiels
1049 Park Avenue
New York City

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Chicago En Courant

Allied Arts Wins Favor With Modern Music and Ballets; Stock Remembers Thomas.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Jan. 6, 1925.

CERTAIN progressive Chicagoans have long wished for a practical medium for the exploitation of the works of modern composers, which seem more and more to tend toward the small orchestra and the ballet. The wish has been made a fact in the work of the Allied Arts, Inc., an organization combining Adolph Bolm's Ballet Intime and Eric DeLamarter's Solo Orchestra. Starting modestly with nothing, Allied Arts now owns a repertoire including several new ballets, with costumes and scenery especially prepared by Nicholas Remisoff and Rollo Peters, and numerous previously unheard works for small orchestra.

Where else could one hear such a program as the Allied Arts offered this week? The orchestral part of the program included Arthur Bliss' Rout, with Anna Burmeister singing soprano nonsense syllables as part of the orchestral scheme; a first movement of Paul Juon's Chamber Symphony; four Stravinsky songs, sung by Mina Hager in a way to arouse deep respect for that young lady's musical sense; the Sibelius Valse Triste, and d'Indy's Serenade and Valse. Nor did the musical values wane with the entrance of the ballet. For instance, no more interesting composition has been played in Chicago this season than El Amor Brujo, an Andalusian Gipsy ballet by Manuel de Falla.

Again, in the Rivals, an ancient Chinese Legend with music by Henry Eichheim, the music was of extraordinary interest.

IT IS in the work of the ballet that the real alliance of the arts is evident. Adolph Bolm is unsurpassed as a choreographer. So perfectly is the pantomime synchronized with the orchestra that one feels the composer's intent must be fully realized. So it was with Henry Eichheim, who in a few brief days of rehearsal and performance became a confirmed convert to the ballet and announces his intention of writing soon a full length composition in this style.

Bolm is a progressive, and has offered us ballets which for originality and authenticity have not been surpassed since the days of his own appearances with the Diaghileff organization. It is his policy to present on each program some dancer of note other than the members of his own ballet. For Karsavina's first appearance in Chicago we are indebted to him. Now we add the name of Maria Montero, Spanish dancer, who flashed and clicked her way to immediate and decisive favor with the Chicago public.

It would seem that Allied Arts, Inc., is to become an art force to reckon with in Chicago.

REPEAT performances have occupied the week at the Auditorium. The Tales of Hoffmann was the only new offering. Hoffmann has been in preparation off and on for some seasons, but was finally dusted off and furbished up for presentation last Friday night. One wonders why. One also remembers the "days when" stars were permitted in the opera, when Hoffmann was "all star" with the Renaud in the triple role of the evil genius, and a great French company's best cast in the other roles. So produced it doubtless could still be popular.

Certainly Florence Macbeth was a doll for any one to covet, and the audience loved her. But Hoffmann's woes seemed a bit tarnished. Herman DeVries wished them an early demise, and with Mr. Stinson of the Journal one felt that for those who became sleepy the epilogue was not worth staying for.

AIDA HAS the long run record of the season with its fifth performance to come on Wednesday. All but two of these performances have been extras—two for children's matinees and one for the extra series for the employees of the Insull industries. One Sunday the Chicago company made the record of two Aidas in one day, afternoon and evening. Aida leads also in variety of conductors, with Moranzoni directing in three performances, and Weber and Van Grove in one each.

Muzio is to be the busy prima donna of the coming week, singing four times. Fortunately both Muzio and the public are willing. And as she has seen every play now playing in the Chicago theaters, she need not fear missing an opening. Truly, Claudia is of and in the theater.

EACH YEAR one program of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra is devoted to the memory of Theodore Thomas, founder of the Orchestra and for many years its leader. For these programs Stock picks out the favorites of Thomas. There is always a reverence of performance that makes the concerts memorable. The conductor's stand has become a mere ornament as far as Mr. Stock is concerned. No scores marred its surface throughout Friday's program of Bach, Beethoven's Fifth, Strauss' Heldenleben, and the Rheingold Finale.

BY A PROCESS of evolution in casting the Chicago Civic Opera has finally arrived at the zenith in the fifth performance of Tosca on Monday night. The Muzio Tosca has been the one fixed point around which stars of varying luster have revolved. But it took the Scarpia of Baklanoff and the Cavaradossi of Ansseau to make an utterly glowing, unforgetable performance. Each took fire from the other. The result, the most thrilling Tosca within memory on the Auditorium stage.

Florence Macbeth is a busy person who finds time to dash off to give a concert in Aurora, as she did last night, and return in time to attend the morning musical at the Blackstone. Elena Gerhardt and George Liebling provided this morning's program with what might be called a pre-war program of lieder and Liszt; also Liebling, Beethoven and Brahms. This was the last of the Kinsolving Musical Mornings, and drew the usual audience of smart hats. At least that was the effect from the rear at the only concert series in the city which permits the wearing of hats. Perhaps a reason for their popularity.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Tales of Hoffmann—with Mmes. Macbeth and Forrai; and Messrs. Ansseau and Schwarz; Mr. Lauwers conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Otello (matinee)—with Mme. Raisa and Messrs. Marshall and Baklanoff; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

Martha (evening)—with Mmes. Mason and Perini; and Messrs. Schipa, Lazzari, and Trevisan; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

THURSDAY

Le Jongleur de Notre Dame—with Mme. Garden and Messrs. Cotreuil and Kipnis; Mr. Polacco conducting.

FRIDAY

Boris Godunoff—with Mme. Van Gordon and Messrs. Chaliapin and Lazzari; Mr. Polacco conducting.

SATURDAY

L'Amore dei Tre Re (matinee)—with Mme. Garden and Messrs. Lazzari, Baklanoff, and Ansseau; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Hansel and Gretel (evening)—with Mmes. Orens, Derzbach, Claessens, Lenska, Swarthout, and Westen; and Mr. Beck; Mr. St. Leger conducting.

Elvira de Hidalgo Sings In Title Role of Lakme

Chicago, Jan. 5.—Elvira de Hidalgo made her second appearance of the season with the Chicago Civic Opera Company Saturday afternoon in the title role of Lakme. Karleton Hackett of the Post wrote that she accomplished the seemingly impossible feat of singing the opening music in tune. "Her singing was brilliant," wrote Mr. Hackett. "All the difficulties of the music she managed with gratifying surety," although with "an intensity of resonance that sounded a bit metallic to our ears."

Mme. de Hidalgo "showed individuality in her portrayal of the role," asserted Maurice Rosenfeld of the News. "She put into its delineation a human touch, and she also sang with a tone of emotional intensity." Commenting on her voice, he wrote that she displayed "a brilliant, high voice. Its flexibility had a good test in the Bell Song, which was sung with a crystal tone, with purling runs and trills, and with sharp, scintillating staccatos. She also put an unusually fervent quality in her singing of the lyric parts of her music, and had her voice color and warmth it would take its place among the notable coloratura voices."

The other members of the cast were the same as in the previous performance, and Charles Lauwers conducted.

Medtner Plays at Bohemians' Smoker

Nicholas Medtner was guest of honor at an informal smoker and buffet supper given by the Bohemians in the Harvard Club, New York, January 5. During the evening Mr. Medtner played a program of his own compositions, including his C major Sonata in one movement, the A minor Arabeske, four Fairy Tales and his B minor Sonata for piano and violin, in which he was assisted by Paul Kochanski.

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society, was also present as an honored guest of the evening.

Chicago Opera Gives Tales of Hoffmann

Florence Macbeth and Olga Forrai Sing; Joseph Schwarz Has Three Roles.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann was revived by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last Friday night. In the cast were Florence Macbeth, Olga Forrai, Alice d'Hermanoy, Kathryn Meisle, Fernand Ansseau, Joseph Schwarz, Desire Defrere, Alexander Kipnis, Gildo Morelato, Lodovico Oliviero, Romeo Boscacci, Antonio Nicolich, Ivan Dneproff, and William Beck. Charles Lauwers conducted, to quote Edward Moore of the Tribune, with "fine spirit, brisk pace, and much beauty."

Mr. Moore's review was marked by enthusiasm for Miss Macbeth's performance of the doll. "It was a perfect performance," he wrote. "Her singing was an exquisite bit of coloratura." In the opinion of Karleton Hackett of the Post, she sang the part "prettily" and "made quite a hit with the audience." As Glenn Dillard Gunn wrote in the Herald Examiner, she was "delightfully flexible as to vocal expression. She made facile display of all the coloratura stunts."

Mr. Ansseau as Hoffmann "bore his share of the burden well and sang excellently," according to Mr. Hackett. He was commended by Mr. Moore for singing "splendidly." This reviewer wrote that Mr. Schwarz "took the parts of three evil geniuses of the piece, and made them progressively better." In almost the same words, Mr. Hackett lauded him for playing the triple roles of Cappelius, Dapertutto, and Dr. Miracle, "with progressive success." Mr. Gunn said that he "sang beautifully, of course."

The work of Mme. Forrai as Giulietta and Antonia was characterized by Mr. Hackett as "some of the best singing she has given us. In the quiet passages for the middle voice the tone had a warmth and color that was unexpected and made a lovely effect. Then she sang some high tones that had the brilliance of a coloratura singer." This writer considered both Mme. d'Hermanoy and Mr. Kipnis praiseworthy, and Mr. Moore credited Mr. Kipnis with a good performance.

Bank Glee Club Opens 46th Year

Opening its forty-sixth season the New York Bank Glee Club appeared last Wednesday in Carnegie Hall, under the leadership of Bruno Huhn. The assisting artists were Anita Lowell, soprano; Mabel Farrar, violinist; and Maurice Rumsey, organist. William Falk was at the piano. The reviews were typified by the Sun report: "The choir showed its excellent training and sang delightfully. Its tone is admirable." This writer found also "good balance and spirit" and "fine shading and clear diction."

CECILE de HORVATH
PIANIST
Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Baldwin Piano De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

Allied Arts Presents Novel Music

Stock Honors Memory of Thomas; Maria Ivogun and Rudolph Ganz in Joint Recital.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—At the second concert of the season of the Chicago Allied Arts, Inc., at the Eighth Street Theatre on New Year's day the Eric DeLamarter Solo Orchestra played music by Arthur Bliss, Paul Juon, and Stravinsky, and the Adolph Bolm Ballet Intime gave a series of new ballets in which Maria Montero, Spanish dancer, appeared as a guest. Anna Burmeister, soprano, and Mina Hager, contralto, were soloists. Henry Eichheim, a native of Chicago, appeared as composer and conductor of two orchestral pieces and a ballet, The Rivals.

Mme. Montero and Mr. Bolm appeared in de Falla's ballet, El Amor Brujo. Karleton Hackett of the Post said she was "young, graceful, lovely in face and form and with pantomimic powers." According to Edward Moore of the Tribune she was gifted "in the arts of both pantomime and the dance." Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner found this ballet "a gorgeous bit of dance drama." The Rivals was, to Mr. Moore, "fascinating for its music, its color, and greatly so for a remarkable performance by Ruth Page." Mr. Hackett found it "striking, both for the eye and ear" and added that Miss Page "was altogether lovely and appealing."

Miss Hager was praised by Mr. Gunn for a lovely voice coupled with musical intelligence and a well-developed sense of pitch. She sang four Stravinsky songs which Mr. Hackett thought amusing and cleverly rendered. Other soloists were commended by the critics who agreed with Mr. Moore in his assertion that altogether "it was an uncommonly stimulating afternoon."

At the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon, Frederick Stock paid a tribute to Theodore Thomas, founder of the orchestra, by playing compositions which were favored by Mr. Thomas. This program incldued the Bach-Albert Chorale and Fugue, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the tone poem, Ein Heldenleben by Strauss, and the finale from Wagner's Das Rheingold.

In the Strauss work, Mr. Stock and the orchestra, according to Mr. Moore, "reached a new high level . . . For sheer gorgeousness of tone, for impressive dignity of interpretation, it was something which even this great orchestra is entitled to remember with pride." Maurice Rosenfeld of the News wrote that "orchestrally it is a stupendous work" and added that the violin solo was played by Jacques Gordon, the concertmaster, "with wonderful virtuosity and with great technical brilliance."

In the Post, Mr. Hackett wrote that the work "gave scope for a brilliant display of orchestral virtuosity." The Beethoven, according to Mr. Gunn, "was a model of all interpretative and orchestral virtues. Its melodies glowed with particular warmth; its climaxes resounded." Mr. Gunn admitted that he had long cherished a dislike for the Strauss tone poem. Mr. Stock, wrote Maurice Rosenfeld, "who conducted without the scores, dominated the concert completely."

Last Wednesday, Maria Ivogun, coloratura soprano, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist, were heard at the Kinsolving Morning Musicales. Mme. Ivogun sang with "fluent vocal expression and with refinement of style," wrote Mr. Rosenfeld, who added that "her coloratura is brilliant and clear, and her tone quality smooth and liquid." In the Post, the reviewer said that she sang "charmingly" and further asserted that she had "the coloratura gift." She was commended for having one of the "loveliest of coloratura voices" as well as "technical perfection" by the writer in the Herald Examiner. E. M. in the Tribune reported that Mme. Ivogun sang "deftly and easily," and that she proved herself "a good musician as well as an executant."

The Herald Examiner commentator stated that "Mr. Ganz' art has never been presented here to better advantage" and praised his "stimulating rhythms, his tone of many shades and colors, his astonishing command of the piano's acoustic effects," Mr. Rosenfeld found his style "exuberant, breezy, and he has something definite to present when he plays" so that his numbers "were played with musical intelligence and with poetic feeling." E. M. was impressed with the manner in which he played the Chopin group, "emphasizing its virility," and the brilliant way he played the Liszt.

Recitals were comparatively few during the past week. The Chicago String Quartet was heard yesterday and, in the words of the Post reviewer, "confirmed previous favorable impressions." The Herald Examiner reported that they "played admirably" with a tone balance that was "sensitively adjusted." The Yale Glee Club; Katharine Foss, mezzo-soprano; and Helen Hedges, soprano, were also heard in concert.

Plan to Aid Aged Musicians

Establishment of a permanent endowment fund to pension aged and needy musicians was announced last week by Albert Morris Bagby in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria at his 297th morning musicale. The launching of this project will serve also as a commemoration of this thirty-four-old series, which will reach its 300th performance with the closing musicale of the season January 26. The organization for the collection and distribution of funds has not yet been arranged.

THEO KARLE
Made His First New York Recital Appearance of the Season a Short Time Ago.

Rosenthal Gives First N. Y. Recital of Season

Moriz Rosenthal played his first New York recital this season at Carnegie Hall on January 5 before his usual large and appreciative audience. According to Ernest Newman of the Post, the concert "was a feast for the ear and the musical intelligence. His Bach was clear-cut, his Chopin lucid and yet warm, his Schumann (the big C major Fantasia) the very spirit of romanticism, and his Debussy (the Minstrels) full of wit and pointed humor. His dazzling technique was shown in his own Papillons and his clever transcription, in thirds and in invertible counterpoint, of a Chopin Waltz."

The World referred to him as "this undisputed master of technique," while the writer in the Herald Tribune called him "not a master only of technique," in his "expressive" performances. The reviewer of the Times considered that Mr. Rosenthal "performed with his proverbial brilliancy, with the old authority and gusto, and with the poetic and the reflective qualities which have distinguished his playing in late seasons."

His reading of the Schumann and Bach works was, to quote the commentator in the Sun, "rich and brilliant in application of technical virtuosity and understanding and thereby added more laurels to his heavy crown. In the Schumann Fantasy some hearers may not have found all of the romantic vein sought, but there was for others abundant lyricism of mood, fine dynamic control and great variety of beautiful tonal colors." This reviewer found in his Chopin "graceful contours, mastery of the pedals and brilliant mood coloring." In the Telegram-Mail he was referred to as displaying "flamboyant virtuosity, as well as musical understanding."

Malipiero Novelties Offered by Damrosch

Wanda Landowska Plays Harpsichord With Orchestra and in Solo Group.

The two features of the eighth Sunday concert of the New York Symphony Society, conducted by Walter Damrosch, were the appearance of Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist, as soloist, and the first performance of a symphonic suite by Malipiero arranged from music written for three Goldoni comedies, La Bottega da Caffe, Sior Todero Brontolon, and Le Baruffe Chiozzote.

The three movements were called "pleasant" and "whimsical" by the Sun reviewer, who found the vision of Chioggia "stirred the composer to poetic utterances of haunting beauty." This writer prophesied that the composition would hold its own by reason of its "vivacity, its rich color, and its play of fancy." Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail found the piece unimportant, and the Herald Tribune reviewer commented that "Mr. Damrosch played the work with contagious gusto and effectiveness, but it proved to be thin and ungratifying music, barren ideas and individuality." The World mentioned "the engaging dissonances" evident in the work.

Mme. Landowska played with her "unsurpassable technique and authoritative style," according to the Sun Mr. Peyser wrote that her playing "came to one as something spiritualized and consecrational." Her "incomparable virtuosity" was lauded by the Times, and the writer in the Herald Tribune said she played the Handel concerto "consummately, as she always plays everything."

W. J. Henderson, Dean of New York Critics, Says in the New York Sun, December 8th, 1924:

"BONCI

sang in a manner that might have filled the heart of ANY OTHER SINGER of this day with an ardent desire to EMULATE SO AUTHORITATIVE A MASTER."

Vocal Studio Now Open
Hotel Majestic, New York

MANAGEMENT:
ROGER de BRUYN
EUGENE BOUCHER, Associate
1540 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK
Telephone 3787 Bryant
Knabe Piano Used

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

MORE ABOUT

RUTH BRETON

DEBUT NOTICES CONFIRMED

NEW YORK (SECOND APPEARANCE)

SOLOIST WITH PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

"She exhibited again the characteristics which impressed her hearers in October—the musical quality of her phrasing, her large and opulent tone, her technical facility, her poised and modest bearing, and the sincerity of her artistic attitude." (Lawrence Gilman, Herald Tribune.)

"Miss Breton redeemed much of (the concerto's) conventionality by her feeling and her brilliant tone." (Times.)

"Miss Breton achieved much success with the large audience in her performance of the Russian score. Her reading gave the music much more interest for the listener than usually is the case." (Sun.)

"The Glazounoff piece could only emphasize her finely tempered, full-throated tone and her calm, unswerving belief in herself and her instrument." (Alison Smith, World.)

"The artist's contribution was rendered with exquisite finish and was most warmly received." (Telegram-Mail.)

CHICAGO

"Wednesday evening a young and hitherto unknown violinist took us all by storm. Her name is Ruth Breton, and I am safe in predicting that she will not long remain unknown in America, for she is a tremendously gifted creature. Her career is obviously assured." (Herman Devries, American.)

"She has a fine characterful tone of many colors, a facile technic and a splendid sense of musical values and a real gift to set them forth persuasively." (Glenn Dillard Gunn, Herald-Examiner.)

"She displayed a fine technical equipment, a tone of many shades and musical taste in interpretation. She has a pleasing stage presence and artistic accomplishments of decided worth." (Maurice Rosenfeld, News.)

"She brought a tone of lovely quality from the violin and had variety of shading and rhythmic elasticity." (Karleton Hackett, Evening Post.)

BOSTON

"A new violinist of genuine importance has made an appearance. Her name is Ruth Breton. The exuberance and spontaneity of her playing, the assurance and confidence of her manner, are all of a piece—they are herself." (A. H. M., Transcript.)

"She gave a recital not long ago in New York when the critics spoke of her in a manner to awaken lively anticipation in this town. No violinist of her sex and age has made here so delightful an impression for many years." (Philip Hale, Herald.)

"Her virtuosity stirred the enthusiasm of the audience to a pitch unusual at such occasions." (P. R., Globe.)

"She is a violinist of unmistakable abilities. A warm, full tone, an ardent musical nature and a substantial technique are the immediate impressions made by Miss Breton's playing; and to these indispensable qualities are added a rare comeliness and grace of bearing." (Warren Storey Smith, Post.)

"It is seldom that so gifted a newcomer appears in our concert rooms." (S. M., Christian Science Monitor.)

PHILADELPHIA

"Ruth Breton possesses a talent for violin playing that is rare." (Stanley Muschamp, Inquirer.)

"Miss Breton is an excellent artist." (Public Ledger.)

"The mechanical mastery of the instrument possessed by this young player was astonishing." (Record.)

ST. PAUL

"Ruth Breton, who was guest soloist of the evening, is a violinist of such extraordinary gifts and accomplishments that it is difficult to write temperately about her. When a good looking young woman, exquisitely gowned, steps out and plays the violin with everything in the way of poise, technical sureness, and (almost above all else) an amazing musical intelligence, what is there left to add? Her numbers, too, were extremely engaging." (Pioneer Press.)

"Ruth Breton, the assisting soloist, is an artist of real distinction. She has an astonishingly big tone and without apparently sacrificing any of the emotional, a quality without which violin playing becomes mere fiddling, she never allows the purely sentimental note to creep in. There is a virility and strength and an authority in the way in which she handles her instrument that many male violinists might well envy. Miss Breton herself is a young woman of great personal charm and it is not surprising that the audience responded enthusiastically to her offerings." (N. B. Abbott, News.)

Season 1925 - 1926 Now Booking

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Building
New York

Pennsylvania Building
Philadelphia, Penn.

On The Music Highway

JEANETTE VREELAND, soprano, will be heard in concert at Maplewood, N. J., on February 27.

Dusolina Giannini is singing today in Savannah, Ga., and Thursday will give a concert in Columbia, S. C.

Next Sunday on the S. S. Savoie, Alfred Cortot will arrive in New York. His first New York appearance will be with the New York Symphony Orchestra on January 24 and 25. On the evening of the latter date, Mr. Cortot will also be heard in Philadelphia.

Marie Sundelius will be heard in concert in Washington, D. C., on January 21.

Concert Management Arthur Judson announces the addition to its list of concert artists for 1925-1926 of Josef Szigeti, Hungarian violinist, who is to make his first American appearances next season. Details of Mr. Szigeti's tour will be announced within a few weeks.

Arno Segall, making his debut in Carnegie Hall this week, will include in his program an anonymous composition of the sixteenth century arranged by the English pianist, Harold Craxton.

The Monday Afternoon Club of Passaic, N. J., will present Frieda Hempel in her Jenny Lind concert, at the Capitol Theatre, on January 20. Mrs. T. A. R. Goodlatte is president of the club, and Mrs. Crannell E. Knox is chairman of the concert committee.

Guiomar Novaes is now on her second Western journey of this, her seventh season, having appeared in recital in Omaha, January 4, Kansas City the 6th, and other Middle West points.

On January 17 William Bachaus will give a special concert for members of the City Music League, and on January 20 he will be heard in recital at Sweet Briar College, Va. On January 23 and 24 he is soloist with the Cincinnati Orchestra.

Renee Thornton is one of the soloists engaged for the next concert of the series of musicales held at the Ritz Carlton. Included among the selections Miss Thornton has chosen to sing on this occasion, there is a group of modern songs including an English number by Roger Quilter, entitled A Coronal, and three American selections—My True Love, dedicated to Miss Thornton, by Henry Hadley; The Lamplighter by Kathleen Manning and Me Company Along, Richard Hageman's latest song. Mr. Hageman will be at the piano for Miss Thornton.

John Barclay is to be heard in recitals in Washington tomorrow and in Bowling Green, O., on January 19.

The members of the New York Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Damrosch will leave New York on the afternoon of January 26 en route for a long tour which will extend as far South as Havana where a series of four concerts is to be given under the auspices of the Sociedad Pro-Arte Musical, and by special invitation of the Cuban Government. Twenty concerts will be given before the return to New York on February 21, after which Bruno Walter, guest conductor, will preside over the orchestra until March 28. Paul Kochanski will be the soloist at the third Havana concert playing the Vivaldi concerto and Saint-Saens' Rondo Cappriccioso, and Mischa Mischakoff, the concertmaster, will play at the farewell concert the Good Friday Spell from Parsifal. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will feature the January 22 and 23 programs in New York; the February series in Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia.

Clarence Whitehill, baritone, will appear as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra in Cleveland on January 29 and 30.

The first New York concert this season of the London String Quartet will be given in Carnegie Hall on February 7. After this, they go West for a tour of the Pacific coast, sailing for Europe again late in April for a tour of Spain.

Marie Tiffany will sing in Shamokin, Pa., Friday in a joint recital with Albert Spalding. The next day she will appear in Chambersburg, Pa., and on January 26 in Elyria, O.

The third musical evening of the semester for students resident in the dormitories of Columbia College took place in Hartley Hall on December 18. The program consisted entirely of chamber music, Purcell's Golden Sonata for two violins and piano, Brahm's Clarinet Quartet, and the same composers' Piano Quartet, Op. 26.

Contracts have just been signed by Ernest Davis, tenor, to sing the tenor part in Haydn's Creation with the Northshore Festival in Evanston, Ill., in the spring. Mr. Davis is to sing Rudolf's Narrative in La Boheme on January 21 with the Springfield Symphony.

The third concert of the Sunday Symphonic Society, conducted by Josiah Zuro, will be held next Sunday at 12.30 p. m. Beethoven's Leonore Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Massenet's Scenes Pittoresques, and Mendelssohn's Concerto for violin, played by Michael Rosenker make up the program.

At a reception given in honor of the President of the French Republic by the Italian Ambassador, Barone Avezzana, on December 15, Luella Melius, coloratura soprano of the Paris Opera, sang. On her program were Saint-Saens' Chant du Rossignol, Bellini's Qui la Voce, and Benedict's La Capinera, with flute accompaniment.

Maria Ivogun will have a number of concerts on the Pacific coast the end of January. She begins her West coast tour at Bellingham, Wash., on January 21; she will then sing in Seattle on January 23, Portland January 24, San Francisco January 26, Bakersfield January 28. Mme. Ivogun will be soloist with the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra on January 30 and 31. The Viennese soprano will be accompanied by her husband, Carl Erb. Mr. Erb, who is one of the tenors of the Staatsoper in Vienna, and has given up his operatic season to be with her this year, will stop off and see the Grand Canyon when Mme. Ivogun starts East.

Mischa Levitzki at his piano recital in Carnegie Hall this evening will include in his program Beethoven's Waldstein Sonata, with which composition he made his debut eight years ago.

On February 1 Frances Nash, pianist, will give her second Aeolian Hall recital of the season.

Saint-Saens' Concerto in G minor will be on the program offered by Magdelaine Brard, French pianist, in her recital at the Metropolitan Opera House next Sunday evening.

Madame Charles Cahier has been offered a series of four concerts in San Francisco in April under the direction of Alfred Hertz. The works to be given are Brahms' Requiem, Mahler's Second Symphony, Verdi's Requiem, and Schumann's Pilgrimage of the Rose.

Saturday evening, January 24, in Aeolian Hall, Ernest Hutcheson will give the first half of his survey of modern composers, devoting his program to works of MacDowell, Brockway, Griffes, d'Albert, Strauss, Korngold, Reger, Dohnanyi, Godowsky, Paderewski, and Moussorgsky. A second program, completing the survey, will take place three weeks later, on the afternoon of February 14, and will comprise works of Franck, Faure, Alkan, Ravel, Debussy, Grainger, Bloch, Ganz, Cyril Scott, Goossens, Ireland, Rachmaninoff, Medtner. and Scriabine.

William Gustafson, basso, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who opened the current season with five festivals, has been secured for the Chicago North Shore Festival when he will be heard in Parker's St. Christopher on May 28.

At the recital of Joseph Calleia, tenor, in Town Hall, New York, on February 14 Ferdinand Greenwald, concert director, will be at the piano.

Lawrence Schauffler will make his debut as a pianist Thursday afternoon at Aeolian Hall. Mr. Schauffler will play a Brahms group, a Chopin group, Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 78 and shorter pieces by Scriabine, Liszt and Debussy.

Mme. Newsome-Jewell, dramatic soprano, will make her American debut at Town Hall on Thursday evening. Besides Air de Griselidis, by Massenet, and A Watteau Pastorale, by Saint-Saens, she is including a group of songs by Michael Baxt which have never been performed in this country before, and Amina's Song from the Maharani of Arakan. Although an American by birth, Mme. Newsome-Jewell has been abroad for fifteen years and has appeared in opera and concert in Europe and Asia. After her recital at Town Hall she will be presented in the principal cities of this country and Mexico.

At the second concert of the International Composers' Guild on February 8 Henry Cowell's new composition, Ensemble, will be played. In this work Mr. Cowell has made use of an old Indian musical instrument, the thunder stick. This relic of ancient Indian rites was employed by the Aztec priests in Mexico. They are used primarily as a subdued background for strings, somewhat in the manner of instruments of percussion in a conventional composition. One of the thunder stick parts will be played by Mr. Cowell himself and another by Alexander Bloch, violinist.

The concerts on January 22 and 23 of the New York Symphony Society will have Ruth Rodgers, soprano; Helena Marsh, contralto; Charles Stratton, tenor, and Fraser Gange, baritone, as soloists with the New York Oratorio Society. Walter Damrosch will conduct the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Anna Fitziu, who appeared as guest artist in the San Carlo Opera Company's production of Tosca last Thursday in Cincinnati, has been engaged by Fortune Gallo to repeat the role in Hartford, Conn.; Albany and Utica, N. Y.

The New York Trio, consisting of Clarence Adler, piano; Louis Edlin, violin; and Cornelius Van Vliet, cello, will appear in two more concerts in New York this season. The first program will be given at Aeolian Hall on the evening of January 19, and the second on the evening of March 16. The concert this month will consist of Schumann's Trio in G minor, Beethoven's Op. 1, No. 2 Trio, and a third Trio by Miklos Radnai, which will be played for the first time.

Mme. Irene Wilder, contralto, Mrs. J. Harrison-Irvine, and the Max Jacobs String Quartet appeared at the Sunday Evening Musicale in the Venetian Room at 10 East Sixtieth street, New York, last Sunday evening a week.

Ruth Breton's appearance as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra has been shifted from January 11 to January 25. She will be heard in two groups of violin soli with orchestral accompaniment.

Following his recital in Fargo, N. D., on January 28 Ossip Gabrilowitsch will be heard in Winnipeg, Canada, the next day.

Contracts have just been signed for an appearance by Judson House at the Kansas State Agricultural College Music Festival at Manhattan, Kan., on May 2. The performance will be with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and will constitute the sixth appearance with that organization Mr. House is making this season. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise will be given.

A recital of Russian songs will be given at Aeolian Hall on January 17 by Lydia Maltzeva, known in Russia as an interpreter of the title role of Puccini's Madama Butterfly. Miss Maltzeva has made a specialty of the folk songs of the Volga region where she spent her childhood.

The Municipal Band, of Long Beach, Cal., of which Herbert Lincoln Clarke is director, has been increased in personnel during the last year until it now numbers fifty-two members. Two appropriations have been made by the city for the support of the band, which, during the summer, plays afternoons and evenings in the Band Shell on the beach, and, for the rest of the season, in the Municipal Auditorium. These concerts are all free to the public.

The American debut of Eduard Zathureczky, young violinist from Czecho-Slovakia, will take place in Carnegie Hall on January 20. Mr. Zathureczky, who studied in the Conservatory in Budapest, has been heard in concert in a number of European cities.

Fritz Reiner Leads Sixth Pop Program

Local Soprano Is Assisting Artist; Roland Hayes Wins Praise in Recital.

Cincinnati, Jan. 5.—The sixth popular concert of the season by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Fritz Reiner took place yesterday afternoon. The program consisted of Berlioz's Benvenuto Cellini Overture, Dukas's Sorcerer's Apprentice, Leo Weiner's Serenade for small orchestra, and selections from Carmen. Katherine Reece Haun, soprano, was the soloist. She sang compositions of Mozart and Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Mrs. Smith, reviewer of the Times-Star, thought Miss Haun's voice "rarely perfect, lyric in form, with a command of the finest things, as correct phrasing and fine legato style." The Enquirer writer, Carl B. Adams, thought the entire program was "brilliantly" played, and praised Miss Haun's voice as "one of the purest quality, remarkable range, and flexibility." Samuel Wilson wrote in the Commercial Tribune that the singer showed promise and personality. Mrs. Plogstedt in the Post agreed.

"The artistic peak of many, many seasons," was the verdict of Mr. Wilson regarding the recital of Roland Hayes, negro tenor, yesterday afternoon. The program was given under the auspices of a colored fraternity of Cincinnati University, and the capacity audience of 1,600 applauded Mr. Hayes without stint. The reviewer of the Enquirer described Mr. Hayes' voice as one of "unusual beauty," with varied colors, dramatic power, subtlety, and "consummate artistry." The writer of the Commercial Tribune lauded Mr. Hayes for his emotional fervor, his versatility, and the excellence of his diction in the French, German, Italian, and Negro Songs.

The San Carlo Opera Company has been scheduled for one performance of Tosca with Edith de Lys in the title role in Cincinnati on the evening of the 8th of this month. The company will appear under the auspices of the Artist Series. B. G.

Flesch Ill, Unable to Play

Philadelphia, Jan. 11.—Because of illness, Carl Flesch, violinist, who was scheduled to be soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski yesterday and the day before was unable to appear. Mr. Flesch, whose illness developed earlier in the week, will make his appearance in a pair of concerts later in the season.

To Interpret American Operas

A recital by Clarence Gustlin, pianist, in which he will interpret for the audience two American operas, Frank Patterson's The Echo, and Alglala, by Francesco de Leone and Cecil Fanning, will take place tomorrow evening in Chickering Hall, New York, under the auspices of The American Music Department of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

WINIFRED BYRD
America's Pianist
Management: Marie Gouled
25 West 42d St., New York

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

IN addition to her teaching activities in Boston and Wellesley, Persis Cox, pianist, finds time not only for concert appearances but also for composing. Her chorus for women's voices, Song of the Heart, was given its first performance by the Impromptu Club Chorus in Brookline, and The Dream, a new song for soprano voices, is soon to be published.

Last Friday, Miss Cox appeared in Boston in a joint recital with Albert Stoessel, playing Mr. Stoessel's Sonata for piano and violin. She also played Edward Ballantine's Variations in the styles of ten composers on Mary Had a Little Lamb. This program was repeated Sunday before the Harvard Glee Club.

Persis Cox, although now living in Boston, is a native of Illinois where she received her early musical training. In Boston she studied with Madame Helen Hopekirk, and with Mrs. Frances L. Glover. She also studied harmony, counterpoint, and music history under Dr. Archibald Davison, Bertram Currier, and Louis Elson, and composition with Carl Engel. At present Miss Cox is teaching at the Pierce building, Copley Square, in Boston, and in Dana Hall, Wellesley, where, in addition to instructing in piano, she has classes in Music Appreciation and Harmony.

PERSIS COX

In connection with her teaching, this versatile and ambitious young woman has recently published a small pamphlet for piano students, the Outline of Study for the Pianoforte, which is meeting with considerable success with piano teachers.

P. W. W.

Six Thousand Hear Museum Music

With the corridors crowded with an audience of 6,000 persons, the first of this season's free orchestral concerts in the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art was given on the evening of January 3 under the direction of David Mannes. The program included Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony and three Bach works arranged for string orchestra. The concerts are continuing on Saturdays during this month and again in March.

Will Present New Music

In its first concert of the season next Sunday afternoon in Aeolian Hall, New York, The Franco-American Musical Society will present a program which offers first performances in this country of compositions of Le Flem, Leginska, Stravinsky, Webern, Berg, and Caplet. Pieces of Debussy and Griffes will also be played. The artists giving this program include Carlos Salzedo, Ethel Leginska, Gitta Gradova, Greta Torpadie, the Letz Quartet, and nine solo voices.

N. Y. Hears Myra Hess In Recital Program

English Pianist Is Lauded in Reviews for Her Versatile Musicianship.

The first recital this season of the English pianist, Myra Hess, took place January 3 at Aeolian Hall. To quote the World reviewer, "the Mozart A major Sonata brought forth her lovely crystalline tone, the Franck Prelude was suave and gracious, but it was in the Chopin group that her lovely, melodic utterances were at their best—and Myra Hess at her best is as close to perfection as this vale of tears could ask for."

Her playing of these masters brought out the real essence of their music, continued this writer, "only the truest of artists is capable of this subjugation of personality to art, and of the evoking of the composer's mood with a command that is so gentle and so irresistibly persuasive." According to the Times, Miss Hess displayed "a real technical mastery and an attractive personal style." The Telegram-Mail commentator thought her playing of the Mozart Sonata "one of the most exquisite performances heard in this city for some time."

In the Herald Tribune, the reviewer referred to Miss Hess as "an essentially all around pianist." Her excellence in Mozart or Scarlatti, he continued, "does not mean that she is less happy in Chopin; the expressive power of her playing is not at the expense of the fluency and lucidity of her technique." The Times chronicler said that in the Chopin group she did not alone depend upon brilliance for applause, but also "impressed her hearers with her aptitude for understanding and reproducing the dreamy, introspective aspect of the master."

What Out of Town Critics Think of

GLADYS AXMAN

Guest Soprano with San Carlo Opera Company

Boston Post, Nov. 11. By Warren Storey Smith

"Always she sang artfully, expressively and with tonal beauty. Moreover, 'Tosca' is a part which must first of all be acted and in the scene in Scarpia's chamber, without resort to hysterical emphasis, Mme. Axman tellingly enforces the note of tragedy."

Boston Globe, Nov. 11

"The concluding moments of the second act enabled Mme. Axman to demonstrate a keen sense of appreciation of its dramatic possibilities. Her voice is always pleasing and her rendition of the rarely beautiful Vissi d'arte brought liberal applause."

Philadelphia Record, Nov. 28

"Gladys Axman as Santuzza gave an impressively dramatic impersonation and a vocalization no less enjoyable. Her voice had a beautiful clear quality with an abundance of fervid tonal color which enabled her to rise to the tragic scenes in fine style."

"Gladys Axman as Marguerite gave the role fine vocalism."

Pittsburgh Sun, Nov. 11

"Gladys Axman's sweet soprano entirely won me. It is important to note, too, that she is one Marguerite unmarked by surplus avoirdupois."

Syracuse Evening Telegram, Dec. 4
By Chester E. Bahn, Sr.

"Gladys Axman was pleasing as Marguerite, taking the famous Jewel Song with the savoir faire of the trained artist."

Syracuse Journal, Dec. 4

"Gladys Axman did her little ballad of the King of Thule splendidly."

Pittsburgh Post, Dec. 11

"Gladys Axman in the part of Santuzza found a role which suited her voice and her capabilities."

Detroit Free Press, Dec. 20

"Gladys Axman in 'Tales of Hoffmann' was the alluring but unscrupulous Giulietta and pleased her audience."

Detroit Evening Times, Dec. 18

"Gladys Axman as Santuzza offered a performance marked by sincerity."

Detroit Evening Times, Dec. 20

Philadelphia Hears Metropolitan Revival

Orchestra Plays Bruckner's Seventh; Flonzaley Quartet and Elly Ney Appear.

Philadelphia, Jan. 7.—The production of Falstaff by the Metropolitan Opera Company here last night was, in the words of Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer, "a thing of beauty long to be remembered." S. L. L. of the Public Ledger called it a "brilliant performance." Tullio Serafin conducted, and, according to Linton Martin of the North American, "added more laurels to his honors with his alert, discerning conducting."

Antonio Scotti gave "as fine an interpretation" as he has ever presented, wrote Mr. Muschamp. S. L. L. observed that he was in fine voice "and sang as well as acted the difficult role to perfection." Mr. Martin considered that his "full-flavored, richly illumined portrait . . . dominated the performance." The reviewer in the Record said that Lawrence Tibbett displayed "a voice of fine quality and he sang well with the still more sonorous Scotti . . . There was quite an ovation for both these singers."

According to Mr. Muschamp, Mr. Tibbett "repeated the fine impression" he had made in New York. Mr. Martin commended him for singing "magnificently" and for his acting which was commensurate, and added that he fully deserved his several recalls with Scotti. According to S. L. L. he displayed a voice of "great smoothness and finish."

Frances Alda, Lucrezia Bori, Kathleen Howard and Marion Telva, in this writer's opinion, "gave a beautiful performance" both in the solos and ensembles. He thought Mme. Telva "fine" both in voice and action. Mme. Alda, said the Record, took the role of Anne "graciously," and Mr. Martin wrote that of Mme. Bori "her singing and acting were marked by charm, ease and archness." Armand Tokatyan, Angelo Bada, Giordano Paltrinieri, and Adamo Didur received commendation for their work.

Anton Bruckner's Seventh Symphony was played by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra at the concert last Friday. The other novelties on the program were the War Dance from Henry Joslyn's Suite, Native Moments, and Pierne's Procession from Paysages Franciscains. Eichheim's Japanese Nocturne has been played here before. Mr. Martin and Mr. Muschamp were inclined to consider the Symphony sincere but dull; on the other hand, the Record reviewer found it "thoroughly musicianly, with themes well set forth and with nothing of dullness," and S. L. L. thought its "musical qualities are spontaneous, and it has strong romantic color and feeling."

The War Dance was called by Mr. Muschamp "a glorified piece of jazz," while S. L. L. considered it "most interesting." According to this reviewer, the Pierne composition was "another tonal picture more conventional and elaborate in orchestration but again with atmosphere." Mr. Martin was impressed with its "rare beauty, descriptive but mystical and of wistful appeal."

The Flonzaley Quartet gave the program at the fourth meeting of the Chamber Music Association at the Bellevue last Sunday before one of the largest audiences of the season. The North American reported that the quartet "gave its usual musicianly performance and was repeatedly encored." Mr. Muschamp commented that "the technical difficulties had been so completely mastered that one thought of naught but what Haydn, Schubert and Warner had to say to the auditors." The "characteristic finish of their playing" was evident to S. L. L.

Elly Ney, pianist, was heard at the concert of the Matinee Musical Club yesterday. Her program, wrote the reviewer in the North American, "displayed to best advantage her diversity, her impeccable technique, her vigor matched by her delicacy of touch, and her perfect understanding of the mood of her composers." The Public Ledger referred to Mme. Ney as "one of the best pianists now on the concert stage." The writer in the Record called her "a profound artist," and the Inquirer found her "a musician of unusual pianistic ability."

Trio Play on Long Island

The New York Trio, Clarence Adler, Cornelius Van Vliet, and Louis Edlin, are giving a series of four concerts at Lawrence, L. I.

Karin Branzell Makes Season Debut in Jenufa

There were three changes in the cast at the third performance of Jenufa at the Metropolitan January 5. Karin Branzell made her first appearance of the season as the sexton's widow, George Meader sang the role of Laca, and Ina Bourskaya was Grandmother Buryja. Artur Bodanzky conducted.

Although it was Mme. Branzell's first interpretation of the role, her conception was, according to the Sun reviewer, "thoroughly intelligent and admirable in many respects. Her voice revealed all its richness and accustomed warmth." This writer did not think her acting so convincing, but added "the skill with which she used her voice, however, and the emotional depth of her warm voice were well adapted to the vocal requirements of the role." On the other hand, the Post commentator reported that she "carried the burden of almost the entire second act and much of the third with her impassioned acting." Alison Smith of the World wrote that she seemed somewhat timorous, although her voice "had its accustomed richness."

Laca was given a "definite personality" by Mr. Meader, continued Miss Smith. Other reviewers agreed that he did excellent work, although the writer in the Sun said "he sang well, as he always does, but it was not a role in which Mr. Meader was wholly at his ease, and it afforded him few opportunities to display his most conspicuous talents." This writer found Mme. Bourskaya "competent and convincing."

Hold Concert of Jewish Music

Jewish music was presented at the Temple Emanu-El, New York, last Sunday evening. The soloists of the evening were Cantor Schlager, Helen Teschner Tas, Inez Barbour, Delphine Marsh, Carl Schegel, and Leon Cortilli. Lazare Saminsky directed the choir. The program included works of Achron, Bloch, Saminsky, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein and others.

JOSEF HOFMANN AT HIS STEINWAY

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

From under those miraculous hands a Chopin Nocturne ripples in delicate, lacy perfection. A Liszt Rhapsody becomes a thing of glamour and passion. A shadowy theme from Debussy assumes delectable contours, gleams with cool, floating light. Here speaks the immortal genius of great composers. And here, also, under the touch of a master pianist, speaks the glorious voice of a great instrument—the Steinway. Long ago Hofmann chose the Steinway as the one perfect medium for his art. Rachmaninoff knows how exquisitely it interprets a subtle nuance or a profound emotion. Paderewski knows how magnificently it responds to his imperious demands. Levitzki, Cortot, Grainger, Nikisch, —these are but a few of the celebrated pianists who, if only sincerely artistic motives are involved, invariably choose the Steinway.

To meet the requirements and acoustic conditions of every home, the Steinway is made in numerous styles and sizes. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and ideals. And each returns to those who buy it, not only unending pleasure and delight, but the definite gift of permanence. You need never buy another piano.

*There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

Music Teachers Hold Meeting in St. Louis

Lamond and Ganz Give Recitals Before Convened Delegates; Many Topics Discussed.

St. Louis, Jan. 1.—The first session of the forty-sixth annual meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association was held at the Hotel Chase last Monday. Ernest R. Kroeger welcomed the teachers to St. Louis. At the opening program of the convention the speakers were: Herbert Witherspoon of New York, who illustrated his discourse on American singing by analyzing the efforts of several St. Louis pupils, who practiced scales at his bidding; Alberto Jonas, Spanish pianist, who spoke on The Making of a Musical Nation; Dean Lufkin of Northwestern University, who spoke on church music; Prof. Max Meyer of the University of Missouri, who demonstrated the quartertone harmonium devised by him, and Christian A. Ruckmick of the University of Iowa, who discussed Rhythm and Its Musical Implications.

On Tuesday, the session was brought to a close with a lecture-recital by Frederick T. Lamond, Scotch pianist, on Personalities of Composers as Revealed Through Their Music. Dr. Abraham Z. Idelsohn of Hebrew Union College spoke of the recurrence of ancient Jewish melodies in the Catholic Church liturgical music. Other speakers of the day were Dean James T. Quarles of the University of Missouri, speaking on Standardization of Theory Courses; Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, president of the Federation of Music Clubs, who told of the growth of Creative Artist Fellowships; Ernest C. Krohn, who read a history of the development of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra; William Eben Schultz of Canton, Mo.; Prof. Leo L. Lewis of Tufts College, J. Lawrence Erb of New London, Conn.; Harrison D. Le Baron of Delaware, O., and Earl V. Moore of the University of Michigan.

William Arms Fisher, Boston composer and musical editor, spoke of the demand for jazz and new music by radio fans at the meeting yesterday. Other speeches heard were Music's Use in Correctional Institutions, by Willem van deWall; Some Analogies Between Color, Form and Sound, by Edmund H. Wuerpel, director of the St. Louis School of Fine Arts at Washington University, and a discussion of thematic development by the composer, Edgar Stillman Kelley of Western College, Oxford, O. The afternoon session closed with a discussion of the relations of public school and private music teaching.

The Piano Teachers' Educational Association presented Rudolph Ganz in recital Monday evening, in compliment to the visiting teachers. Liszt, MacDowell, Debussy, Ganz and Bach were among the composers on his program. Another concert was that of Charles Galloway, organist, given by the American Guild of Organists, in honor of the convention. Oliver Smith, tenor, also sang two groups of songs by John Kessler, St. Louis composer.

Waghalter in Debut With State Symphony

New Leader Is Lauded in Reviews; Helen Stanley Is Soloist With Orchestra.

Following the sudden resignation of Josef Stransky, Ignatz Waghalter, new conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra, made his debut at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of January 4. The program was devoted to Brahms' Second Symphony and Liszt's Preludes and First Hungarian Rhapsody, and Helen Stanley, soprano, was the soloist.

The reviewers greeted Mr. Waghalter's first appearance favorably. Olin Downes wrote in the Times, "Mr. Waghalter gave a sound and spirited reading of Brahms' score. He had excellent control of the orchestra. The conductor's evident enthusiasm for the symphony was matched by his understanding of it. The music strode forward with the vigor which always inheres in Brahms, but there was a warm color and a lyric flight that are not always to be found in interpretations of this work. The instrumental tone glowed and sang."

The writer of the Post agreed that the Brahms was displayed in all its beauty, although he added that Mr. Waghalter seemed overcautious in the Liszt Rhapsody. Deems Taylor, reviewer of the World, deferred judgment for awhile, but said that the readings, although handicapped by the Metropolitan's acoustics, "sounded at least workman-like and well grounded." The Herald Tribune reporter spoke of the new conductor's "experience and distinct competence," although the commentator added that "some places might have been brought out in richer coloring."

The observer of the Sun thought that Mr. Waghalter and the orchestra lacked fire. This review concluded, "Mr. Waghalter deserved better results, and perhaps in the future he can obtain them."

Mme. Stanley, who sang several Brahms songs, was praised for her singing. The Post report said, "She was in fine voice, and sang not only with the greatest expression, but with genuine lyric quality and sweetness. She did not strain against the great auditorium, but sang easily and comfortably, allowing her voice its full freedom without effort in a manner that was a delight to listen to."

The Sun observer agreed that Mme. Stanley "sang with a wealth of opulent tone. Her enunciation was not always clear, but the warmth and richness of her voice, the evenness of her registers and vocal power and volume that she displayed rendered her performance thoroughly enjoyable." The Herald Tribune report said that Mme. Stanley showed a "strong and fluent" soprano, although it had a little vibrato, while Olin Downes wrote, "Mme. Stanley brought to her songs sincerity of purpose and a voice of capacities amply sufficient to her requirements."

The audience was large, and applauded conductor and soloist with enthusiasm.

Ignatz Waghalter is the new conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra following the sudden resignation of Josef Stransky, leader since the organization was formed at the beginning of last season.

Lohengrin Repeated With Two Newcomers in Cast

Two changes in cast marked the fourth performance this season of Lohengrin last Thursday by the Metropolitan Opera Company. Karin Branzell sang Ortrud and Friedrich Schorr sang Telramund. According to the Sun, Mme. Branzell's characterization was "spiritually satisfactory and vocally admirable. Her rich, passionate voice, dark and opulent in the lower registers, dominated every scene in which she appeared, and the emotional vehemence won her an ovation from the house." Mr. Schorr, continued this writer, "sang well and was more than satisfactory. He is another artist of thoroughness, intelligence, and admirable vocal talents."

In the Herald Tribune, Mme. Branzell was commended for her strong voice with its "full and rich tone" and Mr. Schorr for singing "resonantly" and expressing "a notable amount of hate in his accents at the opening of the second act." The Post reviewer found him "robustly dramatic" and said that Mme. Branzell "had all the suggestion of wickedness." In the opinion of the Telegram-Mail writer, "both gave careful and commendable performances, even though Mr. Schorr's exceptionally rich baritone is heard with greater pleasure in more lyric roles."

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO

A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

RE
JOHN Mc CORMACK

Sang on Sunday night, January 4th, to his sixth crowded house in Greater New York since October 26th.
Another concert announced for January 18th by "America's Favorite Singer."

"Like to Mr. Kreisler or Mr. Paderewski seems Mr. Pouishnoff —the virtuoso and musician who is also cultivated man of the world."

—H. T. Parker, in the Boston Transcript

"And Still They Come"

"Mr. Pouishnoff for Notable Russian Pianist — From Glazunoff Through Skriabin in the Music of His Countrymen — Familiar and Unfamiliar Pieces — Presence, Abilities and Sensibilities All Praise Him."

"A MAN of the world as well as a Russian pianist is Mr. Lev Pouishnoff, and he was pleasing, personable figure when he came, last evening, upon the stage of Jordan Hall. He is tall and slender, carrying himself without a hint of self-consciousness. His countenance is aquiline and grave; upon it sensibility and reflection meet. Cultivation and refinement coat him as neatly as his evening clothes; yet underneath this 'good form' the observer suspects an ascetic spirit. The eyes betray it. In the early thirties, the locks are already graying. Without ado Mr. Pouishnoff begins to play. He is patient with late comers, though his hands ramble the keyboard. Without elation or condescension he receives applause. With extra pieces he is as prompt and summary as Mr. ..... No less than Mr. Koussevitzky, he resents the clap of interruption between movements of closely related pieces. His work absorbs him—unobtrusively. He plays to his audience, yet seems unaware of its presence, until the moment comes for thanks—courteous, sincere, but still aloof. Like to Mr. Kriesler or Mr. Paderewski seems Mr. Pouishnoff—the virtuoso and musician who is also a cultivated man of the world.

"The program of a first concert in Boston traversed only pieces by Russian composers—not through a boresome 'patriotism' or mistaken notion that they and their music are unknown in America, but because Mr. Pouishnoff happens to prefer his countrymen and, by common consent, to excel with them. None, however, of the chosen numbers (which ranged from Glinka through Skriabin, less Chaikovsky, who could be spared, and Rimsky, who wrote seldom for the piano) threw new light upon either 'nationalists' or 'academics,' upon the 'mystic chord' of groping imagination or the 'salon piece' that pays the weekly bills. In length, the major music of the evening was a Sonata of Glazunoff (in B flat, Op. 74) and Balakirev's not unfamiliar 'Islamey.' Through an opening Allegro Moderato and a closing Allegro Scherzando, the Sonata rolled an empty but sonorous way. Once more the worthy Glazunov was causing commonplace to sound; while between he tucked a fanciful and twinkling Andante that any Demoiselle Russe might play at a country house through a long summer evening—but not so gracefully and fancifully as did Mr. Pouishnoff. As for Balakirev's 'Oriental Fantasia,' it certainly streams with effulgent sonorities and far-flung arabesques. Not so certainly, to the non-Slavic imagination, do the hosts of Islam swarm through it, while scimitars flash and horse-hair pennons wave. It is permissible to suspect that if Balakirev thought twice of Tartar hordes he also thought four times of the concert room. Yet, like every Russian composer, he sounds upon the piano, while quite obviously 'Islamey,' like Cyrus' horse in the Anabasis, is 'hard to manage and fierce.'

"Betwixt and between were 'salon pieces' and little else, like Arensky's Romance, Lyadov's Barcarolle or Mr. Pouishnoff's miniatures of a waltz or falling rain; folk dance become virtuoso's music, like Musorgsky's Hopak; the brief fantasias of technique and mood that Rachmaninoff and the composer-pianist call Preludes, Elegy, Polichinelle, what not; the bell-like, sun-kissed, crystal of tones in which Balakirev embeds Glinka's 'Lark.' One and all these numbers exemplified the inclination of the musical Russian for the piano; his affectionate skill and divining intuition upon it; the play of his fancy and fertility by the instrument kindled. Of another sort were the four items from Skriabin. Two, 'Desir' and 'Caresse Dansee'—the French titles suit the flavor—are of that vaporous, drifting, flocculent music that he was wont to distil upon the dreamful air. A third, 'Poeme

Tragique,' seemed but a race and thunder of sound, the turbid and turgid release—not in tragedy, but in melodrama—of a chafing, restless spirit. The fourth, 'Enigma,' was the wandering improvisation of that spirit, questioning, questing, perhaps for that self-same 'mystic chord.' At the least not once in the four pieces was Skriabin a Chopin diluted.

"Mr. Pouishnoff himself is an altogether admirable, a persistently pleasurable, pianist. His technical skill is effortless and usually undisplayed, while neither Balakirev nor Rachmaninoff could exhaust his technical resources. His tone is crystalline, yet never hard or dry. With adept pedaling to aid, it sustains melody. From the pianist's and the composer's fancy it takes color, while at their bidding it mounts or descends the degrees of power. Exceedingly sensitive and skillful is Mr. Pouishnoff when he would lead, unfold and cumulate songful measures; when he would both maintain line and festoon ornament; when fine-spun transition or graceful modulation invites him. Above all, he is master of rhythm. He propelled Glazunov's hollow platitudes as though they were the music of the spheres. He outplayed Rachmaninoff when the elder Russian would be prodigously fleet or fitful, while for once the Balakirev of 'Islamey' darted and flamed. Nor does Mr. Pouishnoff lack fancy and, when the music warranted, imagination. He discovered precisely the sun-lot shimmering tone for 'The Lark.' He charmed without sentimentality in romantic trifles. He was resolutely moody with Rachmaninoff; vague and brooding and morbid with Skriabin. At every turn he missed not a flourish of the concert room, or a subtlety of the study. In fine, a mind, a spirit, a musician and a pianist.

H. T. P."

—The Boston Transcript.

Mr. Pouishnoff uses and endorses the BALDWIN PIANO exclusively

Booking now for January, February, March, 1926

Management: M. H. HANSON
437 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

WELTE-MIGNON RECORDINGS

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Giordano's Jest Has Premiere

Toscanini Conducts New Opera at Milan; Audience Approves Its Melodiousness.

Milan.

Giordano's La Cena delle Beffe had its world premiere at La Scala on December 20. The members of the cast, composer, and conductor, Arturo Toscanini, were called before the curtain more than a score of times during the evening, and the intensity of the applause was almost unprecedented. The cast included Carmen Melis, Hipolito Lazaro, Benvenuti Franci, and Bodini.

Throughout the public seemed delighted to come into contact with an opera which had little cerebral pretense, but holds its chief strength and interest in its melodiousness. La Cena delle Beffe is theatrical and direct. The libretto of Benelli gave the composer no opportunities to be metaphysical, profound, or symbolical. The enigmatic was left out completely. The story of La Cena called for broad Latin melody, and that is what Giordano provided. It was the sort of melody that the public loves, and therefore the premiere was nothing if not a great success. The story of the opera is familiar in the United States, for it was produced there a short time ago as a play, The Jest, with the Barrymores in the leading roles.

In his latest opera Giordano has returned to his old style of etching about the verbal text of the story with broad lines of melody. It is the type of composition which he followed in Andrea Chenier above all, in Fedora and Marcella, and to a more limited extent in Madame Sans-Gene. Le Cena in other words is a return to Giordano's youthful style. In reaction to the spirit of the times the faith of Giordano in the graceful melodic line is a phenomenon which can be regarded with sympathy.

Ginevra and Giannetto sing of their love with a soft beauty of phrase and delicate orchestral support. In his musical expressions of sentiment Giordano shows not a little French influence in his style, but the influence is of the French music of the last century as much as of today.

Humor Not Lacking

Moments of humor, burlesque, and satire are not missing in La Cena delle Beffe, and they too lead the composer into dramatic forms which are traditional in Italian opera music. The octet of the third act reminds one in its jocose rhythm and varied development of one of the scenes of Falstaff, and from time to time there are passages which are suggestive of Donizetti.

The first act is devoted almost entirely to declamatory singing. The melodic line breaks up somewhat the uniformity of this manner of speech, but it does so with a certain monotony of musical periods. It would be desirable in this act to have several more periods of relief and to vary the persistently lyric style with some "zones" more reposeful in their manner.

The composer seems to like the libretto with its nimble and compact action, without rest or pause for the audience to draw breath easily or to pause to consider the significance of what is happening on the stage.

Nevertheless the public found this act to its taste, and at the first intermission it was already necessary for the composer to appear to take his bow with the other principals of the evening.

Technique Skilled Throughout

In the second act after some passages which are suggestive of the style of Moussorgsky there is a good duet, light in its own accent and in the orchestral accompaniment. The music of Andrea Chenier is recalled for a moment. The ear drinks in the music at a gulp, if not willingly.

The third act has the octet of which comment is made above, and which at the general rehearsal interested the reviewers variously. There are other passages of interest in this part of the opera. Particularly noteworthy is the scene between Neri and Lisabetta, a page whose music is a model of gentle sentiment, and the end of the act also is operatic music in its most refined style.

In the fourth act one enters the heart of the tragedy after a scene with music suggestive of the beauty of a spring evening. In this scene there is a Song of May which is one of the high points of the entire evening. The accompaniment of mandolins makes the passage unusually effective. The end of the act is powerful and impressive, and is masterly in its economy of means. Nevertheless the climax of the libretto is presented in its full strength. This finale has in it music of true originality.

The critical conclusion must be that La Cena is among the most successful and the most thoughtful of Giordano's works. His technique, conservative in the traditional Italian style, has here reached its fullest development. The orchestra is cleverly handled, although in more than one point it reaches a sonority which is hardly desirable. The melodic invention is fresh and fluent despite the fact that it does not reach previously unscaled heights.

All the material of which the music is constructed has a sure and steady flow, and never reaches an impasse in its movement. Giordano in La Cena delle Beffe displays sure control of the theatre.

La Cena will be sung all over the world because it is clear, facile, without excessive complexity and without any pretense at revolutionary qualities. It is a good melodrama well handled. Still it is best not to refer to it as a masterpiece.

The performance of the work was admirable, both because it was prepared and conducted by Toscanini, and because it was sung by intelligent and able artists. The first honors must go to the tenor Hipolito Lazaro, who in this presentation returned to the Scala after an absence of ten years. He portrayed the role of Giannetto Malespini in an exemplary manner, and the general judgment was that it could hardly have been done better.

The voice of this singer has acquired the impressive resonance of a dramatic tenor without losing any of the former splendor of its tone. His acting was excellent too, and passed the test of a critical Milanese audience which is accustomed to the best in its ordinary theatrical entertainments.

The audience received his singing with applause throughout, but the greatest outbursts of approval followed a point in the second act in which he reached a full, clear-toned B flat. The return of Lazaro from America was in all respects triumphal.

Cast Supports Lazaro Well

The part of Neri was sung by Benvenuti Franci, baritone, whose powerful and expressive voice fitted the role well. He sang effectively throughout, and was equal to all of the climactic scenes in which he took part.

Carmen Melis, as Ginevra, was as successful as her two colleagues. She interpreted her part with flexibility and fitness of gesture and was in excellent voice. The baritone Badini, who sang the role of the doctor, did well, although he is better fitted to roles of the type of Beckmesser. Lisabetta was sung by Valobra, and the cast include also Signore Pedroni, and Lanza, and Signori Baracchi and Venturini.

The work does not require a chorus. The scenery was adequate to the four short acts.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

German Musicians Are Hard Hit by Radio Craze

Dresden.

ANOTHER concert season like the present, and German singers will be ruined, is the opinion of Dr. Rudolf Cahn-Speyer, Chairman of the Executive Council of the Federation of Concert-Giving Musicians of Germany, according to an Associated Press despatch dated December 9.

Three factors are blamed for the unfavorable condition of the concert market; the radio, an indifferent public, and an unjust system of taxation.

From the moment the Government lowered the fee for radio service to fifty cents a month, there was a sharp increase in the number of subscribers. From 7,500 the number rose to 500,000 within half a year.

"One can easily understand," Dr. Cahn-Speyer observed, "that with a large part of the public the difference both in quality and rendition between a concert in a hall and one heard over the radio is not sufficient to outweigh the comfort of hearing a concert within one's own home. The latter involves no necessity to dress up or leave the house, and enables one to smoke a cigar or sip a cup of coffee while listening."

The State is unduly severe on the artist in matters of taxation, Dr. Cahn-Speyer holds. On all box-office receipts he must pay both a turn-over and a luxury tax. These receipts are, as a matter of fact, never enough to pay for the costs involved in giving a concert, save in the cases of stars of the first magnitude.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

Eastman School of Music
of
THE UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER
ERNEST BLOCH will conduct
FIVE MASTER COURSES
Teaching Methods—Practical Harmony—Style—Form—Fugue.
Each Course One Week—Five Two-Hour Sessions
BEGINNING FEBRUARY 2ND, 1925
For Information, Address Secretary-Manager
Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.

KOLITSCH
A NEW CROATIAN VIOLINIST
NEW YORK RECITAL
CARNEGIE HALL
January 27, 1925
Management
Antonia Sawyer, Inc.
Aeolian Hall, New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Berlin Hears Stravinsky Music

Commentators Clash When Russian Composer's Concerto Has Premiere; Kleiber Leads New Symphony.

Berlin.

The first half of the Berlin music season reached its climatic conclusion with a week in which the music of Stravinsky was the feature. The works of the Russian composer have been much played and approved here for some seasons, although there has remained a group definitely opposed to his music. This week Wilhelm Furtwaengler in the last concert before his departure for America conducted a performance of the Russian's new piano concerto with Stravinsky as soloist. Three days later Dr. Unger gave a hearing of Fireworks, and two days after that in Bluthner Hall there was a concert whose program included a number of Stravinsky's minor works and his Octet for wind instruments.

In regard to their attitude toward the Russian modernist, the Berlin reviewers can be divided into three groups. The first rejects Stravinsky entirely, and goes so far as to assert that he has no real admirers. The second group is in favor of Stravinsky, and believes that he is already an accepted composer who no longer has to make his way. The third group sees Stravinsky as a figure of tremendous proportions, and believes that he has stirred up music as no one has in the past.

Dr. Schmidt Is Opposed

The first group is represented characteristically by Dr. Schmidt. He wrote as follows in the Berliner Tageblatt: "Much has been written about Stravinsky the composer, but little that can be called straightforward and frank. I have never known one of his admirers to say, 'That is beautiful; I like that.' One gets around the difficulty by saying, 'It is very interesting.'

"Now who ever says such a thing after hearing Figaro, or Tristan, or Ariadne? I do not wish to beat around the bush. To me this concerto was horrible, brutal,—like all of Stravinsky's music, with its so-called rhythm. I say this despite the fact that I know that in some quarters I shall be called far behind the times. One must have more vitality in one's ideals of beauty, one must not join every foolish movement of the times. What could have been made of this opposition of piano and wind (with counterbasses and drums)? And what did Stravinsky, this apostle of the ugly at any price, make of it?"

Dr. Urban of the Berliner Zeitung am Mittag subscribed to the belief that Stravinsky is past the point of having opponents: "Whence sprang this intense interest in the music of the Franco-Russian? Evidently he has found the fashion of the time. The present is reflected in his art. To reject the art is to reject the time.

"But is there anybody now who is really fighting against Stravinsky? No one becomes angry any more at his strange ideas, his harmonic boldnesses. I admit frankly, it is a long time since I have heard so much simple, easy, amusing, ingenuous music as there is in the concerto. It was a charming evening full of stimulation and pleasure."

Prof. Weissmann Approves

Another of those in favor of Stravinsky is Prof. Weissmann. He proclaims passionately the glories of the Russian. He knows full well the difficulties of the presentation of the music. He wrote of the Stravinsky concert: "The piano concerto belongs to the circle of Stravinsky's latest works. The Symphony of Wind Instruments and the Octet were the beginning of this last phase. The first is impressive, the latter had an inflammatory effect from the very first time is was performed in public. In contrast to the other works of the composer, these have no program, they are absolute music.

"In the concerto also Stravinsky does not wish to enrich the means of expression with external ideas, but simply aims after musical structure. In the words of the composer himself, 'The music is dry, cold, transparent, and burning like champagne extra-dry.'

"What the present time demands in music is found physically and intellectually in the talent of Igor Stravinsky. His composition can be hard as steel, moving relentlessly in its progress."

But Prof. Weissmann admits that there is a broad line to be drawn between Stravinsky and his followers, whom Stravinsky holds as unimportant as does anyone else. Still this reviewer believes that the Russian's music remains mostly for the select music public, and little for the masses.

Concert Attracts Full House

The house was quite full, and the audience behaved in such a way as to convince the reviewers that it was pleased with Stravinsky the composer as much as with Stravinsky the pianist. Doubtless he is a guide, a sign post, although it has not yet been decided whether the future of music will lie in the direction in which he points.

Everything else musical in Berlin took a back seat in the consideration of music followers in comparison with the visit of Stravinsky. A new symphony by a Viennese composer, Julius Bittner, had moderate success at a concert conducted by Erich Kleiber. The composer proved himself a clever musician who works well, albeit somewhat at second hand. Only one movement of his F minor Symphony seemed really original, and the other parts showed varied origin.

Two prominent recitalists also took part in the music of the week. They were the pianist Orloff, and the cellist Cassado. Orloff is a pianist of the first rank. His touch, technique, and understanding are those of a fine artist.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

YOLANDA MERO

Hungarian Pianist Reappeared Before Her New York Public in an Aeolian Hall Recital Last Week.

Honor Late Composer

Bologna, Dec. 28.—A Puccini Memorial performance has just been given at the Teatro Communale under the direction of Gaetano Bavagnoli, a personal friend of the late composer. The performance was one of Boheme, sung by Minghetti, Pampanini, Dragoni, and Inghilleri. Before the performance an address of eulogy was delivered by Giuseppe Lipparini. The presentation was considered one of the best which has ever been given in the Communale.

Suggests Conservatory Reforms

Paris, Dec. 27.—In his report to the Academie des Beaux Arts, Pierre Rameil has suggested the following reforms at the Paris Conservatoire: The nomination of a director of dramatic studies; turning the old hall in the Rue du Conservatoire into a real theatre; organizing the recitals given by literati and artists; the creation of scholarships by the City of Paris and other large cities of France.

Russian Composers Work Despite Politics

Moscow.

Despite the uncertainty of social and political affairs in Russia, the activities of the composers in that country continue undiminished. Nicolas Miaskovsky is now completing his Eighth Symphony, and it is reported by critics who have seen his score that it is a step forward in his accomplishments. At the same time he is at work upon a fourth piano sonata, a composition in three parts of great technical difficulty.

Samuel Feinberg, whose works enjoyed exceptional success among the new compositions which were presented at two concerts of contemporary Russian music in Vienna recently, has finished his Seventh Piano Sonata. A new Piano Trio by Nicolas Roslavetz has made its first appearance, and Anatole Alexandrov has composed some new songs. The latest Piano Sonata of Gregoire Krein has been completed, and Alexander Shenshin has put finishing touches also to two sets of new songs composed to texts of the Russian poet Shervinsky. Adrian Shaposhnikov is engaged in the writing of a piano sonata, and the young composer Vladimir Kriukov has finished his fifth work in that form for the same instrument. Serge Shirinsky has composed a Sonata for viola and one for violin; Vladimir Scherbachev has finished his Second Symphony; Dmitry Melkikh is quite through with his Third Piano Sonata, and a new String Trio by Vissarion Shebalin, a pupil of Miaskovsky, and the youngest of all the musicians named above, has just had its premiere. Also Leonid Polovinkin has added to his long list of piano compositions.

The Universal Edition, music publishers of Vienna, have become interested in the musical activity of the contemporary Russians, and a number of their compositions are already published by them or will soon be off the presses. Among them are Miaskovsky's Sixth Symphony, his tone poem, The Silence, after Edgar Allen Poe, and some songs; Samuel Feinberg's Sixth Piano Sonata and a number of preludes for the same instrument; Alexandrov's Fifth Piano Sonata, and piano pieces of varied style by Polovinkin.

VICTOR BELAIEV.

Cosima Wagner Ill

Baireuth, Jan. 8.—Cosima Wagner is reported seriously ill at her home here.

The condition of Frau Wagner, widow of Richard Wagner, the great composer, is giving rise to grave apprehensions among relatives and friends of the family.

Naples to Hear Novelties

Naples, Dec. 15.—Besides Giordano's opera Cena delle Beffe, the San Carlo at Naples will give Jacquerie, an opera in three acts by Gino Marinuzzi, and Fiordespina, by Fernando Lunghi.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Respighi Work Has Rome Premiere

Sound of Auto Horn and Phonograph Are Used; Fete Anniversary of Home.

Rome.

Under the direction of Benardino Molinari Ottorino Respighi's new symphonic poem I Pini di Roma had its first performance at the Augusteum concert on December 14. The rest of the program consisted of Beethoven's First Symphony, the Concerto in D minor of Vivaldi, the Introduction to Kovantchina, of Moussorgsky, Debussy's L'Isle Joyeuse, and Wagner's Tannhauser Overture. The Debussy piece was given in a version transcribed by Maestro Molinari.

I Pini, which is a companion piece to the same composer's Fontane di Roma, had a complete success with the audience and the reviewers present. The symphonic poem consists of a series of pictures whose connection is one more of spirit than of musical material.

The first of the four parts is called Pini di Villa Borghese. It is lively in mood, and throughout can be heard the cries and jokes of children and the sounds of many persons. At one point there is scored in it the sound of an automobile horn.

Music Modern in Style

In the second section, Pini Presso una Catacomba, the composer has succeeded in creating a music of expression and moving sentiment. Throughout he employs exquisite effects of veiled color, employing sometimes more than a single tonality. The music is most modern in style. Throughout the score Respighi displays himself as master of orchestration, full of skill and novel ideas. Something of the Gregorian spirit hovers about this second section of I Pini.

As much as the mezzo-tint quality is apparent in the second of the four pictures, in the third, I Pini del Gianicolo, it pervades all the pages. The conception is truly poetical, and the melodic sense which Respighi displays is rich and persuasive. In this part of the poem a clarinet theme brought out before all the other instruments of orchestra, creates an atmosphere of vague beauty that is well conceived and effectively carried out.

Bird's Song by Phonograph

Worthy of particular note in this passage is the introduction of the song of a nightingale authentically reproduced by a phonograph record. The commentators judged this almost —but not quite—the height of realism. They are prepared to hear a trained nightingale itself before long.

The last episode, I Pini della Via Appia, is an evocation of ancient Rome, in which the composer depicts the triumphal return from war of the Roman legions as they march over the famous highway toward Campidoglio. The movement consists of a march which gains continually in strength and volume, as the sun rises slowly from its tentative strength of the dawn to its full power at high noon.

The trumpets have the leading part in this work, and at times their cry becomes of deafening sharpness. This is a veritable apotheosis in music of Rome, and closes the new symphonic poem with fitting emphasis and effect.

Maestro Molinari had an enlarged orchestra for this concert, and he accomplished a clear and understanding performance of the new work. The audience awarded him his due share of applause.

Concert Celebrates Anniversary

There was celebrated on December 16 the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Home for Retired Musicians in Rome. This institution owes its existence to the munificence of Giuseppe Verdi, and has been supported of late by various philanthropic organizations and campaigns. Recently Giulio Gatti-Casazza added a new gift to those which he has already made when he sent to this home 100,000 lire of the receipts of the Puccini memorial concert which took place in the New York Metropolitan Opera House shortly after the death of the composer.

The celebration of the first quarter century of the home took the form of a concert, in which participated a number of students at the Conservatory, directed by Ildebrando Pizzetti. The program was given in the largest hall of the home. Signora Armanini, soprano, took part in several of the numbers on the program. The chorus was one composed of Conservatory students conducted and drilled by Prof. Bartola. The entire concert was called a success from every point of view.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Shavitch Conducting in London

London, Jan. 5.—The fifth symphony concert of the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on January 12 will be conducted by Vladimir Shavitch. Mme. Shavitch, known as Tina Lerner, pianist, will be heard in the Tschaikowsky piano Concerto. Brahms' Academic Festival, Strauss' Don Juan, and Brahms' First Symphony will be the orchestral numbers.

ERNEST SCHELLING
Conducted at the Recent Concert of Messrs. Maier, Pattison and Shattuck With Orchestra, and Will Be Heard in New York and Boston as Leader at Several Children's Concerts.

Give Hindemith Program

Paris, Jan. 2.—The Revue Musicale Concert on December 27 was devoted to the compositions of P. Hindemith, the German composer. The Amar Quartet played his Quartet, Opus No. 32, and the composer performed his own viola sonata and assisted in the presentation of his String Trio, playing together with R. Hindemith and M. Amar.

Broadcast Symphony Concerts

London, Jan. 1.—The British Broadcasting Company started a new season of international symphony concerts at Covent Garden last month with Pierre Monteux, late of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as conductor. The second concert will be conducted by Ernest Ansermet, and the third by Bruno Walter.

Pro Arte Quartet in France

Paris, Jan. 2.—The Pro-Arte Quartet made a recital appearance in the Salle Gaveau here on December 23. The program consisted of quartets of Borodine, Haydn, and Debussy, and shorter pieces of Scarlatti, Marcello, Schubert, Bordes, Faure, Honegger, and Bononcini.

Vienna Hears Music Of Modern Russians

Vienna.

With the aid of the Austrian Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, Victor Belaiev, Russian music writer and Moscow correspondent of The Musical Digest, organized in Vienna some time after the municipal music festival two programs of music by modern Russian composers. The two concerts were made up entirely of chamber music, and took place in the Kleiner Konzerthaus-Saal.

The Russian works played included Nicolas Miaskovsky's Third Piano Sonata and a number of his songs; Samuel Feinberg's Second Piano Sonata and some songs; Nicolas Roslavetz's Cello Sonata; Gregoire Castoire's Piano Quartet; Basil Shirinsky's String Quartet; Gregoire Krein's Violin Sonata; Alexander Gretchaninov's Third String Quartet; cello compositions by Alexander Goedicke, and varied compositions by Pavlov, Polovinkin, Sabaneiev, Anatole Alexandrov, Evseiev, A. Krein, Shensin, Borchmann, and Gnesin.

The artists who took part in the two concerts were the Wiener String Quartet, the Sedlak Quartets, Mrs. Ruzena Herlinger, Dr. Bachrich, and two other musicians who had particular opportunity to distinguish themselves: Friedrich Wuhrer, pianist, and Oskar Jolly, who last summer in Salsburg sang with success a number of new songs by Alexander Shenshin.

V. B.

Composers Assist in Paris Concert

Paris, Jan. 2.—At the Colonne concert of December 27 Georges Enesco directed his Second Symphony, Andre Caplet conducted his choral composition, the Mirror of Jesus, Gabriel Pierne was the leader in Debussy's La Damoiselle Elue, and Ravel conducted the performance of his own La Valse.

Enesco Gives Paris Recital

Paris, Jan. 4.—Just before leaving for America Georges Enesco, Roumanian violinist and composer, appeared in recital here last Monday evening at the Salle Gaveau.

Szigeti Is Soloist With Gaubert

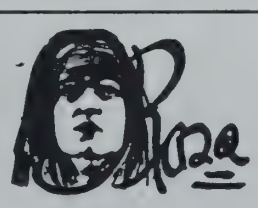
Paris, Jan. 4.—The program of the Societe des Concerts last Sunday afternoon under the direction of Philippe Gaubert included the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, which was played by J. Szigeti.

Toscha Seidel Plays in Paris

Paris, Dec. 20.—Completely recovered from his recent attack of pneumonia Toscha Seidel appeared here in the Salle Gaveau in a recital not long ago.

American Sings in France

Thouars, France.—Joseph Martel, an American singer, sang Valentine in Faust here recently. Mr. Martel has toured the United States in opera.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARJORIE MEYER
SOPRANO
Management: Standard Booking Office, 17 East 42d St., New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

The Studio Easy Chair

THE Midwinter Concert of the Department of Music of Athens College, Athens, Ga., was given last night under the direction of Frank M. Church. Many of the students who appeared made their debuts in these recitals. The Athens College Orchestra, conducted by Miss Tyree, assisted. The next Students' Recital will be held on February 2. On March 28, the annual Bach recital will be given.

The pupils of Clarence Adler, who form the Clarence Adler Club, gave a well received program at the first meeting of the club on December 20. A number of well known musicians listened to the students play and afterwards took part in the artists' program presented to the students. On this occasion Maestro Giuseppe Campanari, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera, was guest of honor.

On the students' program, Norman Masloff played Schumann's The Contrabandist, and Chopin's Etude in A minor, and Polonaise in A flat; Blanche Salomon played Chopin's Impromptu; Minnie Huber offered Schumann's Soaring, and Brahms' Rhapsodie in E flat; and Bessie Anik was heard in Faure's Impromptu in F minor, Chopin's Impromptu in A flat minor, and Liszt's At the Spring.

The unexpected event of the evening was the program of chamber music works performed by Clarence Adler, piano, Cornelius Van Vliet, cello, and E. Roelofsma, clarinet.

At the Christmas concert of the New England Conservatory in Jordan Hall, Boston, Margaret Mason's Suite for Small Orchestra, which received a special prize in the Endicott competition last spring, was given a hearing. Other numbers, given by soloists with chorus and orchestra under Wallace Goodrich, included an excerpt from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, Gade's Christmas Eve, and Henry Dunham's Aurora.

The soloists of the occasion were Mary L. Herman, soprano; Florence Owen, contralto; William Simmons, tenor; Benjamin H. Russell, baritone; David B. McClosky, bass, and Harold Schwab, organist.

In the Twilight and By the Brook, prize-winning compositions by Seige Abe, a Japanese student of the New England Conservatory of Music, were played at the opening orchestral concert of the year at the conservatory. The soloist at this concert was Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist.

The Michigan Federation of Music Clubs has announced a contest on instruments of the orchestra for junior clubs and school musical organizations. The course covers four lessons and includes only strings and woodwinds. Contest pamphlets giving a diagram of the position of instruments in the orchestra, questions for each of the four lessons, and final examination questions may be had upon application to the State Junior Chairman, Mrs. James E. Thoms, Coldwater, Mich. The course is based upon the National Federation of Music Clubs Junior Course on Instruments of the Orchestra, which may be secured from the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music in New York city.

John W. Beattie, State Supervisor of Music, Lansing, has indorsed the Federation plan to invite the three students having the highest grades in music, and one chaperon, in any school in Michigan, to attend the children's concert to be given by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at Ann Arbor Monday afternoon, March 16, as guests of the Federation in session at that time in annual convention. Miss Edith Rhetts, educational director of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, plans to use slides and give a talk on the children's concert program preceding the concert. Many clubs and school musical organizations will take up the selections to be heard at this concert as a weekly study. All members of federated school organizations and Junior clubs may attend the concert without charge.

Irene Jacques, a pupil of Adelaide Gescheidt, was heard in recital at the Wurlitzer Auditorium, New York, last month. Another pupil of Miss Gescheidt's, LeRoy Duffield, has been engaged to sing the leading tenor role in the Winter Garden Passing Show for the remainder of the season.

Elizabeth Dumas and Della Samoloff, sopranos, and Frederick Baer, baritone, pupils of Adelaide Gescheidt, assisted by Rozella Ziegler, and accompanied by Miss Betty Schuleen, entertained the many guests who attended Miss Gescheidt's studio-tea at her home in New York, January 7.

William S. Brady has just received word that his pupil, Robert Steele, baritone, has made a successful debut in Milan as Germond in Traviata. Mr. Steele has been engaged to sing with the Chicago Civic Opera Company for the season of 1925-26.

I. PHILIPP AND C. DECREUS

The Former (left) Is Head of the Piano Department at the American Conservatory in Fontainebleau, and the Latter Is Director of the School

Emily Roberts, artist-student of Frank van Dusen and member of the faculty of the American Conservatory in Chicago, is now organist at the Englewood Methodist Episcopal Church.

A graduate of the public school music department of the conservatory under the direction of O. E. Robinson, is now director of music in the high school at DeKalb, Ill.

Sixteen additional teaching rooms were acquired by the Institute of Musical Art, New York, last week in the opening of its recently completed annex. The new building, which adjoins the parent structure, is four and a half stories high, and of fire-proof and sound-proof construction. Its cost, including equipment, was $175,000.

This will enable the Institute to accommodate eleven hundred students. The present enrollment is nine hundred and fifty, exclusive of the two hundred junior students being taught at the several community branches of the Institute.

Dr. Frank Damrosch said that the increased enrollment could be accommodated without increasing the present faculty of one hundred and nine teachers.

Bryn Mawr Music Aided by Puzzle Contest

Jerome Swinford, baritone, and Sigmund Spaeth were ignominiously defeated in the great Intercollegiate Cross Word Puzzle Contest held at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, on January 4 for the benefit of the City Music League and the Bryn Mawr Music Fund. Yale, represented by Stephen Vincent Benet and Jack Thomas, stole a last minute victory from Heywood Broun and Robert Sherwood of Harvard, and the Messrs. Swinford and Spaeth of Princeton, limped in a bad third two syllables behind on a seven-letter word meaning "a slight convex curve in the shaft of a column."

The first contest was between Wellesley, Vassar, Smith, and Bryn Mawr. Wellesley won an easy victory by two horizontals and a vertical. Then came the "contest of merit," as Raymond Hitchcock, the master of ceremonies, termed it, between Yale and Wellesley. Yale won.

The contest was the first of a series of entertainments to be given for the benefit of this Music Fund and the City Music League. The committee is arranging a series of benefit concerts for January and February which will be called the Roosevelt Recitals, and which will be held in the ballroom of this hotel on the afternoons of January 16 and 29, and February 10 and 23. Artists who will be heard during the course are Josef Hofmann, Esther Dale, Francis Macmillen, the Duchesse de Richelieu, Paul Shirley, Wanda Landowska, Jerome Swinford, the Symphony Players, and Monsieur X, a tenor who will sing incognito.

For the past three years the Music Department of Bryn Mawr College has been sponsored by a group of prominent New York women who were interested in carrying on this work at their Alma Mater. The members of this committee are: Mmes. Henry S. Brooks, C. Reed Cary, James Chadwick Collins, Udo Fleischmann, Learned Hand, Edwin S. Jarrett, Edward E. Loomis, Alfred B. Maclay, John E. Rousmaniere, John E. Russel, Jr., Arthur H. Scribner, F. Lewis Slade, Walter S. Sullivan, Warren Thorpe, George Montgomery Tuttle, the Misses Florence King, and Helen Rice, and Mrs. William C. Dickerman, chairman. K. K.

The orchestra of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music gave a concert last month, under the direction of Ralph Lyford, at the Conservatory Concert Hall. The soloists in Henry Hadley's Cantata, A Legend of Granada, were Violet Sommer, soprano, and Herbert Schatz, baritone.

Alfred Y. Cornell will present several of his pupils in a song recital at New Chickering Hall, New York, January 27.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

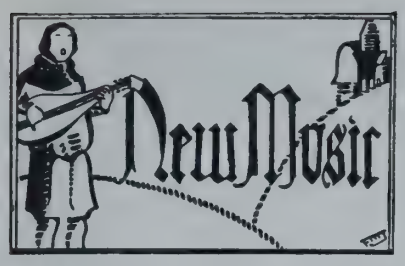
PIETRO CIMINI CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



A SUNNY CORNER in the Finger Gymnasium, by Frances Terry (published by Oliver Ditson Company), is a volume of twenty short studies for elementary child pupils of piano playing. The author has taken up carefully some of the fundamental problems of finger technic, but has at the same time kept in mind the necessity of interesting the pupil. The studies are therefore composed of very melodious material simply and pleasantly harmonized.

The problems which Frances Terry has considered are phrasing and attack, finger and wrist staccato, facile use of the thumb, smooth legato, legato thirds, vigorous use of the fourth finger, the grace note, finger equality, scale passages, and others.

Ditson is the publisher also of From Desert and Pueblo, a group of Navajo and Tewa Indian songs, collected and transcribed by Elizabeth Willis de Huff and Homer Grunn. The five songs included in the book are Tewa Love Song, Peyote Drinking Song, Why Do You Leave Me?, Navajo Love Song, and The Eagle Dance.

These songs were collected on discs by Elizabeth de Huff, and were transcribed by Mr. Grunn. With slight exception he has followed their melodic and rhythmic flow, and has used for their harmonic background chords that express the natural vigor and primitiveness of their subjective expression. The folk song feeling pervades the group of songs, and the beauty and originality of their melodies have the plaintive and tender quality that is characteristic of the simple outpourings of semi-savages.

Cecil Arden is the composer of a song for medium voice, The Dance of Love. It is published by Harms, New York. It is a ballad pleasantly melodious with a catching rhythmic swing. The French text is Miss Arden's, and the English version is by Frederick H. Martens.

G. Schirmer is the publisher of a number of piano compositions for the youngest child pupils. Bird Melodies, by W. B. Olds, are twelve sketches based on bird themes. With each of the selections there is a little note describing the quality and manner of singing of the bird whose song is reproduced. The dozen pieces are of the very simplest grades, and are thoroughly fingered for the convenience of teacher and pupil.

Three descriptive pieces for young folks by Mary Ruth Jesse are also edited carefully for the child piano pupil. The titles are Whippoorwill, The Little Drummer, and March of the Little Lead Men.

C. W. Krogmann's Christmas Dance is a pleasant little waltz, one of ten pieces of this composer in his Opus 10. A Rainy Day, by Hazel Gertrude Kinscella, is a short staccato piece, also one of ten, for the child beginner.

Seattle Concert News

Seattle, Dec. 30.

The Musical Art Society presented Mrs. Edward MacDowell in an interpretative recital of MacDowell music to an audience composed largely of teachers and students.

Mischa Elman played to the usual large and enthusiastic audience which greets him each time he comes to Seattle. No small part of the enjoyment of the audience was due to the accompaniments played by Josef Bonine. The concert was given in the Masonic Temple under the management of Miss Margery Cowan, who also handled the recital given by Moriz Rosenthal in the Plymouth church auditorium.

The Amphion Society gave its winter concert at Meaney Hall early in December. Ninety voices, with a twenty piece orchestra, assisted by Gertrude Huntley Green, pianist, and conducted by Graham Morgan, gave one of the finest concerts ever given by the society.

Gertrude Huntley Green was presented in recital by the Palmerton-Mendel Concert Bureau in response to a demand created by her playing with the Amphions.

The Denishawn Dancers appeared at the Masonic Temple under the auspices of the Women's University Club during the current month.

Charles M. Courboin was presented in a return organ recital by Wallace MacMurray on Sunday afternoon, December 7.

The excellence of the playing of the Spargur Quartet was again demonstrated at its opening concert of December 9. The following of this chamber music ensemble has grown so greatly as to necessitate the engaging of a larger auditorium. The Spargurs will give a number of recitals throughout the Northwest this season.

Owing to the cancellation of the date of Edna Swanson Ver Haar the Palmerton-Mendel Bureau substituted Margherita Gentile on the occasion of the second concert of its series.

The Bach Society, directed by Graham Morgan, gave its initial concert of the year under the auspices of the Women's University Club. A program of ancient carols was sung, as were numbers by Arnold Bax, Gustav Holst, Colin Taylor and Handel.

H. G. S.

GDAL SALESSKI

Was Soloist at the Second of Josiah Zuro's Sunday Symphony Concerts in the Criterion Theatre, New York.

Music of the Movies

The personal appearance of the Capitol Theatre radio ensemble known as Roxy's Gang in a ten minute presentation of selections of Victor Herbert's opera, The Enchantress, is the feature of the musical program at the Capitol this week. Jules Schwarz, baritone, brother of Joseph Schwarz, is singing in a Tannhauser selection, the orchestra is giving the Boheme Overture, and Eugen Ormandy, concertmaster, is playing the Meditation from Thais.

At the Piccadilly the Overture Raymond and The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers accompany the feature. Gitta Rappoch, soprano, is singing My Hero, from the Chocolate Soldier.

Ponchielli's Dance of the Hours is taking the place of the overture at the Rivoli, and Michael Rosenker, concertmaster of the orchestra, is playing the Faust Fantasy of Wieniawski. At the Rialto a number of selections from the works of Franz Liszt are being given by the orchestra, and Miriam Lax, soprano, and Adrian da Silva, tenor, are appearing in three numbers.

The Mark Strand Theatre program has as its overture this week William Tell, and Estelle Carey, soprano, is assisting the Strand Male Quartet in a number called Demi Tasse. In the ballet novelty, The Old Bouquet, Redfern Hollinshead, tenor, and Mlle. Klemova, ballerina, are taking part.

GIACOMO PUCCINI E LA SUA OPERA by Gino Monaldi (published by La Libreria Editrice Mantegazza, Rome) has particular interest at present because of the recent death of the Italian composer. Signor Monaldi is an Italian authority on the subject of opera and its composers. His works already published number volumes on Verdi, Mascagni, on opera buffa, musical melodrama in Italy, and many other musical subjects.

This story of Puccini and his music in no sense exhausts the subject. It is a briskly moving chronicle in which the details of the life of the composer are little touched upon. Only incidently and in every minor degree is the book a biographical work. It is devoted mostly to the presentation of the facts concerning the composition and first presentation of each of the pieces of Puccini in turn, with information largely anecdotal in nature.

Concerning each of the operas of Puccini Signor Monaldi has written extended analysis which shows a complete familiarity with Puccini's motives and his music. He quotes Puccini's own definition of his place in music. "I am not a composer of large things. I feel for small things and don't like to treat large ones." Signor Monaldi's admiration for Puccini seems to exceed that of the composer himself, for the criticisms of Tosca, Boheme, Girl of the Golden West, Madama Butterfly and the rest rarely have much but praise of the composer, and more than once ascribe to him epic qualities which the statement of Puccini himself disowns.

The Monaldi book leaves room for two types of work concerning Puccini, one his biography, the other a critical study which will establish the true place of Puccini among composers of opera. Needless to say it would be best to have the two subjects combined in a single volume. Nevertheless the work of Gino Mondaldi is an excellent readable preliminary essay.

To Play Schelling Novelty

Ernest Schelling's Divertimento, a quintet for piano and string quartet, will be given its premier performance by the Flonzaley quartet at Aeolian Hall, New York, January 20. Mr. Schelling will be at the piano.

Divertimento is a collection of seven short pieces, four for quintet and three for string quartet, in which Mr. Schelling introduces stringed instruments as instruments of percussion. This novel idea was suggested by the unusual effects Mr. Schelling heard a Hindu singer produce with a small hand drum, using one finger, three fingers and the palm of his hand.

Mr. Schelling has been diligently rehearsing the Flonzaleys in the peculiar technique required to reproduce these novel sounds.

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals. After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

People's Symphony Plays in Boston

Boston, Jan. 5.—Except for Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, the program at the People's Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon, conducted by Emil Mollenhauer, was made up of unfamiliar numbers. These were Volkmann's Overture to Shakespeare's Richard III; an Ethiopian Rhapsody, by Lucius Hosmer; and a Concerto for piano and orchestra by Henrique Oswald, Brazilian composer. The Concerto was played by Alfredo Oswald, son of the composer.

Mr. Oswald, in the opinion of the Herald reviewer, "proved himself a musician of intelligence, a pianist of sensibilities, more elegant than he is profound." The Christian Science Monitor writer considered him "a pianist of more than ordinary merit. His playing is restful, finished, and pleasantly free from pounding." A. H. M. wrote in the Transcript that that Concerto "is manifestly the work of an excellent musician, well equipped, with good feeling for musical effects." This chronicler thought that Mr. Oswald "proved himself an able pianist, of excellent technique, good tone, intelligent musicianship." The reading he considered a "brilliant" one, with "excellent support from the orchestra."

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, was heard yesterday afternoon in recital in Symphony Hall. Herbert Carrick was the accompanist, and a small orchestra, conducted by John W. Crawley, assisted. S. M. in the Monitor said that Mr. Werrenrath, "as usual sang with that sensitive musical understanding to which he has accustomed his audiences." R. R. G. in the Herald found his voice rather dry at first, but later singing "with the freedom of delivery and the warmth of style that are characteristic of him at his finest." H. T. P. of the Transcript remarked that of late, the singer seems to have "smoothed, enriched, and set free his middle tones. In lustre they are now silken."

In Jordan Hall last Saturday, Richard Crooks, tenor, gave a recital. In the opinion of S. M., he displayed a voice "of more than ordinary quality and power. An enthusiastic singer to say the least, and his enthusiasm more often than not leads him into excesses." In spite of this, this commentator thought him "instinctively musical." A. H. M. said that his loud tones were "robust" and his softer tones "of surpassing smoothness and sweetness."

Toti dal Monte Ill

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Toti dal Monte, soprano of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, was unable to sing Lucia last night because of an attack of influenza and tonsilitis. Her illness may prevent her from accompanying the company on its Eastern tour.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

"LOCKED DOORS"

with BETTY COMPSON

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

POLA NEGRI in

"EAST OF SUEZ"

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

ARTHUR SHATTUCK

American Pianist Who Joined Messrs. Maier and Pattison in Concert in New York Sunday Evening a Week Ago and Won Long Applause by His Playing of Palmgren's River Concerto.

Miss Bassett Makes Debut

Karolyn Wells Bassett, soprano, made her debut in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Plaza December 27 at the unusual hour of five-thirty. In addition to songs of her own composition, Miss Bassett sang two arias, as well as numbers by Wilson, Farley, Sachs and Proch.

According to the Herald Tribune reviewer, Miss Bassett displayed a voice which was "fresh and fluent, able to soar into high altitudes without sign of strain or effort, while an appealing appearance and manner were marked assets." This writer asserted that the artist "made a good impression as a soprano of the lyric type, after dispelling a slight cloudiness of tone in the first number." Other papers did not carry analytical reviews of the concert.

The accompanist was Dan Dickinson, and Ernest Wagner, flutist, assisted. Miss Bassett took the opportunity to introduce a young Spanish soprano, Amira Calderson.

Sing Tosca for Opera Fund

The fund for municipal summer opera in New York was increased by a benefit performance of Tosca at the Metropolitan Opera House last Thursday afternoon, attended by Mayor Hylan, other officials and citizens interested in the plan to provide the public with free open-air opera next season. Mayor Hylan made an address.

The opera was given before a large audience, with Mme. Jeritza in the title role; Antonio Scotti as Baron Scarpia, and Mmes. Fleta, d'Angelo and Malatesta in other prominent roles. Tullio Serafin conducted.

Coppicus to Manage Gabrilowitsch

F. C. Coppicus announces that for season of 1925-26 Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, will be under the concert direction of the Metropolitan Musical Bureau.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

CONSTANCE TALMADGE in

"HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE"

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

It may be possible that D. Edward Porter, now associate manager of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will undertake the managership of the Detroit Symphony. If matters should so work out President Murphy will find in Mr. Porter an able executive.

* * *

That was a pretty story carried in the New York dailies about Carmella Ponselle's sacrificing her own career to advance that of her sister, Rosa Ponselle. And now Carmella has sung on the stage of the Metropolitan at a Sunday night concert with Rosa.

* * *

Going back a dozen years or so, to the time when Emma Trentini sang here in the Firefly (after she had appeared in the Manhattan Opera Company), it is not difficult to recall the big voice in this physically tiny soprano. She seems, in her vaudeville endeavors at New York's Hippodrome, not to have lost any of her vocal powers.

* * *

Greek Evans, baritone of baritones in the lighter operatic realm, was rushing along Seventh avenue. "I've got to meet my wife," he confided (meaning Henriette Wakefield, who is a member of the Metropolitan), and then dashed on his way.

* * *

Music New York is becoming more and more socially inclined. There are receptions, luncheons, teas, and other affairs following one another so rapidly that to attend them all—much as one so desires—is not altogether easy.

* * *

The London house of Steinway has lately moved from its former quarters in Wigmore street to George street, at the corner of Conduit. Yes, and instead of two telephone lines there are now five. It is to be hoped that the London phone service is better than it once was.

* * *

Mrs. Edna Saunders of Houston, Tex., (and one of the ablest of the United States local managers) visited New York recently. She was amongst those who attended the Falstaff revival at the Metropolitan.

* * *

Back in New York is Harry Cyphers, whose managerial activities are so well known throughout the country.

* * *

Jeanne Gordon, the mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan, is being phoned to constantly by persons confusing her with Joan Gordon, the actress . . . and vice versa. What it is to be famous, on both sides of the fence.

* * *

Yes, Frieda Hempel is home once more . . . after many appearances in England, where she has become more popular than ever.

* * *

The assemblage at the first Igor Stravinsky guest conductor appearance, before the New York Philharmonic last Thursday, was one of the most brilliant of the season.

* * *

And also at the reception tendered the Russian composer, after the concert, by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sachs, at their New York home in East Sixty-ninth street.

* * *

Fitzhugh Haensel escaped all the radio hullabaloo, since he was vacationing while the vibrations were vibrating in managerial and artists quarters.

A. Strok, the impresario from the Far East, is a visitor in New York, with headquarters at the Hotel Astor. Mr. Strok has taken to Japan some of the foremost artists now before the public.

* * *

Out in Chicago one finds Harry Culbertson entering the field of local concert management. He presented recently Leff Pouishnoff, and then Edmond Vichnin, also a pianist, and then Harry Farbman, violinist. Sascha Culbertson will be heard in Kimball Hall, under the Culbertson management, on January 22.

* * *

The Baldwin Piano Company's director of advertising, Phil Wyman, spent several days recently in New York.

* * *

Yes, and another Cincinnatian who will spend a week here during the summer, as guest conductor of the Stadium Concerts, leading the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, is Fritz Reiner.

* * *

New York appears to be the gravitating point for many in the music managerial industry. Miss Setta Robinson, secretary-treasurer of the Detroit Philharmonic Concert Company, was in Gotham a few days ago.

* * *

So was Miss Margaret Rice, who came specially from Milwaukee to hear Arthur Shattuck play with Guy Maier and Lee Pattison in the concert conducted by Ernest Schelling.

* * *

A flying trip from Rochester to New York—by Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School. But by train, not airship.

* * *

Stravinsky may be, as he is, a great composer; but he will not take any conducting laurels away from Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

* * *

Sophie Braslau appears to have been rather more than welcome out on the Pacific Coast.

* * *

An unsigned letter, enclosing a New York newspaper review which enlists the disapproval of the writer, has been received by The Musical Digest. No attention is paid in this office to anonymous communications.

* * *

Passing through New York, on his way to Florida to recuperate from his recent serious illness, is Ben Atwell, accompanied by Mrs. Atwell.

* * *

Lines-O'-Newser caught just a glimpse of Manager Arthur J. Gaines of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra during his stay in New York. Br'er Gaines was moving rapidly.

* * *

If only the soliciting for concerts could be done via radio it might even things up for the wholesale managers, in point of operating expense.

* * *

How to assemble and control the broadcasting of artists so that it will not imperil the concerts, is the burning issue. But some way out will be found. The knottiest of problems usually are untied.

* * *

With the next Saturday popular performance of Andrea Chenier at the Metropolitan, Rosa Ponselle will close her current season with the opera. Miss Ponselle will start on a long concert tour and will join the opera company in Atlanta at the end of April.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

As to American Opera
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 14 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orcheestra, who won exceptional success in his guest appearances as leader of the New York Stadium concerts last summer, led his players in seven concerts on tour last week.

Bulletins of News

Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, together with solo dancers of the Denishawn Company, have been engaged by A. Strok, of Japan, for a twenty-five weeks' tour of the Orient, opening September 1, 1925, at the Imperial Theatre, Tokio.

Cables from Nice, France, announce the debut of Clara Thomas Ginn, of Cincinnati, as Alvira in Don Giovanni at the Nice Opera House. Mrs. Ginn, who has been studying with Jean de Reske for two years, appeared as a guest artist with the Zoo Opera Company in Cincinnati last summer.

Elizabeth Rethberg, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was one of the devotees of winter sports who took advantage of New York's recent heavy snowfall to indulge in an afternoon of skiing in Central Park. Reporters of the metropolitan dailies seized the opportunity which Mme. Rethberg offered for human interest stories many inches long about this versatile singer.

Washington, Jan. 16.—Among the names which have been mentioned in official circles as possible choice for Ambassador to Germany succeeding Alanson B. Houghton, is that of Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Society.

Toti dal Monte, erroneously reported as having been so ill while recently in Chicago that she might not be able to go on tour with the Chicago Civic Opera Association, is fully recovered. Her indisposition was only slight, and it did not prevent her singing last week in Baltimore. Charles L. Wagner, Mme. dal Monte's manager, states that the soprano will be heard with the Chicago organization during its approaching stay there, and elsewhere with the company.

A contract has been signed by Lawrence Tibbett, the Metropolitan Opera Company baritone who has sprung suddenly into prominence, and the managerial firm of Evans and Salter. The arrangement gives the representatives of Amelita Galli-Curci, Tito Schipa, Joseph Lhevinne, and Carlos Sedano the exclusive concert rights to the services of Mr. Tibbett. Many communications asking for his appearance in concert have been received from all parts of the country.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza announced that the promised revival of Wagner's Gotterdammerung, last heard at the Metropolitan in the season of 1916-17, will take place on Saturday afternoon, January 31, with these principals in the cast: Siegfried, Kurt Taucher; Brunnhilde, Mme. Larsen-Todsen; Hagen, Michael Bohnen; Gunther, Friedrich Schorr; Gertrude, Maria Mueller, Mr. Bodanzky will conduct.

Strauss Rejects Offer to Return to State Opera

An offer made by the Austrian Ministry of Education to return to Vienna as its musical adviser, with entire authority of arranging programs and choosing singers for the state opera, has been refused by Richard Strauss, according to a dispatch in the New York Evening Post.

A few weeks ago Strauss disagreed with the opera's former director, Schalk, and resigned his directorship. He is now in Garmisch, working on his new opera, The Egyptian Helen. Strauss denied the rumor that he had objected to the appointment of the Berlin conductor, Bruno Walter, to the Vienna Opera.

Seventy-eight Years Young, Is Mrs. Flint

But Still Active as a Music Critic; She Is Honored.

She may be seen at any of New York's important music affairs—Mrs. Mary H. Flint. What does it matter that she is seventy-eight? Her eyes are bright, her mind alert. And though her shoulders are a trifle bent this good lady gives little physical evidence of her years. She is younger in spirit than many who are much her juniors; and as she moves through New York's Metropolitan Opera House corridors of a premiere night you will observe, if you are at all discerning, that she is on the scent for news.

Last Sunday evening representative musicians and daily newspaper music reviewers of New York gathered in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hageman to do honor to Mary Flint. It was an occasion. Music compositions were burlesques, and none laughed more heartily than the little lady (the little "young" lady, not old) who was the guest of the evening.

"Hyper-prunes," by "Vareschoenberavinski," scored for fish-horns, shoehorns, and other implements, received a scrambled performance, . . . Guglielmo Guard played a wicked flute, F. D. Perkins, assistant music reporter for the Herald Tribune, at the piano, Max Smith, wielding an ominous cello, et al, et al.

Then there was the overture to "Vampa" (a vamping composition) for six hands . . . with the pianistic hands of Edwin Hughes, Dorsey Whittington, and Bernard Waggenaau busily employed. Also songs by Marie Sundelius, George Meader, Adamo Didur, and Karl Schlegel, Metropolitan singers. Likewise the Meistersinger quintet sung by Mmes. Easton and Howard and MM. Meader, Diaz, and Schlegel. . . . also stories told by Mario Chamlee, who can tell good ones.

Everyone was happy. Yet the happiest person of all, if appearances count for anything, was Mrs. Mary H. Flint . . . just turned seventy-eight and as chipper as a little bird on a bright spring morning.

Announce Eastman Plan to Encourage American Composers

Rochester Orchestra Will Give Special Concerts of Native Works Passed by Jury.

SCHEDULED FOR APRIL

Rochester, Jan. 15.—An opportunity to hear their works played by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra has been given to American born composers by George Eastman, according to an announcement made yesterday by Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, here. It is intended that works by American composers which would have little chance of a hearing will be played by the orchestra before the local public and musical critics from a number of cities.

All scores for the first concerts, which will take place in April, must be submitted before February 15 to Mr. Hanson. After the compositions have been examined and selected by a jury yet to be appointed, the composers will be invited to the rehearsals and performances of the works as guests of the Eastman School of Music. If the results are all that are anticipated, these concerts will become annual affairs.

In outlining Mr. Eastman's plan for the aiding of young American composers, Mr. Hanson said:

"A great deal is written concerning the American composer. We talk of the great American symphony and the great American opera as though we should suddenly discover them as completed things in the hands of young composers to whom we have never allowed even the privileges of trying out their own efforts. Our composers must have adequate training in theory; second, they must have the opportunity of hearing their own works; third, when they have proven themselves they must be allowed some time for professional composition; and fourth, their best works must be published so that they are procurable for performance and for study.

"What is being done regarding these four essentials? Regarding the first point, some of our best schools of music are beginning to stress the study of composition so that we have, even now, some well-trained composers from American schools. Regarding the second point I know of no systematic plan which has been carried out up to the present time. Regarding the third point the American Academy in Rome is the one great star of hope in an otherwise starless night. For the Academy does grant to one composer a year a three-year fellowship for composition. There is also the Pulitizer traveling fellowship and a very few other short-term fellowships. Prize competitions also offer some encouragement. Regarding the fourth point, with the exception of the valiant work being done by the Society for the Publication of American Music—which is confined to chamber music—nothing systematic has heretofore been done."

THE LIBRARY OF THE JAN 28 1925 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Mlle. Boulanger Makes First U. S. Appearance

Plays Organ With N. Y. Symphony in Two Novel Compositions.

Nadia Boulanger, French organist, pianist and composer, made her American debut with the New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, the afternoon of January 11. Mlle. Boulanger was heard in Handel's D minor Concerto; Pour les Funerailles d'un Soldat, by Lili Boulanger, her sister, and a symphony for organ and orchestra by Aaron Copland, a young Brooklynite who was her pupil in Paris for three years in piano and composition.

The Handel Concerto, according to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, "gave the clearest view of her organ playing, which was especially noteworthy for its perfection of style. . . . Her entire performance disclosed a fine musicianship, a sensitive and highly cultivated art and great delicacy of feeling." The Telegram-Mail reviewer characterized her as an "exceedingly fine organist" who played the Concerto "with exquisite taste and a sure command of style." The interpretation of this work, in the opinion of the World reviewer, was "a masterpiece of fine and thoughtful building through which the organ blended and regained its narrative in the concert of serene and lovely utterances." Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune that Mlle. Boulanger "displayed her admirable technique and fine taste in her performance."

Les Funerailles d'un Soldat, wrote the World commentator, breathed "the rare and sensitive qualities of Lili Boulanger in one of the earlier works of her tragically brief career." W. J. Henderson found it a work "of uncommon worth" which, "developed with stirring eloquence, is genuinely impressive." With this the Telegram-Mail writer was agreed. To Mr. Gilman it was "affecting and potent music, well written for the orchestra and organ."

Mr. Copland's Symphony, which was performed for the first time, disclosed "real talent" to Mr. Henderson, who called it a "singularly interesting and astonishingly uneven" composition. "His symphony is bold and vigorous and sometimes it is almost beautiful," he continued. The Post chronicler called it a "spasmodic, boisterous piece, rather to be judged as an experiment in musical humor than as anything very serious." The writer in the Telegram-Mail considered it "mannered and immature, but the talent it discloses is unmistakable." Mr. Gilman asserted that pages of it "have bite and power, both rhythmical and harmonic" and that, at its best, "his music is astringent, unsentimental, muscular, direct."

Play Schubert Chamber Music

A concert in the Adolph Lewisohn Course of Appreciation of Music was given at Hunter College last Wednesday evening. Dr. H. T. Fleck continued his lecture on Schubert and the Press-Schulz Quartet played Schubert's Quintet, Op. 163, and a Quintet in manuscript by Leo Schulz.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

MME. NANNY LARSEN-TODSEN
Was Forced to Postpone Her Metropolitan Debut, Scheduled for Isolde Last Thursday, Because of an Injury to Her Foot Sustained in Rehearsal.

Eighty-two Compositions Submitted in Competition

Evanston, Ill., Jan. 12.—Eighty-two compositions were submitted in the North Shore Festival Association prize contest which closed on January 1. The most meritorious work will be played at one of the regular concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and the composer will be awarded a prize of $1,000.

Of the eighty-two submitted works the judges will first select five for performance in Evanston, and the prize work will be picked from this selection. The judges in this year's competition are Charles Martin Loeffler, Richard Hageman, and Percy Grainger.

In the first competition, which took place four years ago, seventy-eight compositions were offered, the following year forty-seven were submitted, and the year after that eighty-four. The composition considered second in worth also is usually played by the Chicago Orchestra under Mr. Stock.

Role of Loris Sung by Gigli

Due to the illness of Giovanni Martinelli, Beniamino Gigli was called upon to sing the role of Loris in the production of Fedora by the Metropolitan Opera Company Wednesday evening. This was Mr. Gigli's first appearance in the role in New York, and, according to Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, in him the opera gained "a new and admirable Loris." W. J. Henderson of the Sun thought him "well placed" in the part. He was in good voice, wrote Mr. Henderson, "and sang with abundance of tone and unflagging vigor. His dramatic scenes with Mme. Jeritza went with much spirit."

The World reviewer considered that his voice "was at its purest and best within the confines of the more than limited music." The rest of the cast remained unchanged. Gennaro Papi conducted.

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Puccini Memorial (matinee) — Mmes. Easton and Bourskaya and Messrs. Chamlee and Ballester in the first act of Madama Butterfly; Mme. Jeritza and Messrs. Errolle and Scotti in the second act of Tosca; Mme. Alda and Messrs. Gigli, Didur, Rothier, Picco, and Malatesta in the first act of Boheme. Messrs. Serafin and Papi will conduct.

Die Walkuere (evening)—with Mmes. Larsen - Todsen, Maria Mueller (debut), Branzell and Telva; and Messrs. Taucher and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Dinorah (revival) — with Mme. Galli-Curci and Messrs. Tokatyan and de Luca; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Jeritza and Gordon; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

SATURDAY

Lucia (matinee) — with Mme. Galli-Curci and Messrs. Gigli, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Papi conducting.

Lohengrin (evening) — with Mmes. Mueller and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal and Schorr; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

MONDAY

Fedora — with Mme. Jeritza and Messrs. Gigli and Scotti; Mr. Papi conducting.

Alice Gentle With Orchestra

Minneapolis, Jan. 13.—Alice Gentle, mezzo-soprano, sang with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Henri Verbrugghen conducting, at the subscription concert of the orchestra last Friday evening. She sang an aria from Gounod's Queen of Sheba and one from Massenet's Herodiade. The orchestra played the Franck Symphony, Carpenter's Perambulator Suite, and Sinigaglia's Overture to Le Baruffe Chiozzote.

At the concert on the preceding Friday evening, the eighth of the subscription series, Mr. Verbrugghen presented for the first time in Minneapolis Richard Strauss' Don Quixote. The program included also Sowerby's overture, Comes Autumn Time, and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.

Stravinsky Plays in Own Works

Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer and pianist, gave a recital of his own works at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor, New York city, Thursday afternoon. Mr. Stravinsky was assisted by Creta Torpadie, soprano; Scipione Guidi, violinist, and Simeon Bellison, clarinetist. The concert was given for the benefit of the Mental Hygiene Committee of the New York State Charities Association and netted $3,500 for the organization.

Paderewski Plays in Rome

Rome, Jan. 15.—Ignace Paderewski appeared here in recital yesterday for the first time in twenty-eight years. His program consisted of works of Beethoven, Chopin, and Schumann.

Shepherd Conducts Cleveland Orchestra

Carl Cochems, Basso, Makes Debut; String Quartet Gives Recital.

Cleveland, Jan. 12.—The popular concert by the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon was conducted by Arthur Shepherd in the absence of Mr. Sokoloff. Carl Cochems, basso, made his Cleveland debut as soloist. The program was featured by a few numbers not altogether familiar here—a collection of pieces from Victor Herbert's opera Natoma, which was played at the Metropolitan, but achieved little success; Chabrier's Bourre Fantasque, and the intermezzo from Granados Goyescas. In addition, there were the Rienzi Overture, a Strauss waltz, and the Second Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody.

Eleanor Clarage of the Times-Commercial wrote that Mr. Cochem had a voice "of good range and power which he controls nicely." In the opinion of James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer, he "has remarkable range, with easy command of notes that belong to high baritones by right. Also there is power, and to spare," although his voice at times lacks "ingratiating timbre." This writer considered that Mr. Shepherd "conducted with assurance and spirit, and his players responded to his guiding baton with fine unanimity and irreproachable skill."

Another recent concert was that of the Cleveland String Quartet, composed of Arthur Beckwith, Carlton Cooley, Ralph Silverman and Victor de Gomez. Miss Clarage asserted that they played "with a delicacy of touch and complete artistic finish that was a delight to hear." Of equal enthusiasm was Mr. Roger's statement that, in the concert, they revealed "sound, enlightened and sensitive musicianship and assured command of technical obstacles, which in one of the program's items, at any rate, were distinctly formidable."

Form Workers' Orchestra

An orchestra composed entirely of workingmen is being founded in the Hungarian settlement on the East Side of New York by Bela Loblov, violinist. The first rehearsal was held at the Hungarian Workers' Home on the evening of January 10. Mr. Loblov, the organizer and conductor of the orchestra, played last year at the first stand of the violins of the New York Philharmonic Society. Among the patrons of the workers' orchestra are Walter Damrosch and Otto H. Kahn. Mr. Kahn has donated money to meet the expenses of the first concert.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Two Violinists With Boston Symphony

Spalding and Burgin on Koussevitzky Programs; People's Orchestra Gives Concert.

Boston, Jan. 13. — Two violinists were soloists at the latest symphony concerts. Last Friday, at the regular concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Albert Spalding played Respighi's Concerto Gregoriano for violin and orchestra for the first time in Boston. Another novelty on the program was the Bach-Elgar organ Fantasia and Fugue in C minor. The other numbers were Bach's Brandenburg Concerto in G major, Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries, the Prelude to Lohengrin, and the Overture to Rienzi.

Philip Hale of the Herald found the Respighi work interesting, "often beautiful, at times impressive." Mr. Spalding's performance was, he thought, "admirable in every way, technically and aesthetically." According to P. R. of the Globe, the performance of this "ingratiating" work was "a beautiful example of controlled, but intense emotion from Mr. Spalding and the orchestra. He is a really great violinist." Warren Storey Smith in the Post praised not only the "innate worth" of the piece, but "the mastery, the fine fervor, the musicianly insight, of his performance of it." H. T. P. of the Transcript discovered that Mr. Spalding "has become a serious, sensitive, studious, fine touched musician" with "a fine-strung, lustrous sweetness of tone."

At the second supplementary symphony concert, Richard Burgin, concertmaster, was soloist in the Beethoven violin Concerto. Mr. Burgin, who conducted the previous concert as Mr. Koussevitzky was ill, was heartily applauded. Mr. Smith found the Concerto "broadly conceived and ably executed" and R. R. G. in the Herald asserted that he managed "the interminable array of runs and trills and passages smoothly and with sweet tone." According to the Globe, he displayed "precision and grace" after conquering his nervousness. Other reviewers commended his work.

A Dutch composition, Piet Hein by Van Anrooij, was the novelty offered by Stuart Mason, conductor, at the concert Sunday afternoon of the People's Symphony orchestra. Rose Zulalian, contralto, was the soloist. The Christian Science Monitor reviewer found it a "jolly" piece conducted admirably by Mr. Mason. C. S. S. of the Transcript liked the work and commended Mr. Mason's performance. He also lauded the "evenness of texture and quality" which graced Mme. Zulalian's "naturally beautiful voice."

Ernest Schelling, assisted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave the first of his series of children's concerts Saturday forenoon. With the aid of pictures, Mr. Schelling described several string instruments, and the program emphasized these instruments.

MISS SUZANNE CLOUGH
Made Her First New York Appearance of the Season in Her Song Recital Last Wednesday Evening.

Ruffo Sings in Gioconda

In the fifth production this season by the Metropolitan of Ponchielli's La Gioconda, Titta Ruffo sang the role of the villainous Barnaba for the first time. According to the Herald Tribune reviewer, his "vocal strength was, as usual, in evidence in a very commendable performance." The writer in the Sun wrote that "he made much of the sinister role, both vocally and histrionically, and thereby added an effective feature to the ensemble." The Telegram-Mail chronicler referred to him as "Titta Ruffo, of the puissant voice and indomitable vigor."

Alison Smith of the World found him nervous at first, but said that "the celebrated aria emerged with robust confidence and conviction." The rest of the cast was the same as at previous performances, including Mmes. Ponselle, Gordon and Alcock, and Messrs. Gigli, Mardones, Reschiglian, Paltrinieri, d'Angelo and Malatesta. Tullio Serafin conducted.

New Detroit Orchestra Manager

Detroit, Jan. 12.—D. Edward Porter, assistant manager of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will succeed William E. Walter as manager of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra beginning May 1, according to an announcement made today by William H. Murphy, President of the Detroit Symhpony Society. Mr. Walter will be the director of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Tales Sung for Benefit

Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann was presented by the Metropolitan Opera Company the evening of January 10 for the benefit of the French Hospital. In the cast were Mmes. Bori and Morgana, and Messrs. Fleta and de Luca.

Recitalists Fill Boston Halls

Grainger, Chaliapin, and de Pachmann Appear; Symphonic Choir Makes Its Debut.

Boston, Jan. 14.—Among the recitalists of recent days were Percy Grainger, Feodor Chaliapin, and Vladimir de Pachmann. All drew their customary audiences. The Russian Symphonic Choir, conducted by Basile Kibalchich, was also heard, and the Boston Flute Players Club gave its twenty-third concert.

Assisted by Abraham Sopkin, violinist, and Max Rabinowitch, pianist, Mr. Chaliapin gave a recital in Symphony Hall last evening. Exemplary of critical opinion was the statement in the Christian Science Monitor that he was in "unusually good voice, and quite evidently in the mood for singing. He fairly surpassed himself." The only dissenting comment was from H. T. P. of the Transcript who considered the singer far below his standard. The usual laudatory reviews greeted Mr. de Pachmann's concert. L. A. S. in the Monitor, however, expressed the opinion that his playing would be more impressive without his conversational interludes.

At his piano recital Saturday, Mr. Grainger played four pieces by Balfour Gardiner which were new to Boston. The Transcript found them "light and pleasing" and Philip Hale of the Herald said they revealed "individuality of musical thought and expression." Mr. Hale also wrote that, throughout the concert, there were in Mr. Grainger's playing "expressive dynamic gradations, strength that was not abused, sentiment that was not sentimentalism, a keen sense of rhythm and a mastery of it." The Bach Liszt Fantasia and Fugue was marked, according to the Monitor writer, by "fine dynamics and interesting interpretation" as well as "perfect clarity, volumes of well-balanced tone." The Transcript reviewer commented that it was the pianist's confidence in himself, and his music that enabled him to "conquer."

The first appearance in Boston of the Russian Symphonic Choir evoked enthusiastic praise from the press. R. R. G. of the Herald wrote that "they sang exceedingly well as far as technique goes, with good tone, especially from the men's choir, precisely, yet with freedom." According to D. McC. in the Transcript, their singing was the "subtle and marvellous flexion of a complex and living organ." Georges Laurent, director of the Flute Players' Club, introduced much new music at their concert on Sunday. De Breville's A Flute in an Orchard, and five Conversations by Arthur Bliss were among the numbers played. The Durrell String Quartet played the first number, Mozart's D minor Quartet, and closed the concert with four short pieces. The entertainment was praised in the newspapers for its interest and originality.

Ernest Lamoureux, baritone, gave his first Boston recital last night in Jordan Hall. Philip Hale commended him for "a good, virile voice of generous range" and the Monitor said that he showed promise. Katherine Palmer, soprano, with the help of Meta Schumann, a "skillful and musical accompanist" (in the words of R. R. G.) appeared last Wednesday. A. H. M. of the Transcript said she displayed a voice of "singular beauty" as well as intelligence. The concert of Cyrus Ullian, pianist, the same night was lauded for the excellent technical equipment and feeling shown.

Marmeins Announce Recitals

Three dance recitals by the Marmeins, Miriam, Irene, and Phyllis, have been scheduled for the Heckscher Theatre, New York. The programs will be devoted to characteristic Marmein drama-dances. The dates of the three appearances are the evenings of January 30 and February 20, and the afternoon of February 12.

Damrosch Leads for Children

At the fourth concert given for children by the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch offered the first movement of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Rossini's William Tell Overture, Schumann's Evensong, the entrance of the Little Fauns, from Pierne's Cydalise, and the Tannhauser March.

Give Concert on Ellis Island

Grand opera and concert selections in eight languages were provided more than 500 immigrants in the Examining Hall at Ellis Island by four artists on January 11. The concert was arranged by Rudolph Piskadek. Those who took part in the program were Josephine Caka, soprano; Pavel Ludikar, baritone; Robert Jusek, violinist, and E. C. Zerman, pianist.

Elena Barberi Plays Again

The last of her series of three recitals was given by Elena Barberi, young Italian pianist, in Aeolian Hall January 11. According to the reviewer in the Telegram-Mail, Miss Barberi "deepened the impression she made a few weeks ago . . . and made clear once again that she possesses a genuine and delightful piano talent."

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

RATA PRESENT
Pianiste of Re-Engagements
Management of Rata Present: Hotel Ansonia, New York City
AMPICO RECORDS

Elena GERHARDT
Management: GEORGE ENGLES—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 14

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

The Power of a Name

Perhaps the most striking recent instance of the power wielded by a name has been shown in the public reception accorded Igor Stravinsky in New York. Holding a position of international importance as a composer, the Russian musician came to this country and, presented by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in the capacity of guest conductor, achieved popular success.

Had he been unknown there would probably be another story to tell. For most of the Stravinsky compositions presented in Carnegie Hall last Thursday week scarcely measure up with the best he has done. Coupled to a strange name they must have been smiled at by those who listened and applauded. But, as works by Stravinsky they were accepted and discussed. Other creative musicians have written better music, music which will no doubt endure longer. Their place in the public eye, however, is not so conspicuous as the foreign visitor. Their names have no such compelling power.

Some day possibly the music audiences of this country will refuse to allow their judgment to be influenced by prestige alone. They will consider first the worth of what they hear, and have the courage to frown upon a mediocre composition even if it is the creation of one favored by the fortunes of the day.

Stravinsky has given to the world some sterling works. Still, they are few in number and they were composed while he was yet young. His later accomplishments do not disclose to many discriminating persons the originality and enduring worth of those earlier efforts. Quite a number pale visibly under comparison.

Nevertheless, the bringing here of Stravinsky has served a constructive purpose. It has opened a number of pairs of eyes.

Management

Efficiency is a highly desirable quality. The individual who possesses it in abundance is sought after. He becomes, if he has also integrity, useful in the realm of his activities; and his touch aids in some specific upbuilding.

Within recent years our symphony orchestras—the best and most successful of them—have been fortunate in their respective managements. Only a few seasons ago the New York Philharmonic was rescued from the obscurity into which it appeared to be slipping, and was placed upon a new and progressive basis.

Very shortly afterwards the Detroit Symphony found the services of a skillful and industrious manager so valuable that within the first year of his administration a forward movement took place. Now that manager retires, with the best wishes of his board of directors, to engage upon a somewhat different undertaking where his abilities will be further tested.

His successor has been trained in a splendid school. He enters upon his duties with a sterling record back of him, and with every indication of carrying on as an able and conscientious soldier should.

Efficient management is becoming recognized as an essential part of any pretentious professional music project. Methods other than those found applicable to successful business appear to be ready for the discard. The concert-giving industry is in need of that character of business procedure. There is all too little of it for the advancement of what sorely requires being advanced.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

IN HER book, Music of the Past, Mme. Wanda Landowska protests against the custom of harpsichordists and pianists of eliminating in the keyboard music of the classic composers a large portion of their trills, shakes, and other ornamentations. "To remove these or to suppress them," she says, "is a sacrilege similar to that which would be committed in lopping off the wings, the gargoyles, the chimeras and other ornaments of the Notre-Dame de Paris, in order to give it a smooth surface and the severe lines of a Greek temple."

It is not easy to understand why Mme. Landowska should believe that a reference to gargoyles can prove a point about trills. A Bach concerto is not a cathedral, although one may like both those things very much.

FUNDAMENTALLY the classical ornaments are devices which control a tone after it is struck. Especially in slow movements, music in the old diatonic style when played upon percussive instruments of limited resonance must have seemed often to die between chords. The sense of progression would be lost when the tonic chord followed after the dominant had passed from hearing.

The trill was an effective device then for prolonging the important tone of a chord or melody so that it could move ahead as vigorously as the mood of the music demanded.

The trill also could control a harpsichord tone in another way. After he has attacked a note a violinist can swell it with his bow or shade it with vibrato. A wind player also can make the tone grow or die as he likes. On the other hand in the harpsichord or piano the tone once struck cannot be made to increase its volume as long as it is sustained. It simply can die away.

By trilling, the harpsichodist or pianist is able to sustain the tone as long as he likes (the secondary note, if the trill is properly played, need not interfere with the harmonic significance of the important one), can make it grow in volume, and with a last emphatic turn can swing it sharply into the tone toward which it harmonically tends.

This usefulness was largely the origin of the fashion of ornamentation at a time when percussive keyboard instruments had not as much resonance as they have now. It follows that in transcriptions to the piano many of the simpler trills and turns may very well be omitted because the modern instrument with the aid of its pedals can sustain tone long enough for the continuity not to be lost even in the slowest of movements.

It also follows that much of the time the ornamentations in Bach's music are played with excessive fervency and accent by players who do not realize the original mechanical purpose of this kind of device. I can recall, incidentally, an otherwise ingenious orchestration by Richard Strauss of a Corelli Suite, in which he gave a characteristic harpsichord trill to a French horn. The effect was not good because it was obvious that the hornist did not need to trill.

NOW that Stravinsky is here in person the proverbial contempt begins to be bred of familiarity with him. Adverse critics are greatly encouraged because the composer is a small and fidgety person.

The effect of Stravinsky's first New York appearance was magic. Before he came he had been wondered at, admired. Next morning he began to be more than a little patronized.

Mr. Ernest Newman concluded in the Post the other day that after all Stravinsky is not a "symbol" in the progression of music, but merely a "personality," an individual whose contribution in actual good compositions is probably small, and from whom coming composers will learn little. That does not seem to me a just estimate.

I am not willing to defend the proposition that Stravinsky's music consists of masterpieces which will live always for their own sake. There is much persuasiveness in the criticism of his music that his melodic ideas are too short, fragmentary, and repetitious, that his pages lack the large broad flow which makes the longest scores of Strauss and Wagner hold together (much of the time, at any rate).

Stravinsky's reply is that the sort of music which he is writing suits his purpose. It is a good answer so long as he is willing to admit that he has written ballet music, compositions wherein the continuous horizontal interest is supplied by the visible evolutions of a varied and colorful group of dancers.

Despite his belief that he has written absolute music whose intrinsic qualities are independently musical, Stravinsky does give the listener the impression in many parts of his scores that something is lacking when the music is heard alone, as though one were hearing an accompaniment to a song without the solo voice.

TO MY mind Stravinsky's greatest importance lies not in his own productions, but in the attitude toward music which he is supplying future composers. He belongs to the Berlioz type, I often think, that group of musicians with the technical bias who by their experimental daring create whole new worlds in musical technique without necessarily writing the best sort of music themselves. After they have ventured the angels need no longer fear to tread.

What Berlioz was in the development of instrumentation Stravinsky may turn out to be in his rhythmic restlessness. He has probably broken the jingle meter of music forever. Mozart minuets will never be written again.

THE members of an orchestra must play in public almost always with straight faces, which does not mean that they are invariably as little inclined to laugh as one might think. In rehearsals they often give way to their true feelings. The Sheffield Telegraph publishes a story (not of the salesman-smoking room variety) which Honegger's locomotive rhapsody, Pacific 231, picked up in its recent journeyings among the English orchestras:

"At the Halle rehearsal, Mr. Hamilton Harty requested the players to give it their particular attention, owing to its peculiar character. All sorts of strange noises were emitted—shrill whistles, the shoveling of coal into the fire-box, the thunderous shunting of waggons, the rushing of the train along the metals, the climax coming with a deafening boom. The silence at the end was suddenly broken by a sepulchral voice from one of the double-basses droning out 'Tickets, please'"

ALEXANDER FRIED.

As to American Opera

A Discussion of the Problem of Aiding Native Singers and Composers and of Presenting Opera in English

by CHARLES HENRY MELTZER

In the December 2 issue of The Musical Digest, commenting on an article on opera in this country by Charles Henry Meltzer which appeared in the American Mercury, the Editor stated: "It would be interesting to have Mr. Meltzer's plan—if he has one—in complete detail. And if he has any such plan (for giving opera in English and for operating differently than they now are and to better ends the Chicago and Metropolitan companies) or can work one out," The Musical Digest would be pleased to give it space. The following article was submitted by Mr. Meltzer in response to this invitation.

IT WILL be necessary at the start to point out once more what are, in my opinion, the chief faults of the opera managements mentioned.

One is their persistent habit of assuming that almost everything in foreign art and nothing American is worthy of production here. This tends, in practice, to discourage the invention of American operas (and by this I mean, not operas inspired by American themes, but operas composed by Americans). It also hampers the careers of American singers, stage managers, librettists and conductors. I know, of course, that some American operas have been produced at the Metropolitan. But exceptions prove the rule, which is not exactly friendly to the efforts of Americans.

Another fault of the managements referred to is their refusal—fixed and final, according to those at present in control of the Metropolitan—to let foreign operas be sung in the language of these United States, which is English, and, as a consequence of their refusal, their denial to probably ninety-five per cent of all their audiences of the pleasure of enjoying opera intelligently and thoroughly, like the audiences of all the civilized and artistic countries of the Old World. It is proclaimed, with the utmost assurance, at the Metropolitan, that "translated opera" (the sort of opera which Mr. Gatti-Casazza invariably gave when presenting non-Italian works in his own Italy) is inartistic. And it is at least suggested that English is an unmusical, unpleasant and unsingable idiom, which is not true. With amusing inconsistency, none the less, Mr. Gatti-Casazza and his wealthy and free-handed backers go on presenting Russian works in French and Italian, Russian works in German, Czech works in German, and French works in Italian. Only the other day did we not hear Jenufa, a Czech opera, sung in the language of Wagner? And has not L'Africaine been transformed into L'Africana?

Americans Discouraged

As to the discouragement of American composers, were I not anxious to avoid embarrassing them (they are all afraid of being ostracized), I could name several whose experience would justify my statements. As to the obstacles thrown in the path of American singers, I respectfully invite the Metropolitan management to publish its salary list, and to tell us how many of the Americans who figure in it are allowed opportunities of proving their quality.

A third evil of the existing system is the costliness of opera, due largely to the waste of money on unnecessarily elaborate scenery, the high fees of foreign stars, and other facts—to which reference might be indelicate.

The remedies?

In your article (Pierre Key's Observations) of Dec. 2, 1924, you have yourself suggested some. Mr. Ernest Newman, whose sincerity is unquestionable, has suggested others.

The aims of the Metropolitan and the Chicago Auditorium managements (as I see them, and I am not infallible) should be:

First—To give opera-goers the privilege of enjoying opera (lyric drama, or plays expressed in action and with music) fully, intelligently, and at the lowest possible cost.

Second—To keep well abreast with the progress of lyric drama here and elsewhere by presenting not only the masterpieces and the failures of the past, but also the best efforts of the present, with satisfying ensembles, adequate backgrounds and good singers.

Third—To assist in the upbuilding of an American school (in the broad sense) of opera by producing meritorious works—even if they are not masterpieces—by American composers.

Fourth—To give an equal chance to American and foreign singers and other factors in opera.

Fifth—Last, but by no means least, as an essential and vital part of the whole scheme, to gradually allow English—good English, not bad, unsatisfying and absurd English—to be sung in American opera houses. Only when this is done will opera be made fully intelligible to the immense majority of American opera-goers. For only then will the full meanings of opera be realized in a country of which the official language is English.

My reference to English may prompt some, less candid than yourself, to quote Moliere: "Vous êtes orfèvre!" (You are a librettist!) I anticipate and can disregard that hint.

Should Sing in English

By encouraging the use of English in opera here careers would be opened to many admirable American singers with good voices, who are now forced, however gifted they may be, to go abroad for tuition and to study French, German and Italian (but never English), much no doubt to the advantage of foreign teachers.

Even if not one syllable of what was sung in English got over the footlights, opera could not be less intelligible than it now is here to the great majority of opera-goers. Ask Mr. Gatti-Casazza how much of the Italian hurled at us in the Metropolitan he can understand. Ask any Frenchman for his opinion of the brands of French he hears in that opera house. The German, as a rule, is plainer.

Then why not English?

But the singers would not sing English?

Are you so sure of that? Does Mary Garden object to singing French in France? Would she be permitted to object? Did Geraldine Farrar sing English in Berlin? Has not Edward Johnson to sing Italian at the Italian Scala? That obstacle could be easily overcome by inserting a clause in the contracts of the singers, binding them to sing English if required as a condition of their engagements. The condition could be insisted on tactfully. No one wishes to create confusion at the Metropolitan and the Chicago Auditorium. The old system has been so long in force that if those institutions are to be preserved (as some think they should be) in anything like their old shape reforms must be gradual. . . .

Why Not an American Company?

Meanwhile, as you yourself advised, why not begin the creation of an American opera system by forming an American company of singers who could interpret opera in English?

As a matter of fact, besides Mr. Hinshaw's, at least three schemes looking to that end are a-foot already. One or other of them—possibly all three—may before long accomplish much.

In Chicago, for the past three years, good though modest performances of American operas and foreign operas in English have been given in chamber form under the auspices of what were known as the Opera in Our Language and the David Bispham Foundations. These organizations (which are under the leadership of Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick and Mrs. Archibald Freer) have now been merged in The American Opera Society. They should be imitated

At Stony Point, on the Hudson, a second scheme, headed by Mr. Max Rabinoff, an old hand at operatic management, has been started, under distinguished auspices, as The American Institute of Operatic Art. Its purpose is to develop gradually the art of opera, both creative and interpretative, first with the co-operation of authoritative foreigners and eventually by Americans. A company, singing at the outset foreign tongues and English, is being recruited. A great theatre—as large as the Metropolitan—is being built, and in a year or so the new organization will tour the country, like the Gallo company. But we need more, much more, than a big theatre and a duplication of popular opera sung in obscure tongues. Mr. Rabinoff has pledged himself to give us more, and the progress of his undertaking will be watched—closely, but sympathetically.

A third and even more ambitious scheme (of which you said nothing in your interesting article) is well on the way to prosperity. I speak now of the Rochester undertaking, with its admirably equipped Eastman School of Music, its beautiful chamber music hall, its stately and spacious Eastman Theatre, its symphony orchestra, and its Rochester American Opera Company. At Rochester, a short time ago, at the first public performance of the new opera company, in an auditorium which made the Metropolitan seem tawdry by comparison, I heard an all-American company of young singers interpret two acts of Boris Goudounow—not in Italian, but in English, under the direction of Eugene Goossens, music director of the British National Opera Company. The principals concerned sang every phrase in their respective parts clearly and expressively. Their acting, to be sure, was far from perfect, and the scenery was sketchy. But, thanks to the training of Mr. Vladimir Rosing, and the conducting of Mr. Goossens, both the singers and the orchestra did wonders. An English performance of Pagliacci, with a poor libretto, which completed the program, was not so contenting. A large audience enjoyed everything and applauded vigorously. The most expensive seats obtainable cost a dollar and a quarter. Not one critic, except myself, had thought it necessary to attend a function which may have marked the beginning of an artistic evolution.

The Rochester Venture

These Rochester performances were tentative. There will be others soon, at which Faust and Carmen will be interpreted in English. Next year it is the intention of Mr. Eastman and his assistants (among them Mr. Goossens, Mr. Albert Coates, Mr. Hanson, Mr. Rosing, Mr. A. M. See and Mr. Frank Waller) to send the Rochester American Opera Company on tour. Later, when it is more sure of itself, it may brave New York.

You say, quite rightly, that it would take time and money to build up an opera in English company. What then? Did it not take time and money to build up the Metropolitan and the Chicago companies? Why should not a few millions be devoted to up-building of a national art? Have there not been bankruptcies at the Metropolitan, and at the old Academy, which preceded it? With half the wealth of the world here, and the spirit of emulation always latent in them, surely Americans will not forever think it necessary to depend on Germans, French, Italians,

(Continued on page 23.)

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

ELLY NEY

INTERNATIONAL CONCERT DIRECTION, Inc.

Now Booking

1925 - 1926

Under Exclusive Management

of

BECKHARD and MACFARLANE, Inc.

Fisk Building New York

STEINWAY PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

FIRST HAND investigation of any matter always provides a character of enlightment possible to obtain in no other way. There has been much said and written about the Eastman School opera project which was started a year and a half ago and has furnished, only recently, evidences of its accomplishments.

The most pretentious endeavor (and conclusive piece of evidence, incidentally) was the performance of Faust given in the Eastman Theatre at Rochester last Wednesday afternoon.

Music conservatory opera affairs are generally of a quality. The resources available to most conservatories are of a rather definite kind. They scarcely permit attaining more than something more or less creditable . . . judged by conservatory standards.

In this instance one heard and saw in the Rochester American Opera Company the beginning of something which holds highly encouraging potentialities. You listened to an admirable orchestra of some thirty-five pieces; to a chorus of surprisingly fine tonal substance which sang with commendable precision and shading and diction; and to some principals whose accomplishments were of a professional order. What you saw was decidedly out of the ordinary.

THE Mephistopheles of George Fleming Houston was astonishingly good. And Mary Bell made of Martha a role fit to have been offered by a recognized opera company. Cecile Sherman made an acceptable Marguerite, while the Wagner of George Segers enlisted respect. Halfred Young sang Faust conscientiously, and Richard Halliley made a sincere effort with the part of Valentine.

If the material at the disposal of Vladimir Rosing and Rouben Mamoulian had supplied a little more in the way of vocal endowment the sum total of the Faust performance would have rated still higher. That so much was made possible speaks eloquently for the methods in order at the Eastman School; and this brings one to a point of prime consideration.

Here seems to be a place for training young people operatically inclined in ways that yield practical results. I was conscious that one of the principals had never before undertaken a role; that others in the cast had been studying under Director Rosing for only a few months. What was disclosed by the artists who have been working for a year and a half was proof enough that ease of manner and action on the stage is possible, according to the methods practised by Mr. Rosing, for those who have a flair for opera.

IF I had not attended that particular representation of Faust I should not have been able to acquire such knowledge as I now have of what is done and what can be done at the Eastman School in the way of preparing young men and women to do themselves justice on the lyric stage.

It is because of this personal investigation made that I shall follow with interest its future. Fine voices—voices exceptional in quality, and sufficient in vigor and compass and endurance—together with all else which justified striving for an opera career apparently can be moulded by those means used in Rochester into what will be acceptable by professional opera organizations. How far those young people can go ultimately depends, naturally, on the degree of their respective abilities.

But the Rochester plan for developing opera talent would seem to have passed from the speculative stage into the realm of actuality. Results generally are eloquent, either positive or negative. In this case they have swung toward the former pole.

ONE MUST CONCEDE the advantages possessed at this Rochester institution. It has a theatre, an orchestra, a chorus, a scenic artist in Norman Edwards, and a technical director in Victor Wagner which measure well. Also a musical director in Frank Waller whose capacities are of professional quality.

Mr. Edwards designed and supervised the construction of settings of an original character. They were simple, appealing to the eye, and well lighted.

Then came Mr. Rosing, who believes that the dramatic side of opera is as important as is the music; and he proceeded to train his principals and the chorus according to those ideas.

The entire educational scheme is not yet worked out into a completely functioning unit. That hardly could be expected in the brief space of a year and a half. Still, certain discoveries have been made. In the course of the next twelve months there doubtless will be evolved a procedure decided on as proper to follow as immediately permanent. All of which should be interesting to those young people who are bent on developing their opera resources to the point imperative for public appearances.

ON THE WAY back to New York from Rochester I fell to considering the opera aspirations which so many Americans entertain. A considerable percentage of the majority, it would seem, are over-ambitious. They have fine voices—though scarcely fine enough to make reasonably certain their success when they are thrown into the competition they eventually must meet.

They have some talent for the stage—which is moderate. Measured dispassionately their chances for reaching the coveted goals are no better than fifty per cent.

I asked myself the question: "Is that enough?"

Further pondering of the matter led to the feeling that if there might be assembled a group of twenty young men and women who have unquestionably superior resources for becoming leading principals in opera that a great opportunity would be created . . . for the cause of Americans in opera as well as for themselves personally.

Once there is developed a music conservatory company in which the principals are evenly balanced in vocal and other operatic requisites there should ensue illuminative results. And one day that thing will happen. When it does such a company will be enabled to give its student-artists appearances in public which will supply the final opportunities to acquire the routine necessary to equip a singer to present himself to a manager and say: "Now I am ready for such and such roles; I have appeared in them; I am not amateurish; I am worthy of consideration for a paying position."

THAT GATHERING last Sunday night in New York's Steinway Hall was probably one of the most musically distinguished possible to imagine. Scarcely a man was present who was not a personality. The guests of Frederick T. Steinway included composers, conductors, instrumental soloists, singers, managers, editors, and writers.

Some of them were able to recall happenings in the old Steinway Hall decades back. And a few of those present participated in concerts given there when Fourteenth street was the center of things musical in New York.

Royal Cortissez spoke of those times and of a number of the musicians—most of them gone from this world—who contributed to the music history of those days. It was an admirable address; and so was the briefer one Walter Damrosch made in delivering a toast to the occasion . . . the passing of a place which so many people will feel sad to see pass.

Soon now the firm of Steinway will take possession of its new building, in Fifty-seventh street, near Carnegie Hall. It is an impressive structure architecturally. There may be some sort of house-warming later on, but it is doubtful if it will rouse in the breasts of those who attend feelings such as were experienced a few evenings ago when the "farewell" was taken of what has so long been home to the majority gathered there.

A HISTORY of National Music Week has just been issued by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music. It is a volume of 232 pages, clothbound, and very informative reading.

C. M. Tremaine, director of that organization, has emphasized the progress this movement has made in the relatively brief period of its existence, and pointed out specific facts contained in the history which support that fact.

In the chapter devoted to "The Underlying Philosophy" of National Music Week a pertinent high-light is dwelt upon in the following words: . . . "Getting people to do something you wish them to do and think they should do is vastly different from suggesting their doing something they will want to do and which will bring them enjoyment and refreshing recreation. The latter conception is the basis on which Music Week rests, and accounts for its remarkable growth.

HOW far-reaching was this undertaking during 1924 is shown in the proclamations issued by the governors of different states and the mayors of various cities. Fifty-seven such proclamations aided the cause; while the number of communities participating in the celebrations was amazingly large.

The chapters in the Music Week History devoted to "The Genesis and Growth of the Music Week Idea" and "How Music Serves the People" should be read by every person who can contribute something to bringing music to those who need it . . . and they are innumerable.

And right on through the pages of this book may be found statistics which demonstrate that everyone who is at all musical responds gladly to any rightly presented opportunity to be made happier through it.

It was interesting to discover that an International Music Week is being planned, and that it may not be as far from achieving as first thought might suggest. For, as Mr. Tremaine stated, the idea supports the idea of co-operation . . . as opposed to competion and strife.

The written testimonials from some one hundred and fifty different sources present various ways wherein the writers' communities have benefited through Music Week. Here is a constructive effort which is becoming more and more a permanent affair; an effort which is reaching out gradually to bring under its influence a mass of humanity which needs it.

THE CHOICE of William E. Walter for the directorship of the Curtis Institute of Music seems to have been one of those singularly propitious moves which now and again will happen.

Experience as broad and as varied as that which has come to Mr. Walter during his many years of activity in newspaper and music fields has given him understanding and vision not too frequently met with where the arts prevail. He has, too, a fortunate kind of temperament. He is not the man to misjudge thec haracter of any problem with which he is confronted . . . either to underrate or to overrate its importance.

Mr. Walter has done for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra much of a genuinely constructive nature; and he will, without any doubt, analyze his Curtis Institute task with a judicial mind and proceed with what appears proper to do with that certainty of touch which seems now to have become with him a habit.

He will have abundant opportunity in his new post to disclose his resources at their best. Mrs. Bok has undertaken to do something in the educational realm of music which is attracting attention in many parts of the world. She may be relied on to provide a support to the efforts of Mr. Walter which will permit his abilities to function under ideal conditions.

AMBITION is a spur, sharper than any ever worn by a horseman, to stimulate the one having ambition to strive for the desired goal. But how often does ambition operate in a negative way! What it will do to dwarf the individual's capacity to estimate, more or less aright, his own resources!

A reasonably accurate analysis of one's own strength and weaknesses helps immeasurably towards clearing away the fog. Merely because the desire is held does not predicate that it can be fulfilled. Some people are born to be fine musicians, but by the same token so are others meant for shoemakers. Clarity of perception, when turned inwards, is generally a blessing . . . and an asset too.

THE DAY'S WORK must be attended to if we are to get anywhere. A few evenings ago a certain instrumentalist found himself between two fires: He had been invited to attend a function of such importance that he felt he really could not afford to miss it. Yet on the following evening he was scheduled to appear in a public concert at which he had a particularly exacting composition to play.

The musician decided, after lengthy deliberation, to remain at home and practice. He toiled for hours, until late at night. But the following evening his reward came. He won high praise for the performance of his part of the task.

This seems to be an age wherein pleasure is regarded by many persons as something to be given precedence over everything else. On that account an exception to the rule becomes a bit of an occasion.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Mlle. Nadia Boulanger

One of the largest audiences ever assembled in the Wanamaker Auditorium heard Nadia Boulanger, French organist, give a recital there on Thursday afternoon. The program included Cesar Franck's A minor Choral, Scarlatti's Piece in D minor, Ravel's Rigaudon, Couperin's Soeur Monique, Bach's E minor Prelude and Fugue, Liszt's Prelude and Fugue, the Berceuse and Finale from Stravinsky's L'Oiseau de Feu, and Cortege by the late Lili Boulanger, sister of the organist. Several of these numbers have been transcribed for organ by Mlle. Boulanger.

According to the Sun reviewer, her playing again "disclosed her admirable musicianship and taste." In the words of the Herald Tribune reviewer Mlle. Boulanger again proved that "she was a leading organist and had acquired a thorough if not a long acquaintance with this particular organ. Mechanical skill was combined with unusual capacity for expression, bringing out to a notable degree the varied moods of the work." Other papers did not carry analytical reviews.

Mme. Nevada Van der Veer

Nevada Van der Veer, mezzo-contralto, gave a program of modern songs at Town Hall Wednesday evening. Saminsky's Songs of Songs was heard in New York for the first time. In addition to this and an American group, the numbers were by Wolf, Strauss, Schubert, Debussy, Balakireff, and Rachmaninoff. In the opinion of the Sun reviewer, she displayed "a voice of fine power and rich quality, especially in the lower registers, and with the intelligence of an artist skilled in the portrayal of varying moods."

The World reviewer observed that Mme. Van der Veer brought to the recital her customary "vocal competency and security." Her program was enhanced, according to the Times, "by a very melodious and naturally rich voice." The writer in the Herald Tribune commented that she displayed "a voice of good quality, strong, fluent, smooth, with soaring high notes and full lower tones" although there was an occasional slight hardness of tone. In the Telegram-Mail, mention was made of the evident pleasure her singing afforded the large audience.

Haarlem Philharmonic Concert

Anna Case, soprano, and Hans Kindler, cellist, were the artists who took part in the third musicale of the Haarlem Philharmonic Society following the annual breakfast at the Waldorf-Astoria last Thursday.

Louis Graveure

Louis Graveure, baritone, was heard in recital in New York for the first time this season at Aeolian Hall on January 10. According to the reviewer in the Times: "He is not only the possessor of a fine baritone voice, which he has suppled to his will, but he is a singer of unusual discrimination and intelligence. One would have to go far to hear Schubert and Schumann interpreted with the same richness and variety of intonation and the same depth of feeling."

The Herald Tribune chronicler maintained that his "expressive skill, his ability for emphasizing and vivifying the varying emotions of his songs, was much in evidence recently, likewise his notably distinct diction in many languages." Although this writer thought that, at times, his louder notes had "a rather hard, though not rough, quality of tone," he found them at other times of "a more mellifluous softness." The Sun reviewer commented on Mr. Graveure's "expressive voice," and "his regard for sensitive phrasing," and added that "the emotional content of much of his program was rendered with skill, intelligence and an excellent sense of style."

Miss Suzanne Clough

In the Aeolian Hall recital in New York Wednesday evening Suzanne Clough, soprano, sang "with a powerful voice, of good quality and resonance," according to the Sun chronicler, and he prophesied that "with her natural gifts she should go far."

In the World the reviewer remarked that Miss Clough "brought to the familiar numbers a quality of spontaneity and vocal freshness which somehow convinced the audience that they had just discovered Mozart and Schumann and Brahms. Her voice has the directness and simplicity that goes straight to the heart of a song and that gave to those often abused numbers their original searching values." The Telegram-Mail reported that her voice showed "considerable warmth and beauty."

The writer in the Herald Tribune commented that Miss Clough's tone "grew in smoothness and clarity" during the recital, and that she also "gained expressiveness as she became more sure of herself." The Times reviewer wrote that the singer, "probably handicapped by nervousness in the earlier part of the program, steadily improved, making her best effect with Brahms."

Lhevinne in Second N. Y. Concert

His second and last piano recital of the season was given by Josef Lhevinne at Carnegie Hall on January 12. According to the Sun, Mr. Lhevinne "sustained in his performance the ideals of fine musicianship and artistic service by which he is known. It is quite safe to say that he never before has played so beautifully as he did last night." Alison Smith of the World agreed that he had not given "so excellent a performance through this season."

Arno Segall

The American debut of Arno Segall, Roumanian-American violinist, took place in Carnegie Hall Wednesday evening. His program was made up mainly of Handel, Sarasate, and Kreisler. In the opinion of the reviewer for the Herald Tribune "he showed a tone of generally good quality, consistently smooth, and, in its lower notes, of a very pleasing rich mellow quality" although, higher in the scale, "its consistency varied a little."

The Sun writer considered his talents "sound and commendable." This commentator noted his nervousness and uncertainty at the start of the program but added that he "achieved certainty and a firm full tone near the end of the concerto. His bowing also displayed elasticity and confidence." He also wrote that, although there was no great beauty of phrasing or nuance in his playing, "he played with clarity and much spirit." The writer in the Telegram-Mail found him a player of "quiet competence."

Mme. Newsome-Jewell

Catherine Newsome-Jewell, soprano, in her recital at Town Hall Thursday night "showed a pleasing independence from the stereotyped," to quote the reviewer in the Herald Tribune.

Mme. Newsome-Jewell sang a new song by Rex Tillson, who was the accompanist of the evening, and some by Michael Baxte which have not been heard here before.

The writer in the Sun commended her delivery which "was marked by appreciation and dramatic fervor." The Herald Tribune chronicler wrote that she "has a voice of considerable volume and fluent tone, which once or twice took on a rather hard edge or wandered slightly from the pitch, but was very agreeable at other times. She displayed ample expressive ability."

Wilhelm Furtwaengler

Of Wilhelm Furtwaengler's second appearance as conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on January 11, Herbert F. Peyser wrote in the Telegram-Mail that "substantially, nothing need be modified or recanted that was spoken of the German visitor last week." To hear him conduct, continued Mr. Peyser, "is to experience the infrequent and delightful satisfaction of music done for its own significance and value."

Deems Taylor of the World commented that there was about his conducting "a beautiful rightness" which "gives you the impression that he is conveying the music in the composer's own spiritual terms." His playing of the Beethoven Seventh Symphony was to Mr. Taylor "one of the most subtle and beautiful studies in orchestral balance that I have ever heard." The other numbers on the program were Weber's Overture to Der Freischutz, Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from Tristan and Isolde, and the Prelude to Die Meistersinger.

The Sun reviewer considered his conducting again "richly intelligent, restrained yet capable of passionate flights," although he thought that it lacked "more delicate nuances, more subtleties of shading." Olin Downes of the Times found more of the conductor and not quite so much of the composer in this second concert, although he wrote "his performances continued to bear witness to his superb control of the orchestra and his vitality as an interpreter; they had always proportions and logic of their own." In the opinion of F. D. Perkins of the Herald-Tribune, he confirmed the "remarkable first impression" he had made. The Post writer put it: "He gives the impression of complete mastery of his instrument."

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

M. H. HANSON
is Gratified to Announce that
Marie Rappold
has consented to return to the Concert Platform

Mme. Rappold will soon give Recitals in Carnegie Hall, New York—Orchestra Hall, Chicago. She will also participate in other important events soon to be announced.

Mme. Rappold will be available this Spring and all of next Season
Recitals - Oratorio - Opera
Management: M. H. Hanson, 437 Fifth Ave., New York City

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Mme. Marie Leschetizky

The long delayed American debut of Marie Gabrielle Leschetizky took place in Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening. The pianist is the widow of Theodore Leschetizky, the well known Viennese teacher, and many of the reviewers found in her playing the characteristics of his pupils. Of her, W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun: "Her technique seemed to be ample, although there were some disconcerting slips and some badly blurred runs. Her octave playing was brilliant. Her tone was hard and glacial almost always and her dynamics were sustained on a level of mezzoforte, with very infrequent excursions into a moderato and only a fleeting glimpse of piano."

The Times reviewer considered that she displayed less "masterful temperament or technique" than she did "those qualities of style, singing tone and bravura, associated with the more famous disciples of Leschetizky." In the Herald Tribune, F. D. Perkins commented that her playing "was expressive and showed technical skill, though at one or two points in the earlier groups she did not seem quite sure of herself."

The Post noted the favorable impression she made on her large audience, and the World chronicler admired her "fluent technique, and fine knowledge of style" in spite of her "brittle, unsympathetic touch." Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail apparently found nothing in the recital to commend.

Marcel Salzinger

At Town Hall last Tuesday evening, Marcel Salzinger, baritone, was heard for the first time this season. Mr. Salzinger, who appeared here last year with the Wagnerian Opera Company, was assisted by Sonia Winfield, soprano, and Walter Kiesewetter, accompanist. His songs were given, to quote the Sun reviewer, "with an artistry deserving praise. He showed much skill in the treatment of sustained phrases, and his diction was a source of pleasure."

According to the Herald Tribune chronicler, Mr. Salzinger "showed a voice of ample power and a generally smooth and very agreeable tone, except for some roughness in his loudest notes. There was distinct style and taste in his singing, marked by skill in phrasing and expression." The Times asserted he "sang with ample reserve of resonant tone" and with regard for style. In the World, he was lauded for his "good baritone voice of considerable expressiveness" and his "genuine feeling for what he sings" although this writer considered that his interpretations suffered from exaggeration

Mischa Levitski

At the first New York recital of the season by Mischa Levitski at Carnegie Hall last Tuesday evening "a huge audience delighted in his forceful and intellectual interpretations," according to the review of Herbert F. Peyser in the Telegram-Mail. Deems Taylor wrote that Mr. Levitski was "in very good form" at this season debut, "playing from a multifarious list with the brilliant technique, the firm, clean touch, and the vitality and rich chiaroscuro that have served to make him one of the most popular of the younger pianists."

Writing in the Herald Tribune Mr. Perkins commented that the pianist's versatility was noteworthy: "His technique and fluency were marked, as usual; his touch was crisp and neat, but not over-delicate, while his expressive palette had many shades."

Several of the reviewers commented on the irregularity of Mr. Levitski's playing at this recital. Ernest Newman thought the tempo in the Mendelssohn Rondo Capriccioso unbridled, and wrote that the depths of Beethoven's Waldstein were not probed. He expressed the opinion that Mr. Levitski was at his best in the less subjective and cooler music of the program. The pianist's technique he found entirely sound, and concluded his review by saying: "He is a gifted young pianist whose musical intelligence is at present at war with his years."

The Times reviewer believed that the Waldstein sonata "was grave in its cool dignity and the best thing on the program." This writer also thought the Rondo carelessly played. The Sun review supported the opinion of Mr. Newman in respect to the irregularity of performance and the excellence of the Ravel and Debussy, in which Mr. Levitski "enjoyed himself and delighted his audience with his crisp sparkling passages," his "crystalline clarity and vivacious spirit."

Furtwaengler to Lead Sacre

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will conduct Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps in its first performances at any Philharmonic concert next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Beethoven's Lenore Overture No. 3 will complete the program.

Chaliapin Sings in Recital

Feodor Chaliapin returned to New York to give his second song recital at the Metropolitan Opera House on January 11. He was assisted by Abraham Sopkin, violinist, and Max Rabinowitch, pianist. The large audience applauded heartily and insisted on many encores.

Allen McQuhae

It was, to quote the World, "with a spirited and variegated program which ranged from Handel to Duparc and Chausson and the usual pensive and melting Irish airs," that Allen McQuhae, tenor, came back to Carnegie Hall, New York, on January 11. This writer found his voice "true and steadfast."

The Sun writer observed that he "maintained admirably the artistic standards he had shown here before, and this in a comprehensive program." According to the Telegram-Mail chronicler, Mr. McQuhae "demonstrated his musical feeling and sense of style at the very outset in a broad and finely phrased delivery of the tremendous Sommi Dei from Handel's opera, Radamisto, immediately thereafter taking upon himself the exacting feat of O Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me?" The modern lyrics, continued this writer, were sung with "intelligence and skill." In the opinion of the Herald-Tribune reviewer, "his high notes seemed a little strained, but lower ones had a pleasing softness and smoothness of tone." Other newspapers did not publish analytical reports of the concert.

Miss Marion Brower

The debut of Marion Brower, California soprano, at Town Hall on January 10, was received enthusiastically by her audience and by the press. The Sun reviewer enumerated the debutante's qualities as he saw them: "She possesses a full bodied lyric soprano voice of power and resonance, a voice of exceptional beauty and promise. Her intonation was correct, her attack excellent, her breath control good, her diction praiseworthy, and her tone placement almost always right."

The Times writer asserted that Miss Brower won critical favor, in spite of a certain nervousness that marred some of her songs. In the Herald Tribune she was praised for a voice, which, although "not yet in its final stage of development," showed "a wide range, in pitch and volume, faithfulness to the key, and marked expressive capacity."

Frieda Hempel Returns

Frieda Hempel, soprano, returned S. S. Mauretania. Mme. Hempel next season will repeat her tour of this year in the British Isles, the series to include six concerts in London.

Beethoven Association

The Beethoven Association gave its third concert at Aeolian Hall, New York, on January 12, with Ernest Hutcheson, Hugo Kortschak, Edwin Bachmann, George Meader, Nicholas Moldavan, Albert Spalding, and Emmeran Stoeber as assisting artists. Karl Riedel accompanied Mr. Meader. The program consisted of Handel's Sonata in G minor for two violins, which was played by Mr. Spalding and Mr. Bachmann, and accompanied by Andre Benoist; Mozart's Panis Omnipotens sung by Mr. Meader; the Kreutzer Sonata, performed by Mr. Hutcheson and Mr. Spalding; a group of songs by Hugo Wolf, sung by Mr. Meader, and Mozart's Quintet in C major, played by Messrs. Spalding, Bachmann, Moldavan, Kortschak, and Stoeber.

The reviewer in the Sun considered it a "musical menu designed to please the most fastidious." To him the Handel Sonata "was exquisitely played, and the fire and brilliance which Mr. Hutcheson and Mr. Spalding infused into the Beethoven Sonata made that well worn piece glow with renewed warmth and color." Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune that he found throughout the concert a certain tendency toward "false intonation." Mr. Spalding, however, made up for this by "the lofty tenderness and poetry of his performances of the slow movement of Handel's Sonata;" Mr. Meader, by his "delicate and subtle characterization of the varied moods of the Wolf songs."

Stravinsky in Petrouchka

At the third and final concert in Carnegie Hall on January 11 of the Philharmonic Society under the leadership of the Russian guest conductor, Igor Stravinsky, the program was the same as that of the previous concert with the exception that Petrouchka was substituted for The Fire Bird.

In the opinion of the Sun reviewer, Mr. Stravinsky's "effective performance of his tragic yet glittering Petrouchka music was one of the best readings he had yet given here." Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that the work "is a little masterpiece almost from first to last," displaying "his best invention and his most dazzling orchestration." His performance of this work, wrote the Times chronicler, "had clarity and grasp, if it did not affect the finer nuances of the score."

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

FLORENCE EASTON
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

GRAVEURE
IN LEADING MUSIC
CENTERS
"Not in years have we heard such singing culture." (B. Z. Am Mittag Berlin, Germany)
"Whoever has an ear for song must in truth call Graveure the Ideal singer." (Tageblatt Berlin, Germany)
Management:
Metropolitan
Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

Musical Chicago En Courant

Claudia Muzio Spends a Busy Week; Polacco Talks Politics; Opera Singers Routed by Fire.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Jan. 13.

LAST WEEK would appear to have been Muzio week at the Auditorium. Four performances were listed for the indefatigable Claudia, ranging from lyrice to dramatic and back again—Tosca to Trovatore, and Aida to Traviata. Add to this list of activities one concert and count the week one of profit both to Mme. Muzio and her hearers.

The week was also one of change in repertoire. Chicago colds attacked throats unaccustomed to our winter rigors. So Romeo and Juliet was abandoned for Boheme for the better ease of Charles Hackett's still raw throat; at the eleventh hour Florence Macbeth was substituted for Toti dal Monte in Lucia, and the Thursday performance of Werther was transmuted into the Juggler, thereby relieving Fernand Ansseau for the evening.

The Boheme performance proved that the Chicago company is capable of a much greater perfection of casting than was indicated earlier in the season; that Edith Mason is a Mimi de luxe; that Florence Macbeth can command the high C's to great acclaim, and that the Garden variety draws her audience regardless of the name or fame of the opera sung.

IN SPITE of the inspired Mr. Isaacson's mistaken statement earlier in the season, Giorgio Polacco does speak in English, fluently and to the point, as he proved this week at a meeting of the Friends of Opera. His subject was L'Amore dei Tre Re. The maestro enlarged on the political aspects of the Sem Benelli drama and its bearing on the operatic interpretation. He was assisted by Messrs. Lazzari and Oliviero, who sang the first act scene of Archibaldo and Flaminio, which particularly stresses the racial and political feeling underlying the drama.

OPERA STARS residing at the Congress Hotel were treated to an early and unexpected fire drill when they were aroused at the unheard of hour (to opera singers) of 6 a. m. Sunday to find rooms filled with smoke from a nearby fire. Whereupon it was found that singers are in certain respects very badly trained. Excitement in many languages issued from strangely garbed prima donnas (also from the prime dons!) clutching hastily gathered jewel boxes and fur coated over-attire usually reserved for public appearance by the mad heroines of Donizetti.

THERE is nothing with more important bearing on the musical tomorrow of Chicago than the children's concerts conducted by Frederick Stock and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. These have developed to such an extent that two series are offered to fill the demand for seats. Series A takes place the first Thursday of each month, and the repetition Series B on the third Thursday. No adult is permitted to participate at these delectable lessons unless accompanied by one or more children. Orchestra Hall is converted into a huge class room filled with alert youngsters ready to shout answers or sing scales. Nor does the astute Mr. Stock find any difficulty in holding their attention for the hour. Such an hour includes many things. Last week the program opened with the Lohengrin March and Chorus, with interspersed remarks by Mr. Stock, and the children singing with the orchestra each time the wedding march theme appeared. Then the first movement of the Beethoven Eighth Symphony, preceded by bits of themes played by various sections or individuals of the orchestra. Mr. Stock believes in the value of an occasional laugh, so he pointed out the "octave witticism in the bassoon." The "Sorcerer's Apprentice" was popular, with the themes of the two broomsticks easily recognized.

For musical practice the whole tone scale was sung, or at least a valiant effort was made thereat.

A sort of seventh inning song breaks each program, wherein Stock uses real song leader skill in getting each section of the audience to singing.

THE REGULAR Symphony pair of concerts offered this week an all Brahms program, the first on the Chicago records. Probably not the last, however, as Stock and his men, by the brightness of their interpretations, dispelled the frequent weightiness which surrounds much that Brahms wrote. The Academic Festival overture, followed by the Third Symphony, and the Second Concerto for piano, with Olga Samaroff as soloist, made up the program.

In fact, Brahms figured frequently on concert programs of the week. At the Studebaker on Sunday Moriz Rosenthal played the Brahms Variations on a Theme of Paganini, while at the same time next door in the Playhouse the Flonzaleys were occupied with the same master's C Minor Quartet.

The Flonzaley Quartet now has as devoted a clientele as any musical attraction which frequents Chicago. Its annual series of three chamber music concerts attracts a gratifyingly large and intelligent audience. On Sunday, besides the Brahms, the group played the Haydn quartet in D minor, and closed with Waldo Warner's fairy miniature, The Pixy Ring.

ROSENTHAL drew a theatre full of admirers to hear his playing of old masters, his only contribution to the moderns being his own Papillons, and the Debussy Minstrels. Mr. Rosenthal is on record as saying that he prefers the music that is hard to write and easy to listen to. Mr. Gunn referred to him as the last link between the glorious days of Liszt and the beginnings of our own modern music.

Another concert of particular interest to Chicagoans was that of Leo Sowerby in a recital of his own compositions. He was assisted by Anna Burmeister and Alfred Wallenstein, soprano and cellist. Miss Burmeister sang a group of four songs and Mr. Wallenstein joined Mr. Sowerby in a sonata for violoncello and piano, and the composer played his own suite, From the Northland, and three settings of popular song melodies for piano.

Roberto Moranzoni in his first season as conductor with the Chicago Civic Opera Company has already won a place among the foremost operatic leaders who have appeared in that city.

Cincinnati Orchestra Tours

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra gave concerts on tour from last Tuesday until Sunday. On the first evening of its trip it played in Athens, Ohio, and next day in Wheeling, West Virginia. Thursday evening the orchestra appeared in Fairmount, and the following day two concerts were given in Pittsburgh. After a Saturday matinee concert in that city the orchestra moved on to Charleston, for its last road appearance. Fritz Reiner conducted all the programs.

Hertz Leads Fifth Concert

San Francisco, Jan. 3.—At the fifth concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alfred Hertz, the soloist was Louis Persinger, concert master. Mr. Persinger received general press commendation for his playing of the Bruch G minor Concerto. The orchestra played the Parsifal Prelude, and Schumann's Third Symphony.

Honor American Opera Composer

Akron, Jan. 17.—A bronze tablet "In commemoration of the first performance of Alglala," the American opera by Francesco de Leone, was presented the Akron armory yesterday during the University Day celebration. Alglala was produced here through the co-operation of Akron's civic and music organizations on May 23, 1924.

Presentation was made by Schuyler Hunt, Akron University graduate, on behalf of the university musical organizations. The inscription includes the names of the first cast and these words: "This tablet was erected by the musical clubs of the University of Akron in sincere appreciation of their director, Francesco B. de Leone."

Wolfsohn Bureau to Manage Powell

John Powell, American composer and pianist, will be under the direction of the Wolfsohn Bureau beginning with the season of 1925-1926, it has just been announced. For this season he remains under the management of Loudon Charlton.

V. TREVISAN
VOCAL STUDIO
Chicago Civic Opera Association
74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management
Edna Richolson Soviitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

GRADOVA
"One by one the young pianists smoke and smoulder past. Then, at last — say in Gradova—DARTS THE FLAME."—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Bldg., New York
Steinway Piano Duo-Art Rolls

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

New Casts Repeat Operas in Chicago

Boheme, Lucia, Tosca, and Jongleur Are Given Again.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—Several changes in cast have marked the presentation of the operas during the last week. In La Boheme there were three newcomers—Edith Mason as Mimi, Gladys Swarthout as Musetta, and Charles Hackett as Rodolfo. Roberto Moranzoni conducted.

Edward Moore of the Tribune remarked that Miss Mason's voice "is such a lovely lyric soprano that its mere tone is enough to illumine any opera in which she appears." He also said that her "stage performances are controlled by an uncommonly efficient brain." In the opinion of Karleton Hackett of the Post, she sang excellently, "the tone was lovely in quality and colored to express the meaning of the words." Maurice Rosenfeld of the News felt that it has been some time since "we have had a Mimi who made so appealing a figure or one who sang the music with such refined lyric vocal expression." Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner was equally enthusiastic in his praise.

The role of Musetta was done "vivaciously, with good looks and fine voice" by Miss Swarthout, according to Mr. Moore. Mr. Gunn wrote that she sang the aria in the second act "brilliantly" and, although the music of the role is a bit too high for her voice, he wrote "it is possible that the warm and lucious color of Miss Swarthout's voice added luster to the music." Other writers agreed as to the excellence of her performance.

Although Mr. Hackett's voice showed traces of his late illness, he stood out, as Mr. Moore expressed it, "as a figure of manly, attractive lyricism." A "youthful vocal interpretation" was given the role by him, wrote Mr. Rosenfeld. In the third act, he shared honors with Miss Mason, in Mr. Gunn's opinoin.

In the production by the Chicago Civic Opera Company of Lucia di Lammermoor, Florence Macbeth replaced Toti dal Monte (who was ill) as Lucia, Tito Schipa sang Edgar, and Giacomo Rimini appeared as Henry Ashton. The others in the cast were the same as in previous performances. Pietro Cimini conducted.

Of Miss Macbeth's impersonation, Mr. Rosenfeld wrote that she received "due recognition for her admirable singing and acting" and went on to say that her "crystal-like voice is pure and clear, and her technical endowment is developed to an unusually high degree." According to Mr. Moore, she was "by far the most youthful, charming and . . . creditable Lucia recently heard, and the mad scene "was a fine example of ingratiating, lovely, and completely legitimate singing." Mr. Gunn commented on the facility of her style, and the impeccability of her intonation. Karleton Hackett of the Post wrote that she sang this scene "brilliantly, and it brought a great demonstration from the public."

Mr. Schipa was in "particularly fine trim," continued this writer, and Mr. Gunn remarked on his "splended spirit and gorgeous song." That he sang "divinely" was Mr. Moore's opinion, and Mr. Rosenfeld liked his "dramatic intensity as well as the "robust timbre of his music."

Mr. Rimini was commended for his performance by Mr. Rosenfeld and Mr. Moore, but Mr. Hackett thought his singing was uneven. "The middle and lower part sounded mellow and carried well," he wrote, "but the upper tones lost their resonance."

There was but one change in the cast of La Tosca, produced last Monday evening. Fernand Ansseau sang the role of Cavaradossi, for the first time. Maurice Rosenfeld asserted that "Ansseau gains with every appearance. He has a virile style. His vocal gifts are many and consist among other qualifications, of a vibrant, clearly produced and powerful tenor. His high tones ring out purely and with volume . . . His portrayal of Cavaradossi was in both vocal and dramatic phases one of the most gripping delineations that he has ever given us." According to Mr. Hackett "the tone was firm and resonant and he brought out the words with meaning." Mr. Moore wrote that the Recondita Armonia "rang out with great effect."

Because of the illness of Fernand Ansseau last Thursday, The Juggler of Notre Dame was substituted for Werther. Mary Garden sang Jean, and the other roles were filled by Edouard Cotreuil, Desire Defrere, Beck, Nicolich, and Mojica. Giorgio Polacco was the conductor.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Martha—with Mmes. Mason and Perini and Messrs. Schipa, Lazzari, and Trevisan; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Pelleas and Melisande—with Mmes. Claessens and Garden; and Messrs. Kipnis, Mojica, and Baklanoff; Mr. Polacco conducting.

THURSDAY

Barber of Seville (matinee)—with Mme. Hidalgo and Messrs. Schipa, Trevisan, Lazzari, and Rimini; Mr. Cimini conducting.

Faust (evening)—with Mmes. Mason and Claessens; and Messrs. Hackett, Chaliapin, and Defrere; Mr. St. Leger conducting.

SATURDAY

Boris Godunoff (matinee)—with Mmes. Lenska and Claessens; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Mojica, Cortis, Lazzari, Cotreuil, Oliviero, and Defrere; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Tales of Hoffmann (evening)—with Mmes. Macbeth, Forrai, d'Hermanoy, and Meisle and Messrs. Ansseau, Schwarz, Defrere, and Kipnis; Mr. Lauwers conducting.

Zimbalist Under Judson

Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, will be under the management of Concert Management Arthur Judson commencing with the season of 1925-1926.

Many Recitals Heard in Chicago

Rosenthal, Sowerby, and Vichnin Give Piano Programs; Mme. Samaroff Appears With Orchestra.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—The past week has been one of numerous recitals. Three pianists, Moriz Rosenthal, Leo Sowerby, and Edmund Vichnin, were heard; another pianist, George Liebling, and Elena Gerhardt, soprano, appeared at the Kinsolving Morning Musicale; Anna Burmeister, soprano, and Alfred Wallenstein, cellist, were heard with Mr. Sowerby; and both John McCormack and the Flonzaley Quartet returned to the Chicago concert platform. At the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Frederick Stock, the soloist was Olga Samaroff.

Edward Moore, writing in the Tribune, observed that Mr. Rosenthal's recital was "interesting at all times, fascinating in certain respects, and rising to the point of excitement at others." In the concert, Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner found "his vital rhythms, his great sense of proportion, his unrivaled mastery of the keyboard." The Post reviewer considered him "in fine fettle" displaying "dazzling virtuosity."

In a concert of his own compositions, Mr. Sowerby was assisted by Miss Burmeister and Mr. Wallenstein. Edward Moore thought that Miss Burmeister sang his group of "uncommonly fine songs" well, and Maurice Rosenfeld of the News wrote that they were "with fine vocal art." The Post reviewer said they were difficult songs to understand and sing, and that Miss Burmeister "sang them well. . . . She had entered into their illusive spirit and gave herself sincerely to expressing it." The writer in the Herald Examiner commented: "Mr. Sowerby is a brilliant pianist. Anna Burmeister sang with lovely tone and expressive diction. Mr. Wallenstein made light of the great difficulties of the Sonata, playing with his wonted suavity, grace, and technical impeccability." This chronicler found Mr. Sowerby's works characterized by "richness of harmonic color."

A young American pianist, Edward Vichnin made his first Chicago appearance last Tuesday. The Post said he has "the instinct for playing the piano. . . . The tone had rich quality and the technique was clean." Mr. Moore remarked that his program proved his resourcefulness and that "both his hands and his brain would seem to be well developed." In the News he was commended for "digital dexterity" and for the understanding of his music displayed.

The Kinsolving Morning Musicales closed their season with the appearance of Mr. Liebling and Mme. Gerhardt, lieder singer. Mr. Moore commented that Mme. Gerhardt's interpretation of Schubert's Death and the Maiden was "a piece of high art in both its music and poetry." The writer in the Herald Examiner lauded her interpretative abilities and Mr. Rosenfeld wrote that it is "by her interpretative art that she has earned her laurels" although she disclosed "a voice which is under absolute control, which has lyric as well as dramatic qualities and which is handled with musicianly erudition." This writer thought Mr. Liebling's work was distinguished by "big dynamic contrasts in tone, clear phrasing and a virtuoso style." Mr. Moore considered him interesting, and other writers commended his work.

As usual John McCormack's enthusiastic audience filled the Auditorium and the reviewers were unrestrained in their praise. The News reported that he was "in fine vocal condition." To Edward Moore it was a typical McCormack concert, but one "worth going a long distance to hear." A similar enthusiasm greeted the Flonzaleys, who closed their series of three concerts yesterday afternoon. According to the Herald Examiner reviewer "the art of the Flonzaleys remains supreme."

An all-Brahms program was offered by the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Stock played the Academic Festival Overture, the Third Symphony, and the Concerto for piano in B flat, with Olga Samaroff. Maurice Rosenfeld wrote that Mme. Samaroff performed her part "with the consummate skill, the musical talent and the artistic temperament of the genuine virtuoso." According to Mr. Gunn she displayed "facile fingers" and "a nice and accurate sense of rhythm." Her musical intelligence, her "personal and human approach to a composition" as well as "her ability to decorate the concert platform" were remarked on by Mr. Moore. Karleton Hackett was disappointed at the heaviness of the first part of the program which was even apparent in her playing. However, in the final movement, she played "with grace and elasticity," he said.

Sansone Assists Elshuco Trio

Their fourth concert of Brahms chamber music was given by the Elshuco Trio and the Festival Quartet on January 9 in Aeolian Hall. Lorenzo Sansone, assisting artist, played the horn in the first number, the trio in E flat for horn, violin, and piano. With William Kroll and Aurelio Giorni he gave, to quote the Herald Tribune, "an excellent performance, with a steady, mellow tone which did not swamp the other parts." Other reviewers commended the playing of this trio, and of the other numbers on the program.

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

FLORENCE MACBETH
Leading Coloratura Soprano
Chicago Civic Opera Company

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Burning the Music at Both Ends

(Caricature from Boston Transcript)

GUY LEE
MAIER and PATTISON

"The Heavenly Twins of the Piano" will be available during season 1925 - 1926 for a limited period only, namely: November 9 to December 7; January 15 to March 1.

RECENT PRESS REVIEWS

"Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, in their concert for two pianos in Hill Auditorium, played with such contrasts in rhythm, power and interpretation that it made one forget that the piano is ordinarily a monotonous instrument."

Ann Arbor Times-News, Nov. 3, 1924.

"No greater pleasure can well be prepared for pianists and lovers of piano music than that which Guy Maier and Lee Pattison can give when they are occupied in their justly famous two-piano recitals."

Chicago News, Nov. 5, 1924.

"They have raised this form of entertainment to a higher level than any two pianists in memory."

Chicago Tribune, Nov. 5, 1924.

"Far from the tumult and the shouting there was a quiet corner in which an altar had been erected to art. It is an art that these two men, Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, serve. The hall was filled and the people enjoyed themselves hugely." Chicago Post, Nov. 5, 1924.

"Throughout, Mr. Maier and Mr. Pattison caught the flow and the flavor of this ancient music; kept to that oneness of tone which is their unique possession; played at colloquy and every other give and take; met and parted only to run back again in little smiling races."

Boston Transcript, Dec. 20, 1924.

"Guy Maier and Lee Pattison gave a remarkably skillful and spirited performance of Bach's concerto for two pianos and strings." New York Sun, Dec. 22, 1924.

"That well established firm of virtuosi, Maier and Pattison (may they never dissolve!) played the piano parts in the C minor double concerto of Bach and did their best for it." New York Herald-Tribune, Dec. 22, 1924.

"A technical tour de force, this piece (Bliss' concerto for two pianos, winds and percussion) is distinctly audacious and amusing. The performance was equal to the music. The pianists gloried in its extravagance and brilliancy."

New York Times, Jan. 5, 1925.

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT

Aeolian Hall DANIEL MAYER New York

STEINWAY PIANOS VICTOR RECORDS AMPICO ROLLS

Smallens Leads Montemezzi Opera

Helen Stanley Sings in Love of Three Kings; Flesch's Illness Prevents Orchestra Appearance.

Philadelphia, Jan. 13.—Enthusiastic praise was accorded the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company for its production last Thursday of Montemezzi's The Love of Three Kings. The writer in the Inquirer asserted that it "scored its greatest triumph since its organization," and S. S. L. of the Public Ledger considered the performance "marvelously fine." Alexander Smallens, musical director of the company, was lauded for his "fine reading of an extremely complicated and difficult score" by this writer. According to the Inquirer, he conducted "in the efficient way one has come to expect from this artist, and the orchestra again revealed a tone of exceptional purity."

Helen Stanley, as Fiora, "brought into play all the beauty of a very fine soprano," continued this reviewer. Linton Martin wrote in the North American that "her acting was in a restrained, but wholly sympathetic key, and her voice was full and firm, giving emotional eloquence to the role." S. S. L. considered that she sang and acted the role "very beautifully." In the Record she was commended for a voice "of much beauty and tenderness."

With the exception of Linton Martin, the reviewers admired Paul Althouse's work as Avito. S. S. L. found him "at his best vocally," and the Inquirer reviewer asserted that he "was in good voice and at all times more than met the requirements of the score." Henri Scott, according to S. S. L., was in fine voice and "sang as well as acted the role far more than adequately." Other writers were of the same opinion. This writer also voiced the sentiment of the other critics when he said that Alfredo Gandolfi sang and acted the role of Manfredo "most effectively." Charles Cline and Florence Wilcox received praise for their work.

Another opera of the week was the Philadelphia-New York Opera Company's production of Il Trovatore, with Emilia Vergeri, Nicola Zerola, Elia Palma, and Sybil Conklin in the leading roles. The many vocal beauties of the opera were, to quote the Ledger, "finely rendered" by the competent cast.

Owing to the illness of Carl Flesch, violinist, there was no soloist at the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski Friday afternoon. The changed program featured Schubert's C major Symphony and Brahms Serenade, and Tschaikowsky's Romeo et Juliette Overture were also played. According to S. S. L., Mr. Stokowski and the orchestra brought out the "full poetic quality" of the Symphony. Mr. Martin wrote that "every detail was given its full value in the masterly, exquisitely finished performance of the orchestra."

A new chamber music trio, made up of Sascha Jacobinoff, violinist; Emil Folgmann, cellist, and Josef Wissow, pianist, made its debut last night. Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer commended them for their work, and the Record reviewer wrote that "the playing for the first occasion was unusually smooth and flawless. It was to be seen at once that the combination was exceptionally well planned, the pianist—generally the offending member in trio playing—being artistically adjusted to the other instruments and playing with admirable tonal beauty and restraint." The Ledger writer also admired their performance.

An audience of unusual size and enthusiasm applauded Feodor Chaliapin at his concert here last week. They refused to let him go, and demanded encore after encore. The reviewers found him in excellent voice, as usual. He was assisted by Abraham Sopkin, violinist, and Max Rabinowitch, pianist.

The soloists at the Monday Morning Musicale in the Bellevue Stratford yesterday were Olga Samaroff, pianist, and Ruth Rodgers, soprano. As the writer in the North American put it, Mme. Samaroff played "in true Samaroff style." The Record writer was delighted with the "rare charm of execution and interpretation so closely identified with all she does," and the Ledger writer, S. S. L., said she played "finely, as usual."

Miss Rodgers was congratulated by the Record writer for a voice of "decidedly beautiful quality, very soft and musical, while not at all limited in range." According to the Ledger, "she has a voice of an exquisite quality, though not of greatly variegated color." The North American reviewer wrote that her voice "is one of strength rather than brilliance. Her singing was at times very smooth and of considerable warmth and emotion."

Yesterday afternoon Mme. Samaroff spoke on Beethoven and His Followers, under the auspices of the Women's Board of the Academy of Music Corporation. She advised her hearers to be receptive to modern music, but not to forget the old masters, and warned them of the fallacy of fashions in music.

Nadia Boulanger, French organist, made her first public appearance in this country in recital in the Wanamaker Grand Court last night. To quote the Record reviewer, "the entire recital was brilliantly played, the organist demonstrating her talent in a delightful manner and bringing from the beautiful instrument every variation of tone color inherent in its magnificent mechanism." She received much applause.

MYRA HESS

Wins Fresh Laurels by Displaying Her Exquisite Pianistic Art

in

Orchestra and Recital Programs

Soloist With N. Y. Symphony

N. Y. Times:

"Miss Hess interpreted the Beethoven concerto with consummate refinement and sense of proportion, with the truest poetic feeling, and with a rare sparkle and humor when these qualities were called for. She brought to the work not only technical clarity and loveliness of tone but a fine poise, characteristic of the woman and artist, that never sacrificed its classic outlines yet comprehended and conveyed its inner spirit."

N. Y. World:

"There are many pianists and most of them, at one time or another, play the fourth concerto of Beethoven; but very few of them manage to be Myra Hess. Just why it is not altogether easy to say. One reason for the distinction of her playing certainly, has little to do with tone or technique. It lies in that vaguely defined quality commonly called musicianship—the interpreter's attitude toward the music."

N. Y. American:

"She is a player of distinction who enjoys favor because of her sound, musical qualities, her sympathetic touch and tone, and her expert technical manipulation of the keyboard."

Evening Mail-Telegram:

"That ever welcome pianist from England, Myra Hess, made her first local appearance of the season and played with her customary musicianly skill.

"For her cadenza in the first movement she fell back upon no one less than Clara Schumann, who on this occasion handled the materials of Beethoven not in any of the known manners of that master, but decidedly after the romantic fashion of her own husband."

Evening Post:

"The soloist was Myra Hess, who played Beethoven's piano concerto in G Major with her usual virtuosity, bringing to her performance all her wonted clarity of tone, sparkle, brilliancy and poetic feeling. The enthusiasm of the audience was great and fully justified."

Evening World:

"Miss Hess has a facile way of making music sound soothing and easy to listen to. Her tone, touch and pedaling in the slow movement of the concerto, had us inventing adjectives that have now escaped us."

Morning Telegraph:

"Myra Hess is one pianist who never fails to give her audience a thrill. Playing with crisp, but never harsh touch, she brought such good understanding to the concerto that it sounded fresher than it has in several years."

Brooklyn Eagle:

"Miss Hess' performance was masterly. She played with repose and with dignified virtuosity. Among the women pianists of our day her place is high, for she possesses the authority of embracing technique combined with a salient musical personality. Her art is individual and highly interesting."

In Recital

N. Y. Times:

"That the English pianist, Miss Myra Hess, has many admirers on this side of the Atlantic was proved by the attendance at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon and by the warmth of her reception. She exercises a real technical mastery and an attractively personal style. The Mozart Sonata was a grateful example of simplicity and restraint, suggesting in its touch and minuteness of detail the instrument for which it had been originally written."

N. Y. World:

"The enraptured paragraphs in the reviews of Monday established the fact that the English pianist had lost nothing of the serene power which has bound her to these shores, a power which was still more securely and irresistibly evident at her first solo concert of the season. The Mozart A major Sonata brought forth her lovely crystalline tone, the Franck Prelude was suave and gracious, but it was in the Chopin groups that her lovely, melodic utterances were at their best—and Myra Hess at her best is as close to perfection as this vale of tears could ask for."

N. Y. Herald Tribune:

"Miss Myra Hess, a pianist who can be heard with unusual pleasure and profit, gave her first recital of the season, and as before, proved her title to a place in the front rank of pianists.

"Miss Hess is an essentially all around pianist. Her excellence in Mozart or Scarlatti, for instance, does not mean that she is less happy in Chopin; the expressive power of her playing is not at the expense of the fluency and lucidity of her technique. Delicacy and crispness of touch and infectious rhythm made the Spanish numbers very effective."

N. Y. Telegram-Mail.

"Myra Hess played like her real and delightful self. Her program began with the A major Sonata of Mozart, of which she gave one of the most exquisite performances heard in this city for some time. Miss Hess displayed her customary musical sensitiveness and poetic penetration."

N. Y. Sun:

"Miss Myra Hess, the talented English pianist who has won a host of admirers of her art on both sides of the Atlantic, gave a recital in Aeolian Hall, Saturday afternoon. Her reading of the Mozart Sonata was a perfect example of simplicity and restraint, embellished with clear-cut cameos of detailed phrases. And Miss Hess revealed a penetrating insight into the music of Chopin, which she played with a wealth of color and a crystalline style."

N. Y. Evening Post:

"Myra Hess, that very enjoyable pianist, gave her first recital of the season in a program not lacking in variety and again proved her worth. In her dramatic climaxes she never tears a passion to tatters, but obtains her effects without making one wonder how the piano is able to stand the strain. She was always the artist, never sacrificing expression at the expense of technique. She is always a delight to her hearers and they expressed themselves, as they always do, in no uncertain terms."

AVAILABLE SEASON 1926 JANUARY AND FEBRUARY ONLY

For dates apply at once

Exclusive Management ANNIE FRIEDBERG,

Steinway Piano 1425 Broadway, New York City Duo-Art Records

GALLI-CURCI

Homer Samuels Pianist Manuel Berenguer Flutist

Victor Records Steinway Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA

Victor Records Mason & Hamlin Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

On The Music Highway

AN audience of 9,000 heard Bach's Chorale, Rise Up, My Soul, Rejoicing, played by the orchestra under David Mannes in the gallery of the main entrance hall of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City, on January 10. It was the second of the series of free concerts at the Museum. A parallel course of lectures was opened in the Museum lecture hall the afternoon before by Thomas Whitney Surette.

One of the artists scheduled to appear at the Hotel Roosevelt Recitals in New York is Esther Dale, soprano. This series of recitals was opened last Friday by La Duchesse de Richelieu, soprano; Francis Macmillen, violinist, and Monsieur X, Le Tenor Masque. Appearing with Miss Dale on January 29 will be Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist, and Paul Shirley.

In Town Hall, New York, tomorrow evening Margaret Sittig, violinist, will give a recital with Frederick V. Sittig at the piano. Her program will include works by Vitali, Vieuxtemps, Cecil Burleigh, Bach-Kreisler, Mozart-Burmester, Tschaikowsky-Auer, and Zarzycki.

The sixth Biltmore Musicale will take place on Friday morning in the ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel, New York city. The artists appearing are the de Reszke Singers; Hardesty Johnston and Floyd Townsley, tenors; Erwyn Mutch, baritone, and Sigurd Nelson, basso; Abby Morrison, soprano, and Mildred Dilling, harpist.

On Friday evening Helen Lubarska will make her debut in a song recital at Aeolian Hall. Although born and brought up in New York's East Side, Miss Lubarska received her musical education in Florence. Her program contains groups in English, French, Yiddish, and Italian.

At the concerts this week of the New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, only two numbers, Beethoven's First and Ninth Symphonies, will be played. The orchestra will have the assistance of the Oratorio Society of New York, and the following quartet: Ruth Rodgers, soprano; Helena Marsh, contralto; Charles Stratton, tenor, and Fraser Gange, baritone.

The February 26 performance of the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company has been changed from Il Trovatore to Faust. Fred Patton will be heard on this occasion as Valentine. He is making five guest appearances with the organization this season.

The revision of his orchestral sketch, Silver Plume, has just been completed by N. Lindsay Norton. This composition will be played by the Philadelphia Orchestra at the Mendelssohn Club concerts in the Academy of Music in February. The piece was first performed by a portion of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Reading at one of the regular Reading Choral Society concerts last May. Mr. Norden will conduct this composition as well as the rest of the program.

Albert Coates, British conductor, has arrived in Rochester to begin his season with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He will conduct his first concert next Thursday evening at the Eastman Theatre. The personnel of the orchestra this year includes a new first cellist, Paul Kefer, who replaces the late Joseph Press.

Mr. Coates recently completed a season of Russian opera at Barcelona, Spain. In addition to his concerts with the Rochester Philharmonic he will conduct also three performances in Kilbourn Hall, Eastman School of Music, with the Little Symphony Orchestra, which he has organized.

Frederic Lamond, pianist, will be the soloist at the first Coates concert. Mr. Coates' season will include three evening concerts and six afternoon performances with the Philharmonic.

Frederick Schlieder will give his second lecture at the home of Mrs. Henry Mason, Boston, on next Sunday afternoon. Mr. Schlieder will speak on the Harmonic Law in Motion.

The Amateur Musical Club of Peoria, Ill., presented The Chicago String Quartet in a chamber music concert at the Central Christian Church on January 15. This Quartet, formerly known as the Great Lakes Quartet, is composed of Herman Felber, first violin, Carl Fass hauer, second violin, Robert Dolejsi, viola, Naoum Benditzky, cello.

After several New York performances, Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, piano duettists, left for a Pacific coast tour. They will not return from the tour until March.

Among the engagements recently added to the schedule of Sylvia Lent, violinist, are: January 20, Ridgewood Recital Course, Ridgewood, N. J.; January 29, White House, Washington, D. C.; February 24, Paterson, N. J.; and May 4, Newark Music Festival, Newark, N. J. Miss Lent has been heard this season as soloist with the State Symphony Orchestra of New York and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Olive Marshall, Amy Ellerman, Ernest Davis, and Edgar Schofield were soloists in Port Chester, N. Y., January 5, with the Community Choral Club, under the direction of Fred C. Studwell.

Last week Winifred Byrd, pianist, left New York for a tour of the South.

Alice Rosseter, soprano, will make her debut in a song recital at Town Hall, New York, the afternoon of February 3. Richard Hageman will be her accompanist.

John Philip Sousa yesterday announced that he would undertake a transcontinental tour, rounding out a third of a century at the head of the band which bears his name, beginning in June, and continuing for about thirty-five weeks. The tour will be the fifteenth which has taken him from coast to coast. Mr. Sousa announced that subject to a final decision his next tour will be devoted exclusively to American music and musicians.

Miss Annie Friedberg has announced that Maria Stone Langston, contralto, will hereafter be under her exclusive management.

With a program of classical and modern songs in several languages, Ada Viol Wood, contralto, will make her formal New York debut as a recitalist in Aeolian Hall the afternoon of January 30. Richard Hageman will be at the piano.

Since the first New York recital of Vlado Kolitsch comes on Mozart's birthday, January 27, the young Croatian violinist has included Mozart's D major Concerto on his Carnegie Hall program. This will be played with the original spinnet accompaniment. Mr. Kolitsch will also play Tartini's Devil's Trill, the Bach Adagio and Fuga for unaccompanied violin, and a group of Croatian numbers, using a Stainer violin which Mozart used during his sojourn at Prague.

Cecile de Horvath will give a New York recital in Aeolian Hall today. On January 28 she will play a return engagement at the Henderson-Brown College, Arkadelphia, Ark. She will play at Fort Worth, Tex., on January 29; at Laurel, Miss., on February 2; and will have return engagements at Poplarville and Blue Mountain, Miss., on February 3 and 6, respectively.

The Franco-American Musical Society, of which E. Roberts Schmitz is president, gave its first concert of the season at Aeolian Hall, New York, on the night of January 18. The artists appearing in this concert were Carlos Salzedo, Gitta Gradova, Ethel Leginska, Greta Torpadie, the Letz Quartet, and eight solo voices. The program was selected from the works of Paul Le Flem, Leginska, Stravinsky, Webern, Berg, Caplet, Debussy and Griffes.

J. Henri Bove, flutist, who has been appearing with Maria Ivogun in recent recitals, has been engaged to assist Toti dal Monte in forthcoming concerts.

So far this month, John Corigliano, violinist, has appeared in Princeton, New Jersey, and at Brooklyn Academy of Music. Today and tomorrow he is giving a concert in New Haven, and on next Monday, he will go to Cambridge, Mass. On February 1, he is to appear as soloist with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Ganz conducting, where he will play the Bruch Concerto in G minor. He will also be heard in joint recital with Allen McQuhae, tenor, in Kewanee, Michigan.

Mme. Maria Carreras, Italian pianist, will appear in her first New York recital of the season on the afternoon of February 5 in Aeolian Hall. The program will include a novelty in the form of Ottorino Respighi's transcriptions of three compositions by an unknown composer of the sixteenth century, a Siciliana, Italiana, and Passacaglia.

On the program will also be Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata, the same composer's Thirty-two Variations, Pick-Mangiagalli's Danse d'Olaf, Albeniz's Navarra, and Chopin's Allegro de Concert.

Rata Present has returned to New York from a tour of Kentucky and Michigan, where she gave many return engagements. Miss Present gave brief talks in conjunction with most of her programs, which included each a Classic, a Romantic, and a modern group. Her appearance with the Kalamazoo Symphony was her sixth in that town since last March.

The sixth and last of Andres de Segurola's series of Artistic Mornings at the Hotel Plaza will take place on Thursday, January 22, with Frances Alda, Mischa-Leon, and the Original Ampico Trio as soloists. Following the first two numbers—La fleur que tu m'avais, from Carmen, sung by M. Mischa-Leon and the aria, Nenia from Mefistofele rendered by Mme. Alda, Mr. de Segurola will address the audience. After several shorter numbers, including songs by Faure, Rhene-Baton Laparra, Burleigh, Maxwell, and Woodman, the final program will close with the duet of Don Jose and Micaela from Carmen.

Within the near future Mr. de Segurola will announce detailed plans for his second season of Artistic Mornings next winter.

The first February appearance of Flora Greenfield will be in Baltimore, Md., on the 2nd. Her next concert will be in Utica, N. Y., two days later.

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

Galli-Curci Makes Season Debut in N. Y.

Sings Rosina in Barber; Errolle and Ruffo Appear in Revised Cast.

The first appearance this season of Amelita Galli-Curci was the feature of the presentation of The Barber of Seville by the Metropolitan Opera Company the evening of January 12. Two other newcomers in the cast were Ralph Errolle as Almaviva, and Titta Ruffo as Figaro. Otherwise the cast was the same, and Gennaro Papi again conducted.

According to the writer in the World, Mme. Galli-Curci s voice "has gained perceptibly in brightness and color in its lower register, without adding richness to her higher notes. . . . Her vocal agility, however, seemed unimpaired." W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that there was nothing new to say about her, as she "reached her artistic maturity long ago" and "remains a finished picture." On the whole, he wrote, her singing was "quite up to its standard." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, she seemed "in unusually good voice. The tone had the liquid beauty which is one of its marked characteristics in most registers and under most circumstances. The musical phrase was mated well with the text, and there was not the effort to overdo the part which has marred more than one past performance of it."

The Post reviewer, Ernest Newman, observed that "her singing was admirably flexible, and she was mostly in good voice." As the Herald Tribune chronicler expressed it "she displayed her familiar ease and fluency in her singing, her ability to prolong smooth-toned high notes to remarkable length." On the other hand, Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail found her singing below her standard.

Ralph Errolle was lauded by the Herald Tribune reporter for his "excellent work" after he had lost a slight nervousness, and his smooth, "most commendable singing." Mr. Newman wrote that his Almaviva "had a good deal of grace" and that he "phrased nicely." According to Mr. Downes, after recovering his poise, "he sang with taste, with confidence and good quality of vocalism." Mr. Ruffo was received with great and prolonged applause. Mr. Henderson found his singing "quite as carefree as his general behavior" and the Herald Tribune writer thought his Figaro "well-acted, and hearty." Mr. Peyser wrote: "Mr. Ruffo's energetic and burly voiced Figaro reaped its inevitable due of frantic applause."

Dresden Hears Orloff

Dresden, Dec. 23.—Nicolai Orloff, Russian pianist, appeared here in recital early this month.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HAVING completed her Boston and New York recitals, Winifred Byrd, American pianist, has left New York for a Southern tour which will take her as far as Fort Worth, Texas. It was soon after this diminutive artist's recital at Aeolian Hall for the benefit of Stony Wold Sanitarium that I talked with her.

"Yes, I expect to leave soon after the first of the year. The South is rather a tempting prospect in this sort of weather." It was one of those sleety, penetratingly cold days "At any rate, I am happiest when I am working." One of the surprising things about this small person is her untiring energy. Even her voice and her quick, sudden gestures bespeak a purposeful determination and ambition.

The critical consensus of Miss Byrd's concerts has nearly always emphasized the "power" of her playing. And yet she has unusually small hands—the smallest in the concert field, she has been told. Her arms, too, are short. She confided that she buys fourteen-year-old size dresses and then has to have the sleeves shortened!

This is Winifred Byrd's sixth concert season. During the time in which she has been before the public she has appeared with symphony orchestras in New York, Baltimore, and San Francisco and has made three Pacific coast tours, as well. She has also been heard with the Philharmonic at the Stadium every summer but two since these summer concerts were started. Miss Byrd, who was born in Salem, Oregon, studied first with Carl Baermann of Boston and later with Teresa Carreno, in Berlin.

P. W. W.

MISS WINIFRED BYRD

Metropolitan Will Give Afternoon Wagner Cycle

In addition to their presentation at the regular subscription performances the operas of Wagner's Ring cycle will be given at the New York Metropolitan in a special afternoon series, together with the same composer's Tannhauser and Meistersinger, it has been announced. The coming presentation of the complete Ring cycle will be the first in seven years at the Metropolitan, although the Walkuere and Siegfried have in recent seasons been presented separately.

The six performances of the special afternoon series will take place on February 16 and 18, March 5, 11, 19, and 26. The operas will be given in the following order: Tannhauser, Rheingold, Walkuere, Siegfried, Gotterdammerung, and Meistersinger. Artur Bodansky will be the conductor of all the performances.

Singers of the Nibelung legends will include Nanny Larsen-Todsen as Brunhilde, Elizabeth Rethberg as Sieglinde, Rudolf Laubenthal as Siegmund, Curt Taucher as Siegfried, and three baritones, Michael Bohnen, Clarence Whitehill, and Friedrich Schorr, in turn as Wotan. Maria Jeritza will sing in Tannhauser, and the cast in the Meistersinger will include Maria Mueller, Marion Telva, Curt Taucher, George Meader, and Michael Bohnen.

Discuss Aid of American Music

Representatives of organizations interested in the outlet of American musical talent met at the Hotel St. Regis, New York, on January 6 to discuss ways and means of co-operation to achieve their common purpose. Mrs. H. V. Milligan, chairman of the music division of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, presided, and Mrs. John S. Sherman, national president of the Federation of Women's Clubs of America, was the guest of honor.

Ethel Leginska Leads New York Symphony

Pianist Appears as Composer, Also in American Debut as Conductor.

At the concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra on January 9, Ethel Leginska appeared as conductor, soloist, and composer. Mme. Leginska, who on this occasion made her American debut with the baton, played the Bach F minor Piano Concerto in addition to leading the orchestra through the Oberon Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Two Short Poems after Tagore, by herself, and the Meistersinger Prelude.

W. J. Henderson of the Sun wrote that she "had a very clean and incisive beat and she indicated most of the entrances with accuracy." Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail did not find in her a real talent for conducting. Deems Taylor of the World commented that "the gifts she indubitably did bring to last night's performance were a technique of conducting which, if a bit extravagant at times, was vivid and picturesque, and a store of nervous energy that kept her tempi animated. Her readings had feeling and dramatic interest, but lacked tonal quality and breadth."

According to the writer in the Herald Tribune, Mme. Leginska appeared to best advantage in her own compositions, which, he thought, were "delicately conceived and scored, though their musical contents are slight." Mr. Peyser dismissed these pieces as "inconsistent music," and Deems Taylor felt that "while they displayed some interesting instrumental coloring, they seemed a bit thin in ideas and vague as to structure." Olin Downes wrote in the Times that he was not able to take her compositions very seriously, and he felt that she was at her best as a pianist. Mr. Peyser observed: "After all, the Bach Concerto clearly indicated that Ethel Leginska is best when she tends her first love, the piano."

ELSA ALSEN

Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano

Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

CECILE de HORVATH

PIANIST

Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

Season 1925-1926 Now Booking

Baldwin Piano De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY

of

SAN FRANCISCO

(Founded 1916 by Elias Hecht)

Musical Direction: Louis Persinger

Distinguished American Ensemble Organization

Louis Persinger Nathan Firestone

Louis Ford Walter Ferner

Elias Hecht

AVAILABLE FOR AMERICA FOR 1925-26 SEASON

For Terms and Dates apply to

MANAGEMENT CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY

708 Kohl Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

"Youth for Full Fervors and Few Excesses--Bach, Chopin, Scriabin, Liszt, Each with a Thrill, Each with the Stamp of a Personality Upon the Music."

H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript, Dec. 8, 1924.

"One by one the young pianists smoke and smoulder past. Then at last—say in Gradova—"DARTS the FLAME."

H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript, Dec. 8, 1924.

"Gradova remains a musician of strong individuality, a pianist of unusual powers, one of the most genuinely interesting players to appear here in many a day."

R. R. Gardner, Boston Herald, Dec. 7, 1924.

GRADOVA

"Gradova is a competent and discerning artist of great technical proficiency, elegance, surprising power, authority and balance."—Christian Science Monitor, Dec. 8, 1924.

"A GREAT INTERPRETATIVE TALENT"

New York American.

AS GRADOVA INTERPRETS BACH

"Her Bach of the Italian Concerto was aglow with life, motion clang . . . Here was Bach as it were in terms of 'Hark, Hark, the Lark!' To beauty, she paced and molded the Andante. Bach charmed and was unsentimentalized."—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.

AS GRADOVA INTERPRETS CHOPIN

"Miss Gradova turned to Chopin and the study in C sharp minor became tone-poem; in little—all glamours of color and graces of accent and phrases into beauty brightened—a Chopin ardent, moody, unsentimentalized. By sheer glow of temperament, tone and rhythm, she lifted the Chopin Waltz from virtuoso to rhapsodic vein."—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.

"If James G. Huneker had lived to hear Gradova he would probably have revised his celebrated judgment that women cannot interpret Chopin."—H. Charlesworth, Toronto Saturday Night, Nov. 8, 1924.

AS GRADOVA INTERPRETS LISZT

"Gradova's version of Liszt's Mephisto Waltz wreathed sardonic imaginings in tonal splendor. Her rhythm bit into the satanic fiddling. Her tone sustained the lovers' ecstasies; yet quivered with them. Liszt needs high lights of both temperament and tone. Gradova outpoured them!"—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.

"There was mystery about her interpretation, complete concentration, variety of color, but a profoundly mature suggestiveness as well."—Sun and Globe, New York.

AS GRADOVA INTERPRETS SCRIABIN

"For the first time we hear not only the poet who drank in the world through his senses, but the philosopher who tried to give it back again through his soul—the true Scriabin."—The Nation, New York, Feb. 20, 1924.

"Such players as she help sincere students to understand in some degree the unusual artistic ambitions of men like Scriabin."—Christian Science Monitor, Dec. 8, 1924.

SEASON 1925 - 1926 NOW BOOKING

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Bldg.
New York City

Pennsylvania Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Siegfried Herz, Personal Representative, 1230 Burnham Building, Chicago, Ill.

DUO ART RECORDINGS

STEINWAY PIANO

Anna Fitziu Sings Tosca in Cincinnati

Reiner Conducts Honegger's Pacific 231 and Mozart Concertante for Violin and Viola.

Cincinnati, Jan. 12.—A performance of Tosca with Anna Fitziu in the leading role was givin here by the San Carlo Opera Company last Thursday evening. Ludovico Tomarchio sang the part of Mario, and Giulio Fregosi was Scarpia. The performance was conducted by Aldo Franchetti.

Writing in the Times-Star Mrs. Smith described the cast as "very good," and qualified that the singing honors of the evening belonged to Mr. Tomarchio, a singer "worth serious consideration." Mrs. Plogstedt of the Post thought the performance "not a brilliant one," but added that Anna Fitziu was "beautiful and seductive." Mrs. Plogstedt said also that Mr. Tomarchio "sang in excellent style"; Mr. Fregosi gave "an excellent characterization," and Mr. Cavadore as Spoletta was "villainous and crafty." To this reviewer the singers appeared anxious about their cues.

Samuel Wilson wrote in the Commercial-Tribune in a facetious vein of the impromptu "waltz" indulged in by Mr. Fregosi and Mme. Fitziu preceding her singing of Vissi d'Arte on a sliding sofa. Mr. Wilson liked Mme. Fitziu's singing, and thought "Mr. Tomarchio was in better voice than ever before." while Mr. Fregosi was "wholly acceptable if not distinguished," and "Aldo Franchetti kept the performance moving at a good clip."

Mr. Goldenburg wrote in the Enquirer that Mme. Fitziu as Tosca showed a high degree of intelligence in acting and singing. He called her "a sheer delight." It was this observer's opinion also that Mr. Tomarchio was in good voice, and sang with accustomed vigor, but in general the performance was a mediocre production, being handicapped by "insufficient preparation."

The symphony concerts of Friday and Saturday had a variety which was called interesting by several of the reviewers. The program included Debussy's Petite Suite, the Istar Variations of d'Indy, Honegger's Pacific 231, and Mozart's Konzertante for violin and viola. Emil Heermann and Edward Kreiner were assisting artists in the last work.

The Debussy and d'Indy numbers met with unanimous approval for the "delicate, elegant manner" and charm of interpretation, according to Mrs. Smith. Mrs. Plogstedt thought the former piece a work of "subtle form of a beautiful idea," and the Variations colorful in orchestration.

Pacific 231 was designated by Mr. Goldenburg a boisterous innovation. Mrs. Smith's impression was that "as legitimate devices were employed, the thing is music." Mrs. Plogstedt wrote on the other hand, "Music? No, but a picture." Mr. Wilson announced in the Commercial Tribune: "The greater part of the audience resented it."

Of the Mozart Concertante there was nothing but praise in the reviews.

B. G.

Medtner Plays Own Concerto in Detroit

Russian's Playing More Praised Than His Composition in Appearance With Orchestra.

Detroit, Jan. 9.—Nicholas Medtner, Russian composer and pianist, made his first appearance here last evening as soloist with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ossip Gabrilowitsch. He was heard in his own Concerto in C minor for piano and orchestra. Also on the program were Moussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, the introduction to Khovantchina, and Tschaikowsky's Suite in G minor.

The reviewers were more enthusiastic over Mr. Medtner's playing than over his composition. According to Charlotte M. Tarnsey of the Free Press, his performance "was characterized with a brilliant technique his prodigious command of his instrument gaining emphatic response from the audience. The tone obtained was luminous and of great beauty, and the clarity of his passage work, the breadth and verve of his reading and the distinguished style of his performances brought him several recalls to the platform." Ralph Holmes of the Times spoke of the ease with which he surmounted the technical difficulties of the concerto, and W. K. Kelsey wrote in the News that he displayed himself as an "extremely capable and in no wise showy virtuoso."

Although the writer felt that the piano score "is nothing to heat the blood," he wrote that "the feature of the work is the orchestral accompaniment, which is rich and distinguished, full of variety, and with plenty of those touches of the unexpected which are so lacking in the solo instrument." The chief virtue of the work, as Mr. Kelsey saw it, was its "clever musicianship." Miss Tarnsey remarked on the frequent evidences of creative ability in the composition, but added that its complexity and length detracted from its dramatic appeal.

Lawrence Schauffler

The piano recital given by Lawrence Schauffler at Aeolian Hall, New York, Thursday afternoon was well received by the large audience. Brahms, Beethoven, Chopin, Scriabin, Liszt, and Debussy made up his program. His performance of Beethoven's F sharp Sonata "was generally smooth and musical," as the Sun reviewer expressed it, and "his playing throughout his program was fluent and normal in tone, albeit given to some irregularities of rhythm." The Times reported that it was a concert "of the steady, unemotional order."

The Chopin Polonaise, according to this writer, was given a "really efficient and well-felt performance" although it lacked "the smooth brilliance and the sometimes over-accentuated nuances of the spectacular school of interpreters." The Telegram-Mail chronicler agreed with the others that the Beethoven was played in "expeditious, business-like fashion and with an assuring confidence."

JOSEPHINE LUCCHESE
Coloratura Soprano, Who Has Been Adding to Her Laurels on Tour With the San Carlo Opera Company.

Olga Samaroff Assists At Philharmonic Concert

The guest conductor of the Philharmonic Society, Wilhelm Furtwaengler, offered Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Schumann's Piano Concerto, and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony at his fourth concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday evening, with Olga Samaroff as soloist.

This work was performed, according to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, "with evident feeling for its essential lyricism. She treated it with tenderness and with even some reserve. But it was excellent piano playing, fluent, admirable in tone and thoroughly musical." The Times writer considered Mme. Samaroff's interpretation "well proportioned," and the reviewer of the Herald Tribune found that she played it "with smoothness and clarity, not flamboyantly, but with softness of touch and nicety of shading, and in playing was thoroughly at one with conductor and orchestra." Deems Taylor of the World thought her performance "workmanlike, if not particularly stirring." In the opinion of the Post writer the concerto was "played most satisfyingly by orchestra and pianist."

Mr. Taylor asserted that Mr. Furtwaengler "continues to deepen, if anything, the impression that he is a conductor of profound musicianship."

Los Angeles Hears Olga Steeb in Brahms

Pianist Plays in Premiere of First Concerto Under Rothwell.

Los Angeles, Jan. 3.—Brahms First Concerto for piano and orchestra was heard for the first time here when Olga Steeb, Los Angeles pianist, played it as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra yesterday afternoon. Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, also offered the Prelude to Tristan and Isolde, the Brahms Academic Festival Overture, and Ravel's La Valse.

According to the reviewer of the Examiner, Miss Steeb "was in magnificent form." He continued: "She is so thorough a musician and such a satisfactory artist that her work is always enjoyable. Yesterday, however, she was noticeable in the blending and balance of her solo and ensemble work." L. McK. of the Daily News reported that she seemed to carry off most of the honors of the afternoon, and Edwin Schallert of the Times commented on "the beauty and virtuosity" of her playing. Mr. Schallert said she did her part "valiantly" to give life and brilliance to the Concerto.

Both Jose Rodriguez of the Record and B. D. U. of the Express agreed that the concerto was heavy and dull, and B. D. U. wrote that it was Miss Steeb, not the Brahms, that "made the most gratifying impression." She found, he added, "many tone colors with which to lessen a certain wearisome effect of the concerto" which "is an early and somewhat of a hybrid work." In Mr. Rodriguez's words she played "in a workmanlike fashion" although the composition had only moments of beauty.

The Examiner reviewer asserted that "under the baton of Walter Henry Rothwell the entire program was given with splendid spirit." As Mr. Rodriguez put it "Conductor Rothwell and the orchestra can boast of another fine performance."

Wellington Smith in N. Y. Recital

Wellington Smith, baritone, will be heard in recital at Aeolian Hall on January 21 in a program of Brahms, Korbay, Monsigny, Gretry, Duparc, Chausson, Bordes, Bax, Vaughan Williams, Dobson, Vieh, and Densmore.

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO

A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 192[illegible]
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

RE JOHN Mc CORMACK

"Has Climbed to Great Heights"

"One can understand how it is that no tenor, with the exception of Caruso, has ever drawn such audiences in the United States. Those who remembered his first appearance at Covent Garden in 'Cavalleria Rusticana' when he was paralyzed with fright and his voice came out by fits and starts, would have been rash indeed if they had prophesied of him anything like the great heights of art to which he has climbed."—Jewish Guardian.

"Inspired Singing"

"He sang last night as an inspired messenger of a very lovely art—and this is no hyper-sentimental effusion, but the mere truth. Truly a great and noble singer is John McCormack."
—Chicago Evening American.

LISTEN IN!

ON

K S D

(Wave Length 549.1 Meters)

MONDAY EVENING

JAN. 26

WHEN FRANCIS

MACMILLEN

TIME OF CONCERT
EASTERN	10:00
CENTRAL	9:00
ROCKY MT.	8:00
COAST	7:00

America's Distinguished Violinist

- - WILL - -

BROADCAST

FROM THIS FAMOUS ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH HIGH POWERED STATION

THIS announcement is directed not only to the millions of "listeners in" who nightly enjoy the fine musical programs broadcasted by KSD, but to local managers, officials of music clubs, civic music leagues, colleges, schools and the hundreds of other organizations who annually promote concert series in their respective communities. Mr. Macmillen will play a full violin recital program. THIS WILL BE THE FIRST TIME IN HISTORY THAT A VIOLIN VIRTUOSO OF SUCH INTERNATIONAL FAME HAS CONSENTED TO DO THIS and the "listener in" should be able to get a fair estimate of this great artist's attainments. The program as arranged gives adequate opportunity for appreciation of Mr. Macmillen's marvelous technic—the "Symphonie Espagnole," for example—as well as his mellow and luscious tone and beautiful artistry, as dsplayed in the wonderful "Ave Maria." If you have the good fortune to hear Mr. Macmillen on Monday evening, January 26, won't you write us your impressions, addressing "St. Louis Post-Dispatch."

— PROGRAM —

1—(a) Romance ..... Sinding
(b) Prelude and Allegro ..... Pugnani-Kreisler
2—"Symphonie Espagnole" (Andante and Rondo) Lalo
3—(a) Barcarole ..... Macmillen
(b) Mazurka ..... Zarzycki
(c) Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso Saint-Saens
4—(a) Ave Maria ..... Schubert-Wilhelmj
(b) Polonaise ..... Wieniawski
5—Andante and Finale from the Concerto Mendelssohn

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

London Hears Jazz Concert

Fashion Turns Out for Dance Music Program, but Reviewers Do Not Enthuse; Recitals Few.

London.

Staid London has just had its first full-dress concert of jazz music. The Savoy Orpheans, augmented by the Boston Orchestra—both in the front rank of English dance bands—carried through their project on January 4 of presenting in the Queen's Hall a program showing the "evolution of syncopated music from ragtime, as illustrated by Alexander's Rag-Time Band, through jazz, to the symphonized syncopation of the present day." —"And," added the Sunday Times writer in his report of the concert, "it may be of tomorrow, for the modern phase of dance music has already been more lasting than its predecessors."

The same commentator gave some further facts as to the meaning of the concert for English dance music: "The Orpheans have an original repertoire of 200 tunes and the number of compositions tested to obtain these was 7,800. The band's weekly audience by broadcasting is two and a half millions, while the number of gramophone record sales of their compositions has run in ten months to three millions." That the concert supplied a real demand was evidenced by Percy Scholes, who said in the Observer: "My approach to the hall was made in an humble taxi, and I was duly impressed by the line of smart motor-cars standing outside the orchestra door."

No Outstanding Number

Although this event had much attention on the part of the reviewers, the discussions were not as serious as those which followed Paul Whiteman's concert in Aeolian Hall, New York, last year. There was nothing on the program approaching the importance of the Rhapsody in Blue which George Gershwin there presented for the first time. The weightiest piece of "symphonized syncopation" was an abridged version of the New World Symphony.

The virtuosity of the performers, especially their adeptness in the "humorous misuse" of their instruments (to quote Mr. Scholes again), was a matter of universal comment. As to the interest of the music, however, the same writer found an "element of monotony—the endless repetition of an elementary little statement." The Times, too, reported, "There is some reason to doubt whether this class of music would not tire a concert-hall audience," but, he added, "If enthusiasm can be regarded as any criterion, there would seem to be a place for this form of melody and arbitrary rhythm. Judged by its own standards the concert was certainly a success."

The Post writer felt that "What one chiefly takes away from an evening of such music is an impression of technical mastery. [The music's] proper reaction is in the dance, not in whatever it is that music of the concert room appeals to."

A Jazz Enthusiast

Mr. Legge of the Telegraph, whose enthusiasm for the gramophone record of Gershwin's Rhapsody has already been reported in The Musical Digest, took occasion to express himself on the subject of jazz generally. "This kind of music . . . over and over again proved itself to be far more intrinsically musical than much of the music of today that is based on more or less orthodox lines. It is infinitely more human, more melodious, more marvelously contrapuntal, and incomparably more pronouncedly rhythmic than most of the arid bunkum of which we heard so much in the recent past. Its vitality is infectious and tremendous. It is vastly exciting, but why not? At least that is better than being dull!" Incidentally Mr. Legge is in years the dean of London's critics, white-haired and aristocratic in bearing.

At a Sunday Albert Hall "pop," on January 5, four artists made a good impression on the press. To give the Times summary: "Miss Evelyn Scotney's skillful coloratura singing was much admired; it was certainly produced with ease and surety and hardly a slip in intonation. Miss Ethel Fenton's widely-ranging contralto was well heard, but for a tendency to force the tone in the bottom register. Mr. Morgan Kingston was in excellent style; he has breadth and unaffected delivery. Mr. Eric Marshall sang smoothly, but relied too much on tone, which he has (however) in abundance." The Post found Miss Scotney and Mr. Marshall "in particularly good voice"; Mr. Kingston "aroused much enthusiasm."

Holiday Season Dull

Only three more concerts broke in upon the silence of the later holidays; two Messiahs, by the Royal and the Alexandra Palace Choral Societies respectively, and a well-received recital given by Prince Alexis Obolensky.

For the fourteen days ending 28th December, there are to record in all only eight concerts: four choral, and four individual recitalists; no symphonic music at all.

The Royal Choral Society and the Oriana Madrigal singers gave each a program of carols, the one under H. L. Balfour, the other under C. Kennedy Scott. The Westminster Abbey Special Choir gave Dr. Vaughan Williams' Mass in G minor. Dr. Vaughan Williams himself conducted the Bach Choir at the Royal College of Music in a program devoted to the memory of the late Sir C. V. Stanford, consisting of his Stabat Mater, his fourth Irish Rhapsody (the London Symphony Orchestra), some part songs, and a group of solos sung by Plunkett Greene.

John Coates Is Praised

The last program of John Coates, singer of English songs, was a Christmas-y affair,—a "program the unconventionality of which was as refreshing as the variety in mood and manner," to quote the Telegraph. "Of jollity, charm, and beauty was this feast of Christmas songs compact," continued the same writer, "and all those qualities were reflected with unerring skill and sympathy by the singer, whose many-sided gifts have rarely been revealed in a brighter light."

The Observer critic felt that Mr. Coates is "not a mere concert artist, but a friend singing to friends, and what a difference between this honest, natural attitude of genuine intimacy and that of the spoilt prima donna simpering to a gushing crowd!" "In truth," said the Sunday Times, "he excelled himself. His personality is unique."

Dame Clara Butt Gives Rare Songs

Another popular singer here to be heard during the lean period was Dame Clara Butt, earning the gratitude of the critics by reviving, among other things, Dvorak's seldom heard Biblical songs. John Goss, who belongs to the same company of tenor lieder singers as Mr. Coates, appeared in a joint recital with a less experienced singer, Miss Ursula Nettleship. Finally, there was the pianist Franciszek Goldenburg, whose "mastery technique" and "insight and imagination" (the Telegraph) again won him commendation.

P. L.

Cross-word Puzzle Craze Invades Modern Music?

Vienna.

ALBAN BERG, Viennese modernist composer and disciple of Arnold Schonberg, has just finished a new composition of original form, content, and thematic origin. It is called a chamber concerto, and is the composer's Op. 8, No. 13. It is scored for piano, violin and thirteen wind instruments.

The first movement of the work is in the form of a piano concerto; in the second the piano gives way to the violin as solo instrument, and in the last the composer has written in the form of double concerto for violin and piano, and both instruments repeat the motifs of their independent movements simultaneously. The work was dedicated to Arnold Schonberg on the occasion of his recent fiftieth birthday.

It has been reported indirectly from the mouth of the composer that the theme of the first movement is based on the letters of Arnold Schonberg's name, the notes of the motif being A-D-S-C-H-B-E-G; the theme of the second movement is A-F-B-E (Anton von Webern, another member of the Schonberg school), and the theme of the last part of the hybrid concerto, based on the letters A-B-A-B-E-G, denotes the name of the composer, Alban Berg.

Fontainebleau School of Music

PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU, FRANCE

Directors: Ch. M. Widor and Camille Decreus, supervised by the French Government.

For American Artists, Teachers and Advanced Students Only

JUNE 25 TO SEPTEMBER 25, 1925

Greatest French Teachers, including Widor and Libert Organ; Andre Bloch, Composition and Conducting; Miss Nadia Boulanger, Harmony (the Appreciation and Philosophy of Modern Music); Isidor Philipp and Decreus, Piano; Remy and Hewitt, Violin; Hekking, Violoncello; Grandjany, Harp; Mauguiere and Salignac, Voice, Repertory and Mise-en-scene; Pillois, the French Language and History of Music; Fauchet, Solfeggio and Instrumental Ensemble.

Tuition, board and lodging 5000 francs three months' course
3500 francs two months' course

American Office: National Arts Club Studios

FRANCIS ROGERS, Chairman

119 East 19th Street, New York City.

KOLITSCH

A NEW CROATIAN VIOLINIST

NEW YORK RECITAL
CARNEGIE HALL
January 27, 1925

Management
Antonia Sawyer, Inc.
Aeolian Hall, New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Vitale Leads Costanzi Falstaff

Conductor and Mariano Stabile Divide Honors of Performance; Royalty Hears Verdi Opera.

Rome.

Faithful to tradition, the Teatro Costanzi reopened on December 26, Saint Stephen's night. The performance of the occasion was scheduled to be the Meistersinger, but the political group of Fascisti objected to the presentation of a German work, and they were so effective and so strenuous in their campaign that Falstaff was put on instead.

One of the finest audiences, in respect to culture, breeding, intelligence, elegance, and wealth, that Rome is able to gather was present at the performance. The Queen sat in her box, and with her were the Crown Prince and the Princesses Mafalda and Giovanna. Edoardo Vitale conducted, and his series of ovations during the evening commenced with his very first appearance in the pit just before the opera began.

The newspapers of the capital carried very flattering reports of the Falstaff at the Costanzi. According to the reviewer Incagliati: "In every instrumental voice could be heard gayety and the tragedy of Verdi's music. And the greatest credit for this must go to Edoardo Vitale, who enlivened the performance with an interpretation at once expressive, richly colored, vivacious, gay, and with a fine comic spirit without which Falstaff would be an opera of little importance. And this clarity and skill were particularly evident in Verdi's ingenious fugue, a very difficult passage, in which Vitale made the audience hear truly that 'il trillo invade il mondo.'"

Reviewers Laud Conductor

Signor Gasco, writing in the Tribuna, called the ensemble which Vitale achieved a model of clarity and virtuosity in color. This skill which Vitale showed in Falstaff, continued this writer, is easy to understand, for he is of the conducting school of Gigi Mancinelli, and Mancinelli always directed Falstaff in a sovereign manner.

An excellent collaborator of Vitale was the protagonist Mariano Stabile, considered in Italy the finest living interpreter of the role of Falstaff. According to the review of Signor Gasco, Stabile was vivacious, valiant, and variable in a manner to cast the audience into ecstacies of pleasure. In the opinion of the same reviewer Signor Stabile sang with a powerful voice which was flexible in the last degree; showed an extensive command of stage business; and above all displayed such excellent diction that "if he were emulated by all operatic singers, the necessity of reading librettos would be almost entirely nullified."

Stabile Shares Praise

Signor Incagliati added to this praise his opinion: "Every note has its own character and importance in the singing of this artist. Every gesture adds to the significance of the sung phrase. The artist and the singer have become one in Mariano Stabile. Who can forget his sonorous expressiveness in the dissertation on honor? The Mariano of Verdi's Falstaff is the true artist,—and what a voice!—which is destined without doubt to remain unsurpassable on the lyric stage."

Mercedes Llopart was a lively and aristocratic Alice, and did her part with sufficient vocal power. Signora Casazza was energetic and lovable as Dame Quickly, and Maria Briganti made a Nannetta who was applauded throughout, and particularly after her fairy song. Signora Vasari, as Meg, completed the feminine quartet, and sang and acted at least with correctness and fitting taste.

The baritone Ghirardini sang with warmth in the part of Ford, and pleased particularly in his duet with Falstaff. Signor Alessio de Paolis sang well the aria-sonnet of the third act, Nardi and the basso Dentale pleased the audience and reviewers with their clever by-play in the parts of Bardolfo and Pistola. Guido Uxa, tenor, was a characteristic Doctor Cajus.

The Costanzi chorus contributed considerably to the perfection and success of the performance. It was drilled by Achille Consoli. A feature of the Falstaff was the first appearance of the ballet corps of the Imperial Theatre of St. Petersburg.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Teatro San Carlo Gives Tannhauser

Naples.

The San Carlo Theatre on December 23 presented Wagner's Tannhauser for the first time in twenty-six years. The opera was given in its original form, together with the Bacchanale, which in the Italian theatres is usually omitted. Gino Marinuzzi directed the opera with subtle understanding and fitting passion. He won the praise of the reviewer of Mattino, Riccardo Forster, for not having stressed excessively those parts of the score which are melodramtic in the early Wagner style.

According to the reviewers the tenor Taccani was excellent in the leading role, both in respect to his singing and his acting. It was agreed in the newspaper reports nevertheless that Signor Taccani still needs to become better acquainted with the finer shades in the character of the hero and in his romantic nature above all. The baritone Montesanto in the role of Wolfram was praised uniformly in the reviews for the correctness, dignity, and sure mastery of his expression.

Iva Pacetti, the Elizabeth, sang with sentiment but the strident sharpness of some of her higher tones prevented her interpretation from being one of the finest. Good work was done also by Tomei, Montanari, Papaccio, Carbone, and Prodan, but the performance of Signora Bonetti, the Venus, was not on a par with it. The chorus, drilled by Maestro Papa, added to the effect of the presentation, and the scenery was at least adequate.

F. C.

Nerone Presented for the Eighth Time at La Scala

Milan.

The eighth performance of Boito's Nerone was given at La Scala on December 15. For the present this will be the last performance of the opera. Marcello Journet, who has each time sung the role of Simon Mago, has been engaged to appear in the Meistersinger at the Costanzi in Rome. When he returns the series of presentations of Nerone will be resumed, for this work has been the leading success of the Scala repertory since it had its premiere last season.

Whenever Nerone is performed the house of La Scala is filled to capacity, and this despite the fact that the prices are usually higher on these occasions than they are at other times.

At present music followers in Rome feel that it is quite impossible to put any baritone in the place of Journet, who has sung the role of Simon Mago at each performance so far. The singer seems to have created a person of this character, and has indissolubly connected himself with it. His richness of means, the fitting Satanic and incisive accents, cannot be duplicated by other singers. His acting ability as well as his voice have made him singularly fit for the role.

Nevertheless Nerone will soon return, and what is perhaps best of all Milan will hear in the role of Asteria Rosa Raisa. With this prospect Milanese operatic followers are looking forward as though they had been promised the return of Tamagno.

F. C.

La Scala Revives Boito's Mefistofele

Milan.

La Scala devoted the evening of Santo Stefano, traditionally an important date in the Italian operatic season, to the revival of Mefistofele.

The opera was conducted and prepared by Ettore Panizza, who colored the performance with a sedate dignity, and yet enlivened every page of the score with true dramatic expression. He was given an ovation at every opportunity during the performance of Mefistofele, and won particularly enthusiastic applause after his treatment of the prologue, in which he built up the architectural musical structure with strength and surety.

Practically all the credit must go to Maestro Panizza if this performance is to be included among the recent triumphs of La Scala. In fact the protagonist, de Angelis, had to work with the greatest skill and wile in every phrase, for the score demanded more of his voice than it is any longer able to give. His experience, judgment, and seasoned taste stood him in good stead in portraying the firmness and vigor of Mefistofele, but at best he did not approach the true Goethian spirit in the part, or even the traditional Satanic air. He was rather closer in his portrayal to the conception customary in operetta.

Pertile Coolly Received

The tenor Pertile sang well and with pleasing variety of expression. The public applauded him only moderately, although that may not be important in true estimate of the quality of his work. Perhaps those who were reserved in their praise were bearing in mind the memory of a number of other Fausts who in previous years have sung at La Scala, and whose performances were quite different from that of Signor Pertile.

Signora Spani was a discreet Margherita. Her beautiful low notes were exceptionally effective in her singing. The secondary parts were for most part well done, and the chorus was excellent in the strength of its tone, in the variety of its color, and in its rhythmic precision. Vittore Veneziani did creditable work in the training of the ensemble.

F. C.

Announce I. S. C. M. Programs

London, Jan. 11.—From the American compositions submitted for performance at the next chamber music festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Venice this September, the following have been chosen to be given: Henry Eichheim's Peking Impressions and Corean Sketch, Louis Gruenberg's Daniel Jazz, and Carl Ruggles' Angels.

Regio Gives Valkyries

Parma.—Directed by Giuseppe Podesta a presentation of Wagner's Valkyries was given on Christmas Day at the Regio. It was sung by Signore Cervi - Caroli, Notargiacomo, and Franchi, and Signori Lavarello, Contini, and Donaggio.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Opera-Comique Gives 718th Werther

Singing Inferior to Settings; L'Arlequin Produced for First Time at Opera.

Paris.

In its 718th performance at the Opera-Comique Massenet's Werther proved itself as popular with the clientele of that house as is the same composer's Manon. As always when Werther is performed, the opera house was full. The performance was much approved, although the singers were not equal in quality to the other elements in the presentation.

The luxurious mise-en-scene was perhaps the most striking feature of the performance. The lighting effects also approached perfection. In particular in the first act the stage managers accomplished effects worthy of praise. Every detail in the garden leading to the terrace in the early scene was skillfully portrayed and the moonshine was most realistic.

The work of the orchestra won praise only secondary to that of the mise-en-scene. Under the baton of M. Frigara the musicians played the music of Werther with charming delicacy, and the conductor accomplished some beautiful tonal effects.

Singers Not Up to Mark

The least convincing feature of the entire performance was the vocal contribution. On the whole the singers were, on that evening at least, much below the standard which may be expected from the second leading opera organization of France.

Mlle. Perette as Charlotte displayed a powerful mezzo-soprano, but its metallic timbre was continually disturbing. Her acting seemed stiff and awkward.

In the title part M. Marcelin sang some brilliant high tones which reminded his audience of the old time lustre of his voice. In the lower notes his voice is no longer unimpaired, and a persistent tremolo mars his singing. Besides, M. Marcelin's delineation of this particular role is his poorest accomplishment, for he cannot create any illusion as Werther.

Mlle. Coiffier sang the part of Sophie and gave an account of herself which was generally judged good, both vocally and histrionically. Her light soprano voice is small in volume, but it is pleasing and mellow in timbre. The acting of Mlle. Coiffier was fresh and convincing.

The surprise of the evening was the good singing of the baritone Bourdin as Albert. The appearance of M. Bourdin in this part and the impression which he made on the audience and reviewers have renewed the general expectation of an unusual future for this young artist. His baritone voice possesses the lyric warmth and range of a tenor, and yet it is full and rich in tone. There is no tremolo, and the transition between the various ranges is perfectly smooth.

The stage presence of M. Bourdin aids him in gaining the approval and sympathy of his audience, for when he plays the part of a hero he looks it.

To Celebrate Opera Anniversary

Preparations are being completed in Paris for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Grand Opera scheduled to take place tomorrow (January 6). The opening of the Opera took place on January 5, 1875, and the birthday is being celebrated by a gala performance. It is expected that the affair will be socially, if not musically, one of the greatest events of the season. M. Doumergue, President of the Republic, will drive in state to the Opera House, where there will be a military guard to receive him.

A number of royal figures are expected to be on hand, among them the King and Queen of Spain and the Queen of Belgium. The Lord Mayor of London and the Corps Diplomatique have also been invited. Incidentally, when the Opera House was opened fifty years ago the Lord Mayor of London of that time drove in state to the theatre, accompanied by his mace bearer, and caused thereby a great sensation in the Rue de la Paix with the gorgeousness of his raiment, jewels and coach.

At the opening of the house there was present a brilliant assemblage, which included the President of the Republic, General MacMahon, the Empress of Russia, the Queen of Spain and her son, the Count of Paris, the ex-King of Hanover and the Mayor of London.

There were anxious moments for the management, for the lighting was bad because of the fact that the facilities had not yet been completely installed. Also Mlle. Christine Nilsson fell ill at the last moment, and quick changes had to be made in the large program. Jacques Rouche, present director of the Opera, is planning to reconstruct the historic scene of fifty years ago by filling the house so far as he can with a similar gala audience.

Opera Ballet Competition

The annual examination for promotion in the Opera Ballet School has just been held, with the usual great number of applicants striving for the few vacant places in the corps de ballet. Jacques Rouche was again the head of the jury, which consisted of himself, Leo Staats, director of the Opera ballet; Mlles. Zambetti, Johnsson and I. Schwarz; M. Dethomas, chief of the Services Artistiques, and MM. Aveline and Ricaux.

The general condition of the many pupils of all ages and stages of preparation who applied was not found to be very satisfactory, for there was not one pupil who distinguished herself above the ordinary routine performance. In most past years there has been at least one exceptional talent displayed at every competition. Promotions this year have accordingly been very scarce.

Novelty at Opera

L'Arlequin, the novelty recently produced at the Opera, was described in the program as a lyric comedy, but it would be more accurate to call it a symbol set to music. That fact alone may explain at once why the new work of the young poet, Jean Sarment, and Max d'Ollone, musician of high aims and technical attainments, did not come up to expectations. There was too great discrepancy between the context of the play, which was entirely an intellectual symbol, and the emotional expressiveness which is characteristic of music.

The reviewer of the Paris Daily Mail said of the novelty of MM. d'Ollone and Sarment, "The vital point of Jean Sarment's poem and its weakness from the standpoint of music is its symbolism."

Once this shortcoming of L'Arlequin is disregarded the characters are quite conventional. There is the monarch who insures the happiness of his people by keeping them in complete ignorance. The princess, his daughter, lacks nothing, but longs vaguely for some interesting change in her life. Then there is Arlequin, famous and adulated and yearning for sure and disinterested affection.

Score Not Equal to Plot

Although the music had some beautiful moments, it had many shortcomings too. The passionate sentiment disclosed in the plot was not supported by the score, and the general impression was one that the music of the opera was not quite complete.

The interpretation proved a great disappointment, although much care had been spent in the choice of the singers. Vanni Marcoux, who sang the title part, did not make the best of the dramatic possibilities of the role. His singing also was not up to its regular standard.

M. Huberty, a good routine baritone, sang the part of the monarch with a very bad cold, but he sang courageously until the end.

Mlle. Lapeyrette as the old woman sang splendidly. Her contralto voice seemed fresher than it has ever been. Mlle. Marcelle Denya, the Princess, was well suited to her task, and her personality and young lively behavior delighted the audience.

The opera called for a chorus of eighty members. The ensemble sang well and was well drilled in its difficult stage action. The conductor was Francois Ruhlmann, whose reputation has been made in Paris as a conductor of Wagner. In this score he seemed at sea.

K. H. STOTTNER.

MME. KARIN BRANZELL

Won Critical Praise for Her Singing of Contralto Roles at the Metropolitan.

Italian Notes

Trieste.—The Verdi Theatre reopened its season December 23 with a performance of Tristan and Isolde, directed by Gino Neri.

Bari.—A presentation of Zandonai's Romeo and Juliet on Christmas Day at the Teatro Petruzzelli was one of the greatest successes of the season here. The composer conducted, and the cast included the tenor Giudice, Maria Roggero, and Giovanni Inghilleri.

Pisa.—At the Teatro Massimo the winter operatic season commenced on December 25 with a presentation of Puccini's Manon Lescaut. Giuseppe Sturani conducted. The leading roles were sung by Hebe Boccolini-Zacconi and Giovanni Chiaia.

Mantua.—The Loreley was the opening performance of the season at the Teatro Sociale on December 25. In the cast were the tenor Luigi Marini, the baritone Giuseppe Noto, and Signora Rinolfi. Arturo Lucon was the conductor.

Rosa Ponselle

Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City

Victor Records Knabe Piano

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist

Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE United States Civil Service Commission has announced an open competitive examination for music teachers. The examination is to fill vacancies in the Indian Service, at an entrance salary of $1,200 a year. Furnished quarters, heat, and light are allowed appointees without charge. The duties of the position are to organize and train mixed choruses, quartets, and other musical organizations and to give vocal and instrumental lessons.

Competitors will not be required to report for examination at any place, but will be rated on their education. training, and experience. Receipt of applications for music teacher will close February 17, 1925.

Beniamino Gigli has made a record for the Victor of Paquita, a Spanish serenade by Buzzi-Peccia, vocal teacher and composer. This song was published recently by G. Ricordi.

A song recital by a small group of the pupils of A. Y. Cornell will be given tomorrow evening at the new Chickering Hall, New York City. Operatic excerpts and arias, together with songs by American composers will constitute the program which will be sung by Marion V. Angus, soprano, Ruth McIlvaine, contralto, Albert C. Hewitt, Jr., tenor, John Kuebler, basso, Viola Hailles, soprano, Earl C. Waldo, baritone, and William Spittal, tenor. Charles Gilbert Spross, composer and pianist, will act as accompanist.

Howard E. Potter was elected to serve on the Board of Directors of the Chicago Musical College at the annual meeting of stockholders held recently. Mr. Potter, for many years personal representative of Mary Garden, was made assistant manager of the college last year.

A member of the faculty of the Malkin Conservatory of Music, New York City, Ida Geer Weller, contralto, was heard in recital at the conservatory last Saturday evening, assisted by Edna Rothwell, accompanist. Compositions by Beethoven, Schumann, Bemberg, Rogers, Kramer, Beach, Ward-Stephens, Borodin, Rachmaninoff, and Gretchaninoff made up the program.

Among the concerts planned for the new year by the Columbia School, Chicago, are three by the school Symphony Orchestra, one by the school chorus, and recitals by members of the faculty. The first of the orchestral concerts in February will have as soloists members of the junior department. The next concert, in March, will be "professional soloist night" with Alfred Wallenstein, cellist, Raymund Koch, baritone, and Parthenia Vogelback, pianist.

Nicola A. Montani has resigned as choirmaster of the Church of St. Paul the Apostle, New York. Mr. Montani, who is conductor of the Palestrina Choir of Philadelphia, has relinquished his work, "owing to conditions not being favorable for the carrying out of his projected liturgical program." He will, however, continue his studio work in New York and Philadelphia, as well as his classes at the College of Mount St. Vincent, and at Georgian Court College, Lakewood, N. J.

Piano pupils of Silvio Scionti, and voice pupils of Elaine de Sellem, of the American Conservatory, were heard in the first recital of the New Year on January 10 in Kimball Hall. The annual concert by artist-pupils of the Conservatory with full orchestra, has been announced for February 10, at Orchestra Hall.

The Bush Conservatory of Chicago has recently acquired the library of orchestral music belonging to Anton Seidel. This library, one of the largest in the United States, will enable the Bush Conservatory Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Richard Czerwonky, to give some unusually interesting concerts in their regular series at Orchestra Hall.

Emerson Abernathy, English baritone, will conduct the vocal Normal classes of the Conservatory, beginning January 7. Mr. Abernathy coached for several years with Maestro Sabatini, teacher of John McCormack, and his lectures will embody many ideas of tone production, teaching material, and the like, which will be of interest to teachers of voice.

Boza Oumiroff, baritone and teacher at the Bush Conservatory of Music, together with several pupils at the Conservatory, took part in the Christmas party of the Chicago Historical Society on December 21. Others heard were Albin Polasek, Guy Hague, baritone; John Weatherholt, cellist, and Kee Loo, Hawaiian baritone. Ellen Munson was the accompanist.

Nadia Boulanger opened the series of Artists Recitals at the David Mannes Music School with a lecture recital last Wednesday evening. Following events in the series will be a song recital by Amy Evans and Fraser Gange, recitals by the Lenox and the Philharmonic String Quartets, a piano recital by Alfred Cortot, and a program of sonatas by David and Clara Mannes.

MISS ADELAIDE GESCHEIDT

Presented a Group of Her Vocal Students Recently at a Recital and Tea in One of Her New York Studios.

The Studio Guild, Inc., gave a concert and exhibition at the Hotel des Artistes on the evening of January 10. Mrs. Eversley Childs, Jr., was hostess and the artists appearing were Francis Rogers, baritone, and Frances Nash, pianist. There was an exhibition of the paintings of George Elmer Browne.

Herbert Mustarde kept open house New Year's Eve at his New York studio. Pupils contributing to the program were Joy Sweet, contralto; L. E. Schoenborn, basso, and Nina Cook, soprano.

A recital was given the evening of January 9 at Arthur Lawrason's New York studio by Zeta Van Gundy Wood, mezzo-soprano. Helen Whittaker was at the piano.

A violin recital by Winifred Colton was given in the University Auditorium at the University of South Dakota, Vermilion, S. D., early this month. Cecil Burleigh's Concerto in A minor was among the numbers played. The accompanist was Ella Colton.

Fifth Fontainebleau Summer Session Begins Next June

The Fontainebleau School of Music will open its doors for its fifth summer session on June 25. This school, which first opened in 1921, more or less as an experiment, is now an established institution which each summer offers French teaching of music to one hundred American artists, teachers and advanced students. Messrs. Widor and Camille Decreus will again be the directors of the school. The faculty includes the following teachers: Widor and Libert, organ; Andre Bloch, composition and conducting; Nadia Boulanger, harmony (the appreciation and philosophy of modern music); Isidor Philipp and Camille Decreus, piano; Remy and Hewitt, violin; Hekking, violoncello; Grandjany, harp; Mauguiere and Salignac, voice repertory and mise-en-scene; Pillois, the French language, and the history of music; and Fauchet, solfeggio and instrumental ensemble. Of special interest to the organ students this year is the installation of a new three-manual pipe organ.

Two members of the faculty, Mr. Grandjany, harp, and Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, harmony, are now touring in the United States. Messrs. Mauguiere and Salignac, who are in charge of the voice repertory and operatic department, are both old Metropolitan artists, and are versed in French traditions.

Because of the high musical standards and the shortness of the season, the school is exclusively for teachers, artists and advanced students, the foundations of whose musical training are already solidly laid, and its main purpose is to familiarize its students with the best French methods of instruction. It is essentially French in character, organized and administered by Frenchmen in accordance with French traditions. For this reason, it supplements rather than duplicates the work of American institutions.

In addition to their musical opportunities, the students live and work in a building which was once a chateau, and which is replete with historic and artistic traditions. The school is surrounded by an extensive forest and the park. Such artistic haunts as Barbizon, Moret and Montigny are within easy reach, and Paris itself is only an hour away. During the summer important concerts are given for the students by French musicians.

Alton Jones' New York debut on the evening of January 2 marked the seventh Aeolian Hall recital given by professional pupils of the American pianist, Edwin Hughes, within a period of less than two years.

Mount Holyoke College has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music upon William Churchill Hammond, who has directed the college music department for many years.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1567
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

CHORAL MUSIC has a large place among the recent publications of the Oliver Ditson Company. N. Clifford Page has made for Ditson two arrangements of Edgar Belmont Smith's Creole Love Song, one in which the melodious negro song is adapted to a chorus of four parts, and one to women's chorus of two parts.

The Ditson School Octavo edition has been augmented by three numbers. Edward Shippen Barnes has done the work of arranging Franz Schubert's Marche Militaire for school chorus of three parts with an ad lib bass. The martial words fitting to the music have been provided by Martha Martin. For soprano, alto, and bass chorus has been arranged William Culbertson's Yachting Glee, with N. Clifford Page as the editor. The third new publication in this group is When the Flag Goes By, by George B. Nevin, a two part song with bass ad lib.

Also published by Ditson are four new choral compositions for women's voices. William Lester's Serenade is a spirited song for a two part chorus, soprano and alto. The music is written to the text of Walter Scott. For three part chorus of women are Look Off, Dear Love, an evening song by Gladys Pettit Bumstead; The Song of the River, by John M. Steinfeldt; and To Live and Love Again, by Hartley Moore.

Among the newest Ditson choral issues for men's voices are Guide Me O Thou Great Jehovah, a sacred anthem for four part chorus, by Stanley R. Avery; The Magic Song, by Erik Meyer-Helmund, arranged by Samuel R. Gaines for four part chorus with solo for high voice; The Towers of Spring, by Edward G. McCollin, for four part chorus; and Waken, Lords and Ladies Gay, by Sumner Salter, also for chorus of four male voices.

Harold Flammer, New York, is the publisher of a number of new ballads which are up to the customary standard of issues of that house. The Close of Another Day, by Geoffrey O'Hara, is issued in three ranges, and is accompanied by violin obbligato. Published in only one key are Elinor Remick Warren's Invocation to Spring; Terrence Brady's A Window in Old Athlone; and Edwin L. Walker's Sweetheart o' Mine.

New York Hears McCormack Again

Another song recital was given by John McCormack in Carnegie Hall January 4. He was assisted by Lauri and Dorothy Kennedy, George H. Gartland, organist, and Edwin Schneider, accompanist.

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

American Opera

(Continued from page 5.)

Russians and Austrians for their opera?

I venture to predict that a few successes scored by an American opera company singing good English clearly in New York, Chicago or Rochester would lead to the quick foundation of rival schemes in twenty or fifty cities.

Only by encouraging American musicians, creative and interpretative, without for one moment discouraging foreign music-drama or foreign singers, and by making English the official language of our opera houses, as French, German and Italian are the official operatic languages of France, Germany and Italy, can opera be made permanently popular, intelligible and thoroughly enjoyable in this country. Heaven forbid that we should set aside the foreign masterpieces and insist on having only American operas. No one but a madman could conceive anything so foolish.

But we wish to understand our opera. We want words and actions as well as tunes to be made plain to us. We want opera—opera—opera, not only stars, not only ensembles singing dark words, not only scenery. Verdi was more important than even Caruso. Wagner was more important than Lilli Lehmann, Gounod and Meyerbeer should mean more to us than even Jean de Reszke did long since. And companies, at their best, are only interpreters of great creators.

I feel that I have only scratched the surface of the problem. But I am not a manager or a millionaire. I am a librettist, a critic and a devout opera-goer. I happen also to have been connected officially for five years with the Metropolitan. But the details of the reforms required are the business of the managers of our opera houses and their backers. As Mr. Newman wrote the other day, "Critics have no need to concern themselves with managerial "difficulties" or to listen to appeals ad misericordiam. All that concerns them and the opera-goers is—results.

Hutcheson Plays Brahms and Liszt

In the fifth program of his survey of pianistic literature, at Aeolian Hall January 11, Ernest Hutcheson confined his offerings to Brahms and Liszt. The Times reviewer asserted that his interpretation of the Liszt B minor Sonata "is one of the greatest interpretations of this singular composition that have been given in this country in recent seasons." In the opinion of the Sun writer, Mr. Hutcheson's performance was "admirably clear and lucid, as it always is."

ALLEN McQUHAE

ALLEN McQUHAE who has, this season, sung in The Messiah with the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston and with the New York Oratorio Society is establishing himself as an oratorio singer. Mr. McQuhae, although he enjoys oratorio work, says that he "would rather sing a dozen recitals than one oratorio."

"I've gotten a lot of fun out of oratorio singing," he said, "but it is always a solemn occasion, and one must get keyed up to it and feel in the mood. On the other hand, a recital is a sort of intimate affair where you sing the things you love when you want to."

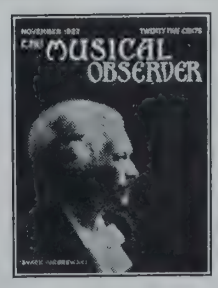
Mr. McQuhae gave his first New York concert of the season on the evening of January 11.

Youth Plays Violin in Court

Brought to court on the complaint of his landlady, Mrs. Martha Sanders, that he "pounded on the piano and scratched on a fiddle" in such a manner as to constitute a public nuisance in the apartment in which he lived, Arthur Loeserman, living at 8914 Sutphin Boulevard, New York, a student in the Institute of Musical Art proved that he was making music, and not noise, when he played several selections in the Jamaica Police Court as a test. Two neighbors of Mr. Loeserman supported the assertion of Mrs. Sanders, but Magistrate James J. Conway dismissed the case.

Shavitch Conducts in London

London, Jan. 13.— Vladimir Shavitch, conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, who is the only American among the guest conductors here for the season, was enthusiastically welcomed at his first appearance last evening. His wife, Tina Lerner, pianist, was soloist.



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)

MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)

SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).

FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....

OPERA AND ITS STARS, by Mabel Wagnalls, published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York, consists of a series of articles written in a spirit of admiration for the music stage and some of its prime donne. The twenty-eight chapters may be divided into two types of articles. A number of them are little more than "feature stories" about popular operatic stars. These for the most part are in the form of interviews reporting facts (and fiction doubtless) concerning the early lives of a number of sopranos of reputation and descriptions of their always charming personalities.

Among the artists whom Miss Wagnalls interviewed are Amelita Galli-Curci, Maria Jeritza, Mary Garden, Frieda Hempel, Geraldine Farrar, Nellie Melba, Emma Eames, Emma Calve, Lillian Nordica, Lilli Lehmann and Marcella Sembrich. The nature of these interviews is indicated in several of their titles: Lillian Nordica, a Tete-a-Tete; A Morning Call on Frieda Hempel; Marcella Sembrich, the Star of Stars; Emma Eames, a Queen of Song, and so on.

The other chapters, which are scattered among the interviews, are devoted to details of the stories of a number of popular operas: Rigoletto, Tosca, Pelleas and Melisande, Madame Butterfly, Lakme, Pagliacci, Orpheus and Eurydice, Faust, Werther, Carmen, Hamlet, Lohengrin, Aida, Huguenots, the Flying Dutchman and Semiramide. The synopses are unusual in that they are told with a personal flavor of narration, and also in the care with which Miss Wagnalls describes the successive scenes of the operas, so that the studious reader of Opera and Its Stars should be able to hear works in foreign languages with understanding of details.

The book is plentifully sprinkled with photographs of the interviewed sopranos.

Brailowsky in Third N. Y. Program

Alexander Brailowsky, Russian pianist who made his New York debut a few months ago, was heard in his third recital at Aeolian Hall January 10 in an all-Chopin program. Olin Downes of the Times characterized him as "a poet of the piano" and, amplifying this statement, wrote: "He has a sheer instinct for the secrets of the piano."

According to the Herald Tribune reviewer he "intensified" the impression made by his previous recitals of artistic sincerity and "a vividly dramatic temperament and a brilliant technique." The other reviews were agreed with those quoted.

SUMMY'S CORNER

Frank Patterson of the Musical Courier, New York, N. Y. says: "This work is not merely a practical instruction book, it is for those who desire to go ahead, to reach the heights. A really important contribution to the literature of musical theory."

Harmonic Material and It's Uses
by
ADOLF WEIDIG
Price, $3.00, plus postage
Published by
Clayton F. Summy Co.
429 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Metropolitan Gives Tristan and Isolde

Florence Easton and Marion Telva Substitute for Scheduled Singers.

Wagner's Tristan and Isolde was given its first performance this season by the Metropolitan Opera Company last Thursday night. Due to her injury during rehearsal, Mme. Larsen-Todsen was unable to appear, and Florence Easton sang the title role. Another substitution was that of Marion Telva as Brangaene in place of Karin Branzell, who was indisposed. Others in the cast were Curt Taucher, Paul Bender, Friedrich Schorr, Arnold Gabor, George Meader, Louis d'Angelo, and Max Bloch. Artur Bodanzky conducted.

Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote that Mme. Easton's Isolde "is not only one of that admirable artist's most finely conceived and finely elaborated parts, but one of the most eminent achievements now to be observed at the Metropolitan." He added that she "impressed us by the plasticity, the poise, the imaginative justice of her acting, by the beauty and distinction of her singing." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, she "sang as usual with general excellence of singing and diction." Alison Smith of the World admired her "cool, clean, and steadfast singing," and the Sun reviewer wrote that her interpretation "remains a moving and convincing portrayal of Wagner's heroine."

Mr. Schorr's Kurvenal "had its customary substance and appropriateness of expression," in the words of Mr. Downes. Mr. Gilman found his part "beautifully sung, tenderly felt," and the Sun writer characterized him as "admirable, if somewhat conservative." Other writers commended him. According to Mr. Gilman "the excellent contralto," Miss Telva, "comported herself with skill and intelligence." Ernest Newman said she "sang the music admirably, especially in the last act." As Mr. Downes put it, "the beauty of Miss Telva's voice was realized again in Brangaene's song in the second act."

The Sun found that Mr. Bender made an impressive King Mark and "sang admirably." Other reviewers noted the excellence of his performance. Mr. Sanborn wrote of Mr. Taucher as Tristan that "he often gives satisfaction as Tristan through the quality of his voice and carefully considered delivery of text and music." Other reviewers remarked on the inadequacy of Mr. Taucher in the role, both vocally and in acting.

Alison Smith admired the work of the orchestra "under the urgent, subtle guidance of Mr. Bodanzky," and Mr. Gilman spoke of the "burning intensity of Mr. Bodanzky's reading" of parts of the score.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
CECIL B. DEMILLE Production
"THE GOLDEN BED"
WITH ALL STAR CAST
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
NAZIMOVA in
"REDEEMING SIN"
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

RUTH DEYO has recaptured the romantic atmosphere of the European salon of yester-year in the series of intimate musicales she is presenting in the music room of her New York home. Four programs are being given by the American pianiste on Thursday afternoons, and as accommodations are limited to fifty guests each program is repeated the following Sunday evening.

Georges Enesco and Hans Kindler shared the first two concerts with Miss Deyo. This Thursday and Sunday Rafaelo Diaz will assist. February 8 and 12 Hans Kindler will be the associate artist, and March 15 and 18 Miss Deyo will give a program of piano soli.

Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. John Jay Hammond and Mrs. Edward Stotesbury are among the patronesses of the series.

Sampaix Praised in Ithaca Recital

Ithaca, Jan. 14.—A recital was given here recently by Leon Sampaix, Director of Piano, in the Ithaca Conservatory of Music. His program, to which he was obliged to add many encores, included works by Beethoven, Liapounow, Granados, Chopin, Schulz-Evler, Paganini-Liszt, and Rachmaninoff. The Ithaca Journal-News commended his technical excellence and the expressiveness of his playing.

Fradkin Leads at Piccadilly

Frederic Fradkin, formerly concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor and soloist at the Sporting Club in Monte Carlo, takes up his baton this week as director of the Piccadilly Concert Orchestra. The arrangements used by Mr. Fradkin will be selected from the French library in his possession which includes special orchestrations used by the Monte Carlo orchestra.

Singers' Club Starts 22nd Season

The Singers' Club, an organization of nearly sixty male voices conducted by Ralph Grosvenor, started its twenty-second season wtih a concert in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday evening. Helen Jeffrey, violinist, Steel Jamison and Harold Wollenhaupt were the assisting artists.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
ERICH VON STROHEIM'S
"GREED"
WITH ALL STAR CAST
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Yes, the radio bee is still buzzing . . . though not quite so loudly as a few weeks ago.

* * *

Right into the Musical Digest walked James E. Devoe, accompanied by Mrs. Devoe. They declared Detroit to be musically on tip-toe, also Grand Rapids, Lansing, Kalamazoo and Saginaw, where the Devoe-Woods Philharmonic Concert courses are marching steadily ahead.

* * *

What ho! Giacomo Lauri-Volpi is in New York once more, ready for his season at the Metropolitan Opera. Now for some tenor top notes.

* * *

That indefatigable person, Louis Eckstein, is figuring Ravinia Opera problems at his New York desk in Aeolian Hall. He appears to have one fault of which we know: he sets a new standard each season which has to be beaten.

* * *

Horses are useful animals, save when they will step on a prima donna's foot.

* * *

Among those who journeyed to Rochester to attend the performance of Faust given in the Eastman Theatre, were Bre'r Tryon, New York music correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor; Paul Kempf, editor of the Musician, and Charles Henry Meltzer, who manages to be somewhere about whenever opera in English is getting a chance.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser was breakfasting in the Sagamore at Rochester when Florence Macbeth and Captain Whitwell, her husband, walked in. Miss Macbeth had an engagement to appear there in concert that evening with Richard Crooks, the tenor.

* * *

Two recent visitors to New York were Colonel Peel of the Atlanta Grand Opera Association and his coworker, the efficient A. C. Bidwell.

* * *

If Akron, Ohio, has missed Manager Earle Poling, his presence can be accounted for. He and Mrs. Poling are in New York.

* * *

Worcester ought to be gratified in having secured Albert Stoessel to conduct its festivals. Things should assume an encouraging aspect.

* * *

It begins to look as though John Penton had become a commuter between Cleveland and New York. Here is a convert to opera, from the iron trade paper industry.

* * *

Chicagoans are getting ready to shed tears over the season's departure of its own best loved opera company.

* * *

A slight cold kept Edward Johnson from singing with the Metropolitan at its last Philadelphia performance. But Eddie will be ready for New York soon.

* * *

Another clever person who succumbed to recent bad weather in the East is Pitts Sanborn, music reviewer for the New York Mail and Telegram. But—you can't keep Pitts down, in any kind of way.

* * *

And Giovanni Martinelli is convalescing nicely, too.

Seventy Polish children were guests of Wanda Landowska, the harpsichordist, at the recital she gave last Friday evening in New York's Aeolian Hall.

* * *

Gaetano Merola, who developed the San Francisco Opera Association, has arrived in America after a trip to Italy. He will spend the next fortnight in Gotham-town.

* * *

St. Louis is mighty glad Rudolph Ganz consented to take hold of its symphony orchestra. Things have happened since he became conductor there.

* * *

The American Academy of Teachers of Singing is progressing in its membership. A meeting was held last Wednesday evening in New York.

* * *

With the price of a ticket to The Student Prince at $5.50 it would seem that $7.70 for a Metropolitan Opera performance is dirt cheap.

* * *

Mrs. Henry Martyn Alexander of 15 East Thirty-sixth street, New York, gave a reception last Friday night in honor of Conductor Wilhelm Furtwaengler and Mrs. Furtwaengler. Many persons prominent in music and the smart set were present.

* * *

Now the Roosevelt Hotel (in New York) has a series of musicales—on Friday afternoons. Pretty soon the service will be rendered in our hotels with musical accompaniment.

* * *

"Thirteen is my lucky number," discovers Daniel Mayer. "Levitski, Gerhardt, the Denishawns, Erna Rubinstein, the Russian Choir, Maier and Pattison, Hinshaw's Marriage of Figaro, and Gianinni—eight of my artists filled engagements January 13." . . . A baker's dozen of congratulations, Dan!

* * *

It was a joyous reception Mr. and Mrs. Lazar Samoiloff gave Josef Lhevinne in their home after his Carnegie Hall recital a week ago last night. A list of the guests would read like a Who's Who of New York's music colony—almost.

* * *

Wednesday night we dropped into Chickering Hall where Clarence Gustlin was giving one of his American Opera Interp-recitals under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs. He told us all about De Leone's Algala and Patterson's Echo . . . and the versatile Clarence can play opera scores as deftly as he talks about them.

* * *

"When the house is poor it's the artist's fault; when it's sold out it's the local manager's fault," thus soliloquized Dick Copley, of Wolfsohn.

* * *

President and Mrs. Coolidge were hosts at dinner last Thursday evening at the White House to the diplomatic corps. Following the dinner a musical was given in the East Room by Beniamino Gigli, tenor, and Magdeleine Brard, pianist. Vito Carnevali accompanied Mr. Gigli.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

The All-Absorbing Career
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 15 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Newspaper Articles Hit Chicago Opera; They Are Overdrawn

So Declares Quoted Director; Home City Deficit Exceeds by $50,000 Last Year's.

BUT PROSPECTS GOOD

According to persons who have at heart the welfare of the Chicago Civic Opera Association, news articles which have appeared recently in at least one Chicago newspaper concerning internal affairs of that organization are overdrawn. Some of those who have commented on the article in the Chicago Evening Post, which published an interview with Stanley Field, one of the Chicago Opera directors, declare that certain of the statements appearing do not present facts. Mr. Field himself, speaking to the Chicago correspondent for The Musical Digest, said that he not only had been "greatly misquoted," but that he was not talking at the moment for publication, and that what he said was in no way intended as official. President Samuel Insull was at the time in New York. He refused to comment on the "interview" of Mr. Field when approached by newspaper reporters.

The Chicago company closed its current season in its home city last Saturday. In his annual report—which is made at this time, though the 1924-1925 Chicago Opera season will not end until the completion of the tour on March 13 next—President Insull gives the deficit as $400,000, which is $50,000 in excess of that of a year ago.

There is in this report, however, an encouraging fact: the attendance at the Chicago representations was 38 per cent above what it was in the preceding season. The cause of the increased deficit is due, explains President Insull, to the necessarily increased operating expense.

While recognizing that the internal affairs of the Chicago Civic Opera Association are perhaps not entirely smooth, The Musical Digest believes that comment upon any of them is at this time unnecessary; and that any such procedure is not of a constructive character. The Chicago company began last evening its current season of two weeks in Boston. Thereafter the organization will be heard in other cities, among them Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chattanooga, Memphis, Dallas, Tulsa, and Milwaukee.

Keen interest is being shown in the approaching appearances of this organization in the cities which it is scheduled to visit. In Cleveland, for example, the advance sale (which closed a few days ago) was 25 per cent greater than for a similar season twelve months ago.

All who are loyal supporters of superior opera enterprise in this country are hopeful of a satisfactory outcome of this Chicago Opera tour.

Maria Mueller, soprano who comes to the Metropolitan from the Munich Opera, was favorably received in her debut as Sieglinde in Die Walkuere on Wednesday evening.

Bulletins of News

Ethel Leginska, pianist, disappeared after starting from her home to give a concert in Carnegie Hall last night and her friends and associates were so alarmed when she failed to reach the auditorium, where 2,000 persons awaited her, that they induced the police to send out a general alarm for her.

Miss Leginska left her home at 313 West Twenty-seventh street and when last seen she was believed to have entered a taxi cab, which was to take her to Carnegie Hall.

When the pianist did not appear, Mr. Haensel, of Haensel and Jones, her managers, searched the house for emergency performers. He found Miecyslaw Munz, Polish pianist who had just arrived from the Pacific Coast, and who offered himself as a substitute. Mr. Munz played an entire program of Beethoven and Chopin.

As yet the New York police have found no trace of Miss Leginska.

Berlin.—A baby boy has been born to Mrs. Sigrid Onegin-Tenzoldt. Both mother and child are reported to be doing well.

Rosa Ponselle, who was taken ill with an accute attack of stomach trouble in New London, Conn., last Wednesday while in the midst of a concert tour, became well again before the end of last week. She sang at Symphony Hall in Boston Sunday afternoon before a packed appreciative house.

Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan, who has been recovering from an attack of typhoid fever, was able to leave his bed and walk a little last Saturday evening. He expects to be quite well within a few weeks.

The annual Chamber Music Festival which for years has been given in Pittsfield, Mass., will be held next October in Washington, D. C., it has been announced by Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, founder of the Festivals. In 1926 there will be a farewell festival in Pittsfield in the traditional Music Temple on South Mountain. Thereafter the concerts will be given in the new chamber music auditorium which Mrs. Coolidge has donated to be erected adjacent to the Library of Congress.

An organization known as the Polish National Peasants orchestra, of which M. Nanyslowski is conductor, is announced for a first American appearance in the New York Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday afternoon, February 22. S. Hurok is bringing this orchestra to the United States.

Eugene Boucher, associated with Roger De Bruyn in the management of the artistic activities in the United States of Alessandro Bonci, died suddenly in Brooklyn, N. Y., last Sunday of heart trouble.

New York Orchestral Musicians Prepare to Demand Higher Wage

Many Organizations to Be Affected by Union Efforts to Gain Pay Increase.

WILL NEGOTIATE SOON

That New York orchestral musicians are preparing to demand higher pay was reported in the New York newspapers last week. It was said that the New York Symphony and Philharmonic orchestras would be requested to raise the wages of their members $25 a week.

Officials of the Associated Musicians of New York, Local 802 of the American Federation of Labor, stated Saturday that it is expected that representatives of the union and the orchestra managements will meet for discussion in the near future. According to the New York Times, "no formal demands are expected, but rather a statement of terms and adjustment, with due heed to the already heavy costs sustained by a few generous guarantors."

George Engles, manager of the New York Symphony Orchestra, declared on Saturday that he knew nothing of the proposed demands of the musicians except what he had read in the newspapers. Arthur Judson, manager of the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia orchestras, had nothing to say. The State Symphony is not affected, for its members are paid by the concert, not by the week.

It was learned that the members of the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who are at present paid $88 for eight performances, have already asked for $104. They have also asked $45 for pre-season wages, where they now receive $36; $5 for two hours for rehearsals, which is an increase of $2; and $1.25 for every half hour of overtime in place of the fifty cents for fifteen minutes which they are paid.

Edward Canavan, chairman of the board of directors of Local 802, admitted that similar demands for increased wages will be made to the larger motion picture and vaudeville houses, as well as to the legitimate theatres, in a series of negotiations between now and September 1, when the present contracts expire. Mr. Canavan said that the present minimum rate of $60 a week for symphony players has not been increased since it was established in 1919. The average pay among orchestral musicians is about $85.

Some of the foremost orchestras of the United States, a number of which are annual visitors to New York, will be affected, including those in Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Rochester, and Syracuse. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only one of the large orchestras which employs non-union musicians and as such, will not be affected immediately.

Philadelphia Hears New York Conductors

Van Hoogstraten Is Guest Leader; Berta Morena Sings With Symphony Society.

Philadelphia, Jan. 19. — Two New York conductors appeared here last week. Willem van Hoogstraten, director of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, was guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra in its concert at the Academy Friday afternoon, and Walter Damrosch led the New York Symphony Orchestra in the same hall the day before.

Mr. van Hoogstraten was warmly praised by the reviewers for his readings of Weber's Oberon Overture, Debussy's L'Apres-midi d'un Faune, Tschaikowsky's Francesca da Rimini, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. This last number, according to Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer, demonstrated his "fine musicianship," and Linton Martin of the North American commented that Mr. van Hoogstraten "brought the utmost energy" to this diversified program.

S. L. L. of the Public Ledger also found him "a vigorous conductor" and added that "his interpretation, as well as the program itself, was one of the most interesting of the season thus far." The Record reviewer found him an analyist "reducing every phrase to its finest, most perfect meaning and playing it with a degree of finish that frequently has an effect the opposite of what it should be, the continuity of the work being sometimes sacrificed to his tendency to dissection." However, continued this writer, "he brought a beautiful tone from the orchestra, his passion for detail giving the instruments quite new opportunities, while his undoubted feeling for tremendous dramatic climaxes was responsible for many movements of thrilling tonal heights."

An enthusiastic reception was given Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra in their all-Wagner program Thursday. As Linton Martin put it, "all too few and far between, these days, are concerts of the kind which Walter Damrosch favored the faithful at last night's performance." Mr. Muschamp wrote that "for years the names of Walter Damrosch and a Wagner program have been a synonym for good music." The works played were the Tannhauser Overture, the Scherzo from Wagner's Symphony in C, excerpts from Die Meistersinger and Parsifal, the Prelude to Tristan und Isolde.

Berta Morena was the soloist and met with critical approval except from Linton Martin and Stanley Muschamp. S. L. L. said she gave an "exquisite interpretation" of the Traume song, and the Record reported that she displayed "individuality and a real knowledge of Wagnerian traditions; her voice is full of warmth and expression and of sufficient range and flexibility to compass fluently the most difficult episode of the music dramas." Mr. Martin said her voice lacked "color, certainty, poise, command, nearly all the qualities it ought to have." In Mr. Muschamp's opinion, although she possessed the necessary musicianship, her technical method of singing did not permit the free emisson of tone.

Metropolitan Opera Visits Philadelphia

Gives Performances of Andrea Chenier and Butterfly; Serafin Conducts.

Philadelphia, Jan. 21.—The Metropolitan Opera Company of New York gave its eighth performance here this season. Andrea Chenier was the opera presented, with Florence Easton, Ina Bourskaya, Miguel Fleta, and Giuseppe Danise in the leading roles. Tullio Serafin conducted and, to quote S. L. L. of the Public Ledger, "gave a superb reading of the highly spiced score." Linton Martin of the North American remarked that "much of the electrifying effect of the occasion was due to the dynamic conducting of Tullio Serafin."

Miss Easton, according to the Record, "sang with fine expression." S. L. L. said she is always a splendid artist in any role, and that she was "more than excellent" in every way. Her "finished singing" was lauded by Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer.

This writer found Mr. Fleta well suited to the title role, and S. L. L. found his singing and acting "considerably better" than in his last appearance here. In the Record, he was called "personable and enthusiastic, and a singer whose work kept the performance to a praiseworthy level." This chronicler considered that Mme. Bourskaya's roles were "especially well done, not merely from the histrionic standpoint, but also vocally." Other writers agreed as to the excellence of her performance. Mr. Danise was commended for a "virile and able performance" by the Record reviewer. S. L. L. wrote that it was one of his best roles, "and he did splendid work in each act, both dramatically and vocally." Mr. Martin said that Mme. Easton and Messrs. Fleta and Danise "gave stirring dramatic and musical eloquence to the three leading roles last night."

According to the Record, Ellen Dalossy, Lawrence Tibbett, William Gustafson, and others in the company "did their share in presenting the work meritoriously."

There were two last-minute changes in the cast of Madame Butterfly in its production here last week by the Metropolitan Opera Company. Due to Mme. Larsen-Todsen's injury Florence Easton had to sing Brunhilde in New York, and Elizabeth Rethberg substituted for her as Cio-Cio San here. Mario Chamlee took the place of Edward Johnson, who was indisposed.

The Record reviewer found these two substitutes "so brilliant and capable in their roles that no one had a bit of cause for complaint." Gracious stage presence, "augmented by rare ability as an actress and a voice of exceptional sweetness and brilliance" made Mme. Rethberg an acceptable Cio-Cio San, continued this writer, who also found Mr. Chamlee's voice one of "fine quality and power." Stanley Muschamp found Mme. Rethberg's voice "of fine quality throughout its long range, well managed and coupled with this, the musicianship of the artist is always alert to the situation on the stage and the part her voice assumes in the complete score." Linton Martin admired her voice, but found her appearance hardly the "ideal Butterfly." S. L. L. was of the same opinion. Other writers commended Mr. Chamlee for his performance, both vocally and histrionically.

Others in the cast who received special mention were Ina Bourskaya and Giuseppe de Luca. Tullio Serafin conducted and, to quote Mr. Martin, "galvanized the score with much energy."

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Thais (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Galli; and Messrs. Errolle and Danise; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.
Rigoletto (evening) — with Mmes. Galli-Curci and Telva; and Messrs; Fleta, Ballester, and Rothier; Mr. Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Cosi Fan Tutte—with Mmes. Easton, Peralta. and Bori; and Messrs. Meader, de Luca, and Didur; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

FRIDAY

Dinorah—with Mme. Galli-Curci and Messrs. Tokatyan and de Luca; Mr. Papi conducting.

SATURDAY

Gotterdammerung (matinee) — revival with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Mueller, Telva, Branzell; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, Bohnen, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.
Gioconda (evening) — with Mmes. Easton and Gordon; and Messrs. Gigli and Danise; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Falstaff—with Mmes. Alda, Bori, and Telva; and Messrs. Scotti, Tokatyan, Tibbett, Didur and Bada; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Hindu Music and Dances

A recital of Hindu music and dances was given on the afternoon of December 18 in Assembly Hall, New York, by Ragini, Lahiri, and Govind. The native artists sang and danced, accompanied by Govind on the sitar. The report of the Telegram-Mail referred to the matinee as "a program of rare interest and beauty."

New Haven Orchestra Concert

New Haven, Jan. 19.—At the third concert of its thirty-first season, the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, conducted by David Stanley Smith, played Borodin's First Symphony, Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, and Goldmark's In the Garden from the Rustic Wedding Symphony. Hildegarde Donaldson, violinist, was assisting artist in the Bruch Second Concerto.

Hayes Appears in N. Y. Again

Roland Hayes, tenor, gave his third and last recital in Carnegie Hall on January 16 before the largest audience he has drawn this season. For the most part, the reviewers found him in excellent voice, and wrote much as they have in the past of his singing.

Dinorah is Revived At the Metropolitan

Amelita Galli-Curci Sings in Leading Role and Gennaro Papi Directs.

Meyerbeer's Dinorah was produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company Thursday evening for the first time in over twenty years, with Amelita Galli-Curci singing the leading role. Giuseppe de Luca, Armand Tokatyan. Gennaro Papi conducted.

Most of the reviewers were reserved in their commendation of the revival, and several expressed regret that there are no better operas which afford opportunities for a voice like Mme. Galli-Curci's. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, on the other hand, wrote that it was "a much maligned opera revived enjoyably." Mr. Taylor in the World wrote that Mr. Papi conducted with "great vigor" and W. J. Henderson of the Sun said that he "was quite equal to the demands of the score." According to Pitts Sanborn Mr. Papi conducted "con amore" and "after the overture the big audience gave conductor and orchestra an ovation." The Herald Tribune said that Mr. Papi won "a special demonstration for himself after the overture" and the Times wrote that Mr. Papi "followed alertly Meyerbeer's perilous colorature."

Mr. Sanborn considers the music of Dinorah peculiarly suited to Mme. Galli-Curci's voice and manner of singing, "as the character is congenial to her quaint and wistful personality." The Times reviewer commented on her "delicate dramatic sincerity." According to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, "her voice, as usual, was marked by fluency and an apparent absence of effort. Its volume, however, seemed rather limited." In the opinion of Mr. Henderson, "she sang fluently and agreeably" although she was not always faithful to the pitch. Ernest Newman of the Post admired the "curious contralto richness" of the timbre of her voice. He, together with other writers, commented on her frequent singing off pitch.

Mr. de Luca, to quote Mr. Perkins, gave "an expressive performance, with a beautiful quality of tone in his softer notes, but some departures from smoothness in his louder ones." According to Mr. Sanborn, he acted and sang "with beautiful artistry." Mr. Newman enjoyed his voice. Armand Tokatyan, according to Mr. Perkins, "provided the humorous relief, in a vividly acted performance." Ernest Newman added that he was "most amusing" but "never letting his rustic nonsense get in the way of the main action."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

FREEMANTEL

Sacre du Printemps Led by Furtwaengler

Stravinsky Work Has Its First Performance by the N. Y. Philharmonic.

At the concert of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra Thursday evening, Willem Furtwaengler, guest conductor, led the orchestra through its first performance of Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps. The other works played were Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Berlioz's Overture to Benvenuto Cellini.

Olin Downes of the Times, in writing of the concert, referred to Mr. Furtwaengler as "one of the most commanding individualities among the conductors—and they are legion—who have appeared lately in this city." Of Le Sacre, he wrote it was "testimony to the remarkable authority, control, and self-possession of Mr. Furtwaengler that he secured the performance he did" in view of the few rehearsals he was able to have.

In the opinion of Deems Taylor of the World, the performance "lacked dynamic subtlety" although it was "confident and vigorous." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune commented that it "missed fire" in several places. It was called a "notable" Sacre by Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, although he, too, felt that it would have gained with more rehearsing. The Sun reviewer wrote that it put Mr. Furtwaengler and his orchestra to a severe test, which they met "in a brilliant fashion." It was, continued this writer, "superbly executed and triumphant in spirit." He called the conductor "a master of rhythm in all its phases, also in clarity of expression and display of color."

According to Mr. Gilman, "the performance of Berlioz's Overture was among the most imposing and brilliant that we can recall." Mr. Downes agreed that "it was, by far, the most brilliant we have ever known . . . it constituted one of the triumphs of Mr. Furtwaengler's present visit." Mr. Peyser was particularly impressed with the presentation of the Symphony—"unequalled since the most heroic days of Nikisch." The Post writer said it was conducted and played "with moving beauty."

At the concert on Sunday afternoon, Mr. Furtwaengler offered Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, and Brahms' First Symphony. The Messrs. Guidi, Lange, and Schulz were the soloists in the Handel work.

Cadman to Conduct at Capitol

Charles Wakefield Cadman, American composer, has accepted the invitation of the Capitol Theatre of New York to be guest conductor when two of his works, The Thunderbird Suite and The Hollywood Suite are presented there in March. The latter composition, written originally for piano, has been orchestrated by Modest Altschuler.

Jan Kubelik Gives Concert

Prague, Jan. 3.—At a concert of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra Jan Kubelik, violinist, was assisting artist in his own Sixth Violin Concerto.

Maria Mueller Makes Debut in Walkuere

Julia Claussen Sings in Place of Nanny Larsen-Todsen at Metropolitan.

The first performance this season by the Metropolitan Opera Company of Wagner's Die Walkuere, which took place Wednesday evening, was marked by the debut of Maria Mueller, young Czecho-Slovakian soprano, in the role of Sieglinde. Miss Mueller comes to the Metropolitan from the Munich opera.

Because of Mme. Larsen-Todsen's inability to appear, Julia Claussen took her place as Brunhilde. Others in the cast were Curt Taucher, William Gustafson, Michael Bohnen, Karin Branzell, Marcella Roeseler, Phradie Wells, Laura Robertson, Ina Bourskaya, Marion Telva, Henriette Wakefield, Raymonde Delaunois, and Kathleen Howard. Artur Bodanzky conducted.

According to Ernest Newman of the Post, he "drew some very fine playing from the orchestra." Other writers agreed.

In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, Miss Mueller "has a fresh and youthful voice, a little small for the demands of her role last night, much grace and sincerity as an actress, and marked intelligence in interpretation." Her interpretation was, he continued, "a new and a notably artistic one." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote that she "exhibits a sense of the stage; her acting has both repose and intensity." Her voice, asserted Mr. Gilman, "has loveliness of texture, and she uses it—especially in its lower and middle ranges—with skill and taste."

Mr. Henderson said that the debutante possesed "youth, prepossessing appearance, a voice of pleasing quality and a dramatic temperament. Together with these, she has intelligence and an indisputable sense of the theatre." Ernest Newman found her voice "capable of a good deal of color," although it lacked power, and thought she did "a very interesting piece of work." In the same vein were the comments by Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail and Alison Smith of the World.

Writing of Mme. Claussen, Mr. Sanborn commented that "where the music lay easily within the compass of her voice her singing was well considered and expressive, and she played the part with understanding and the authority of long experience." Miss Smith commended her for "a worthy accomplishment of a difficult task." Although the music was out of her range, Mr. Henderson said that she brought "experience and resource" to her part. Where her voice was suited to the music, according to Mr. Gilman, she used it with "eloquent expressiveness" and she acted "with warmth and intelligence."

Mr. Newman was enthusiastic over Mme. Branzell's Fricka, which he found "admirably declaimed." Another who found it a pleasure "to listen to her smooth and abundant voice employed with skill and meaning" was Mr. Sanborn. Mr. Gilman found the part "somewhat recklessly sung," but Mr. Downes commended her work.

This last writer found "splendid resonance and confidence" in Mr. Bohnen, and Mr. Henderson said that his "vigor of voice and style fit well the character" of Wotan. According to Mr. Gilman, his was a "fascinating study," but not Wagner's conception of the god. Mr. Newman wrote that he sang the lower notes "magnificently," although he had difficulty with higher ones.

In the words of Mr. Henderson, Mr. Taucher, as Siegmund, "showed a somewhat improved lyric style, but the quality of his voice is not favorable to the publication of stormy emotions. Mr. Downes found his Siegmund better than his Tristan.

SAMUEL DUSHKIN

American Violinist Renewed the Excellent Impression Which He Made Last Season in His First Violin Recital of the Year in New York.

Winifred MacBride Returns

Winifred MacBride, English pianist who made her debut here last October was heard again Wednesday evening in Aeolian Hall. Two contemporary Englishmen, John Ireland and Herbert Howells, were represented on a program which included Chopin, Brahms, Schumann, Handel, Rachmaninoff, and Ravel. To quote the Herald Tribune reporter, Miss MacBride "displayed last night, as at her first recital, admirable musicianship in phrasing, in the use of tone-color, in the adjustment of dynamics. She plays with sweep and breadth and power, with a tonic vigor and an admirable clarity."

Eduard Zathureczky Makes American Bow

New Czech Violinist Impresses Reviewers in New York Debut Recital.

Eduard Zathureczky, young Bohemian violinist, made what W. J. Henderson of the Sun was pleased to call "the most promising violin debut of the season" last Tuesday at Carnegie Hall. The World reviewer agreed that it was "one of the felicitous debuts" thus far. According to the writer in the Telelgram-Mail, Mr. Zathureczky "speedily proved himself head and shoulders above multitudinous juveniles of the fiddling fraternity."

The qualities in his playing which this reviewer liked were his tone of "exceptional volume, vibrancy and beauty," his technical efficiency "of a high order," and his "genuine musical feeling," as well as his "authentic sense of style." Mr. Henderson found him a "well equipped young player" whose "most important asset was his tone, which had several valuable qualities. It possessed great body and penetrating character, and it was both pure and ingratiating." In addition to this, Mr. Henderson praised his "excellent" intonation, the flexibility of his bow arm, and "his command of a range of dynamics from an uncommonly beautiful pianissimo to a full forte."

In the Herald Tribune, Mr. Zathureczky was commended for his tone "of unusual fullness and purity, marked by a clarity and richness not often heard in the course of a season's violin recitals." The reviewer in the World commented that he had "the breadth of tone and the flexible execution of the true virtuoso combined with a subtle and persuasive interpretation of his music." The Times reviewer spoke of the "brilliant tone" he achieved in the middle of the recital in spite of bad atmospheric conditions.

Rosenthal Gives Second N. Y. Program

In the season's second New York recital of Moriz Rosenthal in Carnegie Hall on January 17, the pianist's program included Brahms, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, Scriabin, Davidoff, Friedheim, and Liszt. The Herald Tribune writer found him at his best, and both the Sun reviewer and Olin Downes of the Times made special mention of his playing of Beethoven's C minor Sonata. Mr. Downes thought his performance of the work "one of rare power and eloquence."

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 15

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.; Canada, $6.00; Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

The Victor and the Radio

For several weeks there has existed in New York concert-attraction managerial circles, and in various local management circles throughout the United States, apprehensiveness concerning the immediate effects upon the concert-giving business in this country—and future effects also—of radio broadcasting of celebrated music artist-attractions.

The launching by the Victor Talking Machine Company of what it designated an "experimental" broadcast plan was attended by incidents which disturbed persons prominent in the three fundamental branches of concert-giving.

Prior to and following January 1 last, a number of New York managers who secure concert appearances, and negotiate other business matters for individual music artists and for music organizations, expressed themselves as opposed to certain parts of the Victor broadcast plan, and preliminary procedure.

These managers—members of the National Music Managers of the United States—held meetings in the matter. The feeling prevailed that the purposed broadcastings by the Victor of distinguished artists would be likely to cause a lessening of the patronage of concerts given in various portions of this country, and that it might not be beneficial to the concert-giving industry in other respects.

The Musical Digest published in its issues of January 6 and January 13 last editorials, a news story, and comments by a staff-writer in another part of those two issues . . . on the matter concerned.

Portions of the matter published in the issue of January 13, touching upon utterances by Calvin G. Child, a director of the Victor Talking Machine Company, and pointing out the understood attitude of the Victor in specific radio broadcast respects, are declared by Mr. Child to have been incorrect.

The Musical Digest is gratified over the assurances of Mr. Child that the Victor Company intends to proceed in its broadcast experiment with fullest consideration for the rights of artist-attractions, and their managers; and that it is its desire to safeguard, in all respects, the welfare of the concert-giving industry.

Mr. Child states that at no time has he wished to have an artist-attraction move in any way contrary to the terms of a contractural obligation; and that in indicating he was contrarily inclined The Musical Digest—whatever it may have understood him to have said—has done both him and the Victor Company an injustice.

Whatever misunderstanding may have obtained, there is now no vagueness concerning Mr. Child's expressed desire to conserve in the Victor experimental broadcastings the complete welfare of artist-attraction, wholesale management, and local management.

In emphasizing that the Victor never had any other intention, and never will have, Mr. Child dispels much of the anxiety which has prevailed.

His declaration that he and the Victor Company will proceed with its broadcasting, and the arrangements therefor, in no other save a most constructive manner is accepted with full faith that the declaration will be upheld.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

IT needed only one performance for Wilhelm Furtwaengler, guest leader of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, to prove himself a conductor of the very first rank. The later concerts which he has conducted have strengthened his position.

Provided a new leader has a good orchestra before him, it does not require more than a few minutes for an experienced audience to estimate his abilities. His entire genius is likely to be reflected in any single measure that he plays. The tone and balance of the first chords, the surety of tempo and rhythm of the first phrases, the expressiveness of the first solo themes are often complete revelation of the conductor's talent, taste, and control.

TECHNIQUE seems to me primarily important in the conductor's craft. He may be to the soul a poet, but if he has not at his baton's end the actual ability to draw what he wishes from his orchestra, his poetic nature can be divined only from personal contact, not from hearing his music.

From the moment that he stepped onto his platform Furtwaengler was obviously complete leader of the Philharmonic orchestra. And such leadership consists of more than keeping one hundred players generally in time. It includes keeping them in tune; drawing from them their best possible tone; insisting on the most minute perfection of attack and of balance in ensemble; achieving a rich clarity of parts without spoiling some with undue prominence; making the individual player feel as varied and multiple a scale of dynamics as the leader can imagine himself. Above all, it includes imparting to every member of the orchestra the sense of the whole interpretation of each composition, so that he is interested and carried along as much as anyone in the audience.

Without this binding force, which requires on the part of the conductor the most varied dramatic talents of personality, the many players tend to become listless and dull. Orchestral playing is fundamentally a hard grind. Only brilliant leadership can keep a tubist, for example, from becoming aware, during the tenth week of his season, of the essential inanity of most of his own parts, especially if his interest is allowed to be confined to them alone. It is just as though an organist's leg were to have a mind of its own and to feel a revulsion against pedal points.

WHEN it comes to analyzing the qualities of performance, one is often left at loss. It is much easier to point out what is evil in interpretation than what is good. One can say, such was too fast, for the rhythm was blurred; such was too slow, for the accompaniment lost continuity; such was ragged and uncertain; such was distressingly bad in tone; such was out of tune—many things.

It is harder to find out what makes good performance. A person approaching an acceptedly fine concert critically is often assailed by sentimental friends with the charge that he is losing the larger enjoyment of the music.

That often is ridiculous. Enjoying a piece of music thoroughly is one thing, and it is a pleasure. Trying to find out why a performance of that music was effective is another thing, legitimate and a pleasure too. One can experience these pleasures both at once.

WHAT makes a performance good for the listener is the feeling from measure to measure, from theme to theme, from mood to mood, from rhythm to rhythm, that the orchestra (or any other instrument) is singing its music the way the listener feels to sing it. A good performance then lacks uncertainties, frictions between the listener's mind and what is being played.

He is not made to fidget at one moment because the music is being sung slower than he feels it; to draw back the next as the conductor carries another idea at a breakneck pace; to search painfully for a lost part; to cast about in confusion for a sure beat; to shudder at a tasteless over-emphasis in which an idea is mouthed instead of being simply expressed.

The new guest of the Philharmonic has made his audiences and orchestra (for the musicians who play have perhaps the keenest pleasure of all in good performance, as much as they may be jaded by bad) feel very much the ideal unanimity between his conception of the music that he has conducted and theirs.

THE invasion of the concert hall by the leading jazz orchestras has brought with it some interesting comparisons. Without exception reviewers have been amazed at the virtuosity of the players in these orchestras. There are trumpeters who play flute-like trills above high C, trombonists with the smoothest of glissandos and the silkiest of tones, oboists who make their instruments weep and talk with unbelievable effects of portamento, and so on.

I have heard symphonic trumpets crack on the high C and clarinetists who could handle only their own instruments, without being accomplished on the bass tuba, traps, and bicycle pump at the same time. Yet I believe that good orchestral players are incomparably better musicians than the most skillful vaudevillians among the jazz artists.

I confirmed this impression at the most recent Philharmonic performance of Brahms First Symphony. In about the fortieth measure of the slow movement the second large theme is expressed first by solo oboe followed, overlapping slightly, by clarinet.

The first oboe and clarinet did these passages, under Furtwaengler's guiding baton, with a taste and expressiveness, a feeling for shading, tone, and rhythm which would have been worthy of the greatest of singers.

It seems to me that even the best jazz players, with their woolly smoothness and monotony of tone, could not possibly have treated a simple fervent theme of this sort with such musicianship and mastery. It is significant that the jazz repertory of orchestration includes such assortment of mutes, from sponges to tin hats. That is one way to gain variety of tone. But a good singer, for example, never finds a comb and tissue paper essential to his expressiveness.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

The All-Absorbing Career

Concentration, Method, Perseverance—and Talent—Are Necessary for Success in Music, Believes Guiomar Novaes

by ALICE MASON

"EVERYTHING in the life of a musician is colored by the atmosphere of his work, almost every hour of his day is planned in accordance with a most exacting profession. But I love it! It has been my life!

"There is something so wonderful about music, so uplifting. But then, I have devoted myself to it. Other people do not get so much from it; perhaps because they do not feel as I do.

"That is destiny and as it should be. We cannot all be doing the same things, and if all loved music so intensely where would the other beautiful arts and necessary businesses come in?"

The main facts of Mme. Novaes' career are familiar. She learned to play almost before she could walk, exhibiting her talent in public at the age of four. She was brought up in a musical and artistic circle, studying in Brazil under Luigi Chiaffarelli.

Although she quite often appeared in concert while a very young girl, her time was wisely expended, and her talent carefully cultivated up to the moment when she made her debut in America, which was practically her introduction to the musical world. In her teens, she was recognized as a remarkable pianist. (It may not be remiss to say, that, although eight years have passed since the pretty little black-eyed South American girl astounded New York as she battled with Beethoven in front of an orchestra, although she is called "Madame" and has profound theories concerning her fourteen-month-old daughter, Guiomar Novaes is still in her twenties!)

As I marvelled how one small person could accomplish so much, keep her health without a wrinkle, find time for a beloved family, and bubble over with enthusiasm for the accomplishments of other young musicians from her Southern country, she resumed her capable alert manner to explain that what is necessary for achievement is method supported by perseverence.

"And talent?" I asked, for I know a number of persons who have "practiced" music or other things considerably through an uneventful life.

"Of course,—talent," was the answer. "We all have our preferences, things for which we are best fitted. And in music, such an exacting standard has been set, and so much time is required at best, that without a talent in the first place, it is just a waste of time to aspire after great things. Don't you think so? No teacher in the world can make a Mussolini out of every student of political economy, or a musician with the electric grasp of a virtuoso out of anyone who elects to apply himself.

"Even more important than technical agility is the spiritual essence that must manifest itself. The necessity of constant change of expression is a greater stumbling-block for the pianist than are feats of dexterity. Technique is like the steel framework of a massive building, whose foundation might be likened to music itself. There must be supports and beams, nicely and securely fastened together,—all these comprise technical performance. But without the moulded plaster filling in the walls they cannot be used, as without phrasing and embellishment music has no meaning. In this analogy architecture is the soul of the composer, his message to the world."

MME. GUIOMAR NOVAES

Mme. Novaes seems to have worn the crowded years lightly, and yet behind the soft, untired voice and bright eyes looking eagerly forward during this era of musical evolution, there looms the support of an indomitable will, kept strong by idealism. For she carries harmony beyond piano-playing, she surrounds herself with the beautiful things of life, and is besides, deeply religious. The little girl who at five o'clock was taken into the hotel dining room to have her supper, is not destined to a hard, grinding devotion to the work that has made her mother famous. For this mother believes that personal preference alone should determine such a course, and she asserts that beyond a general musical education her little daughter is not to be influenced in respect to a career.

"And," added Mme. Novaes, with her dimpled, girlish smile, "I should like her to have all the happy experiences natural to young girlhood, that are denied to an artist very often. Only great love of music—which I have—can make up for the sacrifices. And those I shall never exact of my little girl.

"You wish to know something of my plans and ideas about music. For one thing, I am very much interested in the modern school, as it is called. Scriabine is the composer to whom I am devoting particular attention just now. I have to thank Djana Lavoie Hertz for my introduction to many of his less familiar compositions. She is an exponent of his most individual work. In his music there are many-shaded effects that are like the colors of a sunset, they are overtones developed into harmonic embroidery, some of them so fine,—like the lace work of frozen breath on a window-pane. Did you know that Scriabine invented a color-keyboard, with which he experimented considerably in Russia? They call him the 'tone poet,' and it was an ambition of his to synchronize a background of colored light with his finely shaded harmonies. Little came of his effort to introduce the instrument in this country, however, or in his own land for that matter. . . . Then I enjoy the young French composers, a number of them. Severac is interesting. A young musician from my country is having great success in France, Villa Lobos is his name. I am so glad, because he is very talented.

"Spanish composers? Oh yes! Of course I particularly like what Albeniz wrote—and I play things by Enrique Granados. It was too bad he had to die so young. You remember he was drowned when the Sussex went down, in 1916, I think it was, just at the time of his big success, when his opera Goyescas was winning a reputation. . . . There will be more Spanish musicians heard from before long, and some I think from South America."

Guiomar Novaes particularly likes England, where she has many friends. She will visit there next summer. Some recitals will follow in Britain and on the Continent, but not until after Mme. Novaes and her family have enjoyed a few weeks of the cool English summer among the hills that remind her of some parts of her own Brazil.

Third Artists' Series Concert

Henry Hadley conducted the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in the third concert of the artists' series of the Association of Music School Settlements in Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 17. Ernest Hutcheson was the soloist in MacDowell's Piano Concerto in D minor. The Post review said: "Under Mr. Hadley's vigorous and energetic baton the musicians played well a Carnevale Romaine of Berlioz as the opening number. They fairly excelled themselves in the New World Symphony of Dvorak." The program ended with the tone poem, The Ocean, of Mr. Hadley, and a selection from Gotterdammerung. The Herald Tribune reported "an excellent performance" by Mr. Hutcheson.

Marta Sung at Metropolitan

Opening the twelfth week of the Metropolitan Opera season Marta was sung on the evening of January 19. The cast was the same as that which appeared in Marta earlier in the season. It included Mmes. Alda and Howard, and Messrs. Gigli, Didur, and Malatesta, and Mr. Papi conducted.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Solfitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York
Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

The Great

MARTINELLI

Triumphs

© Mishkin, N. Y.

as ELEAZAR

in the revival of "La Juive"

at the Metropolitan Opera House, on Friday Evening, December 12, 1924.

Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau, 33 West 42nd Street: New York

Personal Representative: Ernest Henkel, 1451 Broadway, New York

VICTOR RECORDS KNABE PIANO

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

AMERICANS are oddly inclined, it would seem, in the bestowal of their applause upon some music composition they hear, or some interpretative accomplishment. At one moment that approval is justly conferred; at the next it is as inept. What is the cause? Are we lacking in discrimination? Is it that we really do not know what is excellent and the reverse and why? That we "sense" the good in some unconscious fashion, and, later (or earlier, as the case may be), are misled by the vagaries of an uncontrolled "feeling" into the disclosing of music ignorance!

A study of New York audiences—of audiences of other cities—reveals a shocking lack of discrimination on the part of the listening public. It is alert, and estimates correctly; whereupon the observer rejoices. It is polite, and accepts a mediocre endeavor with almost corresponding recognition.

What does all this mean?

Are we musical? Yes.

Are we discriminating? No.

Will we ever be? That is the question, as Shakespeare said. We certainly won't be by persisting along the present course. There is much too much superficiality on the part of the listening public, which hasn't as yet become thoroughly acquainted with standards. When people begin to exercise discernment, as they can, and trust their own ears (instead of relying, as so many do, upon the opinions of others) there will ensue a quality of popular verdict eminently worth while. Until then—well, merit is certain of a somewhat rocky road . . . with inferiority wearing a decoration it has not earned.

THAT TRIBUTE paid Mrs. Mary Flint last Sunday week by her writing-confreres and a number of musicians proved again that some hearts actually beat. Bad weather is no deterrent to this seventy-eight-years-old lady in performing her duty as a chronicler of music events. She issues forth from her Brooklyn, N. Y., home with a smile. She goes her way, into the Metropolitan Opera House and other New York auditoriums where music is made, and has a good time on her journies. The smile of Mary Flint, her cheery voice, and firm handclasp are ever welcome. She's a Golden Rule sort who is comforting to have around.

A GOOD press agent story is always welcome. What matter if it happens to bear evidence of manufacture so long as the idea is novel and the yarn well put together? Some of the best newspaper city editors in this country hail with delight the advent (especially on a night when news is scarce) of what one beetle-browed newspaperman loved to term the "passionate press agent." And his copy, oftener than not, lands on the first page.

Now comes Harry Becker—erstwhile of Chicago, now of New York—with something quite novel. What did he do? Why, he introduced a prima donna on skis to Gothamites. And she was no less a personality than Elisabeth Rethberg . . . Signor Gatti-Casazza's dulcet-voiced soprano.

Whenever Mme. Rethberg sings I like to be thereabouts. For her tones have a heavenly quality, and she knows—oh, how well she knows—how to produce them. If I were a professional singer, or had the urge to become one, I'd never miss an opportunity to listen to this Saxon lady, who in private life is Mrs. Albert Doman.

Mme. Rethberg skied, as I previously stated, and the spot selected was Riverside Drive Park near One Hundred and Sixteenth street. The time was a little more than a week ago, and the New York dailies "jumped" at the story. That written for the Sun was clever no end. It closed with this paragraph:

"If Mme. Rethberg's skiing on Riverside Drive attracts many recruits, the police of the West 100th street station will serve notice on them that they won't be responsible for anyone who goes over the tracks and into the river. Their slogan is, 'Be healthful but careful!'" All of which is tantamount to a Stop, Look, and Listen railroad crossing sign which some motorists scoff at just before the trains hit them.

EVER SINCE Josef Stransky laid down the baton of New York's State Symphony Orchestra, and Ignatz Waghalter took it up, that organization has come suddenly into what appears to be a new life. Waghalter is demonstrating how fine a musician he is; and a routined conductor as well. He knows the traditions. And he has pulled together his orchestra, in the short time he has had it, to a surprising degree.

Waghalter is one of your serious, painstaking orchestra leaders. Of frills he knows little, and he has no mannerisms . . . which in these days of conductorial posings is a distinct relief. The coming few months will enable many people to gauge the abilities of this newcomer conductor to New York's symphonic field. He is getting his chance, even though the material at his command is not completely of the foremost order. The increased number of rehearsals is commencing to reflect its effect; also the responsiveness of the musicians, who appear to be united in the determination to give Waghalter the very best they have.

FEW PERSONS know D. Edward Porter, the newly appointed manager of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, who takes up his duties on May 1st next. President Murphy, of the Detroiters, is sorry to see William Walter depart; but he is relieved in the assurance that in Brother Porter he has an able man.

Porter has seen extended service as an associate orchestra manager. He served with Felix Leifels when the latter reigned as the New York Philharmonic's managerial head. Then with Arthur Judson, when that active and widely sought-after person consented to add to his Philadelphia Orchestra responsibilities those of the Philharmonic as well.

The Detroit Symphony organization is becoming solidly entrenched. Walter's efforts—staunchly supported by Mr. Murphy and his associates—have brought that about. So Brother Porter will take hold as a full-fledged orchestra manager with a "going" concern. But he will be missed in New York Philharmonic circles . . . even by those who most wish him well.

THOSE young women who carried trays of sandwiches and cups of tea through the crowd that gathered in the studios of Frank La Forge and Ernest Berumen last Sunday week must have rehearsed long and well. Up to date no reports have been received of any casualties. All the while Lawrence Tibbett—in whose honor the reception was held—stood in one spot, shaking the hands of the guests and listening to congratulatory phrases anent his Ford in Falstaff.

THAT PIECE published on this page a few weeks ago about the marginal notations of Mrs. Eleanor Freer brought me a clever letter. "Aren't you to be congratulated," she wishes to know, "in knowing that one (woman) person who writes little and talks less? If you ever want me to write a long letter I'll do so."

That may be called special consideration. Mrs. Freer continues to promote the cause of the American Opera Company of Chicago, which Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick is so interested in, and there accompanies Mrs. Freer's brief letter some printed material concerning some of the plans that are being carried out.

Well, opera in English is getting into the public eye rather forcibly of late. Perhaps before long it will be getting into the ears of people.

A NEW manifestation of the all-important place which music is assuming in the life of people of the United States is to be found in the increasing interest which our educational institutions are taking in the training of music "critics," that class of persons whose task it is to keep the general public informed as to what is happening in music throughout the world and in particular places.

Two years ago the Music Department of Columbia University decided to devote one of its graduate fellowships to the aid and encouragement of students of music criticism. Shortly after both Yale and Harvard announced more or less elaborate courses in this branch of music and learning. Now announcements of similar courses in all parts of the country fly thick and fast. Felix Borowski is next summer to have a class in Chicago in the training of music writers, and the University of Virginia announces a course of study which is to enlist the aid of radio.

THERE is much uncertainty, even among music critics, as to what the task of music "criticism" may be. Much of the confusion arises from the fact that the word criticism is a misnomer in the description of this profession. Somehow the idea has got about that criticism means finding fault.

The story is told of a music event which in the old days took place in a city of considerable size. The editors of both the morning and evening issues of a certain newspaper chose men (with more or less musical training) from the respective staffs to cover the concert in really critical style.

Next day, bright and early, the morning newspaper man, who had already written his review and done the other tasks of his night work, was issuing from his office, when he met the evening paper writer coming in for his day's work. "Good morning, Dick," said the morning paper writer, "How did you like the concert last night?"

"Great," was the response of the evening newspaper reporter, who already had an issue of the morning sheet in his hand, "didn't you?"

"It was fine, enjoyed myself immensely," replied he of the morning sheet.

"But see here," said the evening man waving the newspaper which he held, "I see that you've roasted the thing awfully, from beginning to end."

"Oh," was the rejoinder, "I went there to criticize, you know."

THE first function of the music reviewer, in fact, is that of a reporter. There is an event taking place, and the world wishes to be informed of it. Naturally the editor chooses to cover this event a man who is most fitted to speak about it, a specialist in music reporting.

What a music writer's attitude should be is indicated in the experience that practically every person who hears a concert goes through many times next day . . . if he has friends who are interested in music. They greet him, and ask, "Did you hear the symphony concert last night? What was the program? Was it good? They played some new music, didn't they . . . what was it all about?"—and so on.

Secondly the reviewer must appraise the standard of the concert for his readers. They are interested in whether a singer, an instrumentalist, or an orchestra is of the very highest standard, or of the second class, or merely of amateur or semi-professional standing.

Finally there is the duty of discussion of the quality of the music rendered and of its rendition on the particular occasion—in other words opinion. It is here that the music reviewer uses his taste, his experience, his training in music, and his intelligence. Having placed the music event in its proper class, he now considers its quality within that class. This too is simply in reply to natural questions, for the readers in their minds are asking, "How was it? How was she? How was he?"

A music reviewer who approaches his work with a realization of his real duties—and who knows his subject (which is of prime importance)—is apt to write reports of concerts which music lovers will flock to read.

IN THE general rush to take advantage of the courses which so many schools are offering in music reviewing, young persons who are interested both in music and in journalism must remember one thing. It is all very well to be able to write an excellent news story, to be in full command of that part of journalistic technique; but even more important to the music reporter is a well grounded and full knowledge of his or her subject.

The time has passed when the American music public was indifferent whether concerts were reviewed by society reporters, baseball scribes, or friends of the editor's family. Nowadays persons who are interested in music demand that the reviewers whose columns they read know what they are talking about.

The student of music reviewing must be almost as much interested in the theory and history of music as if he were intending to become a professional musician or composer.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Samuel Dushkin

There were two novelties on the program offered by Samuel Dushkin in his violin recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on January 18. These were Moussorgsky's Ripples and two Brazilian Dances by Darius Milhaud. The Times reviewer wrote that in Mozart's A major Concerto "the purity and silky texture of Mr. Dushkin's tone were equaled by the truly Mozartian elegance of the interpretation. It was a highly poetic and sensitive performance, an enchanting piece of craftsmanship which was greatly applauded."

Agreed was the Sun writer that "Mr. Dushkin played with good tone and rhythm, and his reading of Mozart's Concerto was a sound and convincing one. His bowing was good and his style was intelligent and characterized by a good deal of insight into the form and structure of his offerings." This writer, however, was not so enthused over his playing of Ravel's Tzigane in which he found "slurred phrasing" and lack of clarity.

While playing this composition, Mr. Dushkin broke a string on his violin and this mishap undoubtedly influenced his playing. Herbert F. Peyser of the Telgram-Mail said that the violinist "reaffirmed substantially the impression he created here from the first. His playing without achieving any element of conspicuous distinction or beauty, maintains a certain creditable standard." In the Herald Tribune, F. D. Perkins wrote that he gave "a skillful, well-balanced performance with a smooth, pleasing tone of adequate volume and well-developed technique, as well as expressive ability."

Miss Margaret Sittig

At her violin recital in Town Hall Wednesday evening Margaret Sittig "established herself in the favor of the audience from the start by a fluent mechanism and a fresh and vivid imagination," according to the Times reviewer. In the Vieuxtemps Concerto, continued this writer, she displayed "a tone at once firm and sweet and a fine sense of contrast in the different movements."

The Sun reviewer wrote that "her bowing was firm and vigorous and when desirable energetic and forceful. Her tone was full and sonorous, and thorough musicianship and sound intelligence were evident throughout the program. Her technique was sure, her intonation faultless." In the Herald Tribune the commenator referred to the recital as "a convincing display of talent," and added that, in his opinion, Miss Sittig showed "well developed technical skill and a tone of a quality notably above the average, of ample size and breadth. She played vigorously, but was able to retain the smoothness and volume of her tone in energetically bowed passages—an ability not widespread." Miss Sittig was accompanied by her father, Frederick V. Sittig.

New York Symphony Orchestra

The New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, played Beethoven's First and Ninth Symphonies in Carnegie Hall on January 22. In the last Symphony, the choral parts were taken by the Oratorio Society, and the soloists were Ruth Rodgers, soprano; Helena Marsh, contralto; Charles Stratton, tenor, and Fraser Gange, baritone.

The Sun reported that Mr. Damrosch "conducted a sincere and generally excellent performance in which there were feeling and clarity." The writer in the Times remarked that he conducted "with a contagious enthusiasm. He loves the music and he conducted it with a gusto which often caused the listener to forget the technical details or analytical mental processes as he stirred to the power, the strife, the ecstacy of Beethoven." In speaking of the difficulties of the vocal parts, this reviewer commented that they were sung "in such style as the capacities of the singers and the difficulties of the score permitted."

According to the chronicler in the Herald Tribune, the Ninth Symphony was well performed, and "the general average was distinctly above that of the corresponding performances last year." This writer also thought that the chorus "seemed in better form than it has before, producing a tone of very creditable fullness and smoothness, especially in the earlier part of the Ode to Joy." He continued that Mrs. Rodgers' "highest notes rang out with a notable smoothness and purity of tone," and that "the size and resonance of Mr. Gange's voice made it effective."

Robert Imandt

Robert Imandt, violinist, was assisted by the Lenox String Quartet and Aurelio Giorni, pianist, at his Aeolian Hall recital on January 22. According to the Herald Tribune reporter, Mr. Imandt proved to be "a very good violinist, with marked technical skill and a tone of good size, generally smooth and full."

The reviewer in the Sun wrote that he again revealed "the sound qualities of good musicianship which he has displayed before. For some reason his bowing and fingering were not always consistently firm, and some of his offerings suffered from slight technical flaws." However, this writer found, in the Bach Concerto, "a fine tone, sure intonation, and considerable confidence and authority." Raymond Bauman was his accompanist.

Chausson's Concerto was "most ably played" by Mr. Giorni and the Quartet, according to the Post commentator. He also spoke of the "beauty of expression and phrasing" which these artists imparted to other pieces on the program.

Falstaff

Falstaff, which was acclaimed as the most brilliant revival of the year by the Metropolitan Opera Company at its first performance two weeks ago, was again produced on January 17. The cast was the same, including Mmes. Bori, Alda, Telva, and Howard, and Messrs. Scotti, Tibbett, Gigli, Bada, Paltrinieri, and Didur. Tullio Serafin again conducted and, to quote the Herald Tribune, "was alert, masterful, illuminating." The production as a whole, continued this writer, "is a brilliant one—among the finest in the Metropolitan's recent history."

According to the Times reviewer, Lawrence Tibbett "again acquitted himself with distinction in the music of Ford's monologue, though the matinee audience did not hold up the opera at that point as its only eveing predecessor had done." The Sun commentator did not find him in good voice and thought his delivery of the scene less effective than in the former performance. The Post commended his work, and the Herald Tribune chronicler found him "again admirable, though not quite so electrifyingly effective."

In the Sun, Mr. Scotti and Mme. Bori were said to be "again excellent." The writer in the Herald Tribune wrote of the cast: "Mr. Scotti, however, was in his best form, and captivated the audience by the humor and gusto of his impersonation. The delightful Mistress Ford of Bori was of undiminished gayety and grace; Marion Telva's adroit Dame Quickly was again applauded, and Kathleen Howard was a buoyant Mistress Page. Mr. Bada, Mr. Paltrinieri and Mr. Didur were ingeniously comic."

The Post reviewer considered it an "unusually well balanced cast."

The whole opera, to quote the Sun, "was given with vivacity and the spirit of comedy."

Masked Tenor Sings

The first of the series of musicals at the Hotel Roosevelt, New York, for the benefit of the Bryn Mawr Music Fund and of the City Music League, was given on January 16. The artists appearing were Francis Macmillen, violinist, the Duchess of Richelieu, soprano, and a masked tenor.

The Telegram-Mail reporter wrote of Mr. Macmillen that "as always, his work was eminently pleasing." Both of the singers were suffering from colds but the Herald Tribune reviewer thought that the masked tenor, in spite of this, displayed a "voice of a smooth and soft, very agreeable quality and tone, command of phrasing and tone." The writer in the Sun agreed that he revealed "a pleasing voice of refinement and good tone."

Wellington Smith

A baritone from Boston, Wellington Smith, made his first appearance here Wednesday afternoon in Aeolian Hall, accompanied by Kurt Schindler. In the Times review he was commended for "a pleasant, lyric" voice, and for his singing of Brahms' Feldeinsamkeit, "where a good mezza voce did him excellent service."

The Herald Tribune reviewer said that Mr. Smith "sang with a voice of adequate volume and agreeable tone, sometimes slightly ruffled, with distinct taste and intelligence and considerable expressive capability." According to the Sun chronicler, "his voice is rich and powerful in the lower registers, though at times too far back. The head register lacks resonance. His phrasing and legato were good and his diction for the most part clear. The most interesting feature of his delivery was his fine understanding of text. His style was also good. . . ." This writer mentioned that "delightful accompaniments were furnished by Mr. Kindler."

Mme. Lydia Maltzeva

Lydia Maltzeva, Russian soprano, made her American debut at Aeolian Hall, New York, January 17, in an all-Russian program. According to the Sun reviewer, "Her performance showed marked talent for operatic interpretation. Her voice, of fine carrying power and resonance, she used with much understanding of phrase and dramatic expression. Her stage presence had charm." The Herald Tribune writer observed that Mme. Maltzeva "possessed a voice of marked power and sang with vigor and much expression," which was marred occasionally by "a somewhat harsh, unpolished quality of tone in louder notes." In the opinion of the Times chronicler, she displayed "a strong, carrying, slightly metallic voice which would be very useful on the stage."

Assisting Mme. Maltzeva was Peter Meremblum, violinist, who, to quote this reviewer, played with "an attractive tone and a flexible technique." Agreed was the Herald Tribune writer that he showed "an agreeable tone and technical skill." Michael Fevey-sky was at the piano.

Clifton Conducts Second Program

The second concert by the American Orchestral Society was given at Cooper Union, New York, on the evening of January 18. Chalmers Clifton conducted. The program included Beethoven's Egmont Overture, Rimsky Korsakoff's Suite from the Tsar Saltan, Wagner's Prelude and Love Death from Tristan, and Chabrier's Espagna. Elizabeth Gutman sang an aria from Massenet's Herodiade.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building, Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.; or Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Fritz Kreisler

At his first New York appearance this season on January 19, Fritz Kreisler played a program made up of familiar numbers, including Handel's A major Sonata, Bach's A minor Fugue, the Bruch G minor Concerto, and a group of shorter pieces and transcriptions by Mr. Kreisler.

Ernest Newman of the Post said that, in most of the program, he "was at his best, making every phrase a living line of the kind that draughtsmen and sculptors delight in, and giving us the feeling that behind the smallest thing he was saying was a fine brain and a deep culture." In the opinion of Deems Taylor of the World, there is "no virtuoso whose playing gives one to such a degree the feeling of being in close communion with a great and rare spirit."

To quote Olin Downes' review in the Times: "As he has often done in the past, the violinist, while giving value and significance to the linear qualities of old music, did not hesitate to give that music sentiment and the sensuous color which is part of his nature." W. J. Henderson of the Sun and the other writers agreed with that reviewer although the Herald Tribune observer thought Mr. Kreisler's intonation "not always impeccable." Mr. Newman wrote that Carl Lamson's piano accompaniments "were always skillful, while that to the Saint-Saens was a superlatively fine piece of coloring."

Deyo-Enesco-Kindler

An ensemble recital was given at Aeolian Hall on January 17 by Georges Enesco, Roumanian composer and violinist; Ruth Deyo, pianist, and Hans Kindler, cellist. In addition to trios by Loeillet and Ravel, Mr. Enesco and Miss Deyo offered the Cesar Franck piano and violin Sonata.

This Sonata, according to the Times reviewer, was given "an admirably authoritative performance." The Sun commentator considered that the entire program was performed "with excellent spirit and appreciation" and added that Mr. Enesco's "penetrating intellect, fine emotional sensibilities and, for the most part, golden tone, combined in making his leadership somewhat pronounced in the ensemble." This writer also thought that he and Miss Deyo "gave a richly seasoned reading of Franck's Sonata, and one with poetic vein definitely to the fore," and that the trio's reading of "the charming old French work had much grace and sparkling spirit."

In the Herald Tribune, the reviewer wrote that they made, on the whole, "a very good ensemble, with a smooth and full combined tone. Miss Deyo played with vigor and smoothness in the Ravel work, and Mr. Kindler, an excellent ensemble player, gave a refined, well-balanced performance." This chronicler thought the Sonata had "a notable performance" and that Mr. Enesco's tone was "unusually beautiful, possessing, at the same time, richness and delicacy."

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

New York Trio

A composition previously unheard in New York, a trio by Miklos Radnai, Hungarian composer, was played by the New York Trio at its first concert of the season at Aeolian Hall on the evening of January 19. The group consists of Louis Edlin, violinist; Cornelius Van Vliet, cellist; and Clarence Adler, pianist.

The other two numbers on the program were Schumann's G minor Trio, Opus 110, and Beethoven's Trio in G major, Opus 1, No. 2.

The Times review said, "The Trio by Miklos Radnai in five movements is quite modern in tendency. The mood of each section is indicated by its title." This reviewer felt that only three of the movements corresponded to their titles, the other two being rather monotonous. The observer of the Sun expressed the opinion that this was music "with some lack of compactness and continuity," but that it was interesting and deserved repetition.

This commentator said also, "The New York Trio played the score admirably with some special praise going to Mr. Edlin for his artistic violin work." The Times report also spoke of the playing of the ensemble in terms of its handling of the novelty of the program: "The work was given an expressive reading by the three musicians, whose ensemble playing showed the results of their long collaboration; the tone color of the strings being particularly good."

The Post commented that the scherzo and finale movements of the Beethoven were "charmingly played," and applauded Mr. Van Vliet and Mr. Adler for their playing in the Schumann. Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail: "Messrs. Adler, Edlin, and Van Vliet played the Radnai composition with evident sympathy.

Adalbert Ostendorff

One of the debuts of the week was that of Adalbert Ostendorff, pianist, who was heard at Aeolian Hall, New York, January 16. The Times reviewer found in his playing "a singular clarity of vision, even when transcending the player's technical command and slender physique. His interest was plainly not in decorative details, but in mass effects of a fine, firm tone that sang its thread of gold through the broad web of harmony." In the Sun he was commended for "fluent finger technique and understanding," although he showed "some lack of poetic and tonal delicacy."

The Herald Tribune writer found him "a vigorous pianist, and, after overcoming a somewhat experimental air and irregularity of pace, one possessing marked technical skill and dexterity of fingers." The Telegram-Mail reviewer thought his playing too heavy and inclined excessively to fortissimos.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

Flonzaley Quartet

Ernest Schelling was guest artist with the Flonzaley Quartet in its concert at Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening in his own composition, played here for the first time, Divertimento, for string quartet with piano obbligato. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail referred to the music as "a group of pleasing little pieces." In two of the pieces a novel effect was gained by tapping the violin and cello cases with the hand, tom-tom fashion.

Ernest Newman of the Post did not find the Flonzaleys at their best, but he liked the Schelling music, which he called "a sort of Cook's tour in music." He found "a curious and exotic fascination" about the Raga and the Gazal. According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, the sketches "are fanciful and picturesque and high spirited" and were played by the Flonzaleys and Mr. Schelling "with gusto and brilliance." He did not think the Quartet did its best work in the Haydn and Brahms.

On the other hand, the Sun reviewer thought these two quartets "beautifully played." Olin Downes of the Times did not think the Divertimento should be taken too seriously, and Deems Taylor of the World found it pleasant but more or less unimportant.

State Symphony

An all-Tschaikowsky program was offered by Ignatz Waghalter at his second appearance as conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra. Ossip Gabrilowitsch as soloist played the Piano Concerto in B flat minor. The program opened with the Overture to Romeo and Juliet, and ended with the Fifth Symphony.

The Times reviewer asserted that "it would be hard to surpass for virility, fire and consummate virtuosity" the performance given by Mr. Gabrilowitsch. In the World he was commended for his "usual deft and sympathetic" rendition of the work. According to the Sun writer, the soloist did not receive adequate support from the orchestra: "The fire in the foreground consorted but ill with the ice in the background. Furthermore, the resonance of the piano tone was not at all favorable toward the dullness of the orchestra."

Mr. Waghalter gave a "sincere and emotional reading of the overture," to quote the Times reviewer, who thought that "he was heard as a conductor to excellent advantage in the climax of the love music and in the dirge that brings the end." The Post attributed to the extra rehearsals the fact that he was "able to invest the performance with something of his own personality and give to the effect a style and polish lost in the necessary caution of a first time."

Miss Cecile de Horvath

Cecile de Horvath, pianist, gave her first New York recital this season last Tuesday afternoon at Aeolian Hall. Her program, interesting in its unconventionality, included the seldom-heard Glazounoff Sonata in B flat minor. In it, according to the Sun writer, Miss de Horvath "demonstrated her admirable command of piano pyrotechniques, feeling of emotional content and fluid pianistic speech."

The Times chronicler referred to her as "a pianist of considerable attainment" and said that the first group of her program "gave the test of her powers and found her at her best. . . . The Liszt Ballade, with which she started, was played in good form, an effervescent, brilliant technique joined to a sense of its poetical moments." In the Herald Tribune the writer said that Miss de Horvath "played as a skilled, thoroughly competent pianist, at home in rapid passages and where technical difficulties were most rampant playing with spirit and expressive ability."

Marco Enrico Bossi

The Wanamaker Auditorium was draped with Italian and American flags for the recital given there last Tuesday by Marco Enrico Bossi, Italian organist and composer. In spite of the storm, there was a large audience, and the central box was occupied by the Italian Vice-Consul, Maffimo Zanotti-Bianco.

On his program were several of his own compositions. To quote the Herald Tribune commentator, he showed himself "a thorough master of his instrument" and his performance of Bach "had what might be called a dignified brilliance, grandeur, but not grandiosity, with the nuances in tempo and expression fully brought out." The Sun chronicler wrote that his general performance "was that of a master. It had technical skill, backed by admirable understanding, fine taste and musicianship, and withal that nobility of style that is in keeping with the character of the organ."

Max Barnett in Piano Recital

Max Barnett gave a piano recital in Town Hall last Tuesday evening. The Times found that he possessed a "hard and driving force, a rough and ready technique, which did not always take into account the smaller detail and the lesser nuances." In part of his program, according to the Sun reviewer, he displayed "clarity, repose, and beauty of tone. At its best Mr. Barnett has a technique of much brilliancy in elaborate pieces." According to the Herald Tribune, he "showed considerable skill, with fluency and a capacity for high speed."

SASCHA FIDELMAN
Russian Violinist
Management H. & A. Culbertson, Aeolian Hall, New York.

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Chicago En Courant

A Summary of the Season's Accomplishments of the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Jan. 20.

THE ELEVENTH week of the Chicago Civic Opera Company's season has been completed. One-half week of non-subscription performances remains before the company leaves on its eight weeks' tour, which will carry it as far East as Boston and as far South as Dallas.

The season has been one of accomplishment, in some ways extraordinary. Inevitably there have been errors of commission and omission in all departments, but that sincere effort was made to present the best opera within the scope of the company's ability cannot be doubted.

Of the thirty-six operas promised, thirty-five will have appeared with the Pelleas and Melisande on Thursday evening. The thirty-sixth, Henry Hadley's Bianca, by the "See America Last" process of scheduling, is not being given. This omission left the German Hansel and Gretel the only test of the popularity of opera in English.

As usual, there was a preponderance of Italian works during the season, with nineteen in all, as against thirteen in French and one each in German and English.

NINETY-NINE performances will have been sung by Saturday night, a weekly average of nearly nine. Such a schedule, together with the necessary rehearsal work, has naturally put a terrific strain on the members of the chorus and orchestra. What with rehearsals filling all odd moments, that neither section has entirely succumbed to a state of dullness is a testimony to their skill and staying powers. Another result of the policy of extra shows has been the plaint of certain subscribers that so many "first" performances were extras.

A preponderance of coloraturas made the repertoire somewhat too Donizettian for the taste of the routined opera-goer, but all the sopranos of this type who appeared proved worth hearing.

PRODUCTIONS have varied, from the gorgeousness of Boris Godunoff to the mediocrity of some of the old Hammerstein sets. On the whole, they have been adequate. Stage management, never a strong point with the Chicago company, was conspicuous by its absence this year.

Another noticeable lack was in the ballet department. Here a total disregard of the composer's intent frequently prevailed. Thus the incongruity of a Hindu God dancing in an Assyrian temple (last act, Samson and Dalila), and of a day of some twenty-nine hours, some of them masculine (in the Dance of the Hours, Gioconda), seemed to annoy no one except the conductor of the performance and that section of the public who prefer a semblance of truthfulness even in their ballet entertainments.

A CERTAIN penny pinching policy as to the secondary artists of the company has endangered many performances and wrecked some. This second line of singers is frequently little praised by the press and public, yet by its competence performances may stand or fall. The company is proud in the possession of two superb character actors in Vittorio Trevisan and Maria Claessens, who lend intelligent characterization and a fine style to whatever roles they undertake. Mojica and Oliviero, too, are most valuable, as is Desire Defrere when not too obviously elevated out of his sphere. In other cases, however, there was a sad lack.

The absence of such assured and useful artists as Irene Pavloska and Margery Maxwell has been keenly felt. In no case has either been adequately replaced. An opera company without a bright soubrette type is unthinkable, yet that is the handicap which the Chicago company has labored under in casting such roles as Musetta in Boheme, Nancy in Martha, etc.

OF THE principal artists, many achieved personal triumphs. The soprano sections could be cut in half and still contain five or six of the world's best voices. Edith Mason probably holds the palm for the most spontaneously beautiful singing of the year, but unfortunately, from the public standpoint, only came to hearing the latter part of the season. Garden remains the outstanding personality of the company, but even her presence has been unable to reclaim the past glories of the once superb French company which was ours. Muzio has been popular, combining beauty of voice and intelligence of acting to a rare degree. Raisa remains a dramatic soprano without superior with a voice which for sheer gorgeousness is hardly matched. The American coloratura, Florence Macbeth, proved by her success with the audiences the futility of searching the globe for coloratura talent.

Feodor Chaliapin maintained his vogue in a variety of roles, from the absurd but side-splitting Basilio in the Barber to the tragic dignity of Boris. Tito Schipa's popularity is so great that the toppling of the no encore rule is imminent each time he sings. Ansseau's honest singing has won him ever increasing acclaim, as has that of Marshall, Lamont and Hackett. Baklanoff's belated return was greeted by a sigh of relief.

THE CONDUCTING staff has been entirely adequate, with Giorgio Polacco, a veritable tower of strength, at its head. With his great flare for the theatre added to his splendid control of his orchestra, a brilliant performance is assured with him in the conductor's stand. Moranzoni has proved of the first class also. The company's policy of giving young conductors a chance was amply vindicated by the results gained by Weber, Van Grove and St. Leger.

SO THE strength of the season has been great, and the weaknesses are subject to correction. Fewer productions might bring about a more concentrated attendance as well as better performances. More appearances of favorite artists might obviate numerous unnecessary paid passages to and from Europe. The most expensive stage manager available would probably prove the cheapest in the long run, and mistakes as to lesser artists can and will be, we hope, corrected.

Chicago Opera in Boston

TONIGHT

Louise — with Mme. Garden and Messrs. Ansseau and Baklanoff; Mr. Polacco conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Boris Godunoff (matinee)—with Mme. Van Gordon and Messrs. Chaliapin, Lamont, and Lazzari; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Boheme (evening)—with Mme. Mason and Messrs. Cortis, Rimini, Lazzari, and Trevisan; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

THURSDAY

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Forrai and Van Gordon; and Messrs. Lamont and Schwarz; Mr. Weber conducting.

FRIDAY

Carmen — with Mmes. Garden and Mason; and Messrs. Ansseau and Baklanoff; Mr. Polacco conducting.

SATURDAY

Romeo and Juliet (matinee) — with Mme. Mason and Messrs. Hackett and Formichi; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Tosca (evening)—with Mme. Muzio and Messrs. Cortis and Schwarz; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

Romeo and Juliet Is Presented in Chicago

Chicago, Jan. 19.—The final week of the Chicago Civic Opera Company's season here was ushered in by the first presentation of Romeo and Juliet. Edith Mason and Charles Hackett sang the title roles, and Giorgio Polacco conducted. According to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, Mr. Polacco conducted "with every resource of the artist and with the genial accomplishments of the musician."

Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner wrote that Miss Mason sang "with unbelievable beauty, brilliancy, and sympathy." In Mr. Rosenfeld's opinion, she displayed the "silvery quality, the refinement of tone, the smoothest legato, and the flexibility for the artistic rendition of the waltz song." She was referred to as "the loveliest lyric soprano of the generation" by Edward Moore of the Tribune.

This writer said that Mr. Hackett "gave an uncommonly attractive and persuasive performance." To Mr. Gunn, he revealed himself as "a thoroughly fine artist," and Mr. Rosenfeld lauded his "fresh, youthful singing, his musical taste in such scenes as the garden scene, his warmth of manner, his manliness and his general impersonation of this operatic figure, both vocally and dramatically."

Of others in the cast, Mr. Rosenfeld wrote that those deserving special praise were "Cesar Formichi, for his delineation of Capulet, and for his robust singing; Desire Defrere the Mercutio, for his singing of the scherzo in the first act; Gladys Swarthout as Steffano, for her singing of the serenade and her winsome appearance; Cotreuil as Friar Lawrence and Mojica for his Tybault." Mr. Moore joined in this commendation, and added that "the splendid ability" of Maria Claessens made "the almost negligible part of Gertrude a definite part of the drama." The remaining members of the cast were Antonio Nicolich, Gildo Morelato, and Jean de Keyser.

Schipa Appears in Von Flotow's Martha

Edith Mason, Flora Perini, Lazzari, and Trevisan Sing; Moranzoni Conducts.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—The first performance this season of von Flotow's Martha was given by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last night, with Edith Mason, Tito Schipa, Flora Perini, Virgilio Lazzari, and Vittorio Trevisan in the leading roles. Roberto Moranzoni conducted, according to Edward Moore of the Tribune, "speedily, lightly, and accurately, putting the chorus and orchestra into the same mood and making them express it." Karleton Hackett of the Post wrote that he "gave particularly sympathetic accompaniments for the soli, and brought out the quality of the music with sure touch."

In Mr. Moore's opinion, Miss Mason and Mr. Schipa "both sang exquisitely from first to last, and in each case they gave definite characterization to their roles." Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that Miss Mason's "pure, lyric soprano" was particularly well adapted to the role, and that Mr. Schipa's Lionel was a significant operatic interpretation. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner was particularly enthusiastic over the work of these two principals, and Mr. Hackett spoke of Miss Mason's tone as being "limpidly pure and expressive," and of Mr. Schipa's as "floating on the air in exquisite loveliness."

Mme. Perini, to quote Mr. Moore, was in excellent voice, while Mr. Rosenfeld considered that she sang the role of Nancy "with poise and aplomb." As Mr. Hackett put it, "Mme. Perini looked pretty and played her part well."

In Mr. Gunn's words, "Lazzari also sang with superb art...He is quite as brilliant a comedian as the famous Trevisan, who competed with him last night." Mr. Rosenfeld commented that Mr. Lazzari gave to the role a "really robust characterization" and that his singing was "as invariably artistic and routined." He also thought that Mr. Trevisan acted with "drollery and unction." According to Mr. Hackett, "Mr. Lazzari sang excellently and added much to the merriment of the evening. Mr. Trevisan added another of his fine character sketches as Sir Tristan." Mr. Moore joined in the general commendation of their work.

Although convinced of the excellence of the performance, most of the chroniclers mentioned that the chorus was far below standard, and lacked spirit. Others in the cast were Gildo Morelato, Maurice Kostroff, Philip Aronson, Jean de Keyser, Anna Correnti, Constance Bitteri, Elizabeth Kerr, Herman Dreben, Inez Nascimbene, and Mary Guillermo.

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Stock Offers Malipiero Novelty

Chicago Hears Two String Quartets; Zimbalist, Farbman, Dohnanyi and Gitta Gradova in Recitals.

Chicago, Jan. 19.—The novelty at the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra last Friday was Malipiero's Impressions from Nature, Part III. According to the reviewers the modern piece suffered in comparison with the older music on the program, which included Goldmark's First Symphony, and excerpts from Berlioz's Damnation of Faust. The majority of the music, in the opinion of Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, "was performed by the orchestra under Mr. Stock's direction with flawless technique and with beautiful tone qualities."

In the Malipiero pieces, Mr. Rosenfeld found some "novel instrumental blendings, which are original and striking," but, on the whole, thought the composition unimportant. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner and the chronicler in the Post agreed that the Impressions lacked any particular value. The Tribune writer preferred the Goldmark Wedding Symphony to the newer work, and other reviewers commented that Mr. Stock had "rejuvenated" the Symphony by his excellent reading.

Edward Eigenschenk, young organist, winner of the contest held recently under the auspices of the Society of American Musicians, was the soloist at the popular concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra the day before. To quote the Herald Examiner reviewer, he displayed a "fine talent." The Post reviewer wrote that, in general, "the tone colorings were well contrasted, and his technique clear."

* * *

Two string quartets were heard here in concert during the past week. The London String Quartet paid their annual visit yesterday afternoon, and the Gordon String Quartet gave the second of a series of subscription concerts last Wednesday. The Post commentator remarked of the first that "the tones from the four instruments were individually fine and knitted together into a texture equally firm and clear. Each strand was distinct, yet all were woven together into a beautiful fabric of tone."

The writer in the News agreed that they "played with unusual fine tone, with elegance, and with a lyric, songful style that was delightful" especially in the Beethoven Quartet in D. Other numbers played were the Schumann Quartet in A, and two shorter pieces by Frank Bridge and Speaight.

The Gordon String Quartet played Chausson's unfinished Quartet in C minor, and Beethoven's Quartet in A minor. The reviewers liked the seldom-heard Chausson work, and commended the Quartet for playing it. Of their playing, the Post reviewer wrote: 'The tone was rich in quality, and with the mellowness that comes when the players have settled down into the surety of mutual understanding. The ensemble was firmly knit together and in fine balance." The Herald Examiner observer lauded the "velvet roundness" of their tone.

* * *

The only violin recitals of recent days were those given by Efrem Zimbalist, under the auspices of the Wo-man's Club of the Jewish Institute, and by Harry Farbman, who made his Chicago debut in Kimball Hall Tuesday.

The usual laudatory reviews greeted Mr. Zimbalist's recital, and, as the News expressed it, he displayed "the same smooth and even tone, the same dexterity in finger work and bowing, that we have noticed in his work before, and the same refinment of style and musical conception. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner spoke of his "sweet and expressive tone, combined with the mastery of style and the utterly flawless technique that characterize him."

The Tribune reviewer, in writing of Mr. Farbman's recital, observed that if it weren't for the unusual number of highly accomplished young violinists on the concert stage today, "there would be a temptation to call him a wonder. In some respects he is." Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, asserted that "he advanced a number of qualities that will help him to achieve a high rating as he reaches maturity."

* * *

Ernst von Dohnanyi, Hungarian composer-pianist, Gitta Gradova, and Hyman Rovinsky gave piano recitals here recently. Mr. von Dohnanyi played his Ruralia Hungarica here for the first time. Of this work, the Tribune reviewer said that it was "not much to grow excited over as music." The writer in the Post found him "a distinguished personality, a ripe musician and a brilliant pianist."

The Musicians' Club of Women presented Miss Gradova in a recital for the benefit of their extension department. Maurice Rosenfeld of the News wrote that, since he last heard her, the pianist has gained "a finer sense of musical expression, a neater and far greater technical mastery of the instrument, a more graphic and clearer interpretation of the thoughts of the composers whose works she performed, a power which reminded one of Carreno both in volume and in virility. a more complete immersion in the music of her program." In the Scriabin, according to the Post, she played with "imagination and interpretative force. There was a spontaneous character in it, as if she believed in the music and desired to give expression to her faith." Edward Moore of the Tribune observed that "she has the mental equipment of a musician and a pair of well trained and well conducted hands to give the equipment display." Other writers agreed.

Mr. Rovinsky, to quote the Post, played "with understanding of the music and interpretative power" as well as with a "variety of shading which followed the changing moods of the music." The News chronicler liked his serious demeanor, his tone, and his "technical prowess."

PABLO CASALS
Was at the Top of His Powers at His First New York Cello Recital of the Season.

Chaliapin Sings in Only Chicago Boris

Chicago, Jan. 17.—The newspaper reviewers expressed regret that Boris Godunoff, which was given its first presentation last night by the Chicago Civic Opera Company, had not received an earlier production so that it might have occasionally replaced some of the numerous Traviatas and Lucias of the season. According to Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner, this opera provides Feodor Chaliapin with his greatest role.

Of the production last night Karleton Hackett of the Post wrote: "Boris Godunoff was given a superb performance last evening. They caught the spirit of it and sent the meaning out with greater force than ever before, and it reached the public. Mr. Polacco's reading of the score was one of his greatest achievements."

Edward Moore of the Tribune was deeply impressed with Chaliapin's scene in which he is tormented by the spectre of the slaughtered heir to the throne. The other reviewers commented on the power of his performance, and Mr. Gunn said that he "dwarfed" the rest of the cast.

Although he found Chaliapin the dominant figure of the performance, Mr. Moore praised Gladys Swarthout in the role of Boris' son, which was done "with first class singing and complete knowledge of what it meant in the performance." Other high spots in the opera, according to Mr. Moore, were the singing of Cyrena van Gordon as Marina, "which had the note of romance in it;" the impersonations of Virgilio Lazzari, Edward Cotreuil, Maria Claessens, William Beck, and Jose Mojica.

Mr. Hackett wrote that Mme. van Gordon "looked the princess and sang with warmth" and that Mr. Cortis "played the Pretender with force and sang with clear, resonant tones—the best thing he has done."

Pablo Casals Gives Cello Recital in N. Y.

Reviewers Acclaim His Mastery of His Instrument and Musicianship.

An unusually large and enthusiastic audience heard Pablo Casals' New York recital in Town Hall on January 18. Deems Taylor wrote in the World that "the interest and variety of his style, the rightness of his phrasing, the bigness and breadth of his conceptions were those of a master of his art, a truly creative interpreter."

The Bach C minor Suite "saw Mr. Casals at the height of his powers, in the quality of tone, in the shaping of phrases, in the life-giving rhythm which underlay the apparently extemporaneous character of the instrumental soliloquy," wrote Olin Downes of the Times. The Telegram-Mail reviewer asserted that "Mr. Casals has not played so superlatively in years. His famed art stood at its zenith throughout, and there were stretches when he seemed, in effect, to transcend himself."

Except for a slight dryness at first, according to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, his tone had "the full, round, expressive quality which has made him famous. His technical skill was, as usual, something to marvel at." The writer in the Sun commented that "little remains to be added to the voluminous estimates of Mr. Casals' art. The purity of his style, his magnificent technique, his unparalleled range of dynamics, and the intelligence and insight which he brings to bear upon his music have been attested to in every place where he has played." In the opinion of the Post chronicler, "his program was of the usual high class presented by this finished artist."

W. J. Henderson, Dean of New York Critics, Says in the New York Sun, December 8th, 1924:

"BONCI

sang in a manner that might have filled the heart of ANY OTHER SINGER of this day with an ardent desire to EMULATE SO AUTHORITATIVE A MASTER."

Vocal Studio Now Open
Hotel Majestic, New York

MANAGEMENT:
ROGER de BRUYN
EUGENE BOUCHER, Associate
1540 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK
Telephone 3787 Bryant
Knabe Piano Used

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

THE MUSICAL DIGEST

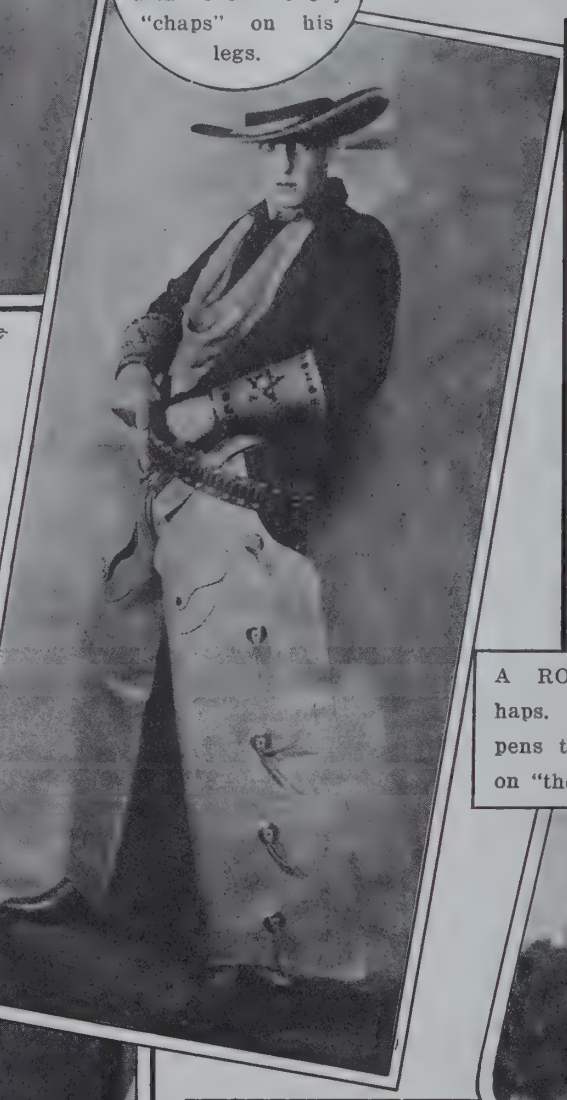
ALBERTINA RASCH would seem to be poised for some quick flight in the presentation of a terpsichorean effect.

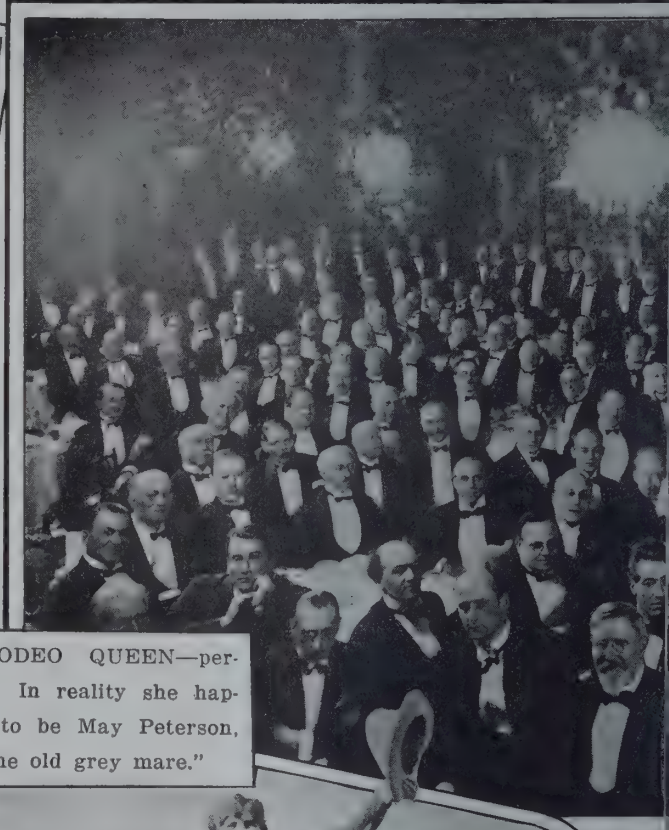
PHOTO MAURICE GOLDBERG

ORGANISTS ALL: M. E. Bossi, Nadia Boulanger, Marcel Dupre, Charles M. Courboin, at the Wanamaker organ.

PHOTO - AMEMAYA

TED SHAWN looking the bold bad man. But—how can he dance? with cowboy "chaps" on his legs.





A FINE POINT:
Mr. Schelling,—Ernest—has either held a session with his piano or composed some new work. Mrs. Schelling is standing.

PHOTO - UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y

A RODEO QUEEN—perhaps. In reality she happens to be May Peterson, on "the old grey mare."

A BASSO AT HOME: In a happy mood. too. William Gustafson is unusually that.

PHOTO - UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

PICTORIAL SECTION

MY, WHAT A STRETCH of fingers. They belong to Arno Segall, a conscientious fiddler.

A DISTINGUISHED QUARTET is this. Pres. J. L. Severance and Cond. Sokoloff, of the Cleveland Orchestra, C. M. Loeffler, composer, and W. J. Barlow.

CLAUDIA MUZIO, captured seemingly, by Cecil De Mille and Rod La Roque, motion-picture persons. But Miss Muzio looks happy.

NOTABLE MUSIC FOLK are these. They were gathered at the recent farewell to the "old" Steinway Hall, in New York.

PHOTO - PACH BROS. N.Y.

THE HARP is only one love of Carlos Salzedo. He is a composer, and one who has made people listen with a real interest.

PHOTO - UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

PENSIVE MOOD: So uld seem, from the ssion on the face of Marion Rous.

PHOTO - MISHKIN N.Y.

A DISCOVERY? Perhaps. She was "a discovery" in Paris last summer, was charming Irene Williams, the soprano.

PHOTO - MISHKIN, N.Y.

A MOTHERLY SOPRANO is Nina Morgana, of the New York Metropolitan Opera. She appears fond of her Brunino Zirato, as Papa Zirato is too.

On The Music Highway

THE Metropolitan Musical Bureau has announced a series of musicales to be given in the Vernon room of the Haddon Hall Hotel, Atlantic City. At the first concert, on February 28, Nina Morgana, Louis Graveure and Arpad Sandor will be heard. Other artists to appear during the series are Louise Hunter, Pablo Casals, Edouard Gendron, Ina Bourskaya, Vladimir de Pachmann, Mildred Dilling, Kathryn Meisle, Efrem Zimbalist, Rafaelo Diaz, Anna Case, Tandy MacKenzie and Richard Hale.

Marguerita Sylva, mezzo-soprano, is going to give a series of three Sunday concerts at Wallack's Theatre, New York City, beginning February 8. The first program will consist of modern Spanish, English, German, French, Italian and Japanese songs and the Scene des lettres from Werther.

One of the soloists scheduled to appear at the performance of The Creation in Holyoke, Mass., on May 25, is William Gustafson, basso. W. B. Bigelow is to conduct.

At the conclusion of his mid-Western tour, which will take him as far north as Houghton, Mich., Roderick White will give a New York recital in Town Hall on the evening of February 5.

Nina Morgana, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing in her home town, Buffalo, on February 14. Two days later Mme. Morgana will give a recital in Fredonia, N. Y., and on February 18 she will appear in Westfield, N. Y.

At "Ma" Ferguson's inauguration as governor of Texas last Tuesday May Peterson, soprano, sang.

Helen Bock, young American pianist, will give her first New York recital this year at Aeolian Hall on March 28. She will also make a return trip to the South, playing at several Virginia colleges.

Dusolina Giannini, soprano, will give her first and only New York recital this season at Carnegie Hall on the evening of February 28 for the benefit of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club of New York.

Yolanda Mero will make two appearances in Winnipeg this season on March 9 and 10.

Theo Karle, tenor, will appear in Harrisburg, Pa., in joint recital with Pablo Casals, cellist, on the evening of January 22, when he will sing, for his first group, old airs by Mozart, Paradies, Hook and Storace. He will continue his program with Russian songs by Zimbalist, and Gretchaninoff, as well as German lieder by Brahms. His third group will be composed entirely of American songs.

The second New York recital this season by Guiomar Novaes, Brazilian pianist, will be given at Aeolian Hall this Saturday afternoon.

Carlos Salzedo and his harp ensemble are appearing in Baltimore Saturday.

Esther Dale, American soprano, who will sing with the Oratorio Society of New York in their presentation, later in the season, of the Cesar Franck Beatitudes," sang in Amherst on last Friday in the Amherst Concert Series, which are being given there under the management of Beckhard and Macfarlane.

This afternoon in Aeolian Hall, Ruth Rodgers will be heard for the first time in New York this season in recital. Miss Rodgers will be assisted by Isidore Luckstone.

At the New Year Festival Service of the Glen Ridge Congregational Church a few weeks ago the music was furnished by the church quartet and choir, assisted by the Saint Cecilia String Quartet of New York City, directed by Mrs. Fay Simmons Davis, organist. In Gaines' Ghosts of the Year, sung by Women's Community Choir, Mrs. Charles Edwards was soloist, with Mrs. Stanley Mauger at the piano.

Louise Stallings, soprano, will appear on January 30 at the Kellogg Friday Morning Musical at the Bond Hotel in Hartford, Conn., with Percy Grainger. On February 9 Miss Stallings will sing a program of songs by American composers for the Brooklyn Woman's Club. So far this month she has been heard in Ridgewood, N. J.; at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, and again in Brooklyn in joint recital with Louis Graveure at one of the Louise Mundell Morning Musicales.

The Trinity M. E. Choir of Newburgh, under the direction of John W. Nichols, with Mrs. Clarence K. Chatterton at the organ, gave Handel's Messiah at the end of last year. The soloists for the occasion were Sibyl Sammis-MacDermid, soprano; Alice Louise Herters, contralto; Taylor Edwards, tenor, and Fred Patton, bass. This choir, which is vested, consists of one hundred voices, and this season it is giving an oratorio each month. The following is a list of the works still to be given this season: The Holy City, February 15; Stabat Mater, March 15; The Seven Last Words, April 10; The Creation, May 17.

Helen Fouts-Cahoon, coloratura soprano, was heard in two recitals in Little Rock, Ark., last month. These recitals, at the home of Mrs. Harry Howard Foster, received laudatory notices in the local press.

Paul Shirley will play the viola d'amore at the second of the Roosevelt Recitals (New York) Thursday afternoon. Other artists appearing are Esther Dale, soprano, and Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist.

At the Biltmore Musicale Friday morning Abby Morrison, soprano, appeared. On January 13 she sang at the Metropolitan Theatre League Concert at the Hotel Majestic, New York City.

On Thursday, Lewis Richards, harpsichordist, will be heard in concert in St. Paul, Minn., and on the following day in Minneapolis.

The French violinist, Jacques Thibaud, has returned to the United States and Canada for a concert tour during the season 1925-26 under the direction of the Metropolitan Musical Bureau after an absence of two years.

Erna Rubinstein, violinist, appeared in Denver on January 13 and then continued westward for a concert in Oakland on January 19. She will play several engagements along the Pacific coast which will keep her busy until the middle of February.

Concert Management M. H. Hanson has announced that Marie Rappold, soprano, will return to the concert platform soon in recitals at Carnegie Hall, New York, and, in Orchestra Hall, Chicago.

It has recently been announced that Canada will join the United States in celebrating, this May, a National Music Week. With similar movements in Hawaii and Australia, the movement is beginning to assume an international aspect.

Jerome Swinford, American baritone, will leave this month for a series of concerts in North Carolina and Delaware. He will return to New York for his appearance on February 10 at the Hotel Roosevelt Recitals, which are for the benefit of the Bryn Mawr Music Fund and the City Music League. Following this, he will go on a tour of the Middle West. On April 23 Mr. Swinford will sing again in New York as soloist with the University Glee Club in its spring concert at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Mme. Charles Cahier, contralto, will give her only New York recital this season in Aeolian Hall on February 7. Mme. Cahier's other appearances this season will be with the Society of the Friends of Music under Mr. Bodanzky, and with the New York Philharmonic Society under Willem Mengelberg.

Louise Homer has sung twice this month as guest artist with the Chicago Civic Opera Company. On January 10 she appeared in Il Trovatore and on January 12 in Samson and Dalila. These are return engagements, since Mme. Homer appeared as a regular member of the company last November. Besides the appearances already announced for Mme. Homer during the month of January on her concert tour of the Middle West, she will appear in joint recital with her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, in Cleveland on January 30.

George Liebling recently gave two Chicago recitals. His second appearance early this month was at the Kinsolving Morning Musicales in the Blackstone Hotel.

Emily Stokes Hagar will make her first Chicago appearance with the Apollo Club on February 16. She will sing the soprano part in the Bach mass which she sang at the Bethlehem Festival.

Albert Spalding, American violinist, is concluding the month of January in the middle West, playing in Kansas City on January 27, in Carthage, Ill., on January 28, and in Stillwater, Kan., on January 30.

After his New York recital on January 18 John Powell gave a concert in Wellesley, Mass., on the 22nd.

Frances Peralta has been engaged to sing in the concert presentation of La Gioconda at the Ann Arbor Festival, May 27.

Returning from a concert in La Crosse, Wis., on January 23, the New York String Quartet is having a short tour of Pennsylvania cities in the last week of January.

The New York String Quartet will appear jointly with Ethel Leginska, pianist, in Chicago on March 22. So far this season, the Quartet has appeared with two other pianists, Elly Ney (in La Crosse, Wis., last Friday), and Evadna Laphan (in Plattsburg, N. Y. on December 4). The Quartet has been engaged by the New York Chamber Music Society for concerts in Aeolian Hall and at Columbia University.

Toti dal Monte, coloratura soprano, made her first Washington appearance on January 19. Assisting her were Dorothy Kennedy, pianist, and Henri Bove, flutist.

At the concert of the New York Flute Club on January 18 at the Art Centre, New York City, J. Henri Bove, flutist, played Bach's Sonata in B minor, with Jacqueline DeMoor at the piano. Mr. Bove also played Kuhlau's Quartet for four flutes with Quinto E. Magnini, Oakley H. Kellogg, and Milton H. Wittgenstein. Other artists appearing were Otis Ellis Hovey, Ellen Hovey Davis, soprano, Bertram Brenner, and C. C. Strothkamp, and Meredith Willson.

WINIFRED BYRD
America's Pianist
Management: Marie Gouled
25 West 42d St., New York

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

Sittig Trio
MARGARET SITTIG - Violin
EDGAR H. SITTIG - Cello
FREDERICK V. SITTIG Piano
Sittig Trio Management:
167 WEST 80TH ST., NEW YORK CITY TRAFALGAR 9030

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

VIRGINIA CARRINGTON THOMAS MUS. BAC. A. A. G. O.
AMERICAN ORGANIST AND COMPOSER
RECITALS ADDRESS: 516 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK

Cellist Appears With Cleveland Orchestra

Victor de Gomez Plays Tschaikowsky Variations; London String Quartet in Recital.

Cleveland, Jan. 17.—Victor de Gomez, principal cellist of the Cleveland orchestra, was soloist in the ninth subscription program of the season, which Mr. Sokoloff conducted last night. Mr. de Gomez played Tschaikowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme. Other numbers on Mr. Sokoloff's list for the evening were Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, Dvorak's Carnival Overture, and Debussy's Sarabande and Danse.

James H. Rogers, reviewing the concert in the Plain Dealer, said, "Mr. de Gomez played the Tschaikowsky Variations with warm and musical tone, with facile command of technical obstacles, and in the songful passages, with rare expressiveness."

Eleanor Clarage wrote similarly in the Times: "Mr. de Gomez's tone is broad and rich, his technique entirely adept, and his style all that could be desired." Wilson G. Smith agreed that "technically and interpretatively it was as perfect a performance as one would care to hear."

A similar unanimity of opinion was expressed among the reviewers regarding the conducting of the Fourth Symphony and the other numbers on the program. The color and lively rhythm of the Debussy pieces, originally composed for the piano, appealed to audience and reviewers alike, and the latter called Ravel's orchestral arrangement of the two pieces interesting.

The London String Quartet, James Levey, first violin; Thomas Petre, second violin; H. Waldo Warner, viola; and C. Warwick-Evans, cello, gave a recital last Tuesday evening. Mr. Rogers wrote of this concert, "The playing was a real tour de force; bold, sweeping, instinctive with vitality that carried all before it." Miss Clarage praised the quartet as fully: "It doesn't seem as if finer playing were humanly possible. In perfection in phrasing, in delicacy of shading, and in beauty of tone, the English players have no peers."

Century to Be Music Theatre

The Century Theatre in New York is to be established as a playhouse of operettas and high class musical productions after the manner of European theatres of the Opera-Comique type, it was said in an announcement last Tuesday by Messrs. Lee and J. J. Schubert, theatrical producers who at present control that theatre.

Offer New Music in Referendum Concert

Franco-American Society Presents Its First Program of Season.

The Franco-American Musical Society gave its first "referendum concert" of the season in Aeolian Hall on January 18. The novelties on the program were La Neige, by Paul le Flem, a chorus sung a capella by four men's and five women's voices; Andre Caplet's Conte Fantastique, played by Carlos Salzedo and the Letz Quartet; Six Nursery Rhymes by Ethel Leginska; and Stravinsky's Trois Petites Chansons.

Among the artists who appeared were Ethel Leginska and Gitta Gradova, pianists, Greta Torpadie, soprano, Rex Tillson, Clara Deeks, Leanore Leoni, Marguerite Price, Dorothy Sinnott, Viola Gramm-Salzedo, Dr. Elias N. Caplan, Raymond C. Frank, Hubert Linscott, and Raymond S. Miller. Mr. Salzedo conducted. There were also on the program a piano sonata by Charles T. Griffes, Debussy's Deux Chansons de Charles d'Orleans, an excerpt from Alban Berg's Dem Schmerz sein Recht, and Webern's So ich traurig bin.

The Leginska Nursery Rhymes, in the opinion of most of the reviewers must have been intended for very modern children. According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, Miss Torpadie "sang the songs in her inimitable way to the great delight of the house," accompanied by the composer. The choruses by le Flem, wrote Olin Downes of the Times, "made an excellent impression." Mr. Gilman said the writing was "adroit and amiable" but found the work unimportant. The Caplet composition was received with reserve on the part of the critics, and W. J. Henderson of the Sun found it "startling, at times, in its abrupt pauses and shrieking harp passages." Of the singers, Mr. Downes wrote that, in general, they were "musicianly and sympathetic to the texture of the score." He continued that Mr. Salzedo "is more than an accomplished harpist, he is an excellently equipped musician in whatever he attempts."

The Griffes Sonata, as played by Mme. Gradova, was praised by the reviewers. Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote: "This sonata is astonishingly original music, austere, uncompromising, self-reliant. It has power and profile; it is drastic, vigorous, antiseptic music—music filled with a contempt for softness and sentimentalism. Yet it has beauty as well as strength." He thought that Mme. Gradova played it "most admirably." The composition which, in the opinion of W. J. Henderson of the Sun, "distinctness of mood and a clear manner of speech of its own" was played "with genuine mastery, with profound feeling and with sure technical treatment. Here was indeed a fine artistic achievement." Other writers agreed.

MISS MARGARET SITTIG
Made a Marked Impression at Her New York Recital Debut Last Wednesday Evening.

Siegfried Wagner Composing

Berlin.—Siegfried Wagner is at work composing an opera and a symphony. The former has an old Spanish setting. He interrupted his work a short time ago to conduct a concert in Vienna for the Bayreuth Fund.

Tenor Is Soloist in L. A. Pop Concert

Los Angeles, Jan. 16.—In the afternoon popular concert last Sunday Frederick Huttmann, tenor, was soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra under the leadership of Walter Henry Rothwell. The reviewers all approved Mr. Rothwell's selection of program, which included Richard Strauss' Don Juan, Johann Strauss' Blue Danube Waltz, Wagner's Meistersinger Prelude, and the Bacchanale from Saint-Saens' Samson and Dalila, besides some Liadow folksongs and Wagner's Prize Song from the Meistersinger and the love song of Siegmund, from the Valkyries.

Carl Bronson in the Herald was representative of all the reviewers when he wrote that the orchestra and conductor made the audience appreciate "the fine nuances and excellent generalities of orchestral art at its best." The reviewers of the Express, Daily News, Record, and Examiner all were exceptionally enthused over the rendition of the Strauss tone poem.

Of Mr. Huttmann there was difference of opinion. The reviewers agreed that the tenor's voice was not large enough to carry the music which he sang against an orchestral accompaniment. The Record and Daily News reviewers considered Mr. Huttmann's singing entirely inadequate for this reason, while the other writers had praise for his tone and style within the limitation of size. Mr. Usher in the Express wrote that the voice was expressive in the middle range, and of good diction, and Ralph E. Greene of the Examiner said that the singer combined "intelligence with emotional fervor."

SCHMITZ

Master Pianist

Roy C. B. Brown in the San Francisco Chronicle writes of Schmitz, three times soloist with the Symphony Orchestra:

"He achieved one of the most notable triumphs of the season."

BOGUE-LABERGE MANAGEMENT
130 West 42nd St., New York City

MASON AND HAMLIN PIANO

The love for Choral singing is growing

DAYTON WESTMINSTER CHOIR

OF DAYTON, OHIO

60 Meritorious Voices

Singing a Cappella (from Memory)

Directed by JOHN FINLEY WILLIAMSON

WILL TOUR IN THE SPRING AND AUTUMN

Additional applications for dates should be made immediately, to permit an advantageously arranged itinerary. Managers and Clubs are urged to consider this great American organization for their courses.

Management:

M. H. HANSON

437 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

Boston Hears Chamber Music

Flonzaleys and New Trio Appear; Recitals by Kreisler, Culbertson and Ethel Leginska.

Boston, Jan. 20.—The first concert of its annual Boston series was given by the Flonzaley Quartet last Thursday. The program, which was applauded by a large audience, consisted of Haydn's Quartet in D minor, an E minor Quartet by Albert Spalding, and Schubert's Quartet in D minor.

H. T. P. in the Transcript found the Quartet in its usual excellent form, still "musicianly informed and practised; sensitive and alert." The Globe reviewer, P. R., agreed their perfection in ensemble was the same as in former concerts, but S. M., of the Christian Science Monitor thought the Quartet was "hardly in its best form" in spite of moments when the "tonal beauty of earlier days was apparent." Mr. Spalding was praised for the many musicianly qualities of his work, but, in general, the reviewers were unimpressed with his Quartet.

* * *

Another chamber music concert of the week was that given by a new trio, comprised of Felix Fox, pianist, Richard Burgin, violinist, and Jean Bedetti, cellist. On their program were the Schumann G minor trio, Ravel's in A minor, and the Brahms C minor. According to the Monitor reviewer, "excellent ensemble was maintained throughout; rhythms were sharply marked and the blending of tone was admirable for the most part." R. R. G., writing in the Herald, said that they "played with the fine musicianship and the beautiful tone one would expect from them . . . especially attractively they played the presto by Brahms." H. T. P., said that the new trio "was good to hear," and added that of the three, Mr. Bedetti was the most "sensitive and reciprocating player of chamber music, artfully measuring his tone, quick to the composer, alert to his companions."

* * *

Every available inch of space in Symphony Hall was filled Sunday afternoon for the first recital here this season by Fritz Kreisler. The audience was enthusiastic in its prolonged applause and was rewarded with several encores. As L. A. S. of the Monitor expressed it: "Of Kreisler's playing, who shall add to what has been said? Let him play what he will, we hear him gladly, and never are disappointed in him." In Hartmann's transcription of Debussy's La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin, according to D. Mc. in the Transcript, "all the delicacy in attack and execution of which Mr. Kreisler is capable here reached culmination in purity of silver harmonies." The Globe and Herald reviewers wrote in the same laudatory vein.

* * *

A debut of recent days was that of Sacha Culbertson, violinist, who made his first Boston appearance last Wednesday. In the opinion of the Monitor chronicler, Mr. Culbertson combined with a remarkable accuracy of pitch, "fleetness and masterly bowing, agile and supple." This writer continued: "Throughout he played sincerely, quietly, without affectation or mannerism, and confined expression and narration to his splendid instrument, which he understands so well."

Although he found a lack of fire and intensity in Mr. Culbertson's playing, the reviewer in the Globe lauded his tone, "clear and sweet, seldom scratchy or acid, never forced," and his modest stage demeanor. Philip Hale of the Herald agreed with this writer, and he wrote that the violinist's "tone is pure; his phrasing is that of a musician; he plays with intelligence." The Transcript writer was of the same opinion. The accompanist was Max Rabinowitch.

* * *

Of Ethel Leginska's piano recital Saturday afternoon, the Transcript reviewer wrote "not before has the piano yielded her so rich and subtly varied a palette of tonal colors, nor has she always found in composers her present wide range of emotion." Liszt's Sonata, according to this writer, was "justly conceived, with gripping conviction in the broader and more intense moments, with highly varied subtlety and sometimes ravishingly beautiful tones in the contrasting melodic sections."

The Monitor writer agreed that she brought to the Sonata "many beauties of tone, rhythm and phrasing . . . for the most part, the tone color was lovely." On the other hand, the Herald writer did not think her playing up to its usual standard, and complained of lack of technical mastery and clarity of outline in the Sonata.

Florence Chretien in Recital

Florence Chretien, soprano, gave her New York debut recital in the Rose Room of the Belleclaire Hotel on the evening of January 17. The program was followed by a reception.

MISS ABBY MORRISON
Sang at the Hotel Biltmore Musicale in New York Last Friday Morning.

New York Symphony Starts Tour of Twenty Concerts

The New York Symphony Orchestra with its conductor, Walter Damrosch, left New York yesterday afternoon for its series of concerts on tour in the South and in Havana. The first concert of the series was given last night in Wilmington, Del.

The schedule of concerts for the orchestra includes the following appearances: Daytona Beach, Florida, January 28; Havana, Cuba, January 30, February 1, February 2 (with Paul Kochanski as soloist) and February 3 (Mischa Mischakoff as soloist); Miami, Florida, February 5; Palm Beach, Florida, the 6th; Jacksonville, Florida, the 7th; Savannah, Georgia, the 9th (Mr. Mischakoff, soloist); Columbia, Greenville, and Rock Hill, South Carolina, on the 10th, 11th, and 12th; Raleigh, North Carolina, the 13th; Richmond, Virginia, the 14th; Washington, the 16th and 17th; Baltimore, Maryland, the 18th; Philadelphia and Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the 19th and 20th.

Few Recitals Given In San Francisco

Schmitz Plays With Orchestra; Sophie Braslau and Mme. Schumann Heink Sing.

San Francisco, Jan. 16.— The lull in the music season during the holiday weeks has not yet been worked away. Recitals have been few so far this year. At the Symphony concert last Friday E. Robert Schmitz was soloist in Strauss' Burleske and Franck's Variations Symphoniques. Mr. Hertz conducted also Haydn's Symphony in G major and the Prelude and Love Death from Tristan and Isolde.

The reviewers were unanimous in praise of the conductor and the soloist for their work during the program. Ray Brown wrote in terms of unmixed approval concerning the pianist in his review in the Chronicle. William Eliot commented on his "virile tone" in the Herald, and called Mr. Schmitz' interpretations "thoughtful."

Writing in the Examiner, Redfern Mason said, "Mr. Schmitz is an artist of first rank." This reviewer said of the Wagner interpretation, "This is music in which Mr. Hertz is at his best, and it is a glorious best. The other chroniclers were agreed that it was "beautifully done."

Mme. Ernestine Schumann Heink gave a recital on January 11 in the New Cumberland Theatre, which was filled to capacity, The prevailing sentiment in the reviews was that she sang as well as ever. The Chronicle report said, "She sang with that directness of emotional appeal that wins its way unerringly to the heart of each individual listener." The Examiner report was in the same vein: "She gave of her best, a time-ripened art."

Sophie Braslau gave a second San Francisco concert at the New Columbia just before the end of last year. She repeated the success which she had at her first recital.

M. J. C.

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

CECIL ARDEN

Mezzo-Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company

"A luscious mezzo-soprano hauntingly clear as temple bells—and she is beautiful."
—Hamilton, Ohio

Twenty-five recitals given this Fall

Engaged for fifty-three concerts during 1925-26.

Available for a few Open Dates in April and Spring Festivals

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Address: Management of Cecil Arden, 27 West 67th Street, New York City
Telephone: Trafalgar 3746

Grainger Conducts Orchestra in Boston

Harvard Singers Assist; Koussevitzky Presents Program of Beethoven's Music.

Boston, Jan. 19.—Among the Symphonic offerings of the week was the concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra with Percy Grainger as guest conductor. This differed from the usual symphony concert in that the program, which consisted solely of short compositions by Mr. Grainger, did not contain the usual overture, symphony, or concerto with soloist.

Instead there were several short choral numbers sung by the Harvard Glee Club, led by Dr. Davison. The assisting artists were Anita Atwater, soprano, Anna Stovall-Lothian, pianist, William Owen Gilboy, tenor, Felix Fox and Heinrich Gebhard, pianists.

According to P. R. in the Globe, "Mr. Grainger's conducting is forthright and simple, with vigorous but not exaggerated gestures" and his compositions, like his playing and conducting, "are spontaneous and genuine expressions of musical feeling." As the writer in the Christian Science Monitor put it "the excellent work of the Harvard Glee Club under its leader, Dr. Davison, is too well known to need much comment." The assisting artists were commended for their work and the program for its interest. The concert, which was broadcasted by radio, was attended by a capacity audience.

Serge Koussevitsky surprised both the audience and the reviewers at the twelfth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon by playing an all-Beethoven program in an entirely conservative manner.

Warren Storey Smith of the Post found the occasion "most delightful, most engrossing and, at its close, one of the most exciting concerts" given by this conductor. Philip Hale wrote in the Herald that "the interpretation was as sane as it was eloquent; as reverential as it was impressive." According to Stuart Mason of the Monitor, "his conception of it was poetic and imaginative but fancy was duly restrained and never overstepped the bounds of good taste." In the Transcript, H. T. P. wrote that he had never heard the long-winded Pastoral Symphony played "so perceivingly, imaginatively and revealingly."

In the second of his children's concerts at Jordan Hall Saturday morning Ernest Schelling, assisted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, offered Mozart's Overture to The Marriage of Figaro, the Andante of Haydn's Surprise Symphony, the Scherzo of Mendelssohn's music for A Midsummer Night's Dream, the allegretto of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony and his Turkish March from Ruins of Athens, the Caucasian Sketches of Ivanof, Schelling's Nocturne, Barthe's Bourree and joint singing of the Battle Hymn of the Republic.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

THE Chamber Music Society of San Francisco, which will tour the East during the season 1925-26 under the management of Maude Gibbon, first came into prominence after its performance at the Pittsfield Festival in 1922.

Louis Persinger, Louis Ford, Elias Hecht, Nathan Firestone, Walter Ferner

The successful career of the Society since inception is particularly gratifying from the point of view that every member of the organization is American born. Louis Persinger is a native of Rochester, Illinois; Nathan Firestone comes from St. Paul, Minnesota; Walter Ferner's birthplace was Baltimore, Maryland; and Elias Hecht was born in Atherton, California. Of these, the first three completed their musical educations in Europe after studying in America, but Messrs. Firestone and Ford are entirely American trained.

Mr. Persinger, first violinist and musical director of the organization, is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Leipzig and was chosen as concertmaster of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra just prior to the war. The founder of the Society, Mr. Hecht, who is the flutist, played with the Concert-Verein Quartet of Munich before his return to America. Mr. Ford, second violinist, was at one time assistant concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and Mr. Ferner, violoncellist, played for several years with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. The viola player, Nathan Firestone, played with the San Francisco Orchestra.

Nadia Boulanger Gives Lecture-Recital in N. Y.

Nadia Boulanger, French composer and organist, was heard in a lecture-recital in Town Hall on January 19. In excellent English, with only a slight accent, Mlle. Boulanger spoke on Modern Music and Its Evolution. Illustrating her remarks by playing and singing at the piano, she discussed the works and importance of many modern composers. Walter Damrosch introduced the lecturer.

Commenting on the unusual activity in music during the last thirty or forty years, Mlle. Boulanger spoke of the enrichment of harmony and the growing freedom of counterpoint resulting from the utilization of different scales. She referred to Schonberg as one of the most significant of modern composers, and mentioned Egon Wellecz as his most promising disciple. A young Dutch composer, Matthys Vermeulen, was praised particularly.

In addition to her lecture, Mlle. Boulanger played an excerpt from Vermeulen's Sonata for piano and cello, part of the setting for the 129th Psalm by her sister, the late Lili Boulanger, and passages from Debussy, Roussel, Florent Schmitt, and Ravel. Prefatory to singing some of these passages, Mlle. Boulanger admitted that she had no voice, and had never studied. The reviews agreed that her attempts were pleasing.

Concert of Classical Music

Wanda Landowska gave her second recital of seventeenth and eighteenth century music for harpsichord and piano in Aeolian Hall on January 16. On her program were Bach's Capriccio on the Departure of the Beloved Brother, an Andante, Minuet, and Rondo by Mozart, selections by Rameau, Kuhnau's Combat between David and Goliath, and several other numbers.

Town Hall Clears Mortgages

Mortgages amounting to $800,000 on Town Hall, New York City, were burned on the stage of the auditorium before 1,500 men and women the morning of January 12. The burning of the mortgages by Robert E. Simon, Chairman of the Building Committee, was in the nature of a celebration of the fourth anniversary of the building. Mr. Simon and Robert Erskine Ely paid a tribute to those whose efforts had made the occasion possible.

Henri Deering Makes First U. S. Appearance

Plays Rachmaninoff Concerto With State Symphony; Waghalter Leads Zarathustra.

The seldom-played Also Sprach Zarathustra was offered by Ignatz Waghalter in his third concert with the State Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Wednesday evening. The other feature of the program was the appearance of Henri Deering as soloist in Rachmaninoff's Second piano Concerto. The other numbers heard were the Oberon Overture, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Deems Taylor of the World asserted that Mr. Deering was "very good" playing the Concerto with "fine authority and structural insight, revealing a clean, articulate touch, a good dynamic range, and a sensitive feeling for the poetry and drama of the work." According to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, he showed "fluent, well developed technique and no lack of coloring or expressive power in his playing."

No less enthusiastic was the Telegram-Mail reviewer, who wrote that he proved himself "a technician of finish and an interpreter of eloquence and emotional insight." The Sun commentator spoke of him as "a pianist of confidence, authority" with "a temperament and technique of impressive dimensions." In the opinion of the Post chronicler he played "with expression, sufficient energy and well-developed technique."

The Times reviewer said that the orchestra, under Mr. Waghalter, "gave an amazing account of themselves" in Also Sprach Zarathustra. In the Telegram-Mail, the reviewer said that "Mr. Waghalter read the complex score with firmness and insight."

Arrest Sunday Opera Producer

Because he gave a production of La Traviata on a Sunday Feliciano Acierno, of 8,821 Nineteenth Ave., Brooklyn, was arrested yesterday a week and arraigned before Magistrate Marsh on a charge of violating the New York Sabbath laws. The performance took place in the old Thalia Theatre on the Bowery on January 18. The producer asserted that legally he was offering a "sacred concert." The case was dismissed.

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 192
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

RE JOHN McCORMACK

McCormack's Farewell

"John McCormack, the most popular American singer, makes his farewell appearance this season at Carnegie Hall, Sunday evening, January 18. Of course he will sing to a capacity audience. He always does. It is not because of his remarkable voice, alone, that he is so popular, for he has countless friends who admire him for his sterling citizenship and irreproachable character. No American, remembering his self-sacrificing devotion to the nation during the World War, can be other than John McCormack's firm friend."

—New York Bulletin.

BACHAUS

HIGH LIGHTS

from England, Ireland and Wales

1 9 2 4

LONDON DAILY TELEGRAPH—BACHAUS proved again and beyond cavil or question his right to be considered as the faultless pianist of our time. No praise is too high for such infallible technique and style.

At his hands the Chopin studies had a sonority that may well be compared to the massive tone of the Wagnerian orchestra guided by an able conductor.

LONDON TIMES—His masterful style is a splendid tonic. His technique is unerring, and never once is the hold on the rhythm let go.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN—For the first time we heard the variations of Brahms played simply for the sake of the music. BACHAUS last night brought other listeners besides ourself to think him possibly the greatest of all pianists now before the public.

THE YORKSHIRE POST—BACHAUS is one of the most accomplished of living pianists, the lucidity and beauty of his playing could not have been surpassed.

NEWCASTLE JOURNAL—We should doubt if there is a finer pianist at present before the public than BACHAUS. . . . It was an incomparably fine bit of playing.

MUSICAL OPINION—BACHAUS played in that manner which puts him first of all living pianists in respect of mental power and executive skill. His mind indeed is of the highest order, and, as he is literally an artist in the matter of sound, his work stands apart from all others.

BIRMINGHAM GAZETTE—We prefer BACHAUS to every pianist since Rubinstein.

LIVERPOOL ECHO—BACHAUS seems to possess the most amazing technique that ever happened. I have heard nothing quite so overpowering, so overwhelming, so full of sheer brilliance and mastery for a long time. It was the very perfection of virtuosity.

Nothing could have been more supremely imaginative than his playing of his own arrangement of the Romance from Chopin's E minor Concerto.

SOUTH WALES ARGUS (CARDIFF)—It is hardly necessary to suggest perfection of technique. That is but part of his equipment. Intellect and emotion have their equal part in his work—he has the balance of completeness. He is neither cold nor sentimental—his is the fulness of disciplined emotion He is master of himself and of his technical resources.

IRISH TIMES—If we have a complaint to make it is that BACHAUS has left us so little to criticise. We shall remember him as the most satisfying we have heard for a long time.

Season 1925-1926 Now Booking

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Building
New York

Pennsylvania Building
Philadelphia

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Baldwin Piano

Duo-Art Records

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Celebrate Opera Anniversary

Lully Revival Is Feature of Program Marking Fiftieth Birthday of Paris House.

Paris.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Paris Grand Opera was celebrated with a gala performance of a number of operatic and ballet selections on January 6. Director Jacques Rouche was praised for the good taste and discrimination which the program of the occasion displayed.

The celebration was unusual among the gala performances at the Opera in that the program was presented entirely by French artists. In the past it has been customary for a number of foreign artists to take part, but M. Rouche acted on the belief that the resources of the Grand Opera were sufficient for any occasion.

The first part of the program consisted of the singing of the fourth act from Meyerbeer's Les Huguenots, in which the singers appeared to good advantage. The mise-en-scene also was effective.

The mad scene from Ambroise Thomas' Hamlet followed, and was given in a manner which it would be difficult to duplicate on any operatic stage in the world. The final number of the evening was Lully's opera-ballet, Le Triomphe de l'Amour, which was revived for the occasion after it has rested in the Opera repertory for forty years.

Social Pomp Missing

Socially the present occasion was not vested with the same pomp and ceremony which were present at the inauguration of the Opera, although it had been expected that the evening would be colorful. There seemed a lack of animation and distinction among the public. There were no crowned heads present, although the Queen of Belgium had been invited. In her stead came a kindly telegram to the management. The Lord Mayor of London and the royal pair of Spain were others of the notables who were obliged to disappoint on this occasion.

The French officials who had been expected all took part in the ceremonies. The President and the diplomatic corps were on hand with a considerable part of Paris fashion.

Throughout, the singing was of a high order. It is difficult to decide which of the three selections was best presented. In Les Huguenots M. Delmas, baritone, who has now completed thirty-five years of uninterrupted service at the Opera, won a special round of applause from his admirers at the end of his aria. It was in the part of Saint Bris, in fact, that M. Delmas made his debut and scored his first success with the beautiful vocal abilities which he had at his disposal.

Paul Franz, who may safely be called one of the idols of the French public, sings the Meyerbeer repertory with the same ease with which he interprets his Wagnerian roles. His singing, of lyric beauty, was fluent and unrestrained.

Yvonne Gall Scores

Yvonne Gall made a dramatic Valentine, and sang her music with a purity of style and finish which reminded one of Emmy Destinn in her best days.

M. Rouard, one of the most successful baritones in France at present, won the gala audience more with the charm and nonchalance of his manner than with his voice. The part of Nevers in this single act was too short for him to develop his best vocal state, but he scored with the admirable manner in which he concluded the final phrases of his role.

Philippe Gaubert conducted the orchestra, which did its share of the evening's work well.

The task of putting over the second part of the program fell upon Fanny Heldy, whose popularity with the French musical public is second to none. Her beautiful stage presence in the mad scene from Thomas' Hamlet charmed as much as did her voice, and her acting of the part brought out the tragedy of Ophelia. There were so many shades to her vocal and histrionic expression that never once did the scene become monotonous.

Mmes. Cesbron, Viseur, Campredon, and Laval, and MM. Thill, Cambon, Madlen, and Mathieux sang in the revival of Lully's Triumph of Love. Their duties were small, but well done. The choreographic part was in the hands of Leo Staats and Jeanne Schwartz, both of whom did excellent work. Henri Busser conducted.

Louise at the Opera-Comique

Mme. Ritter-Ciampi is at present appearing in a number of performances at the Opera-Comique. Her Louise in the Charpentier opera of that name has been her most successful role so far. Her powerful soprano voice with its evenness of quality throughout its range enabled her to sing to best advantage the famous aria, Depuis le Jour.

Her colleague, M. Oger, in the leading male role, was not equal to Mme. Ritter-Ciampi in his singing, but his acting was convincing. M. Boulogne, the baritone, sang the role of the father, and Mme. Ferrara was the mother. Her voice is a contralto of beauty and strength. The chorus sang well, and the carefully studied and artistic mise-en-scene added to the impressiveness of the entire performance. M. Frigara was the conductor.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Russians Edit Operas To Suit Soviet Ideals

GLINKA'S opera, A Life of the Czar, which has held a prominent place in the world of opera for a century, has been rewritten under orders from the Russian Soviet government in order to eradicate all monarchical suggestions from the text, according to Moscow advices, says a dispatch to the New York Times, dated January 18.

The title of the opera has been changed to Scythe and Hammer, which are the symbols of the Soviet regime, and, while the music has not been altered, another text has been written by a local poet which avoids all clashes with Communistic teachings and eliminates the Czar motif completely.

Verdi, Rossini and Donizetti are also being rewritten, and Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana has been slashed by the censor, it is said.

Amato Makes Berlin Guest Appearance as Boris

Berlin.

Pasquale Amato sang the title role in Moussorgsky's Boris Godunoff at the Grosse Volksoper just before the beginning of the new year. It was a guest appearance which was enthusiastically received by the audience and the press. The reviewer of the Acht Uhr Abendblatt said, "This role demands not only an excellent singer, but a great actor as well. Concerning the singing of Amato nothing new need be said. As an actor in Boris he showed himself powerful and versatile. In the final scene of the fifth act he rose to the singing and acting heights which his part demanded."

Adolf Weissman wrote in the Zeitung am Mittag, "The performance was crowned by the portrayal of Boris by Pasquale Amato. What this artist gives us most of all in this part is great acting craft." Prof. Weissman also was impressed by the expressiveness of Amato in the final scene, and concluded, "The death in the end found Amato great."

A repetition of this performance at the Volksoper was immediately arranged for January 14. The schedule of Amato's tour in Germany includes appearances at the Dresden opera on January 3, 5, and 7, in Aida, Pagliacci and Cavalleria, and Otello; a concert appearance with the Berlin Philharmonic on the 10th; a guest engagement in Ballo in Maschera two days later at the Volksoper; on the 25th an appearance in Tosca at Chemnitz; and recitals in Prague and Dresden.

"Music & Letters"

FOUNDED 1920

The British Musical Quarterly

100 pages: 20s per annum post free to any part of the world

"Music and Letters is the best thing of its kind that is published, and forms a valuable addition to the library."—Musical Standard, August 23rd, 1924.

LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2

The Center for Modern Music

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

GRAVEURE
IN LEADING MUSIC
CENTERS

"A magnificent voice with brilliance and metallic clarity and beautiful tenderness. A perfect breathing technique." (Het Vaderland, Amsterdam, Holland.)

"His baritone has rarely delicious qualities, especially noticeable in his French songs." (Algemeen Handelsblad, Amsterdam, Holland.)

Management:
Metropolitan
Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

LEVITZKI

Delighted a Huge Audience at His Carnegie Hall Recital on January Thirteenth Last

"He touched his interpretation with all the dazzling technic that pianists who have nothing else give to it, but subordinated this to what he, and also Beethoven, had in mind."

New York Journal, Jan. 14, 1925.

"The 'Appassionata' has been played in Toledo a great many times, but never quite like Levitzki played it. It was a breath-taking performance—not a mere electrification, a surface illumination of this staunch, majestic old work, but a thorough and fascinating rejuvenation."

Toledo Blade, Jan. 17, 1925.

SEASON 1925-1926

September to December booked in the Orient.
January to February 10 Booked on the Pacific Coast.

Only available time in America as follows:

February 15 to 20 West and South-West.
March 1 to 20 Middle-West and East.

Exclusive Management

DANIEL MAYER

AEOLIAN HALL NEW YORK

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

AMPICO ROLLS STEINWAY PIANO COLUMBIA RECORDS

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Regio Re-opens With Norma

Bellini Opera Starts Winter Season at Reconstructed Turin Theatre; Will Give Nerone.

Turin.

After a period during which it was closed in order that the stage might be reconstructed, the Teatro Regio opened its doors for its winter season on December 30. Norma was the opera chosen for the opening, for the management found it necessary to select a work which did not require too elaborate staging inasmuch as the work of renovation is not yet finished.

The mechanical facilities of the Regio have been much improved by the alterations. The stage has been made larger and its height has been increased, the footlights have been raised, the orchestra pit has been made deeper, and the lighting arrangements have been completely transformed and modernized. This work involved the expenditure of nearly a million and a half lire, which is considered a considerable sum for a city of the size of Turin.

Bellini's Norma had a good performance on the occasion of the renewal of the season. The success was due largely to the conducting of Gaetano Bavagnoli. The Gazzetta del Popolo reported that the ensemble was smooth and at least adequate to the score of the opera, while the orchestral playing was noteworthy for its finish. This review complimented the conductor for feeling so well the spirit of Bellini's style, so that at no time was the orchestral part of the score too prominent or out of proportion in the general mass effect. The chorus showed the same excellence of tone and good taste.

Protagonist Best in Later Acts

The protagonist was Ester Mazzoleni, who made a good impression, especially in the second and third acts. The Gazzetta commentator believed that Signora Mazzoleni showed more dramatic intuition than vocal abilities. Her voice at times was cloudy, and often her diction was not what it should have been. The old lucidity and purity of her singing were only hinted at for the most part.

An excellent Adalgisa was Maria Capuana, who did well from the beginning of the opera to the end. The tenor, Cesa Bianchi, who not long ago did not succeed very well as Siegmund at La Scala in Milan, won a triumph at the Regio in the part of Pollione, according to the reports of the newspapers. The reviewers admitted that his voice had not the greatest variety of timbre and that the transition from lower part of his voice to the middle range and from the latter to the top tones was too evident, but complimented him on the clarity of his diction and the skill with which he overcame the technical difficulties of his part of the score. His dramatic interpretation also was called effective.

Richness and beauty of voice, nobility and dignity of bearing, versatile skill in the portrayal of his role from both the acting and singing standpoints, were found by the newspaper commentators in the basso, Ezio Pinza, who some time ago left La Scala in a manner which caused rumors of quarrels between him and the management. Pinza, without being a great singer, has always been known as an artist who is secure and dependable in any part which he may be given.

Other operas which are planned for cess of this Norma were Signor Cilla in the part of Flavio, and Signora Avezza as Clotilde.

Other operas which are palnned for early performance as soon as the reconstruction of the stage is quite complete are Rigoletto, and Nerone, directed by Toscanini. F. C.

Chamber Concerts in Prague

Prague, Jan. 3.—At the first concert of the Chamber Music Society here quartets by Malipiero, Goossens, and Hindemith were played. The second concert included the first quartet by Leo Janacek, which he composed after he had reached his sixtieth year.

Vienna to Hear Mascagni Piece

Vienna, Jan. 21.—A new operetta of Mascagni, called Si, has just been completed, and will have its premiere in Vienna within a few weeks. Mascagni himself will conduct at the premiere, and Leo Slezak will sing the leading role.

Paris Opera Keeps Rouche

Paris, Jan. 21.—Jacques Rouche is retained as director of the Paris Opera for another seven years according to a decree of the Minister of the Fine Arts. He has held this position since 1913.

Ysaye Leads in Paris

Paris, Jan. 3.—Eugene Ysaye, violinist and conductor, was guest leader in two concerts of the Pasdeloup Orchestra late last month. The composers included on the program were Schumann, d'Indy, Weber, and Ysaye.

GEORGES ENESCO

Roumanian Violinist Is Again in the United States for a Series of Concert Appearances.

Strauss Works on Faust Theme

Berlin, Jan. 21.—Richard Strauss, Viennese composer and former director of the Vienna State Opera, is at work on a new opera on the motif of Goethe's Faust, it is reported. He is at present in Garmisch, Bavaria. The first performance of the work is set for the spring in Vienna.

Schalk Makes Symphonic Appearance

Vienna.—Franz Schalk, who since the resignation of Richard Strauss has been the sole director of the Vienna State Opera, conducted the third concert of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. This marked his first appearance as permanent conductor of the orchestra.

Pianist Plays for Pope

Rome, Jan. 20.—Jan Paderewski, who is at present in Rome, where he gave a public recital last week, played a special program of piano music for Pope Pius and other high ecclesiastics in the private libary of the Pope yesterday afternoon.

Janacek Finishing New Opera

Prague, Jan. 3.—Leo Janacek, author of Jenufa, is nearing the completion of a new opera. It is being written to the libretto of Karel Capek, Czech playwright, and is called Die Sache Makropoulos.

Puccini Is Honored By Italian Cities

Rome.

The King and Queen and other members of the royal family, Premier Mussolini, and many high officials of the Italian Government were present in the Costanzi Theatre last night (January 19) when in commemoration of the late Giacomo Puccini the first and last operas by that composer, Le Villi and Gianni Schicchi, were played. During the first intermission a minute of silence was observed by the standing audience. A portrait of the composer crowned with laurels was shown before the curtain.

Earlier in the day the same personages attended services in honor of Puccini at the Chiesa di Santa Maria degli Angeli, and the son of Puccini, Antonio, who was present, received in person the condolences of the authorities. The orchestra of the Costanzi Theatre played in the Requiem Mass of Abbe Perosi, who conducted himself. The solo parts were sung by artists of the theatre, and the choral ensemble included the church choir and the theatre chorus.

These occasions marked the climax of a series of Puccini memorials which has been unbroken since the composer died. At Torre del Lago and Viareggio inscribed marble tablets were unveiled with fitting ceremonies on December 28. At the Teatro in Viareggio Madame Butterfly was sung that day to complete the services.

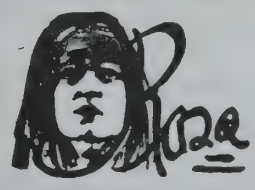
La Scala opera and the Conservatory in Milan celebrated the deceased composer on December 29. At the latter affair Ildebrando Pizzetti spoke in praise of Puccini and his music, and protested against the hypercritical and pedantic persons who were holding his music in too low esteem.

After this talk Arturo Toscanini directed an orchestra composed for the most part of students of the Conservatory in the prelude to the second act of Le Villi, the intermezzo of act three of Manon Lescaut, and an unpublished requiem of Puccini dedicated to Giuseppe Verdi. The last work is scored for chorus, organ, and strings. It is a composition purely religious and meditative in spirit, evolved from ideas, rhythms, and harmonic structure which are far from the mood of the theatre to which Puccini was more accustomed.

In the Scala that evening the commemoration exercises included La Boheme, the intermezzo of Le Villi, and the prelude and funeral march from Edgar. F. C.

Prague Concerts of New Music

Berlin, Jan. 11.—Among the compositions which will be performed at the three orchestral concerts of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Prague next May are Stravinsky's Symphony of Wind Instruments, Vaughan Williams' Pastoral Symphony, and Bartok's Danse Suite. No American works have been chosen for these concerts.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARJORIE MEYER
SOPRANO
Management: Standard Booking Office, 17 East 42d St., New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO
BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE twentieth anniversary of the founding of the Institute of Musical Art, New York, and its endowment by James Loeb in memory of his mother, Betty Loeb, was celebrated by a concert given in the Institute auditorium on January 16, the birthday of Mrs. Loeb.

The Marianne Kneisel Quartet, the Madrigal Choir of the Institute and the Student String Orchestra under the direction of Franz Kneisel presented the program.

Jessie Harding is teaching classes in voice culture at the Anna Morgan Studios, Chicago, and Lillian Fich is rehearsing plays in the children's department.

An artist pupil of Richard Czerwonky at the Bush Conservatory, Robert Quick, received the decision of the judges at the annual contest of the Society of American Musicians in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, recently. Mr. Quick was selected from a large number of violinists now studying in Chicago. He will appear as soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at a popular concert some time in the near future.

Several members of the faculty of the Conservatory have been on recent programs of Chicago stations. Among these artists have been Ella Spravka, pianist, and her artist pupil, Melita Krieg; Glenn Drake, tenor, and Robert Yale Smith, composer accompanist, and Mme. Emmy Ohl, soprano.

The Music Teachers' National Association in convention at St. Louis, just closed, has been one of the most successful sessions in the history of the association, according to the members who were present. Very few of those scheduled for papers were absent, and the papers were well prepared and of general interest. The attendance, both local and from afar, was unusually large.

The officers of the past year were re-elected: Leon R. Maxwell, Newcomb College, New Orleans, La., president; William Benbow, 173 Anderson Place, Buffalo, N. Y., vice president; Donald M. Swarthout, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan., secretary; Waldo S. Pratt, 86 Gillett street, Hartford, Conn., treasurer; Karl W. Gehrkens, Oberlin Conservatory, Oberlin, O., editor. Three new members were elected to the executive committee of the association, namely: Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, Oxford, O.; Carl Beacher, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.; Leo R. Lewis, Tufts College, New York, to fill the places made vacant by the expired terms of Peter C. Lutkin, Philip Clapp, and L. Swarthout.

The following were elected as counsellors for one year as part of the regular executive committee for 1925: Leon R. Maxwell, Karl Gehrkens, William Benbow, Donald M. Swarthout, Waldo S. Pratt, and Adolf Weidig.

Selection of the convention city for 1925 was not definitely settled, although the cities of Cleveland and Cincinnati were openly favored by the executive committee. Instructions were given to the secretary to investigate further with reference to a possible choice of one of these two cities. The convention dates chosen for 1925 are December 28, 29, 30.

Following a report from J. Lawrence Erb, chairman of the National Conservatory Committee of the M. T. N. A., the association passed a resolution authorizing the sending of the following telegram to Representative Robert L. Bacon of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

"The Music Teachers' National Association, in convention assembled, reiterates its support of the movement for establishment of a National Conservatory of Music. It highly indorses the 'Bacon bill' as a constructive step in the right direction. It earnestly requests favorable action at the earliest possible date and will cooperate in any endeavor in the proposed survey."

The piano sonata by George Boyle, soon to appear through the firm of Carl Fischer, will bring the list of the Australian composer-pianist's published compositions to sixty. The new sonata is one of a number of large works which Mr. Boyle has steadily produced during his years of piano teaching at the Peabody Conservatory, and, more recently, at the Institute of Musical Art of New York and the new Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

At his piano recital in Lewiston, Pa., recently Robert Braun, of the Braun School of Music in Pottsville, gave the first public performance of the Bach-Godowsky Prelude from the third Suite in C major. Mr. Braun was assisted by John W. Wilson, baritone.

The chief achievement of the Past Presidents' Assembly of the National Federation of Music Clubs during the last year has been the securing of a fund of $2,000, which insures the Young Musicians' Contest winners of cash prizes of $500 each as well as music school scholarships. Among those who have contributed are the Sigma Alpha Iota Sorority, Amelita Galli-Curci, Olga Samaroff, Mrs. Marie Rich Rockwood, and Susan B. Rich.

ALFRED Y. CORNELL

A Number of Whose Students Appeared in a Song Recital in the New Chickering Hall in New York Last Wednesday Evening.

On Monday evening, December 22, the Misses Marie and Helen McGinnis, artist pupils of Victor Everham, were heard in a concert at Holstein Park Hall, Chicago.

The following pupils appeared in recital at the Illinois College of Music last month: Lela Miller, Robert Coleman, Clarence Jacobus, Edwin Preodor, John Woltman, Marian Whitlock, Hazel May Sarber, Marjorie Lane, Ramona Jensen, Evelyn Wexstein, Alma Bargindi, Helen Webber, Gladys Schussler, and Emmett Higgins.

Carolyn Beebe, assisted by her artist pupil, Creighton Allen, appeared with the Montclair Orchestra, Philip James conductor, at the Montclair Auditorium, Montclair, N. J., recently.

Miss Beebe and Mr. Allen played Bach's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra in C Major. She also appeared as soloist in the first American performance of Opus 34, Overture on Yiddish Themes by Serge Prokofieff.

In Saint-Saens' The Carnival of the Animals, a fantasia for two pianos, flute, clarinet, celesta, xylophone and strings, Miss Beebe and Mr. Allen also appeared.

Peter Meremblum, the Russian violinist, has been engaged to take charge of the violin department of the Cornish School, Seattle, Wash., commencing February 1.

Curtis Institute Announces Three New Scholarships

Three new scholarships, available when the second term begins on February 13, were announced this week by Miss Grace H. Spofford, executive secretary of The Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia.

They are the Mary S. Collins' scholarship for viola, given by Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Collins; the Eleanor Pillsbury Pennell scholarship for the voice, given by Mrs. Cyrus H. K. Curtis in memory of her daughter, and the Cyrus Libbey Curtis scholarship for the trombone, given by Cyrus H. K. Curtis in memory of his father.

This makes fifteen scholarships in all available at The Curtis Institute of Music. In addition to the three announced by Miss Spofford this week, there were eight available in the Conservatory Department, including the Olga Samaroff and the Mr. and Mrs. W. Curtis Bok piano scholarships, three in the Preparatory Department of the Institute, and the Evans Braun scholarship in composition, given by Mr. and Mrs. John F. Braun of Merion, Pa., in memory of Owen Hugh Evans, Mrs. Braun's father.

Scholarships have thus far been won by three Philadelphians and three out of town students. Ruth Shufro Strauss holds the Curtis Institute of Music scholarship in piano, Jacob Savitt the violin scholarship, and Simon Goremica the voice scholarship. The Curtis Institute of Music violoncello scholarship was won by Louisa Knowlton of Boston, in competition with several male applicants. Olga Barabini of New York won the Olga Samaroff piano scholarship and has already begun her studies under Josef Hofmann. The Mr. and Mrs. W. Curtis Bok piano scholarship was also won by a New Yorker, Xenia Mazarevitch.

A class in Music Criticism will be conducted by Felix Borowski at the 1925 Summer Master School, beginning June 29, of the Chicago Musical College. Mr. Borowski, who is president of the college, has for many years been prominent in musical journalism. He is at present special music critic for the Christian Science Monitor.

The course will include the following: English as applied to newspaper reviewing; review of musical material required for music criticism; musical literature; other arts in their relation to music criticism; the function of criticism; the technique of journalism, and actual reviewing of musical performances.

Delta Omicron, the national music sorority, has recently elected to national honorary memberships the following American women composers: Helen Sears, Gena Branscombe, Fannie C. Dillon, Frances Marion Ralston, and Ethel Glenn Hier.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

PIETRO CIMINI CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

IN THE Tudor Edition of Old Music, published by J. & W. Chester, London, two new additions have been made to the second series. Gerald Cooper has transcribed and edited two songs by Caccini, Dovro Dunque Morire, and Amirilli, Mia Bella, which have the simplicity and pleasing melodiousness which is characteristic of the compositions of this father of modern music. The songs were written in 1610. Mr. Cooper's arrangements include ćello obbligati.

The other additions, also arrangements of Gerald M. Cooper, are four duets of Robert Jones, composed about 1609. They are entitled Though Your Strangeness Frets My Heart; Sweet Kate; Once Did I Serve a Cruel Heart, and My Complaining Is but Feigning.

The latest addition to the G. Schirmer Recital Series of Organ Transcriptions is the arrangement by Edwin Arthur Kraft of the Dance of the Reed Flutes from Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite. Mr. Kraft joins this newest adaptation, as colorful, skillful, and fitting as the rest, to his previous arrangements of the Arab Dance and the Dance of the Candy Fairy from the same suite.

New Schirmer pieces for the piano include Wagtails, a descriptive work by Charles Huerter; A Bird in a Garden, by Ida Bostelmann; and A Sailor's Piece, by H. Balfour Gardiner. The last composition is a composition of excellent workmanship, and melodic charm. The brisk staccato opening movement is well set off by the fuller harmonies and less capricious rhythms of the middle section, and the return of the first motif is likewise a welcome recapitulation. The second of these three compositions is a short piece based on the motif of a lively bird song, and this is the form of the construction of Mr. Huerter's Wagtails also.

Among the other recent Schirmer issues for voice are: The Wind and the Cloud, by Frank H. Grey, a song issued for high and low voices; At the Cry of the First Bird, by David Guion, a piece for medium voice; Ah, Moon of My Delight, by Arthur Nevin, also for medium voice, and When We Two Parted, for medium or low voice, by Roland Farley. The standard in these recent Schirmer issues is exceptionally high, for the compositions all are worthy of the inspection of the professional singer in search of serious material for an American group on any program.

Werrenrath and Myra Hess in Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Jan. 19.—The song recital of Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, last Tuesday evening aroused decisive comment on the part of the reviewers. They were agreed as to the artistic quality of his singing, but his program was not completely approved.

Mr. Goldenburg of the Enquirer wrote, "Maturity has added more to his interpretations than to his vocal technique," and admired the singer's "facile art," particularly in the group of Danish songs. Mr. Plogstedt wrote in the Post that the program "narrowly escaped monotony," beginning as it did with a group by Schubert, Brahms, and Grieg, following with Danish songs "uninteresting to a degree," and with the Credo from Verdi's Otello, "a poor selection for recital."

A group of four Masefield settings by Easthope Martin were unanimously approved. Mrs. Smith declared in the Times-Star, "Cradle songs fall inappropriately from the lips of the adult male," but concluded that "there are few that can approach this American artist for the simple undefiled art of song itself."

In the Commercial-Tribune Mr. Wilson said that the lieder group was "ineffective," but that the Danish songs were "more than satisfactorily done," and the Easthope Martin group was "contagious as it was grateful."

The second Matinee Musicale of the season was a recital by Myra Hess, pianist, this afternoon. Mrs. Smith wrote, "Miss Hess is a pianist of pianists." Although she considered the Schumann part of the program over long, she concluded, "the art was impeccable."

Mr. Wilson called the art of Miss Hess "purely feminine" with the "graceful, flexible strength of a Toledo blade." He admired the "surety and conviction of her work." Mr. Goldenburg felt that Miss Hess played "with delightful contrasts of light and shade" in the Chopin B flat Sonata.

Georges Enesco, Roumanian violinist, is to appear in recital here on January 29 under the management of Miss Minnie Tracey.

Photo by Mishkin.

MISS EVELYN BERCKMAN

American Composer, Two of Whose Songs Will Be Sung at the Fourth Concert of the Sunday Symphonic Society, Conducted by Josiah Zuro.

Chattanooga Music

Chattanooga, Jan. 17.—A change has just been made in the arrangements of the visit to Chattanooga of the Chicago Civic Opera Company next month. According to the new schedule, which avoids a performance on Ash Wednesday, Thais, with Mary Garden, will be given on the evening of February 23, Boris Godunoff, with Feodor Chaliapin, will be sung the following afternoon, and Tannhauser, with Raisa, that evening.

Elizabeth Gutman and Lili Robson were recent recitalists. Miss Gutman sang on January 5 and Miss Robson on the 9th. Paul Whiteman's Orchestra is playing here tonight, and Louis Graveure, baritone, will sing on January 22. T. E.

Klemperer Conducts in Russia

Berlin.—At the invitation of the Soviet Government Otto Klemperer went from Germany to conduct a series of symphony concerts in Moscow.

THE January issue of Music and Letters, the English quarterly, contains a number of articles of varied interest. The third article in the series, Musical Parlance in English Literature, by W. Wright Roberts, continues the search for musical references in recent and current literature. W. G. Whittaker in his second paper, discussing the Claims of Tonic Solfa, has written a sort of rebuttal to objections raised against the contentions of his first article on the subject.

Cecil Forsyth speaks of The First Performance of Gounod's Redemption, and W. S. Meadmore writes briefly concerning the traditional South Place Chamber Music Concerts. Other articles of more widespread interest are Rhythm as Proportion, by L. Borwick; Cristobal Morales, by J. B. Trend; The Fall and Rise of the Hymn Tune, by G. Dearmer; Creed and Custom, a discussion of novelty and traditionalism in music, by A. E. Brent Smith; Schubert's Poets, by H. G. Fiedler, and Some Recent Wagner Criticism in Germany and in England, a protest against the Freudian spirit in modern Wagnerian research, by G. A. Hight.

WHAT WE HEAR IN MUSIC, by Anne Shaw Faulkner, published by the Educational Department of the Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N. J., has just been issued in its fifth revised edition. It is a course of study in music history and appreciation for use in the home, and is adapted to the educational plans of music clubs, conservatories, and schools.

The body of the book is divided into four groups of lessons. One set considers the problem of learning to listen and the place of nationalist music; another takes up the history of music; the third part deals with the orchestra and the development of instrumental music; and the last is concerned with opera and oratorio.

Together with each of the lessons is a list of Victor records chosen to illustrate the information supplied in that lesson. A large appendix gives short explanatory notes concerning each of the records quoted. In other mechanical respects the book is well equipped, for it is thoroughly illustrated, has an extensive bibliography, a pronunciation table, and several complete tables of index.

With all this equipment and a body of standard information, What We Hear in Music makes an excellent elementary text in the study of music by music lovers.

CECILE de HORVATH
PIANIST
Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Baldwin Piano De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

Fontainebleau School of Music
PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU, FRANCE
Directors: Ch. M. Widor and Camille Decreus, supervised by the French Government.
For American Artists, Teachers and Advanced Students Only
JUNE 25 TO SEPTEMBER 25, 1925
Greatest French Teachers, including Widor and Libert Organ; Andre Bloch, Composition and Conducting; Miss Nadia Boulanger, Harmony (the Appreciation and Philosophy of Modern Music); Isidor Philipp and Decreus, Piano; Remy and Hewitt, Violin; Hekking, Violoncello; Grandjany, Harp; Mauguiere and Salignac, Voice, Repertory and Mise-en-scene; Pillois, the French Language and History of Music; Fauchet, Solfeggio and Instrumental Ensemble.
Tuition, board and lodging 5000 francs three months' course
3500 francs two months' course
American Office: National Arts Club Studios
FRANCIS ROGERS, Chairman
119 East 19th Street, New York City.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

IN LAST week's issue of The Musical Digest appeared an account of the soiree given by Mr. and Mrs. Hageman in their New York home, January 18, in celebration of Mrs. Mary Flint's seventy-eighth birthday, at which she was feted by artists from the Metropolitan Opera and reviewers of the New York press. Owing to the large number of guests present the flashlight group is but representative of the gathering.

Identification: 1—William Guard, 2—Rafaelo Diaz, 3—Mario Chamlee, 4—George Meader, 5—Edward Cushing, 6—Frank Perkins, 7—Dorsey Whittington, 8—Edwin Hughes, 9—Charles Noble, 10—Carl Maas, 11—Edwin Franko Goldman, 12—Pierre Henrotte, 13—Henry Hadley, 14—Marie Sundelius, 15—Richard Hageman, 16—Mary Flint, 17—Renee Thornton Hageman, 18—Florence Easton, 19—Rose Coghlan, 20—George Bernard, 21—Albert Payson Terhune, 22—Max Smith, 23—Ona Talbot, 24—Mrs. Henry Hadley, 25—Artur Bodanzky, 26—Thelma Given, 27—Antonio Scotti, 28—Andres de Segurola, 29—Walter Koons, 30—Miss Morris, 21—William Gustafson, 32—Olin Downes, 33—Paul Kempf, 34—Bernard Wagenaau, 35—Maurice Swaab, 36—Miss Frank, 37—Mrs. Gustav Saenger, 38—Fitzhugh Haensel, 39—Gustav Saenger, 40—Mrs. Fitzhugh Haensel, 41—Mrs. William Gustafson, 42—Archer Gibson, 43—Mrs. Arthur Bergh, 44—Mrs. Francis Macmillen.

Opera Completing Tour Plans

Increasing interest in the touring activities of New York's Metropolitan Opera Company is being displayed in those cities which are the fortunate ones to be visited by that organization at the close of its New York season.

The signal success—in patronage as well as artistically—achieved last year in Cleveland has resulted in preparations for another affair there, beginning April 27 next and ending May 5. Nine representations of opera will be given there, again in the huge Civic Auditorium, and one gala operatic concert. It is anticipated that the attendance records of a year will be surpassed.

The operas selected are L'Africana, Faust, Trovatore, Falstaff, Coq d'Or, Pagliacci, Traviata, Tales of Hoffman, and Aida. Parsifal and the gala concert will constitute independent offerings not embraced as part of the regular subscriptions. The artists will be virtually the same as those to be heard and seen in Atlanta.

Rochester is to have two Metropolitan performances, at the Eastman Theatre, the details of which will be published when the contracts are signed.

The New York Metropolitan Opera Company will play in Atlanta, Ga., from April 20 to April 25. The operas which will be given are Gioconda, Falstaff, Juive, Mefistofele, Lohengrin, Tales of Hoffmann, and Tosca. They will be conducted by Messrs. Serafin, Hasselmans, Papi, and Bamboschek.

Among the artists who will appear in this series of performances are Mmes. Alda, Bori, Easton, Rethberg, Gordon, and Claussens, and Messrs, Lauri-Volpi, Martinelli, Johnson, Taucher, Danise, de Luca, Scotti, Bohnen, Whitehill, Chaliapin, Mardones, Rothier, and Didur.

Plays Primitive Music

Harriette Cady, pianist, gave a lecture-recital on "primitive music" in the Princess Theatre, New York, last Tuesday afternoon. The program included selections which ranged from Ireland's County of Roscommon to an Egyptian temple dance, airs of Java and Japan, and an Inca dance of Peru. The audience applauded particularly Miss Cady's own settings of a Chinese lullaby and spring song.

Philharmonic String Quartet

The program of the first New York concert of the Philharmonic Quartet, given last night in Aeolian Hall, included the Haydn Quartet, Op. 76, No. 3, the Glazunoff Quartet, Op. 70, No. 5, and Malipiero's Rispette Strambotti.

Oehmann, III, Unable to Sing

On account of illness Martin Oehman, German opera tenor, who made his debut this season at the New York Metropolitan Opera, has asked the management to release him from his contract.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
"Miss Bluebeard"
with BEBE DANIELS
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
Cecil B. DeMille Production
"The Golden Bed"
With ALL STAR CAST
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
A Rupert Hughes Production
"EXCUSE ME"
With NORMA SHEARER and CONRAD NAGEL
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

A bit of San Francisco breeze blew into The Musical Digest office the other day in the person of Gaetano Merola, of the San Francisco Opera Association. Signor Merola will have something to say shortly about the coming season's plans of his organization.

* * *

Who is the "masked" tenor? Beckhard and McFarlane won't tell. Here is a job for W. J. Flynn.

* * *

Up Boston-way Percy Grainger played the piano, and congratulated himself on his sold-out house.

* * *

Ernest Urchs met Lines-o'-Newser at the recent reception tendered by Messrs. La Forge and Berumen to Lawrence Tibbett, and fixed on him a questioning eye. "Can't I go anywhere without your following me around?" Apparently not, since Brother Urchs will go to the most desirable places.

* * *

Just a suggestion, in appearance, of Mme. Jeritza . . . by the Metropolitan Opera Company's newcomer soprano, Maria Muller. Very attractive, was the popular verdict.

* * *

Now and again one hears of Samuel Macmillen via the telegraph. The St. Louis Symphony keeps him busy.

* * *

President W. H. Murphy, of the Detroit Symphony, may be thoughtful enough, perhaps, to see that his new manager—D. Edward Porter—has a nice car to ride about in. Detroit surely offers an abundant selection.

* * *

Louisville is thriving musically. A Musical Digest staff member stopped there for two days last week. But Churchill Downs was closed, so there was no opportunity to see a bit of horse-racing.

* * *

Victor Sincere, one of Cleveland's music devotees, has been visiting New York. Mr. Sincere will be well up in front at the spring performances of the Metropolitan Opera Company in Cleveland.

* * *

As for Phil Miner, Cleveland's impresario, he is camping in Gothamtown, at the St. Regis, which is directly opposite the Hotel Gotham.

* * *

Clever John Tasker Howard, of the Ampico forces, has been appearing in what he terms "A Musical Diversion" at the Montclair, N. J., Well Mont Theatre. Steady J. T. H. Don't infringe on the copyright performance of Dr. Sigmund Spaeth.

* * *

By the way, Henry Souvaine, head of the Chickering artists department, has written the music for The Comic Supplement, a music affair which opened recently in the national capital. It is said by those who have heard it to be engaging music.

* * *

About the time this appears in print Jack Adams, of Wolfsohn, should be saluting San Francisco's skyline.

* * *

The general situation with respect to radio broadcasting of distinguished artists has eased somewhat. As The Musical Digest has pointed out, there will come, in time, a satisfactory adjustment of all matters looking towards arrangements protecting all concerned.

That luncheon given last Tuesday week by Mme. Germaine Schnitzer in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm Furtwaengler was a distinctly exclusive affair. Some twenty persons were present at Voisin's.

* * *

Up northwards, and to the west, the Minneapolis Symphony is doing splendid things . . . with the able Henri Verbrugghen fulfilling all the things predicted for him by President Elbert Carpenter.

* * *

So Sol Hurok has taken over the Bluebird show, which is on the order of the Chauve Souris . . . and in some respects, according to the opinions of different persons, even cleverer.

* * *

After he has heard a few of their performances Barrett Andrews, with Mrs. Andrews, will depart for a vacation in Mexico. Mr. Andrews is head of the Hearst newspapers in Boston.

* * *

George Liebling seemed to enjoy the film at the Piccadilly last Wednesday night...he also added a couple of vigorous palms to the applause which followed Frederic Fradkin's expert violin solos. So did we.

* * *

"Something I have heard before," is Ottokar Cadek's revised definition of a melody.

* * *

Rehearsals of Giovanni Gallurese, the new opera by Italo Montemezzi, which is to be produced at the Metropolitan, have been started. The composer arrived in New York last week to supervise them. Tullio Serafin is slated to conduct, and Maria Mueller, Lauri-Volpi and Danise will be in the cast.

* * *

Giovanni, Rodolfo, and Enrico Caruso, brother and sons of the late tenor, are in the United States for a stay of about a month. Young Enrico, who resembles the father, placed a laurel wreath before the bust of the latter in the lobby of the Metropolitan on Wednesday.

* * *

A cable from Italy announces the marriage of Ildebrando Pizzetti, composer, to Signorina Cantiglio of Milan. The best man of the occasion was none other than Arturo Toscanini.

* * *

The Chicago Opera Company has moved East bag and baggage. It is starting its tour with a fortnight stand in Boston, which commenced last night. When the curtain went up Bostonians saw Aida on the other side of it.

* * *

Andres de Segurola closed his series of artistic mornings last Thursday at the Plaza. He promises to return next year with a list of artists as fine as ever.

* * *

Claudia Muzio has sent 10,000 lire to Arturo Toscanini in Milan as her contribution to the fund which is being raised for the placement of a bust of the late Giacomo Puccini.

* * *

Tooth-ache, avers Mrs. Mario Chamlee, is most disconcerting. But it is better now (subsiding, we mean to say): Mrs. Chamlee's tooth-ache, not ours.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Singing as a
Fine Art
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 16 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

FEB 9 1925 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Maestro Giorgio Polacco, musical director of the Chicago Civic Opera Association, who is now conducting performances by that organization during its stay in Boston.

Bulletins of News

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, who gave his farewell concert as guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra Friday evening, sailed for Germany the following day on the Minnetonka. The program at this concert consisted of Haydn's Surprise Symphony, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

At the morning rehearsal preceding the concert, the conductor was presented with a silver loving cup by the orchestra.

At the hour of going to press The Musical Digest learned that Mme. Ethel Leginska, the pianiste who disappeared last Monday week while an audience was awaiting her in New York's Carnegie Hall, had been found. Captain John Ayres, head of New York's Bureau of Missing Persons, was authority for the statement, but he refused to disclose Mme. Leginska's whereabouts.

Miss Lucille Oliver, pupil of the pianiste who has been her companion and who started with her for Carnegie Hall on the night she disappeared so mysteriously, is quoted as stating that Mme. Leginska was found in a small town—one report says in New York State, another in Pennsylvania. A third report places the lost musician as being sheltered in a Boston sanitarium.

Frederick W. Peck and George W. Peck, of Rochester, N. Y., uncles of Mme. Leginska, are quoted by the New York Times as being unaware of the finding of their niece. They say they are her only relatives in this country.

Maurice Frank, identified with the few representations of opera last summer at New York's National League Base Ball park which closed for lack of patronage and resulted in dissatisfaction among some of those connected with the enterprise, announces the formation of what is called the American Grand Opera Association. Mr. Frank states his purpose is to give performances of opera next summer in the Central Theatre, Cedarhurst, at the Rockaways.

A rumor has reached The Musical Digest that Serge Koussevitzky has been re-engaged to conduct next season the Boston Symphony Orchestra and that he is to have as associate conductor an American very well known. The rumor has not yet been confirmed.

Wagner's Gotterdammerung was revived by the Metropolitan Opera Company Saturday afternoon with the following cast: Curt Taucher, Friedrich Schorr, Michael Bohnen, Gustav Schutzendorf, Nanny Larsen-Todsen, (debut), Maria Mueller, Karin Branzell, Laura Robertson, Phradie Wells, Marion Telva, Merle Alcock, Henriette Wakefield, Max Block and Arnold Gabor. Artur Bodanzky conducted. A digest of the reviews of the opera will be given in the next issue of The Musical Digest.

Mischa Elman Is Engaged To Marry San Franciscan

MISCHA ELMAN is considering hanging up his fiddle of bachelordom and entering the ranks of the benedicts. The distinguished violinist is reported engaged to marry Miss Helen Katten, of San Francisco; and his secretary confirms the report.

Miss Katten is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Katten. Mr. Katten is engaged in business in the Pacific Coast city and is a cousin of the mayor of Sacramento.

No date for the marriage ceremony was given by Mr. Elman's secretary, who stated that the violinist and his finance had met on a European-bound liner several years ago. Miss Katten is said now to be on her way from San Francisco to New York.

The engagement of Mr. Elman and Miss Mildred Stone, of New York City, was made known in October 22, and the wedding was to have taken place the summer following. It was subsequently postponed to a later date, but before it was reached the engagement was broken off.

Gallo Forms Company To Tour With Alglala

All-American Cast Will Give Native Opera.

An all-American opera company will be organized next season by Fortune Gallo to present the American opera, Alglala, according to an announcement from Mr. Gallo's office. This opera, which has been produced successfully in Akron and Cleveland, was written by a native of Akron, Frank de Leone, and by Cecil Fanning.

It is largely due to the encouragement of the Federation of Music Clubs that Mr. Gallo has decided to undertake the presentation of the opera. He plans to form a company distinct from his San Carlo forces, which will include an orchestra and well-known American artists. The opera will carry complete scenic and technical equipment.

Mr. Gallo admits that the success of his venture depends entirely on the co-operation given him by music clubs and local managers. Those who have long spoken of the desirability of fostering American opera and American artists are thus given the opportunity to demonstrate their sincerity by encouraging his all-American enterprise.

That the price of this opera will not exceed that ordinarily paid for a single artist has been assured these clubs by Mr. Gallo. This will enable a great many of them to afford to include Alglala in their regular concert courses. Mr. Gallo has further announced that the length of the tour will depend altogether on the response which he receives, and that his decision as to whether he will present works by other American composers will be influenced by the success of this venture.

Carnegie Hall Sold, But N. Y. Auditorium Wins Five Years Grace

Purchaser Will Maintain Hall for That Period Unless New House Is Built.

R. E. SIMON IS BUYER

Despite the oft-repeated denials that the sale of Carnegie Hall was in prospect, it was announced last week that this building, which has been the center of New York's musical activities for a generation, has been sold by the estate of the late Andrew Carnegie to Robert E. Simon.

Music lovers have no cause for immediate worry that New York will be left without a concert hall since Mr. Simon has agreed to Mrs. Carnegie's stipulation that the auditorium be continued in operation for five years, although that period may be shortened if another hall is erected meantime. Robert A. Franks, executor of the Carnegie Estate, issued the following statement:

"An understanding has been arrived at between the executor of the estate of Andrew Carnegie and Robert E. Simon covering the more important provisions for a sale of the Carnegie Hall properties by the estate to Mr. Simon. The parties are now working out a form of contract. Unless unforeseen difficulties arise in connection with the details, it is expected that a contract will be signed and that a sale to Mr. Simon will result.

"The executor and Mrs. Carnegie, as residuary legatees, have been anxious that no inconvenience might result to the lovers of music in New York City. To this end the contract will provide for the continued operation of the auditorium of Carnegie Hall for five years, unless another hall capable of taking its place is sooner constructed. Mr. Simon contemplates no changes which will affect any of the present leases."

The news of the sale has given rise to rumors that the directors of the symphony orchestras are contemplating the construction of a new auditorium. Clarence H. Mackay of the Philharmonic board of directors, denied that the subject has even been under discussion.

It has been pointed out that the erection of a new auditorium, necessitated by the sale, will be, very probably, in a new district. As a result of the increasing value of property in the present music center, it is more than likely to shift to a location where property is less expensive. After the erection of such a new concert hall, other musical interests may gravtitate around it, as has been the case with the changing theatrical district.

Mr. Simon's purchase includes the auditorium, studios, the Rembrandt apartment house adjoining on Fifty-seventh street, and the private stables on Fifty-sixth street. He also holds the title to a large plot adjoining Carnegie Hall and it is assumed that, after the five years have elapsed, or when another building is constructed, Mr. Simon will put up apartment houses or office buildings.

Koussevitzky Visits Philadelphia

Hageman Conducts Philharmonic With Casals as Soloist; Rich Leads Home Orchestra.

Philadelphia, Jan. 28.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra played in Philadelphia for the first time in four years last Monday. Under the auspices of the Philadelphia Forum, the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, gave a concert in the Academy of Music that night. The program consisted of C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D major, Berlioz's Overture to The Roman Carnival, Debussy's Clouds and Nocturnes, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

This musical fare contained nothing which was not thoroughly familiar to Philadelphia, but, to quote the North American reviewer, "Mr. Koussevitzky's was a double triumph, since he not only played magnificently, but proved that a true musician can always breathe new life into old compositions." This writer continued that "his interpretations are highly individual, but always logical." Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer found nothing new in his readings, although they were "intelligent, expressive."

Although the Public Ledger chronicler thought the work rather uneven, he spoke of Mr. Koussevitzky as "an intense individualist" who shows "musical sincerity" in every element of his conducting. In the Record, the reviewer asserted that the orchestra 'is once more the great instrument it was formerly" and mentioned that the conductor "compelled the most enthusiastic response from an audience which appeared to recognize at once the gifts of a really endowed musician."

* * *

Another symphonic concert of interest was that given by the Philharmonic Society with Richard Hageman as guest conductor and Pablo Casals as soloist. Mr. Casals played the B flat Concerto by Boccherini for violoncello and orchestra and the D minor Suite for cello unaccompanied by Sebastian Bach. The novelty introduced by Mr. Hageman was Thorwald Otterstrom's Suite, American Negro.

Of Mr. Casals, the North American wrote that "it is generally conceded he is the greatest living cellist, one in whom great virtuosity always goes hand in hand with the purest ideals." The Ledger chronicler and Mr. Muschamp agreed.

The former writer said that Mr. Hageman "deepened the splendid impression" he made at his former concert here this season, and the North American commentator stated that "Mr. Hageman is one of the most satisfying of visiting conductors, and achieved exceedingly fine results with the excellent body that comprises the present season's Philharmonic Society."

Writing of the Otterstrom Suite, this reviewer found them "skillfully and deftly orchestrated with just the right amount of sophistication." The Ledger considered the writing "very interesting" and the orchestration "original and effective, although inclined to be heavy in places."

* * *

The Philadelphia Orchestra also had a guest conductor in its concert last Friday. This was Thaddeus Rich, concert master of the orchestra. The soloist was Olga Samaroff, who played Mozart's A major Concerto, and Liszt's E flat major Concerto. The orchestral numbers were Beethoven's First Symphony and Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel.

Linton Martin (North American) remarked that Mme. Samaroff's "pianistic versatility was amply disclosed in the two concerti." In the Ledger she was lauded for her playing of the Liszt "with splendid taste and great beauty of tone as well as with the immense technique which its difficulties demand." According to Mr. Muschamp, Philadelphians again applauded "her fine sense of rhythm, the careful attention to pedaling and the good ensemble of her playing." The Record said that her "artistic and brilliant results" with the two Concertos "speak volumes for her ability as a technician as well as inherent versatility of temperament."

This writer commented that Mr. Rich conducted with "the same well balanced, serious, musicianly feeling he infuses into his individual playing" and that he was "remarkably successful yesterday." The Ledger chronicler asserted that his readings were very satisfactory and that the orchestra played with "enthusiasm and much tonal beauty."

* * *

The Rich-Kindler-Hammann Trio were heard at the meeting of the Chamber Music Society on Sunday in a program which consisted of Beethoven's Geister Trio, the Kreisler arrangement of the Londonderry Air, and the Trio Elegiaque by Rachmaninoff.

According to the Record, "the fine ensemble presented by this combination of players never fails to arouse the greatest pleasure . . . the entire program was very well played and liberally applauded." The three artists, to quote Mr. Muschamp, "presented the three numbers with good balance of tone, a unity of purpose and appreciation of the several moods of the composers, which resulted in one of the best concerts given here this season."

* * *

At the Monday Morning Musical at the Bellevue-Stratford Alfred Cortot, pianist, was heard. His program, as the Inquirer put it, "furnished an excellent foil for the display of his astounding and discriminating taste." In the North American review, he was praised for the manner in which he "fashions with consummate care a tone of deepest beauty and lingers over each phrase." The Record reviewer spoke of him as "a great artist," and the Ledger was enthusiastic over his versatility, "his clear, crisp touch," and his musicianship.

A typically large and enthusiastic audience filled to overflowing the Metropolitan Opera House Monday night to hear John McCormack.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Jenufa—with Mmes. Jeritza and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Meader, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Cavalleria Rusticana and Coq d'Or (matinee)—the former with Mmes. Peralta and Telva; and Messrs. Gigli and Ballester; Mr. Papi conducting. The latter with Mmes. Galli-Curci, Alcock, and Ryan; and Messrs. Diaz and Didur; Mr. Bamboschek conducting. Mmes., Galli and Rudolph and Messrs. Kosloff, Bartik, and Bonfiglio will dance.

Boheme (evening)—with Mmes. Mueller and Hunter; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, and Mardones; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Carmen — with Mmes. Bourskaya, Mario, and Galli; and Messrs. Johnson and de Luca; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

SATURDAY

Fedora (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Guilford; and Messrs. Gigli, Scotti, and Martino; Mr. Papi conducting.

Die Walkuere — with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Mueller, Branzell, Bourskaya, and Telva; and Messrs. Taucher, Bohnen, and Gustafson; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

MONDAY

Madama Butterfly—with Mme. Rethberg and Messrs. Johnson and Scotti; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Minneapolis Symphony Opens Mid-Winter Tour

The annual mid-winter tour of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Henri Verbrugghen, conductor, will take the eighty-five players of the organization as far East as Pittsburgh and New York and South as far as New Orleans.

The tour opened at Madison, Wis., yesterday, where two concerts were given at the University of Wisconsin. The State University of Indiana at Bloomington will be visited on February 3, followed by two concerts at Terre Haute, Ind., on the 4th, and one concert at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, on the 5th. Three concerts will be given at Pittsburgh, Pa., on February 6-7 under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Orchestral Association.

Following this engagement the orchestra will entrain for New York, arriving here on the morning of Sunday, February 8. No public performances will be given here, the day being devoted to the making of records at the Laboratories of the Brunswick Company. Leaving New York the same evening, the orchestra will reach Indianapolis, Ind., Monday afternoon in time for a concert that evening in the Murat Theatre under the auspices of the Symphony Society.

The remaining engagaments are: Feb. 10, Nashville, Tenn., 2 concerts, auspices, Nashville Symphony Society; Feb. 11, Birmingham, Ala., 2 concerts, auspices, Music Study Club; Feb. 12, Montgomery, Ala., 1 concert, Montgomery Concert series; Feb. 13-14, New Orleans, La., 3 concerts, New Orleans Symphony Association; Feb. 16, Memphis, Tenn., 2 concerts, Beethoven Club; Feb. 17 (afternoon), 1 concert at State Normal School, Charleston, Ill. (evening), 1 concert at University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. The tour will close with two concerts at the University of Iowa, Iowa City, on Feb. 18, the party arriving in Minneapolis on the morning of Feb. 19.

Rubinstein Concerto Played by Mirovitch

Pianist Substitutes for Juan Manen, Ill, as Soloist With Los Angeles Orchestra.

Los Angeles, Jan. 21.—At the concert last Friday afternoon of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Walter Henry Rothwell, Alfred Mirovitch took the place of Juan Manen, who was indisposed, as soloist. He played Rubinstein's Concerto for piano and orchestra. Other works offered by the orchestra were Beethoven's Leonore Overture and Dvorak's New World Symphony.

Bruno Davis Ussher of the Express found Mr. Mirovitch "a player of considerable technique," but added that "it takes a super-virtuoso to revive this 'decomposition.'" According to Ralph E. Green, the soloist, "a pianist of virtuoso caliber," was given an opportunity to exhibit his extensive technical range in this work. In the opinion of Carl Bronson of the Herald, his performance "was one to be put down as actually masterful," and "while it dazzles technically, Mirovitch added the redeeming qualities of his redeeming art." As the Daily News writer put it, he played the work "as if it were a great inspiration." Opposed to these views was that expressed by the Record reviewer, who felt that his playing "had not the brilliant technical quality which might have given a fictitious importance to this composition."

To some extent indicative of the general response to the concert as a whole was the statement in the Times that "everything was adequately performed, but at no time during the afternoon was the music inspired." The Daily News, on the other hand, called it "a musical feast."

Mme. Branzell Substitutes

At the peformance of Die Walkuere by the Metropolitan Opera Company in Brooklyn last Tuesday evening Julia Claussen appeared as Brunhilde, although she was troubled with a sore throat. Late in the second act Miss Claussen became so ill that she was unable to continue, and Karin Branzell, who had just completed her role of Fricka, substituted for Mme. Claussen for the remainder of the opera. Part of the second act was omitted.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Chicago Opera Opens With Aida in Boston

Moranzoni Conducts First Tour Production; Hub Reviewers Praise Performance.

Boston, Jan. 27.—The Chicago Civic Opera Company opened its two weeks' season at the Boston Opera House last night with a performance of Verdi's Aida. The large and brilliant first night audience applauded enthusiastically and insisted on many curtain calls.

The opera was conducted by Roberto Moranzoni, and in the cast were Rosa Raisa, Cyrena van Gordon, Elizabeth Kerr, Charles Marshall, Cesare Formichi, Alexander Kipnis, Virgilio Lazzari and Lodovico Oliviero. Stuart Mason (Christian Science Monitor) wrote that "the general ensemble was unusually spirited. This was in great part due to the conducting of Mr. Moranzoni. There was much fine singing and occasionally there were also fine bits of acting on the part of nearly everybody concerned." The settings, according to Mr. Mason, were "unusually magnificent" and the chorus and ballet were "excellent."

In the Globe, the reviewer commented that Mme. Raisa acted "with more subtlety than in former seasons" and "sang with greater restraint and artistry . . . hers is one of the two or three most beautiful voices heard by this generation." According to this writer, Mme. van Gordon showed the benefits of long familiarity with her part . . . every detail of her impersonation has been thought out. Her voice is still of uneven quality, best in its top register, and at its best impressive."

Charles Marshall was praised by this writer for his impersonation, which he considered "subtle" and "polished." Mr. Formichi, he continued, "put considerable emotional intensity into his acting and sang with both vigor and discretion." Messrs. Kipnis and Oliviero were commended and he thought that Miss Kerr sang the priestess' solo "with beautiful clarity and purity of tone."

In the opinion of the Transcript chronicler, Mme. Raisa's voice was "full, round and animated; it welled up to a good, controlled volume, yet never shattered itself on the high notes . . . her tone was a chalice of purity, her shading even, not overdelicate." The voice of Mme. van Gordon, to further quote this reviewer, was "more ample and billowing" and seemed never "cupped to the moment, but diffused and nebulous." Mr. Thomas was lauded by this writer for his "modulated, easy tenor;" Mr. Lazzari was called "unemotional but stolidly effective." Mr. Mason was enthusiastic about the work of Mme. van Gordon and Mr. Formichi, but more reserved in the case of the other principals.

Mr. Moranzoni was lauded by the Globe reviewer for the way he controlled the ensemble scenes, and in the Transcript, the commentator spoke of the way in which the orchestra "paced and guided precisely and never intrusively . . . the conductor shaped it and made it pictorial."

Stravinsky Plays His Concerto in Premiere

Boston Reminded of Bach's Style in New Composition; People's Symphony.

Boston, Jan. 26.—Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer and pianist, was the soloist at the concert on Friday of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. He played his own new Piano Concerto in its first hearing in the United States. The other numbers on the all-Stravinsky program were the Song of the Volga Boatmen, Petrouchka and the Firebird Suite.

According to the Globe reviewer, the concerto "has the greater emotional power and much greater dignity of style than any other work of Stravinsky heard in Boston. . . . The style is freely polyphonic, the themes are original and of great beauty, the working out is naturally, yet elaborately, contrived."

Warren Storey Smith wrote in the Post that "this music grips, holds and enthralls by reason of its sheer intellectual vigor, its sinewy strength." He also thought that Mr. Stravinsky as a pianist "proved a fluent technician, a master of his own exceedingly intricate rhythms, and one relatively indifferent to tonal color." In the opinion of Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor, "it is music which opens broad horizons, a universal music unconcerned with merely personal impressions, or human passions, a stimulating, quickening and penetrating music."

The Herald chronicler observed that the hearer is "suddenly transported from the formalism of Bach's time to a modernity of expression which is not of the highest order." All the reviewers commented on this Bach influence, contrasted so oddly with modern harmony and jazz. Mr. Smith said that he added to a "Bachian elevation of mood" modern harmony and rhythm. According to Mr. Mason, the concerto "is, quite evidently, a return to the models of classical times." H. T. Parker of the Transript wrote that "the harmonies are the outgrowth, bare and unescapable, of the counterpoint."

At the young people's concert of the orchestra, conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky, Thomas W. Surette introduced and explained the various numbers on the program. These were two movements from Haydn's G major Symphony, three excerpts of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, Anitra's Dance and In the Troll King's Grotto, from Grieg's Peer Gynt Suite. Mr. Wendler displayed the range and tone of the horn in the andante from Franz Strauss' Concerto, and Mr. Bedetti illustrated these points with the cello in the adagio from Haydn's D major Concerto.

Emil Mollenhauer conducted the twelfth concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the St. James Theatre. The soloist, Henry Levine, gave Rimsky-Korsakoff's piano Concerto in C sharp minor its first public performance here. The orchestral numbers were Lalo's Overture to Le Roi d'Ys, Nagel's Symphonic Poem, Fairy Tale, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Caprice on Spanish Themes.

The Monitor writer commented that Mr. Levine "gave an intellectual rendering" of the concerto, and, although his playing lacked emotion, it showed "a markedly smooth technique, and a well defined rhythm." The Herald found it "a beautiful concerto, deserving of more frequent playing," and added that Mr. Levine, "an excellent musician, played the piano solo with a technical facility that was never obtrusive, sensitively, poetically." In the Globe, the reviewer said that the music was dull and lacked "melodic interest."

ALBERT COATES

Was Given an Ovation by an Audience of 2,800 When He Opened His Season With the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

Second Recital by Bossi

A large audience heard Marco Enrico Bossi, organist, in his second recital in the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York, last Tuesday afternoon. Louis Edlin, violinist, and Cornelius Van Vliet, cellist, took part in later numbers on the program, and with Theodore Cella, harpist, joined in Signor Bossi's Sposalizio, which closed the concert.

Coates Returns to Rochester Orchestra

Lamond Is Soloist in Liszt Concerto; Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony Given.

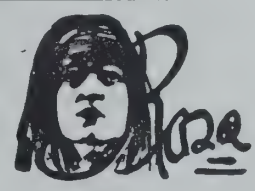
Rochester, Jan. 24.—An audience of 2,800, gathered in the Eastman Theatre, received Albert Coates with an ovation when he made his first appearance of the season as conductor of the second half of the schedule of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. The orchestra had been idle since Eugene Goossens, its other conductor, completed his season in December. At his first concert Mr. Coates conducted Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, selections from Rimsky Korsakoff's Coq d'Or, and the Liszt Piano Concerto in E flat. Frederic Lamond was the assisting artist.

"If the remaining eight programs are as interesting in material and if they are as well done as was the one last night, Rochester has an exceedingly pleasant time ahead," said William P. Costello, reviewer of the Journal and Post-Express, and the other commentators shared his opinion. This writer considered the performance of the Coq d'Or selections "little short of a marvel."

In the performance of the Tschaikowsky A. J. Warner of the Times Union found reflected "the virility and robustness of Mr. Coates' conductorial point of view, which entered vigorously into the brilliant and skillfully constructed last movement." Harvey Southgate wrote in the Herald that the performance of the Tschaikowsky "showed the result of infinite work in detail," and felt that Mr. Coates has a special preference for Russian music.

"Frederic Lamond is one of the few pianists who play Liszt properly," was the judgment of S. B. Sabin in the Democrat and Chronicle regarding the soloist of the evening. "He has the masterly technique, the true understanding of the bravura, the quick turn to little lyrical passages and the power of climax."

In his eight remaining concerts Mr. Coates plans to introduce a number of compositions by Americans, with the composers conducting. Ernest Bloch will probably lead his Winter-Spring, and Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School, his Lux Eterna. Frederick Jacobi will also be represented on at least one program.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARION TELVA
Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

Elena GERHARDT
Management: GEORGE ENGLES—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 16

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.; Canada, $6.00; Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Subsidies for Opera

Approximately one million and a quarter of dollars annually is expended in deficits by eleven of the twelve permanent symphony orchestras of the United States. That sum of money represents the difference between the gross income and the gross expense of those organizations. The investments of the Chicago orchestra yield a return which takes care of its yearly losses. But the securities held by the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia orchestras are insufficient to balance their respective budgets.

In eleven of our foremost cities—from Boston in the north-east to Los Angeles in the south-west—the people have available these splendid music bodies. Most of them tour, thereby making it possible for thousands of people in a considerable number of other communities to benefit through hearing the best orchestra music, admirably performed.

But what of opera? New York has a full season every twelvemonth. And Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, and (more or less occasionally, generally for a few weeks each year) Boston. San Francisco also falls in Boston's class, Los Angeles is correspondingly fortunate, and Cleveland and Atlanta fare moderately well.

Elsewhere opera is spasmodic. It is offered now and again, only; never with regularity or on a well ordered plan. The Metropolitan cannot tour extensively. The Chicago company leaves in its traveling wake a trail of deficits which are borne by the guarantors in those cities where the patronage is insufficient to cover the huge cost necessary to secure an organization of its class. The San Carlo company serves many communities, but it cannot take care of all, nor always in those ways which are desired.

The time has arrived for giving serious thought to the operatic needs of the country in some substantial manner which will provide, in the right way, for adequate opera. It is the contention of some experts that the people of this country want only one kind of opera—the very best—and will be content with no other.

This may be true. In a measure it doubtless is. Still, until it has been attempted the practicableness of medium-priced opera can never be really known. Opera of unquestioned excellence is possible with the seat-prices ranging from about $3.00 downwards. Such an organization, designed to serve a reasonable number of places at no great distances from one common center, might become in time an institution.

There are principal singers to be had for such an enterprise. Second-role artists too, and orchestra musicians, choristers, and ballet dancers. Settings and costumes are no more difficult to obtain, and artistic and business heads.

Why not such a permanent opera company, operated on a season-schedule of twenty-five weeks? There would be a deficit, of course. But several companies of that character could be conducted for less than the cost of maintaining our eleven leading symphony orchestras.

Opera as an art is inferior to the symphony; but it does exert a dual appeal in its visual and aural elements. Many people can be made, through opera, to come to appreciate the higher forms of music. And there appears just now to be a considerable interest shown in opera in many parts of this country. Finally, what opportunities such a company would give to Americans who have indisputable operatic talents and need only the training and experience to fit them for successful careers!

Here is a matter that would seem to deserve serious and extended thought by those in a position to make an undertaking of that character possible. The United States should rank all other countries in its supply of all kinds of music.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

HISTORIES of music have all they can do to report what has actually happened in the world of music. What might have happened is often interesting and sometimes important.

My Life, the autobiography of Richard Wagner (Dodd, Mead and Company, New York), includes at least one story which may frighten the perfect Perfect Wagnerite. In 1849 Wagner was in Dresden. He had already composed his Rienzi, Flying Dutchman, Tannhauser, and Lohengrin. The last work had not yet been produced.

At that time revolutionary hostilities broke out in Dresden, and the city was in a turmoil. Wagner was much interested in the proceedings, not so much because he himself was a revolutionary, but because he had many friends who were active in the struggle. The dramatic aspects of the revolt appealed to him too.

Speaking of one of the more disorderly periods during the revolt Wagner writes in his life story, "For the rest of the day the battle confined itself to skirmishes by sharpshooters from various positions. I was itching to climb the Kreuz tower again, so as to get the widest possible survey over the whole field of action. In order to reach this tower from the Town Hall, one had to pass through a space which was under a cross-fire of rifle-shots from the troops posted in the royal palace. At a moment when this square was quite deserted, I yielded to my daring impulse, and crossed it on my way to the Kreuz tower at a slow pace, remembering that in such circumstances the young soldier is advised never to hurry, because by so doing he may draw a shot upon himself. On reaching this post of vantage I found several people who had gathered there, some of them driven by a curiosity like my own, others in obedience to an order from the headquarters of the revolutionaries to reconnoitre the enemy's movements."

ALTHOUGH I was perfectly aware that four hundred pages of the autobiography remained to be read, I could not help but tremble as this rash young composer strolled across the bullet-ridden square. In the balance hung Tristan, the Meistersinger, the Ring, Parsifal—one reckless idiot with a gun and a good eye MIGHT have altered the history of music a great deal.

THERE are persons who believe that choice of interpretation in music is simply a matter of taste. There are others who seek more certain standards. It would appear that the subjectivists are somewhat too indiscriminate, but what are to be the standards?

Take such a simple matter as this. One may be playing a Chopin Prelude. At a certain measure there is a ritardando indicated, and just at the end of this measure, leading across the bar, is a sixteenth note anticipation of the first note in the next measure. One pianist will retard before the anticipation, and play the sixteenth note with that to which it leads strictly in time. Another may retard on the anticipation, and separate the two notes.

Is that, for example, a legitimate difference in taste? May both ways of playing these measures be correct? I doubt that.

One knows plainly enough what an anticipation is in the mind or instinct of the composer. He plans a sort of double knock in his rhythm, one tone falling into another. It is simply a mistake to separate these two notes, no matter what may be the tempo at the moment. The melody is broken if that is done.

Many broad differences of interpretation, perhaps all, can be reduced to such details as these, which does not mean that taste will cease to be the popular arbiter of interpretation.

FOR the present Stravinsky is the order of the day, and one must continue to speak of him. The other night in New York he conducted his own Octuor (for flute, clarinet, two bassoons, two trumpets, and two trombones) in its American premiere. It was composed in 1923.

The work is written in two movements, roughly a prelude and a theme and variations with fugato finale. The first part did not create a definite mood. For one thing, one had difficulty in becoming accustomed to the combination of instruments, for the bass of the ensemble seemed top-heavy. The second part was much more effective. (Incidentally it seemed more like a rondo than like a theme and variations group.)

It was in the finale that Stravinsky seems to have done his best work. It was quite traditional fugato writing, although the harmonies were not Bach's. The devices of augmentation and stretto were used for climatic effect, and in the middle parts the composer achieved an evenness of movement in the voices which was strangely reminiscent of the contrapuntal section of the Meistersinger Prelude where Wagner combines his three main themes. It was the rhythms that caused this resemblance, for one of the themes was light and dancing, and others (I think two) were more stately and broad.

MR. JOSEPH HOFMANN has written a letter of extraordinary interest in connection with the remarks in Tempo Rubato several weeks ago concerning Mme. Landowska's Music of the Past. Mr. Hofmann quotes as follows from those remarks: "A wind-player can make the tone grow or die as he likes. On the other hand in the harpsichord or piano, the tone once struck cannot be made to increase its volume so long as it is sustained. It can simply die away."

"I have just returned," writes Mr. Hofmann in this regard, "from an extraordinary visit to the home of a master magician where I heard a piano demonstrated which refutes the above statement. I heard tones grow or die as the performer chose. I heard volume increased, the tone once struck, and all this without in any way altering the characteristics of the piano tone."

At present this is magic, but perhaps some day it will become common practice. That is a disturbing thought. What will become then of the pianistic music of the past? For the most part Chopin did not write for an instrument which can control its tone after it has been struck. One can think of very sad things which the pianist of the future, with this new power in his hands, will do to a music whose beauty often depends on the dying away of its tones.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Singing as a Fine Art

Mme. Frances Alda Finds Infinite Pains and Frequent Rehearsing the Price of Intelligent Performance.

by ALICE MASON

ISSUING from a flurry of snow into the apartment, and via an arched doorway of drooping palms into a French Louis XV salon, I saw mirrored in its furnishing the counterpart of a first impression of Mme. Alda obtained some years ago at a Metropolitan performance. The chatelaine was dainty, as the pastel brocades, porcelain figurines and fresh pink roses bore testimony. That her taste was fastidious manifested itself in the orderly comfort, the inordinate neatness of everything, and the blending of tints against old ivory.

Let who will think this has nothing to do with music. The creamy light affected one like the perception of harmony. As if no ordinary sound should first break the spell, there presently trotted into the room on feathery feet a tiny dog, to the tune of silvery tinkling. He advanced on the stranger, sniffed the fur on my coat, retreated in a series of quick jumps, reconnoitered in circles, and after brief contacts with an extended finger, having satisfied his curiosity, pranced proudly out again. . . . A canary trilled and was quiet.

"I made this an exact copy of my apartment in Paris," explained Mme. Alda a little later. "And my strict ideas were gotten from my French grandmother, who was an unrelenting housekeeper and an admirable woman."

That led to an important topic. "I am just as particular about my singing," she said. "I have no patience with musicians who go on the platform, opera, or concert, unprepared. I work more than ever over songs and roles I learned years ago, and I would no more think of giving a recital without rehearsing the entire program with my accompanist, than I would fly to the moon." Her black eyes snapped.

The way some of these young singers start out on a tour, meeting strange accompanists in every place, trusting to luck as they say, or even when they have the chance, avoiding rehearsals of familiar works, is simply not my idea of art. How can a stranger keep with a singer—especially as accompanying is so little understood? There again, the young player offends—sees her name on an important program once, perhaps, and grows careless. She does not follow the singer but asserts her own individuality.

"Any experienced accompanist knows that singers vary at different times. No singer on earth can be exactly the same at all times. If only accompanists would learn the literal meaning of the words to accompany. Mr. La Forge played for me alone for five consecutive years, yet I go over every program with him the morning or the day before I give it to the public. Singers and accompanists who do not do that simply don't know how to work. They are lazy!"

The words were short-clipped, but the voice a smooth, pleasing mezzo.

"I got quite wet this morning," she continued, "and was removing my clothes when you came. Every morning I don warm woollens, low-heeled boots, and a loose, comfortable coat, and with my little dog take a walk of five miles through the park. Then I have a bath and change of costume, and am ready for the day."

MME. FRANCES ALDA

Madame Alda is the picture of health, with a bright, arresting eye.

People have widely differing preferences in the matter of instruments. Madame Alda thinks the cello the loveliest of all with which to sing. "I do not care particularly for the harp or flute as an accompanying instrument," she continued. "For that matter, I think the piano is an unfortunate substitute for orchestra, it is so uncompromising, and, like the singer, has but one voice. There is nothing so fine to hear, so exhilarating to experience as singing with an orchestra. That far surpasses the other."

There followed a truism that could well be adopted as a maxim by some. "No singer," she said, "can possibly injure another in the eyes of the public. Each has a particular appeal and different personality—how could a second singer in the same role, damage the first who sang it? So many stars demand certain parts to be kept for them—and expect, if they are taken ill suddenly, to have the entire company thrown into turmoil, and another piece substituted. That, you know, is ridiculous. Besides, we all learn the same roles and should have opportunity to appear in the different operas—of course, I mean those to which we are reasonably suited, and not be forever excluded from this or that beautiful work to placate the vanity of some temperamental diva. I have known singers, after substitutions, to refuse ever to appear again in the parts of their original preference, and sometimes the new heroines were not at all like them. The audience could never have cared for the two in the same way, and jealousy was entirely unjustified. In fact, very often one popular singer has her set of friends, while another has an entirely different following.

"People's opinions in this respect are amusing. You go to Philadelphia, and everybody says, 'I think Mme. Z. is wonderful!' Then in Cleveland the verdict is 'awful!'—Or they like a coloratura, or they prefer some dramatic singer, instead of taking artistic singing wherever it may be found.

"Is it not very difficult at times, keeping out of company politics?" I queried, for Madame Alda is the wife of perhaps the most famous impresario in the world. "Oh, no!" she denied. "There are times—but a long while ago I established the fact that I have nothing whatever to do with my husband's position. Do not mention his name—this has been threshed out before and lost its interest—but when I married him I made it plain that our professional entities were to remain separate and distinct, and so it has been. I don't believe in the Middle West they know my married name in private life! And as for the company over which he presides, I am never present unless I must be there to rehearse or perform. What the others do is no business of mine, and I never criticise or interfere under any circumstances."

One might add that Madame Alda has enough to occupy her time and mind in her own singing activities without considering herself more than one of the leading members of the Metropolitan roster. Her appearances in concert are as widespread and frequent as her operatic engagements and the shortness of the year will allow.

Madame Alda is at present arranging a trip to Australia. "Of course I'll like it there," she said. "I was born there, and for a long time Australia was my home. Now New York is my home, and I love it. It will be hard to stay away for long, but I'll be back."

Mme. Jeritza Injured, Recovered

In the performance of Fedora at the Metropolitan on the evening of January 26, Maria Jeritza was injured in the mimic struggle of the final scene. She was pushed aside by Mr. Gigli accidentally with such force that she narrowly missed falling into the orchestra pit. Mme. Jeritza struck the footlights, wrenching her wrist and suffering bruises when she attempted to break her fall. She was able to sing in Thais, however, last Thursday afternoon.

Basso Sings in Recital

Edward Lankow, operatic basso gave a recital in the Plaza Hotel, New York, on the afternoon of January 23. According to the reviewer of the Herald Tribune, he "displayed his resonant voice to advantage." Frank Bibb accompanied.

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

BRAILOWSKY

SEASON 1925 - 1926 NOW BOOKING

Re-engagements this year: Boston, Minneapolis, Toronto

OLIN DOWNES in The New York Times, Jan. 11, 1925:

"Repeated hearings of the performances ot Alexander Brailowsky strengthen the impression that he is in very fact a poet of the piano. Mr. Brailowsky is born to play this particular instrument and he gives a poignant beauty and glamour to even very simple compositions that he interprets with its aid. Naturally, for a pianist of such temperament and quality the music of Chopin holds a particular appeal. Playing a program of his compositions yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, Mr. Brailowsky refuted the suspicions felt by more than one music lover that the day of the piano is passing and convinced his audience all over again that Chopin is the incomparable composer of music for this instrument.

"Mr. Brailowsky might have been equally successful as a violinist or performer on the oboe, but we very much doubt it. He has a sheer instinct for the secrets of the piano. He knows intuitively the colors that the pedal can evoke; he summons a brilliancy in bravura and a liquid beauty of tone in singing passages which, while they have been cultivated are inborn and can never be merely acquired. He seems to have escaped the toughening results of the terrible routine the professional pianist must undergo; he recreates his music with all the freshness of feeling and imagined beauty that it must have had for him when first his eyes fell on the printed page and straying fingers hinted at the wonder it contained.

"He has, too, a remarkably fine sense of proportion. In a previous concert he played with more extravagance and abandon. Yesterday Mr. Brailowsky was more continent in his effects and obtained them by the most simple and sincere means. For the greater part of the afternoon the performances were of the most exceptional eloquence and poetic atmosphere.

"To play two of the most familiar nocturnes—those in G major and E flat—in a way that made every note a thing of intense beauty, and the whole a really haunting memory, is an almost incredible accomplishment—at least for a hardened concert-goer—to encounter. Then there was the archness, the simplicity and caprice of the three mazurkas, none of them ranking with Chopin's most individual and emotional contributions in this field, but all of them typical and characteristic of this form which Chopin refined and glorified from the folk music of his country. Came the heroic Chopin of the Fantasy and the C sharp minor scherzo, both works of given interpretations which took away all the commonplaceness that hackeneyed past performances had encrusted upon them, and made them inspiring experiences. The performance of the great A minor etude was in similar vein—retaining, with all its force, the beauty that Chopin never crushed or distorted.

"Mr. Brailowsky repeated a delightful performance of the study in thirds, so beautifully accomplished that the listener remembered only the beauty and was unaware of the phenomenal display of technic. The music nad an elegance, a tonal loveliness, and sparkle which became the ideal realization of its style. Superlatives are dangerous but it is not easy to speak coolly in reporting the accomplishments of a rare and true artist."

CHICAGO RECITAL, MARCH 8

FINAL NEW YORK APPEARANCE: NEW YORK SYMPHONY, MARCH 22

CHICAGO DEBUT: SOLOIST CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA FEBRUARY 27-28

FOURTH NEW YORK RECITAL: CARNEGIE HALL, FEBRUARY 14TH, SATURDAY AFTERNOON

Management:

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc.

250 West 57th Street, New York City

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

MASON & HAMLIN PIANO

AMPICO RECORDS

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

ACCUSTOMED though she is to taking hard falls on the stage, Maria Jeritza wasn't precisely happy over the one which came during her recent appearance in the New York Metropolitan's performance of Fedora. In this instance she was assisted —as the action in the opera requires —by the tenor . . . who was none other than the golden-voiced Beniamino Gigli, the Loris of the occasion.

There was a momentary struggle—mind you, as the action demanded—then Mme. Jeritza was thrust prone upon the boards. She was propelled more violently than was intended—no doubt as to that. But in endeavoring to protect herself from mingling with the orchestra musicians the prima donna wrenched a few muscles and sustained a bruise or two.

Afterwards, so the story goes, there was some conversation behind the scenes, with persons high in the opera house management striving to smooth over the situation. It all came out right, and the incident may be forgotten as no more than an incident.

I AM reminded of another little affair which occurred, some years ago, between the late Enrico Caruso and Geraldine Farrar. It was after that artiste had been summering in the movies, under California skies.

She had been filmed in the title role of a picturized version of Carmen; and in the course of her experiences Miss Farrar was advised to make her struggle with her cigarette-girl opponent in one of the opening scenes strikingly realistic. So well did she conform to directorial admonitions that she became adept in the science of collar-and-elbow wrestling.

This was evidenced at Miss Farrar's first Metropolitan appearance the following November, when, in her encounter on the Metropolitan stage, she threw a feminine chorister so vigorously that some spectators thought the young woman must have been hurt.

A little later, in the same act, Miss Farrar rubbed Carmen's flower somewhat roughly into Caruso's face, whereupon the tenor showed his displeasure. She continued her realism, at other moments, apparently (as matters developed) in a manner not at all to Caruso's liking.

Perhaps he said to himself: "Wait, young woman, and see what happens," or something of the sort. At any rate, during the third act where Don Jose is expected to seize Carmen forcibly and push her before him to the footlights, Caruso got his innings. And those who knew of the matter at the time said that the evening ended with accounts nicely settled.

YEARS AGO, when Emma Calve and Fernando de Lucia played opposite each other in Carmen, the soprano said she actually was afraid of the temperamental tenor during their last-act scene wherein Don Jose stabs Carmen.

Those who enjoyed the privilege of witnessing the dramatic realism of these two artists will never forget what usually happened. Circling like a panther, de Lucia would advance nearer and nearer to the wavering Mme. Calve, who always turned and twisted, eying wildly her confrere, who seemed during those moments nothing less than a crazed man bent upon her destruction.

"There was something fascinating about the deadly seriousness of de Lucia," Mme. Calve once said. "I needed no summoning of any histrionic art to portray my fear. And each time we played the scene I half anticipated a real thrust of that steel blade which de Lucia carried in his hand."

We have no such moments nowadays in the closing act of Carmen. It is safely played, and no one ever has any apprehensiveness over the outcome.

SO some of our American composers of orchestral works are at last to have an opportunity to hear what their writings sound like. It will be a novel experience for a number of them—worthy creative musicians, who have toiled hopefully, and been rewarded, the majority—with nothing more than the mute evidence as displayed on paper.

Once again has George Eastman revealed both his generosity and his sagacity. Sometime next May there will be two concerts in Rochester by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, offering seven or eight compositions by American-born writers deemed worthy of a public hearing. A year later the plan provides for four such concerts, which will double the opportunity for our gifted musicians.

Albert Coates, I am told, suggested the idea, and it was enthusiastically indorsed by Howard Hanson, music director of the Eastman School of Music. Things have been getting on in that institution since Hanson arrived on the ground, last autumn. There is an assured future musically for the community up Rochester-way. And it is gratifying that an American is playing, and is to play, so important a part in moulding that future.

MOST OF US think usually of Louisville as the city of hospitable people and enchanting homes. They seem to be typical of all Kentucky; and yet . . . it is in Louisville that the visitor is taken into the midst of things and made to feel that he is not to be permitted to have time hang heavily.

My own hesitancy about going to Louisville is the regret which is felt at leaving. And there generally is a lapse of too much time before entraining again for a renewing of friendships and acquaintances.

I journeyed down there a few days ago, just to look round a bit and observe what had happened there musically during the years that had passed since I was last in that thriving city. What progress! There was all too little time and opportunity to check up on all that has been done, but enough was apparent to indicate how Louisville has gone on and how insistent her citizens are for the best in music.

IT would be fitting to publish right here the names of all those who have been instrumental in swinging Louisville's music pendulum so far in the right direction. One day I purpose doing so. At the moment it is sufficient to state that the element of discrimination rules strong in that southern community.

The music patrons want fine artists and organizations, and good music. Woe to the singer or instrumentalist who offers a hackneyed program, or thinks that some insipid piece of music is "just what is wanted."

The privilege was afforded me of speaking to a selected audience of patrons of the P. S. Durham concerts, and on the following day to members of the Arts Club, an organization numbering some 350 musicians, writers, artists, and architects. It is an unique club; New York has nothing quite like it.

Incidentally, Mr. Durham is about as discerning, energetic, and conscientious a music purveyor as I have met in a decade of blue moons. His offerings have gone over the top because they are wisely chosen and ably presented. Confidence, after all, is one of the best assets one who serves the public can have.

A GENTLE LADY whose music knowledge is matched only by her hospitality and personal charm is Mrs. Speed. All Louisville reveres and adores her, with abundant reason. But if you are not thoroughly up on the music topic you affect to be posted on it were better not to suggest it in your conversation with Mrs. Speed.

Her music room is one of the chosen spots in Louisville. Numerous professional celebrities have appeared there. Others will come to know that intimate place, and play or sing in an environment peculiarly its own.

I was privileged to spend an hour there, and to start the logs to burning in the big fireplace (an editor can, when occasion demands, prove that he has served a faithful apprenticeship around a furnace).

Had time permitted there would have been visits to other homes than those of Mrs. Speed, and Judge and Mrs. Allen, and Mrs. William Davenport. For there are many that beckon one in Louisville . . . where time never is permitted to hang heavily for the stranger within its gates.

RIDING from Louisville to Cincinnati on the L. & N.'s crack train, the Pan-American, I met the district manager of the Baldwin Company, headed for headquarters and the annual meeting that was about to take place. His name is Backer, and he is very young. But what enthusiasm! In Cincinnati, where Vice President Lucien Wulsin is convalescing from a typhoid attack, I was escorted to a gathering in which Fritz Reiner was conspicuously present. Also smiling Bill Murray and Phil Wyman, Baldwinites, Marguerite Lisnewska and Mr. Lisnewska, lively Burnett Tuthill of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and Wilhelm Bachaus, who has just played with the Cincinnati Symphony the second Brahms concerto for pianoforte.

You feel Cincinnati's music atmosphere the moment you reach that city. It has tradition, and no end of up-and-coming musicians who have contributed unceasingly to the cultural growth of that community.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Taft continue to spread their beneficence. It must be a satisfaction to observe the influence of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, which never was so fine an instrument as now.

ON the following day I listened to a part of the Cleveland Orchestra's "pop" concert, with Nikolai Sokoloff conducting. The attendance was large and appreciative; and how they applauded the violin playing of Ruth Breton, who was the soloist. Well, here, too, is an organization splendidly personneled. Credit to Sokoloff, of course; but the builder of the orchestra is Adella Prentiss Hughes. One cannot get away from that fact.

Cleveland is fairly tearing into music. Its people are getting the urge, and cannot be stopped. That is one reason for the success the Metropolitan Opera Company had there less than one year ago. Within a short time that organization will be housed again in the great Civic Auditorium, and scenes of enthusiasm will be re-enacted.

The people of Cleveland seem to have put their shoulders to the music wheel in a set determination to make it go round. There have been leaders, of course, as there must be in any such effort. But it is a civic affair, and while a few public spirited men are responsible for starting the ball rolling, it is the all-sided support which has put Cleveland into its present unique musical position.

The Chicago Opera forces are due in Cleveland within a short time. There can be no doubt that their best foot will be put forward, and some splendid representations result. But the civic eye of Cleveland is upon the coming of the Metropolitan, and that may have an effect on what otherwise would be a record patronage.

MOST OF US are liable to mistakes, but rarely do we stumble to the extent that the writer for the New York Herald Tribune did in a recent story about the Metropolitan Opera Company's mishaps to some of its members.

"The demon of bad luck has also visited Wilhelm von Wyemetal, tenor" etcetera. Then, continuing, that writer stated: "Mr. von Wyemetal's American debut has been deferred this year, due to a series of bad colds."

It happens that Mr. von Wyemetal is stage director of certain operas presented at the Metropolitan, and has served the institution for nearly two seasons. He may have a tenor voice, but his use of it no doubt is confined to accompanying his morning "daily dozen."

MME. STURKOW RYDER, of Cincinnati, writes me concerning what she terms the "world's worst sandwich." The pianiste was touring recently in northern Michigan and after one of her recitals she found herself hungry. The only place open at that hour in the community where she had appeared was a tiny shop. Ordering an egg sandwich Mme. Sturkow Ryder took it with her to her hotel; and lo, upon unwrapping it she discovered it to consist of two bits of bread between which had been placed bacon, perfectly raw.

IT APPEARS that even the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra has done some radio broadcasting. One of these days there will be systematic procedure in broadcasting. For the moment I feel that the miscellaneous broadcasting by distinguished musicians and music organizations is perhaps not for the best interest of the concert industry. For it is evident that the occasional playing or singing of music by persons who excel in their professions must serve only to delay the day when some orderly procedure can be agreed upon by the various interests concerned.

So long as a celebrated music organization or artist consents to broadcast the radio companies will hesitate to make arrangements looking towards adequate compensation for securing professional services which have attached to them a definite monetary value.

There has been enough of such broadcasting now to permit certain facts becoming known. It is to be hoped that there will follow a gradual cessation of such practice, and finally its complete cessation . . . awaiting the formulation and adoption of plans essential for ways and means that must come.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Arthur Friedheim

Arthur Friedheim was heard in recital at Aeolian Hall Wednesday afternoon. On his program was the seldom-heard tone poem of Liszt's, Apres une Lecture de Dante; a Beethoven Sonata; a Chopin group, and a shorter group of compositions by Liszt (his teacher), which were, to quote Alison Smith (World), "played with the skill and sympathy of the truest Liszt tradition."

According to the Times reviewer, Mr. Friedheim "displayed all the dignity and depth of understanding which assure to those who attend his infrequent recitals a period of aristocratic musical interpretation." Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune: "It would be a poor compliment to him to pretend that he played as he once did. The wonderful mechanism has stiffened, the vital fires have sunk. But still there is the breadth and vigor of conception, the musicianship . . . and some of the pianissimos were of rare loveliness and poetry, and certain octave passages were electrifying." Herbert Peyser wrote in the Telegram-Mail that, in spite of the "rusty" technique displayed, there remained a something of the "glamourous magic, that generous flamboyance . . . which is essential unto Liszt." In the Sun the chronicler asserted that Mr. Friedheim's program "left the impression that he has many points of value to give some of the present day young pianists, especially in the art of fingering and phrasing."

Mme. Lea Luboschutz

"A player of vitality and verve, she proved herself mistress of many moods expressed in terms of the solo violin," was the judgment of the reviewer of the New York Times concerning the playing of Lea Luboschutz in her recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the afternoon of January 23. She was assisted at the piano by Emanuel Balaban.

"Mme. Luboschutz proved to be an enjoyable violinist," said the Sun reviewer. "Her tone and technic were generally good, her intonation excellent, and her expression of emotions delivered by a warm and fluent style. She was very warmly applauded." This opinion was not fully confirmed by the observer of the Telegram-Mail, who called the violinist "a fairly well-schooled player, of some technical address, and an agreeable tone in cantilena." This writer thought that in interpretation Mme. Luboschutz tended to be "cold, unvaried, and unimaginative."

The writer of the World spoke of her as playing with "a polished and brilliant style and a musicianly understanding." In the Herald Tribune it was reported: "Mme. Luboschutz's playing was that of an experienced, powerful violinist, with a notable amount of technical skill, and a tone of very good size and fullness, not entirely free, however, from a slightly rougher spot or two."

Miss Daisy Jean

A versatile young Belgian musician, Daisy Jean, appeared at Town Hall on January 26 and not only played the cello but sang to her own accompaniment on the harp. According to the Sun reviewer, "the novelty of her program combination again attracted attention, as did the fact of her extended musicianship."

The Herald Tribune reported that Miss Jean's cello playing "showed a technical skill and a tone of good volume, with lower notes of notable resonance. The quality of her cello tone varied to some extent, with some passages of a smooth, fluent quality and others with what might be called a furred surface." This writer continued that "singing at the harp, Miss Jean gave an appealing performance, with what seemed a naturally good voice of pleasing quality, though not without some variation in its quality of tone." In the Times, the reviewer spoke of the way in which she "evoked the charm of respective classic and romantic styles." The accompanist was Arthur Loesser.

The Misses Sutro

There were a number of novelties on the program offered by the Misses Rose and Ottilie Sutro at their two-piano recital in Town Hall last Tuesday evening. Among these were a Mozart Fantasia, a Chopin Etude, and a Schuett Waltz written especially for these two pianists.

The Sun reviewer found their playing "enjoyable" in that "it had grace, a tone generally good and much finish in the details of ensemble." The Herald Tribune referred to them as "skillful players," and Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) wrote that "time has in no wise diminished the precision or the vigor of the Misses Sutro's playing, and there is every reason to suppose that their hearers of last evening like it well."

In the World, the reviewer mentioned their program as "characteristically pleasing." According to the Times reporter, "habit and custom have welded the two duetists into a firm whole, so that they instinctively follow each other's lead."

Three Philharmonic Conductors

Three different conductors wielded the baton at the last three concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra. At the students' concert last Wednesday, Willem van Hoogstraten resumed his duties as director in a Tschaikowsky program.

Elly Ney was soloist in the B flat Concerto which, according to the World, "she played with her usual vigor and security." The Times reviewer commented that "her stimulating personality was especially felt in passages which called for brilliancy and virility."

Mr. Furtwaengler gave his farewell subscription concert on January 25. At the children's concert, conducted by Mr. Schelling on the 24th, the assisting artists were Scipione Guidi, violinist; Oswaldo Mazzucchi, cellist, and Anselm Fortier, double bass.

William Bachaus

William Bachaus, at his piano recital in Aeolian Hall on Wednesday evening, played, among other things, Schumann's Sonata in G minor and Grieg's Ballad in the same key. Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) was enthusiastic in his praise of Mr. Bachaus: "He is a virtuoso of exceptional brilliance, yet obviously his spirit is modest and sincere. He has a superbly resourceful and fluent technique, so that difficulties scarcely exist for him; yet he uses this technique only as a vehicle. He is poetic, yet sentimentalism tempts him not . . . Mr. Bachaus is one of that microscopic company of musical interpreters who are engrossed beyond everything else in their office as communicators."

In the Times he was spoken of as "one of the foremost interpreters of Schumann" whose "reading of the Sonata last night deserved the long applause it elicited." According to the World reviewer, Mr. Bachaus held his audience "by his simple and serene musicianship." Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) spoke of his "prodigious technique, his dazzling speed, his unbridled strength." The Sun writer found him at his best, "with a wealth of warm color where necessary, a delicate and airy touch, sensuous but not too sensuous, and an adequate, if not extensive, range of dynamics with which to lend form and strength to his warm and colorful readings."

Jacobsen at Opera Concert

Sascha Jacobsen, violinist, was the assisting artist in the opera concert at the New York Metropolitan on the evening of January 25. He played Lalo's Spanish Symphony with the orchestra, conducted by Paul Eisler, and a group of short numbers accompanied at the piano by Samuel Chotzinoff. Other soloists of the evening were Mmes. Mario, Peralta, and Telva, and Messrs. Tokatyan and Tibbett.

Miss Helen Lubarska

Helen Lubarska, an American mezzo-soprano, who has studied and sung abroad, made her debut in the United States in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of January 23. Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail thought that she disclosed "a remarkable voice whose possibilities seem at present restricted by her irrepressible zeal to be dramatic."

"Miss Lubarska displayed a dramatic soprano voice and temperament of authentic quality, a muscular quality of tone with an emotional thrill in the middle range, although less powerful at either end of its scale," was the judgment of the Times commentator. Alison Smith, reviewer of the World, found that Miss Lubarska "combined a warm and colorful vocal quality with such elaborate operatic gestures that they occasionally interfered with the message of her song."

In the Herald Tribune F. D. Perkins declared, "She sang with intelligence and taste, commendable phrasing and expression, while her diction was especially distinct." Emil J. Polak was the accompanist, except in a group of four songs by Nathan Novick, when the composer took his place at the piano.

Maria Mueller Sings Elsa

Maria Mueller, who recently began her season with the Metropolitan, appeared for the first time as Elsa in Lohengrin on the evening of January 24. The World reported that she "brought fresh youth and beauty to Wagner's Bridal heroine, renewing in voice and action the favorable impressions of her debut in Die Walkuere." The Post review agreed, and the Sun writer declared: "This young woman is a pleasing addition to the company. Her voice is not a great one, but it has beauty and freshness. She acted and sang with feeling and intelligence." The remainder of the cast was familiar.

LEDGER—PHILADELPHIA,
DECEMBER 19, 1924

NINA MORGANA TRIUMPHS IN "BARBER OF SEVILLE"

Brilliant Handling of Role of "Rosina" Features Civic Company Offering, in Which La Puma Also Stars

The Civic Opera Company added to its reputation last night by its fine performance of the "Barber of Seville," one of the immortal operas, at the Metropolitan Opera House. The excellent singing and the even better comedy acting kept the audience, which filled the big hall to overflowing, applauding and laughing.

They call "The Barber of Seville" a "light opera," but there is no opera in the repertoire more difficult than it, outside of a few of Wagner's and the later Verdi's. Its difficulties, both of singing and of action, are enormous and only the best-equipped companies can hope to give it. The very fact that last night's performance was so successful shows how far the Civic Opera Company has gone in the two short seasons of its existence. As in the former renditions, the chorus was one of the chief features of the production, although "The Barber" uses only the male voices in that capacity.

Nina Morgana, who was so successful here in the "Tales of Hoffmann," given by the Metropolitan Opera Company, of which she is a member, was the Rosina. She aroused enthusiasm by her singing of the coloratura aria "Una Voce poco fa" and also by her brilliant singing of the "Waltzsong" from "Mereille," which she used in the lesson scene. Her voice, beautiful in quality, is extensive in range and of excellent coloring.

Giuseppina La Puma made the most

SEASON 1925-1926 NOW BOOKING
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Building, New York, N. Y.
Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St., New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Vlado Kolitsch

Playing on a violin of Mozart, Vlado Kolitsch made his first New York appearance last Tuesday evening in Carnegie Hall. "Much of the Mozart Concerto (in D major) was played with delicacy, with considerable charm, and an evident regard for sensitive phrasing," wrote the reviewer of the Sun. "His tone was full and sonorous, and he often attained a level of artistic excellence which gave hints of perhaps better results in a second recital."

Alison Smith of the World found Mr. Kolitsch's tone pleasing, but rather small for such a great auditorium as Carnegie Hall. Herbert Peyser wrote in the Telegram-Mail that Mr. Kolitsch's playing was agreeable within limits. He also commented on the small tone. In the Times it was reported that "Mr. Kolitsch should be heard on an equal plane with artists today, as he showed in his capable treatment of three solo cadenzas" in the Mozart.

"His tone seemed of good quality," wrote the observer of the Herald Tribune, "but limited volume in the Tartini number, with lessened smoothness in the rapid flights, but it broadened and increased notably in the Bach solo, and when Mozart was reached, was remarkably smooth and rich, full and sonorous." This writer found Mr. Kolitsch "happy in his double stops."

Os-Ke-Non-Ton

Os-Ke-Non-Ton, baritone, of the Mohawk tribe, Bear Clan, gave a recital in Town Hall on January 22 of American Indian songs in costume. In the words of the Times reporter, "the charm of the entertainment lay in the earnestness and sincerity of the singer."

The writer in the Herald Tribune observed that his appeal did not depend entirely on the unusual features of his concert; "he displayed a resonant voice of excellent quality, an appealing personality and marked expressive ability." The Sun reviewer said that he revealed "a voice of a quality and size well adapted to the native characteristics of his program. He had good dramatic instinct, an expressive voice, if somewhat harsh and nasal, and a fine control of dynamics, which were most effective in the tribal songs of a more primitive nature."

The accompanist was Blanche Barbot.

Philharmonic Quartet

A novelty, Malipiero's Rispetti e Strambotti, which in 1920 won the Berkshire Chamber Music Festival Prize of $1,000, featured the program of the concert of the Philharmonic Quartet in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of January 26. The members of the quartet, all of whom play in the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, are Scipione Guidi and A. Lichstein, violinists, L. E. Barzin, violist; and O. Mazzucchi, cellist. Their program included also Glazunoff's Quartet, Op. 70, No. 5, and Haydn's Quartet, Op. 76, No. 3.

Deems Taylor felt that the Malipiero piece, while interesting for a while, was over-long and became monotonous. With this opinion the Herald Tribune observer agreed, but W. J. Henderson, writing in the Sun, declared that it deserved further hearing, although at times "it leaned backward rather than forward."

"The performance," wrote Mr. Taylor, "was admirable. The four players display unusually good and well-matched tone quality, and bring intelligence, good musicanship and flexibility to all their interpretations." The Herald Tribune chronicler observed that "the quartet played well. It showed a unity of spirit and performance, ample life and briskness, and a collective tone which seemed of good quality." The Post reviewer preferred the playing of the Haydn to all else on the program, declaring, "This familiar composition was played with fine shading." Both the Times and the Sun reports agreed that the ensemble deserved approval.

Adela Verne's Second Recital

"Miss Verne played with her known mastery and technical competence. . . . She gave a performance as careful in detail as it was brilliant in execution, meeting with warm applause from those present," wrote the reviewer of the Times of the second New York recital of Adela Verne, pianist, in Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening. "As before," said the Herald Tribune report, "her playing was powerful and clear cut."

The Post reviewer found the "great strength of her hands in producing the finer effects" most evident in the rendition of Paderewski's Sonata, Op. 21, in E flat minor. The Telegram-Mail writer expressed the opinion that no one except Mr. Paderewski himself could have played this work better. The Sun report was similar to those quoted.

Miss Ruth Rodgers

Ruth Rodgers appeared in her first New York recital of the season last Tuesday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. Her accompanist was Isidore Luckstone, who was represented as a composer on Miss Rodgers' program. "Miss Rodgers' voice," reported the reviewer of the Times, "light but broadly produced, was easily sustained in upper reaches, and without extremes of tonal 'color' she achieved intelligentlly varied emotional expression. She acquitted herself artistically in classic airs."

Despite his opinion that she had certain difficulties with French diction and with portamento passages, the reviewer of the Sun declared that the recitalist "revealed a voice of good power, considerable beauty in the middle range, and an ability in dramatic tone color which sufficed to offset" those difficulties. "Her interpretations were musical, convincing and often full of color," said this reviewer. The writer of the World agreed that Miss Rodgers showed "intelligence and understanding" in her interpretations, and felt that although her lower tones were not so warm, "her voice was one of unusual volume, clear and interesting" in its higher reaches.

In the opinion of the Herald Tribune chronicler Miss Rodgers displayed "a naturally good voice of fresh fluent quality, and good English diction."

Miss Edna Thomas

An American program consisting of negro spirituals, "street cries" of Baltimore and New Orleans, and Louisiana Creole songs was sung by Edna Thomas on January 25 in the Booth Theatre, New York. According to the review of the Sun she revealed again "a voice of delicacy and charm admirably adapted to the soft Southern nuances, and the humor of and melancholy of these songs of the South. She has intelligence, grace and refinement, and an intense appreciation of significant aspects of her offerings."

The Times reviewer spoke of Miss Thomas' "gifts of bright tone, colloquial phrase, and native humor," and in the Herald Tribune it was reported: "Miss Thomas, clad appropriately in mid-nineteenth century style, showed her usual distinctive talent for vivid, expressive and unexaggerated interpretation."

De Reszke Singers

The De Reszke Singers gave their first public concert in New York at the Henry Miller Theatre on January 25. These American singers, who have been heard in concert in England and on the continent, are Hardesty Johnson and Floyd Towsley, tenors, Erwyn Mutch, baritone, and Sigurd Nelson, basso. Mildred Dilling, "a talented young harpist," to quote the Times, and Henri Bove, flutist, took part in the program. In the Herald Tribune Miss Dilling was referred to as a "skillful" player.

According to the Sun chronicler, the quartet "sang with fine nuance, clear diction and spirit. As a cappella singers, their pitch was excellent." The Herald Tribune reviewer found that they were "strong voiced, thoroughly unified ensemble, and gave a performance that was both vigorous and artistic, with a pleasing, well blended quality of tone and marked expressive ability." The writer in the Times said that "the voices, taken singly, are good, grouped together, they command a great variety of tone color, while, at the same time effectively blending with each other."

State Symphony

Percy Grainger was soloist with the State Symphony Orchestra, Ignatz Waghalter conducting at its concert last Tuesday afternoon. He played Saint Saens' G minor Piano Concerto. "His accustomed impetuosity and exhilarating vitality" were displayed by the pianist, reported the Times. "The pianist vitalized and enlivened even the dry spots of merely episodic or scholastic writing," continued this reviewer. Mr. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, on the other hand, found Mr. Grainger not up to his best form.

Mr. Newman commended Mr. Grainger who played "with his usual high spirits, but with rather less than his usual certainty in very rapid passages." Deems Taylor in the World referred to the concerto as "empty," but said, "Mr. Grainger's robust and masculine performance, albeit a trifle over-emphatic at times, made it sound effective." Mr. Henderson thought that Mr. Grainger has played better in the past. He found lack of variety and an intermittent technical inaccuracy unusual in his playing.

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1921
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

GRAVEURE
IN
LEADING MUSIC CENTERS
"A Master in the interpretation of German Classics." (Neues Wiener Tageblatt, Vienna, Austria.)
"Louis Graveure's success here was extraordinary." (Wiener Journal, Vienna, Austria.)
Management:
Metropolitan Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

Musical Chicago En Courant

Samuel Insull Reports on Finances of the Opera; Recitals Move to Auditorium Stage.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Jan. 27.

THE Chicago Civic Opera Company has, like the Arab, folded its tents, and silently (though not too silently) stolen away on its annual tour, this year of eight weeks duration. Samuel Insull, president of the company, arrived in Chicago in time to explain to the guarantors at the gala performance on Friday night that the tour was necessary to the company to spread its fame as well as to carry the overhead expenses over an extended period of time. This extension of time also enables the company to make better contracts with the artists.

Mr. Insull added many other things in his speech, the most important of which was the fact of the $400,000 deficit entailed during the season. This will call for 80% of the total amount guaranteed, as against the 65% levied last year. The increase was not all loss, however, as the attendance showed an increase of 38%, while expenses increased only 3%. Contracts have also been let for the construction of a new warehouse, an important feature to the company, which will eventually, according to Mr. Insull, save $80,000 to $90,000 a year. The warehouse will be paid for by an issue of bonds offered to the guarantors, of which $300,000 have already been subscribed.

MR. INSULL'S speech, in part, follows: "We are doing the best we can. Our condition this year has been the general one. If our season had been operating during January, February and March, instead of November, December and January, our situation would be better than it is. The improvement in general business conditions has not advanced sufficiently to affect such luxuries as opera performances by the opera going public. But, notwithstanding that fact we have done much better than it looked as though we were going to do six weeks ago.

"I wish to remind you that one of the causes of our losses is the relatively low price charged for our performances. If we could obtain the same prices as obtain, for instance in New York, our losses would be $150,000 less. But in the opinion of the management, our prices are all that the business will stand. We need first a far wider interest on the part of the community."

MR. INSULL made no prognostications for the future, but reminded the guarantors that the old, familiar operas brought better returns to the box office than the new ones. "If you will put an unlimited fund at our disposal, and in such case you might as well make it the Federal Reserve Bank, we will be glad to try all sorts of experiments. Lacking that, we will have to do the best we can on what we have. We cannot run on air."

One could but regret that the subscribers were not permitted the enjoyment of the splendid performances with which the company closed its season. Romeo and Juliet, with Miss Mason and Mr. Hackett, was worthy a full run of subscription performances. So, too, was the company's production of Boris Godunoff, which received but two hearings, one subscription and one extra. Martha, judging by the cheers received by Miss Mason and Tito Schipa, should have run six times rather than two. And last but not least was Pelleas and Melisande, proclaimed by the critics to have been the company's greatest art production.

Certainly as a series of mediaeval pictures, or as an establishment of mood, the performance has never been surpassed in Chicago. The enthusiasm of the audience for the lovely, abstract work came as something of a surprise, but not to the displeasure of Maestro Polacco, who wrought wonders with the orchestra. It seems a pity that one performance was the allotment for so much expenditure of work.

THOUGH the opera has left, the Auditorium has not been dark. On Sunday afternoon the universal appeal of Fritz Kreisler's art drew a multitude, which overflowed into the orchestra pit and onto the stage, to offer some of the most sincere homage it has ever been the fortune of my ears to hear awarded any concert artist.

In the evening, another huge throng gathered to hear a fine triumvirate of opera stars in concert. Florence Macbeth pleased to such an extent that four encores were added to her first group of songs. Joseph Schwarz sang the Pagliacci prologue to acclaim, and Tito Schipa's entrance brought cheers from the audience. As far as they were concerned he could have sung all night. Perhaps Tito felt differently for he had sung a recital in Milwaukee in the afternoon, returning to Chicago just in time to appear on the Auditorium stage.

On Monday evening the lovely Pavlowa with her Ballet Russe, took up the burden of making the Auditorium a pleasant and profitable place to spend the evening. Certainly it is no burden to see Pavlowa. Incomparable she still is, with the flame that is Anna Pavlowa burning as brightly as ever. If she had never done anything else, she would still be great for her illumination of Fokine's Dying Swan, a perfect thing, viewed from any angle of art.

Her new offering for the opening night was Don Quixote, a Spanish ballet of the Barcelona of 350 years ago. It was charming, built on the line of classic tradition. No modern Spanish realism there—perhaps not even true Spanish dancing—but romance, charm and plenty of real, honest ballet dancing.

THE Civic Orchestra of Chicago offered on Sunday its first concert of the season under the direction of Frederick Stock and Eric de Lamarter. A wonderful opportunity for young professionals. Each year, with infinite care, Mr. Stock and Mr. de Lamarter work with these young people, teaching them orchestral literature and orchestral routine. Each year many so trained take their places in the large symphony orchestras of the country. Incidentally they are first formed into a symphony body themselves which needs no apology. Under Mr. de Lamarter's direction they played Beethoven's Egmont Overture with excellent tone and spirit.

Chicago Opera in Boston

TONIGHT

Thais—with Mme. Garden and Messrs. Mojica, Cotreuil and Kipnis; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Madama Butterfly (matinee) — with Mmes. Mason and Perini; and Messrs. Lamont and Rimini; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Rigoletto (evening)—with Mme. Toti dal Monte and Messrs. Hackett, Schwarz, and Lazzari; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

THURSDAY

L'Amore dei Tre Re—with Mme. Garden and Messrs. Ansseau, Baklanoff, and Lazzari; Mr. Polacco conducting.

FRIDAY

Barber of Seville—with Mme. de Hidalgo and Messrs. Chaliapin, Hackett, Rimini, and Trevisan; Mr. Cimini conducting.

SATURDAY

Pelleas and Melisande (matinee)—with Mme. Garden and Messrs Baklanoff and Mojica; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Jewels of the Madonna (evening)—with Mme. Raisa and Messrs. Lamont, Rimini, and Trevisan; Mr. Cimini conducting.

Civic Orchestra Gives Concert

Chicago, Jan. 26.—The Civic Orchestra, under Eric de Lamarter, gave its first concert of the season in Orchestra Hall yesterday afternoon. Florence Scholl, pianist, was soloist and, according to the News, "she has talent and plays with vigor and balance." Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner wrote that she played with virtuosity, with "lovely" tone and with "re-creative imagination."

In the opinion of the Post reviewer, Mr. de Lamarter "had his forces well in hand" and Edward Moore (Tribune) said that the orchestra played "with excellent pace and spirit." Other reviewers spoke well of the concert.

Choose Texas State Song

Austin, Jan. 21.—From 287 manuscripts the committee appointed by Governor Neff to select a state song recommended that Texas, Our Texas, by W. J. Marsh of Fort Worth, be accepted. The lyric was written by Gladys Yoakum Wright of the same city. According to the terms of the offer, this song will be transmitted to the forthcoming legislature for its approval, after which the $1,000 prize offered through the Governor will be awarded Mr. Marsh and Miss Wright.

Sing Russian Ballads

Philadelphia, Jan. 26.—A program of Russian ballads was sung at the musical given by the Plays and Players in the Little Theatre last night. Saveli Walevitch, New York tenor, was commended in the press for his singing of the Russian folk songs and gypsy ballads.

Chicago Season Ends With Debussy Opera

Mary Garden and Mojica Sing Title Roles; Polacco Is the Conductor.

Chicago, Jan. 22.—Pelleas and Melisande was produced by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last night for the first time in several years. Mary Garden sang the role that introduced her to Chicago fifteen years ago, and, in the words of Edward Moore of the Tribune, "it has always been one of her finest roles, a perfect performance with no qualifications about it. She looks Melisande; her imagination reacts to both Maeterlinck and Debussy; she is Melisande, physically and spiritually."

Jose Mojica and Georges Baklanoff made their debuts in their respective roles, and the others in the cast were Maria Claessens, Helen Freund, Alexander Kipnis and Antonio Nicolich. Giorgio Polacco, who conducted, was in "the mood for the artistic interpretation of the score," wrote Maurice Rosenfeld in the News, and got from it "its highly poetic content, its novel blend of tone, its original combinations of instruments and its constant change of tone colors."

In the opinion of Mr. Rosenfeld, Miss Garden "intoned her declamatory music admirably" and acted the role perfectly. Writing in the Post, Karleton Hackett commented that the years had only served to ripen the charm of her performance which has lost none of its "delicate grace." Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald Examiner) lauded her "tone of exquisite texture" and added that her portrayal was "a masterpiece of eloquent restraint."

According to this reviewer, Mr. Mojica "developed a splendid interpretation of the part of Pelleas." Mr. Moore found him "uncommonly effective" and Mr. Hackett said that he "achieved a personal triumph . . . he had the spirit of the role and played it with poetic imagination and genuine force." Mr. Rosenfeld considered Mr. Baklanoff "excellent" and Mr. Gunn found him "superb."

Miss Freund, to quote Mr. Moore, "added much to the performance with a well acted portrayal." Mr. Hackett thought her "altogether lovely" and other reviewers joined in commending her performance. This commentator also thought that both Mr. Kipnis and Mme. Claessens played their roles with "dignity and appreciation." Mr. Moore considered Mme. Claessens "particularly" good. According to Mr. Rosenfeld, these last named characters were "impressive."

V. TREVISAN
VOCAL STUDIO
Chicago Civic Opera Association
74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Solfitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

GRADOVA
"One by one the young pianists smoke and smoulder past. Then, at last — say in Gradova—DARTS THE FLAME."—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Bldg., New York
Steinway Piano Duo-Art Rolls

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

Enesco Appears With Stock

Conducts Chicago Orchestra in Own Works; Kreisler, Dushkin, and Culbertson Give Recitals.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—Georges Enesco appeared as soloist, composer, and conductor with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon. In addition to playing the Bruch violin Concerto in D minor, he conducted two of his own works, the First Roumanian Rhapsody, and his Suite for orchestra, Op. 9. The novelty on the program was Bartok's Suite for orchestra.

The reviewers disagreed as to Mr. Enesco's abilities as a violinist. Karleton Hackett (Post) found him "a fine violinist" with "beauty of tone quality and technical surety." He added that the artist brought to the Concerto a "vigor that made it convincing." On the other hand, Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner was not impressed by Mr. Enesco's playing, although he added that "his innate musical sense" projected "mood and beauty in his performance." In the Tribune, Edward Moore commented that he played "with considerable ability."

Mr. Hackett also found him a good conductor, "one who had a clear conception of the effects he desired and excellent control over the men." Agreed was Mr. Gunn of his excellence in this role.

This writer was disappointed in the Bartok piece, which lacked his usual "startling effects" and was not "stimulating." Mr. Moore called this composer "a debonair light hearted maker of music, complex, but not obscure, and always with a big fund of energy and life." According to Mr. Hackett, the work "was bright in color and cheery in spirit."

* * *

Mendelssohn's Elijah was given by the Apollo Musical Club last Monday under the leadership of Edgar Nelson. The soloists were Monica Graham Stults, Ethel Jones, Walter Boydston, and Louis Kreidler. Edward Moore observed that under Mr. Nelson the singers gave "a sturdy and energetic performance . . . with full toned zeal." In Mr. Gunn's opinion, the "sonorous and ear-filling passages" were delivered "with splendid spirit." The writer in the Post commented that "the club and Mr. Nelson went at the work with fine spirit and gave a performance that had meaning and power."

The Roman Choir from the Sistine Chapel of the Vatican made its first Chicago appearance last week, with Salvatore Angello, Guido Guidi, Giuseppe Giorgi, and Pietro Barchi among the soloists. The reviewers were reserved in their commendation of the concert.

* * *

In Samuel Dushkin's violin recital last week the Post reviewer found no "sense of personal display, but a sincere interpretation of the music." This writer thought him an "excellent" violinist, drawing "a clear, pure tone from the violin" and with a "clean and pure" technique. He added that Mr. Dushkin "had appreciation for the music and a repose that befitted the classic form . . . the melodic line he brought out with simple grace."

The Tribune commentator said that he had "an excellent tone, and played understandingly." In the News, the writer spoke of his agility, dexterity and musical understanding and added that although his tone was not of great volume, it was "clear and of good quality."

Another violinist heard recently was Sasha Culbertson, who was called "a fiery player" by the Tribune. This review commended him for seeming to possess "uncommonly good musical sense." In the Post he was lauded for playing "with understanding of the music, warm tone, and clean technique." With Leon Benditzky at the piano, continued this writer, "the tone was well balanced and the rhythms elastic."

Franz Polesny, violinist, was heard on January 18. The News writer liked his "clean technique and musical taste" and the "refined singing tone" he produced from his violin. According to the Tribune, "in sustained melodies he drew a suave bow, in rapid flights his fingers were inevitably in the right place." In the opinion of the Post reviewer, he is "an excellent violinist" with "appreciation for the music, with good tone, and clean technique" and the ability to make a melody sing from under his fingers."

An audience of unusual dimensions applauded Fritz Kreisler at his concert. The reviewers were enthusiastic over his playing and agreed that he was in good form. According to Mr. Hackett, the last group on his program "came as near to being an epitome of the art of violin playing as could be brought within so small a compass."

* * *

Florence Macbeth, Tito Schipa, and Joseph Schwarz gave a joint recital last night in the Auditorium. In Mr. Moore's words, "you will go a long way before you find three such voices combined in one recital as were in this one." Mr. Gunn commented that, although Miss Macbeth's voice was lovely, "it was no more beautiful than Schipa's nor more eloquent than that of Joseph Schwarz."

In the opinion of Mr. Gunn, Stella Trane's was "one of the most successful debuts of the season." She has, he continued, "a beautiful voice and knows how to use it. The tone is poised, certain, smooth in texture and of such varied expressiveness that one is safe in predicting a future classification in the dramatic division." In the Tribune Miss Trane was referred to as "a singer of both taste and intelligence," who "depends more upon interpretive values than actual tonal gorgeousness."

* * *

There have been numerous other recitals during the past week. Stanislawa Jozefowicz, soprano, disclosed at her concert "a pleasant, flexible voice" which, to quote the News, "is one of promise." Isa Kremer gave one of her characteristic recitals of ballads in many languages, which met with customary enthusiastic approval.

VINCENTE BALLESTER
Sang for the First Time in the Title Role of Rigoletto at the Metropolitan Last Wednesday.

Among the instrumentalists were two pianists and a cellist. Agnes Lapham, pianist, gave one of her children's recitals, which, as Edward Moore expressed it, "could be heard with pleasure and profit by all." Another pianist, Lillian Rogers, was commended by this same reviewer for the "proportion, energy, and logic" of her playing. In his opinion, the playing of the cellist, Lillian Rehberg, was marked by her "potent" bowing, which drew a tone "that is always warm and in good intonation."

Albert Bagby Given Degree

After giving his 300th musical morning at the Waldorf-Astoria ballroom in New York on January 26, Albert Morris Bagby was awarded an honorary degree of Master of Arts by New York University in recognition of what he has accomplished in the past thirty-four years in elevating the musical taste of New York. The artists at the concert were Frieda Hempel, Edward Johnson, and Arthur Friedheim.

Poliakin Gives Recital

Miron Poliakin, violinist, gave the second of his series of five concerts in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall, New York, on the afternoon of January 24. "Mr. Poliakin showed his usual technical skill and tone of very good quality," wrote the reviewer of the Herald Tribune.

Fritz Reiner Leads Bliss Color Symphony

Bachaus Is Soloist With Cincinnati Orchestra; Piano Quartet Plays.

Cincinnati, Jan. 26.—With William Bachaus as soloist and the Color Symphony of Arthur Bliss as the novelty of the program, Fritz Reiner conducted an unusual pair of concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra on January 23 and 24. Mr. Bachaus played the Brahms Piano in D minor, and the program ended with Mozart's Jupiter Symphony.

The reviewers were impressed with the Color Symphony. Mrs. Smith declared in the Times-Star, "It is not color, but things, actions, memories, allied with tints," that Mr. Bliss has portrayed in his composition. Mr. Wilson wrote in the Commercial-Tribune that Mr. Reiner and his men did "Herculean service in this symphony," although it was his opinion that the composition was "too arbitrarily personal to Bliss himself." Nevertheless Mr. Wilson understood enough of it to "hear the ashes shaken down in the furnace in the second movement."

"It requires a stretch of the imagination to believe that purple, red, blue or green can be accurately depicted in tonal colorings," was the opinion of M.. Goldenburg, writing in the Enquirer.

Mrs. Plogstedt thought that Mr. Bachaus' playing was "unalloyed joy," while Mrs. Smith spoke of his "superlative technic, much dignity and visible emotion." Mr. Goldenburg discovered in this interpretation "many facets of the composer's uncommon talent that have escaped us before."

The quartet of Harold Bauer, pianist; Bronislaw Huberman, violinist; Lionel Tertis, violinist, and Felix Salmond, cellist, appeared in concert last Wednesday. They played Faure's Quartet in C minor, Beethoven's Trio in D major, and the Brahms Quartet in G minor. The reviewers were unanimous in praise of the ensemble.

B. G.

Blind Girl Wins Music Honor

Rosalie Cohen, seventeen, blind from birth, was graduated with honors last week from the Bay Ridge High School in Brooklyn, N. Y. She was awarded a scholarship in the Munson Institute of Music.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

Sittig Trio
MARGARET SITTIG - Violin
EDGAR H. SITTIG - Cello
FREDERICK V. SITTIG Piano
Sittig Trio Management:
167 WEST 80TH ST., NEW YORK CITY TRAFALGAR 9030

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Now Touring the Pacific Coast
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

FLORENCE MACBETH
Leading Coloratura Soprano Chicago Civic Opera Company

SEASON — 1925-26

Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet

TOUR BEGINNING EARLY OCTOBER

Just Closed Successful Season with Chicago Opera Company—Now Filling Special Four Weeks' Engagement, Mexico City

Complete Company of Twenty-five Dancers with Orchestra

A Novelty That Should Be Included in Every Concert Course

Varied Programs of Ballet and Divertissements

We can offer this attraction upon terms which we believe are lower than ever quoted before for an attraction of this magnitude.

Address

FORTUNE GALLO, AEOLIAN HALL

NEW YORK

SEASON
1925-1926

FORTUNE GALLO

ANNOUNCES

THE TOUR OF AN

ALL-AMERICAN OPERA COMPANY

Complete Organization of Fifty-Chorus-Orchestra-Cast of American Singers. Elaborate Costume and Scenic Production

TOUR OPENS IN OCTOBER
FIRST OPERA TO BE PRESENTED

"ALGLALA"

AMERICAN OPERA IN ENGLISH

MUSIC BY FRANK DE LEONE
TEXT BY CECIL FANNING

ENDORSED BY THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

January 17, 1925

To the Presidents of the Federated Clubs:

Mr. Fortune Gallo, Impresario of the San Carlo Grand Opera Company, has expressed a willingness to produce the American Opera ALGLALA, by F. B. De Leone and Cecil Fanning, provided a sufficient number of our Clubs will include a performance of the Opera in their list of attractions next season.

Our Clubs are all familiar with the success attending the premiere of this American Opera in Akron last spring, and the later production in Cleveland last November. These performances were witnessed by many of our Board Members, including your President. The success was highly gratifying to all of us.

Mr. Gallo's proposition is one that should meet with ready response. We have now an opportunity to give tangible expression to our professed interest in the American composer and to prove that we are really sincere in our desire to foster American art. Let us give Mr. Gallo the support necessary to insure the success of his efforts.

Sincerely yours,
Lucille M. Lyons,
Mrs. John F. Lyons, President
National Federation of Music Clubs

STAN-HYWET HALL
NORTH PORTAGE PATH
AKRON, OHIO

Dear Mr. Gallo:

Your proposed plan to organize an "All-American Opera Company" to produce Frank De Leone's American Grand Opera, "Alglala" is truly splendid, and should create immediate requests for dates from all parts of the country.

As given in Akron and Cleveland "Alglala" proved such an unqualified success that I unhesitatingly recommend local managers and Music Clubs to place it on concert courses as a leading attraction.

Your many years of success as an impresario of the San Carlo Opera Company assures the public that "Alglala" will have an altogether fine and authoritative presentation under your management.

Yours for American Opera,
Gertrude F. Seiberling
(Mrs. Frank A. Seiberling)

To Mr. Fortune Gallo,
Aeolian Hall,
New York City

TO MUSIC CLUB PRESIDENTS

A letter from Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley

Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo Opera Company, has expressed a willingness to produce the American Opera "Alglala" by the young American composer Frank De Leone, and Cecil Fanning, provided a sufficient number of our clubs will include a performance of the opera in their list of attractions for next season.

The Clubs are all familiar with the success which was accorded the premiere of this opera in Akron and Cleveland last fall which was witnessed by many of our members. Mr. Gallo's proposition is one that should meet with ready response. This is an opportunity to give a tangible expression to the plea which we have been making for the encouraging of American Composers, and a chance to prove that we are sincere in our desire to foster American Art. Let us show Mr. Gallo that we appreciate his efforts.

Yours very sincerely,
Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley,
Director Department American Music,
American Federation of Music Clubs
Oxford, Ohio, January 10, 1925

The performance of "Alglala" given at Cleveland and Akron, Ohio, last fall was witnessed by prominent club women, managers, critics and musicians who came from all over the country to witness the premiere. The opera was received with great enthusiasm and heralded as another milestone in the progress of American Opera.

The length of tour and cities to be visited will depend upon the prompt response from clubs, local managers and societies who wish to encourage the promotion of American composers and artists.

FORTUNE GALLO, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK

The American Opera Company Is a Distinct Organization Independent of the San Carlo Opera Company Which Will Open Its Usual New York Season at the Century Theatre Early in September.

On The Music Highway

SINCE the executive committee of the Newark Music Festival Association announced last week that the festival arranged for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 4, 5 and 6, will be held in the auditorium of the new Salaam Temple in Broad street, it has signed contracts with the singers and the musicians who will appear as soloists in the series. Among them is Sylvia Lent, violinist, who will play on May 4.

At each of the concerts there will be a complete orchestra of musicians from New York, selected from the symphony orchestras. Musical Director C. Mortimer Wiske will conduct all the performances.

At the Fox Theatre in Philadelphia recently Percy Grainger conducted the Fox Theatre Grand Orchestra in his Shepherd Hey. Mr. Grainger was also heard as soloist in the first movement of the Grieg Piano Concerto.

The New York Chamber Music Society, conducted by Carolyn Beebe, will present the following artists at their concert at Aeolian Hall today: Carolyn Beebe, pianist; the New York String Quartet, with Anselm Fortier, double bass; Gustave Langenus, clarinet; Lamar Stringfield, flute; Bruno Labate, oboe; Benjamin Kohon, bassoon, and Bruno Jaenicke, French horn. Deems Taylor's Portrait of a Lady will be given its first performance at this concert.

At the Eighteenth Invitation Story and Clark Musicale Thursday evening the artists who appeared were Frances Newsom, soprano; Harry Anik, pianist, and Martha Falkmayer, accompanist.

Germaine Schnitzer will give the first of her series of six evenings of romantic piano music at Chickering Hall, New York, Thursday evening. The second concert will be on Sunday evening. At the first recital, the program will be devoted to music by Weber and Schubert, and at the second, to Schubert and Mendelssohn.

The remaining four concerts of the series of pianoforte music with interpretative remarks being given at Chickering Hall, New York, by Dai Buell, will take place on February 9 and 23, and March 9 and 23. Miss Buell is giving the same series at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston on alternate Wednesday afternoons.

Ellenor Cook gave a recital of Slavic folk songs in costume at the Studio Club, New York city, on January 26. Miss Cook gave a similar concert in Boston during November, which received favorable comment in the press.

On February 11, in Carnegie Hall, the State Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Ignatz Waghalter, will give a program of Bach, Mozart and Beethoven. Rosalie Miller, American soprano, will make her first appearance at this concert in a Bach Cantata, Glory to God All Over On Earth, and an aria and recitative by Mozart, called Come to My Arms. Both numbers will have their first performance in this country.

Gitta Gradova, pianist, is appearing today as soloist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra in Bach's D minor Concerto. This is Miss Gradova's third trip to Canada, as she made a Canadian tour earlier in the season, and was heard with the Ladies' Morning Musical Club in Montreal on January 22.

Thursday evening, in Aeolian Hall, Alberto Sciarretti, pianist, will give his second New York recital of the season. His program will include numbers by Frescobaldi, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Chopin, Pick-Mangiagalli, and Martucci.

The February itinerary of Marion Rous includes Washington, D. C.; Briarcliff, N. Y.; Chevy Chase and Baltimore, Md., in which cities she will give her piano recital-lecture, "What Next in Music?" Next month Miss Rous will make her second tour through the middle west for this season. On this tour, which will take her as far West as Duluth, Miss Rous will give "Purist or Programmist."

Maria Carreras is giving a New York recital in Aeolian Hall on February 5 when she will play some old Italian and Sicilian dances and arias on unknown composers of the XVI Century transcribed for the piano by Ottorino Respighi. This is the first time these have been given in New York.

Making his sixth appearance in Pittsburgh, Pa., Theo Karle will give a recital there for the Tuesday Morning Musicals of the 20th Century Club. Mr. Karle will sing a group of early Italian and Elizabethan songs, a group of Schubert and Brahms Lieder, and two groups of Russian and American songs.

Reports have reached M. H. Hanson, manager of Stefi Geyer, of her reappearance in the Swiss cities, Zurich, Geneva, Lucerne, and Berne on her return from her concert tour of this country. She is also appearing in Amsterdam, and other cities in Holland.

Caryl Bensel, soprano, who is singing in concerts in Florida at present, intends to go to Cuba the end of this month.

Rudolf Larsen, violinist, and Marie Mikova, pianist, were the artists at the Charles D. Isaacson Free Concert, under the auspices of Bureau of Lectures of the Board of Education, held in De Witt Clinton Hall on January 25.

Claire Dux has gone South to sing in Palm Beach on February 9 and will return to appear in New Brunswick, N. J., on February 13. Her second New York recital is scheduled for the afternoon of February 15, at Aeolian Hall. The program will consist entirely of songs by German and American composers.

Dusolina Giannini's first and only complete song recital of this season in New York will take place on Saturday evening, February 28, at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Soldiers and Sailors Club.

Cecil Arden of the Metropolitan Opera Company is singing today in New Concord, Ohio.

Katharine Metcalfe has just been engaged for a joint recital with Bruce Simonds at Susquehanna University on February 17.

After a long absence from the New York concert platform, Roderick White will give a recital at Town Hall on Thursday evening, with Samuel Chotzinoff at the piano.

Recent concerts given by Marguerite Sylva have been at Ormond Beach, Fla., Salisbury, N. C., and Reading, Pa. After her series of New York recitals at Wallack's Theatre beginning February 8, Mme. Sylva will fill dates in the middle Atlantic states and in New England.

The Letz Quartet will give a concert at Columbia University under the auspices of the Institute of Arts and Sciences next Thursday.

Today and tomorrow Alfred Cortot will be heard in Montreal, on February 5 in Rochester, on February 9 in Sharon, Pa., on February 10 in Athens, O., on February 12 in Peoria, Ill., and on February 13 in St. Louis.

The Chamber Music Society of San Francisco has always made a point of introducing novelties to its audiences. It will continue this policy in its national tour, which is scheduled for next season.

The Regina Agricultural and Industrial Exhibition of Canada has closed a contract with Lieut. Com. John Philip Sousa for a week's engagement in Regina at its annual provincial exhibition, beginning July 27 and ending August 1.

Sousa will take to Canada an organization of 100 bandsmen and soloists, formed for his thirty-third annual tour, which will begin in the United States two weeks in advance of the Regina engagement. Following his trip to Canada, Sousa will continue his season's tour which will be of about thirty-five weeks in length and which will include his fifteenth trip from coast to coast.

Another artist who will appear in the Ann Arbor Festival on May 21 is Rhys Morgan, Welsh tenor.

John McCormack, Irish tenor, gave his seventh and final New York recital of the season on the evening of January 18 in Carnegie Hall. As in all his other metropolitan appearances this season the house was sold out. He was assisted by Edwin Schneider, accompanist, and Lauri Kennedy, cellist.

Mabel Garrison gave a recital in Washington, D. C., January 29, and in Baltimore next day.

The Dayton Westminster Choir, of Dayton, O., of sixty voices, will start on a concert tour of the middle western and south western states toward the end of February. The choir, under the direction of John Finley Williamson, makes a specialty of American compositions.

Amy Ellerman will appear as soloist of the symphony program included in the Ithaca Music Festival next April.

Entering the second half of its cycle of Brahms chamber music the Elshuco Trio gave the fifth concert of its series in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Friday evening. The program included the F minor Sonata for clarinet and piano, Op. 120, No. 1, played by Gustave Langenus and Aurelio Giorni; the Quartet in C minor, Op. 51, No. 1, played by members of the Elshuco Trio and the South Mountain Quartet; and the Trio in A minor, Op. 114, for clarinet, cello, and piano, played by Messrs. Langenus, Willeke, and Giorni.

A song recital for the benefit of the New York Auxiliary of the American McAll Association was given in Town Hall on January 16 by Emilio de Gogorza.

Magdeleine Brard, French pianist, was guest artist in the Metropolitan Opera concert on Sunday evening, January 18. She played Saint-Saens' G minor Piano Concerto with the orchestra, directed by Wilfred Pelletier, and also a group of solo numbers by Saint-Saens and Godowsky. Mmes. Mario, Peralta, and Gordon; and Messrs. Chamlee, Ballester, and Rothier sang in selections from Gioconda and Faust.

The Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pa., is rehearsing the same program for the coming May Festival as it planned to give for last year's Festival, which was postponed because of the illness of Dr. J. Frederick Wolle, leader of the choir. The numbers to be given are the Christmas Oratorio and the Mass in B minor.

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

Busoni the Teacher

George Boyle Speaks of the Influence of the Italian Master in His Career as a Pianist.

"IF you ask me to speak of myself, I must start by talking of the late Ferruccio Busoni," said George Boyle, pianist, teacher, and composer, when he was asked to tell about his own career. "When I came to Berlin at the age of eighteen I was fortunate enough to be admitted to his private piano class. I believe that he was the greatest single influence to which circumstance or my own design have ever subjected me.

"I was born in Sydney, Australia, you know. My father and mother have been well known music teachers there for years. My father is a teacher, and mother's specialty is the piano. She taught me from the time I was five, and I made public appearances in Australia as a child.

"As a lad I went to Germany in search of advanced teaching, and, perhaps, a little Continental atmosphere. Through Mark Hambourg, with whom I had already toured in my home country, I was given a hearing by Busoni. Except for the few short—and unpleasant—intervals when he was connected with German conservatories, he did not teach for pay. He had a custom of hearing two or three hundred pianists a year, and choosing a half dozen or so to become members of his class. I was one of these fortunate few.

"His pupils were supposed to be beyond elementary technical difficulties. In fact, some of them had fame in their own names as concert pianists. Only interpretation was discussed, and the most thrilling occasions were those (and they were frequent) when the master played himself to illustrate the points which he made. Sometimes these classes would last for hours, and they were often visited by leading musicians in the artistic life of Berlin. These occasions were similar to the seances of Liszt in Weimar. Although he was capable of the most stinging sarcasm, Busoni's usual attitude was one of sympathy, patience, and toleration.

"I recall that once a costume party was given on the birthday of one of his pupils in Berlin. There were only twelve of us present, including Busoni, who was dressed as a medieval Italian prince—and a very gorgeous one he was!

"After supper we danced, all except Busoni himself. He supplied the music. For nearly three hours he improvised dance music for us—mostly waltzes on themes from Wagner's music dramas and Strauss' symphonic poems!

"Another outstanding incident in these early days of mine as a pianist was the occasion when a number of Busoni's old pupils went together to an afternoon concert in Albert Hall to hear him play with the London Symphony Orchestra. Afterwards we went to dinner together, and from there moved to my apartment.

"Here Busoni seated himself at the piano and played for us for almost four hours. I think that few persons have ever heard such piano playing as we heard that night, for Busoni was a giant, a master. I often think that I have never heard his equal. The future will know him as a great composer, I am sure. Many of his works are tremendous, in conception and in form; they are masterpieces."

—Photo by Kubey-Rembrandt.
GEORGE F. BOYLE

Mr. Boyle has inherited the versatility and great activity of his old teacher. Besides his concert appearances, he is known for his compositions, which are many in number and often composed in the larger forms. Meantime he has taken the baton from Busoni, and carries on the pianistic tradition of the Italian master in his teaching at the New York Institute of Musical Art and the Curtis Institute of Music.

Among the best known of Mr. Boyle's compositions is his Piano Concerto, which he composed in Baltimore shortly after he arrived in the United States some years ago to teach at the Peabody Conservatory. This work has been performed by leading orchestras in Boston, New York, Chicago, and in cities in England and Australia with the composer, Ernest Hutcheson, Arthur Shattuck, and Edith Kilminster as soloists.

A later work is the Concerto for cello and orchestra, which was especially composed for Hans Kindler, who has played it a number of times with the Philadelphia Orchestra, and who will give it again this season with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Others of Mr. Boyle's compositions are his Sonata for viola and piano, and a Symphonic Fantasy, which has been conducted by Walter Damrosch, Eugene Ysaye, Max Zach, and Strube.

Mr. Boyle's largest published work is a setting of Browning's Pied Piper of Hamelin, which is written for soloists, chorus, and orchestra. At present he is at work on a new piano sonata.

A. F.

Sawyer Office in White Plains

Antonia Sawyer, Inc., announces that it is moving its managerial offices from Aeolian Hall, New York, to White Plains, N. Y. In commenting upon this change of address, which becomes effective this week, Mrs. Sawyer said, "While we shall continue the management of the several artists under our management, the move to White Plains is actuated chiefly by the increasing dimensions of the work we are undertaking for Percy Grainger. In addition to his regular managerial work, Mr. Grainger's activities as a composer are demanding more of our time and attention. Mr. Grainger has urged us to move our office to White Plains, where he lives, so that we may closer co-operate with him. This will in no way interfere with our continued management of Julia Culp, Vladimir Rosing, Tomford Harris, Doris Doe, Vlado Kolitsch and Jocelyn Clark. I am keeping limited office hours in my former office in Aeolian Hall."

The Letz Quartet

"A REVELATION IN ENSEMBLE"

Syracuse Post Standard, October 9, 1924

"Seldom, if ever, has the Club been given a more delectable treat. From every respect the program was one of infinite delight. It was interestingly built and beautifully interpreted. The ensemble of the players was such that it was hardly perceptible that there were four different players performing, so perfectly was the whole co-ordinated."—Indianapolis Star, December 6th, 1924.

"The quartet can well lay claim to a place among America's foremost musicians. Those who attended the concert were entertained with an hour and a half of chamber music as interesting as any recital ever heard in Syracuse."—Syracuse Herald, October 8th, 1924.

"The Letz Quartet has now been added to the list of chamber music units which St. Paul Music-lovers will want to hear just as often as it is possible."—St. Paul Daily News, December 3rd, 1924.

"Such distinguished playing as was heard from the Letz Quartet is too rarely met with in Winnipeg for one not to be deeply appreciative of it. In fact, this highest form of music-making, even several degrees lesser in excellence than that of the Letz Quartet, is something many lovers in the city are always sighing for more of—and doubtless sighing in vain."—Winnipeg Evening Tribune, December 2nd, 1924.

"A concert of extraordinary charm. Musicianship of a superb quality, underlying great sensitiveness in interpretation."—St. Paul Pioneer, December 3rd, 1924.

"They played with smooth ensemble and accustomed ease. They were as much at home in the modern works as in the older classic and romantic."—New York Evening Post, October 27th, 1924.

MANAGEMENT

DANIEL MAYER

AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK

Rosa Ponselle Sings in Boston

Myra Hess and Borovsky Among Recitalists; Lopez Orchestra and Choral Union Concerts.

Boston, Jan. 26. — To all appearances fully recovered from her recent illness, Rosa Ponselle sang in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. According to the Globe reviewer, Miss Ponselle displayed "a rarely beautiful voice, of noble resonance in the lower register, of great clarity and usually of lyric charm as well in the upper, and of uniform purity throughout."

In the Transcript the commentator said that the concert "in many ways approached perfection." He considered Miss Ponselle's voice "remarkable"—an "extraordinarily large voice" and one of "equal flexibility."

The Herald reviewer commented on the range and power of her voice and added that "hers is a rich, warm, dramatic soprano voice . . . she is master of the beautiful full chest tones as well as the brilliant head tones, and her singing moves from register to register as easily and freely as an organist produces the tones on his instrument." Warren Storey Smith of the Post praised her "accomplishments in the style of singing," although he found her enunciation of the German and French songs imperfect at times. The chronicler in the Christian Science Monitor thought her singing pleasing, but conventional.

* * *

One of the piano recitals of the past week was given by Myra Hess. The Herald reviewer wrote: "No wonder people like to hear her, a musician of artistic conscience, who knows what she can do properly and is not likely to undertake more, a woman of gracious concert manner, and a pianist of able technique."

H. T. Parker wrote in the Transcript that her tone was "sensuous beauty upon the ear and every other receptive faculty. It was transparency itself, while across the limpid crystal played soft lustres of light and shade." In the Monitor, Stuart Mason observed that "it is almost impossible to write with due restraint of the playing of Myra Hess. She is one of the very few pianists who treat the piano as a musical instrument . . . for her the piano gives forth sounds which no other player it has been our good fortune to hear has succeeded in evoking."

Alexander Borovsky, pianist, gave a recital in Steinert Hall last Thursday. His playing, in the words of the Monitor writer, "is interesting. His technique is excellent, his coloring brilliant and his musical intelligence keen. Yet with all this there is something lacking in the way of appeal. It is all to the thought and very little to the heart." The Transcript reviewer was of the same opinion. "Mr. Borovsky is possessed," he wrote, "of every known technical device of the keyboard or pedal. . . . Vitality, both rhythmic and dynamic, is the very essence of his playing. His tone, while good, lacks sensuous appeal, is the least bit inclined to be cold—even hard."

The writer in the Herald thought that Mr. Borovsky is "primarily a pianist of vast and climatic chordal passages, of music that is architectonic, brilliant."

ALEXANDER BOROVSKY
Russian Pianist Appeared for the First Time This Season in New York Last Thursday Afternoon.

* * *

Two other pianists of the week were Mary Madden and Harold Morris. Philip Hale (Herald) mentioned that the tonal quality of Miss Madden's playing "was delightful." He continued that her technique "was adequate, not obtrusive; not displayed at the expense of musical diction." The Transcript commented on her "ample equipment in tone and technique." This writer added that "she plays with intelligence, with insight into the manner of the various composers and style she essays to interpret, occasionally with fire and feeling out of her own personality." In the Monitor it was remarked that in spite of an occasional blurring of tone and lack of incisive rhythm, in her playing of the difficult Debussy Danse "the rhythm was good, the mood delightful."

H. T. Parker wrote that, in many respects, Mr. Morris "is an exceptional pianist." In his opinion, "amplitude and ardor, rather than finesse and elegance, individualize the newcomer. Yet he lacks neither acute perception nor adroit hands—when he chooses to exercise it." Mr. Parker liked the zest and individuality of his playing. According to the Herald, Mr. Morris "has a technique of many excellences," but "from a want of tonal variety and also of skillful shading he missed the final touch of brilliance" necessary to virtuosity. Stuart Mason said that "his playing is honest and sincere, and, although it is often lacking in distinction, it never becomes actually commonplace."

* * *

Among the other musical attractions of the week were the concert given by Vincent Lopez's Orchestra, the recital of the People's Choral Union, the joint recital of Greta Torpadie, soprano, and Salvatore de Stefano, harpist, and the song recital by Suzanne Dabney.

The Herald writer enthused over the Lopez concert, writing that the orchestra "has a brilliant technique, an astonishing plasticity. It would seem to be composed of virtuosos." Mr. Lopez not only conducted, but played the piano, displaying, according to this reviewer, "a beauty of tone and a facility in execution that many givers of piano recitals might well envy." The Transcript chronicler said Mr. Lopez's orchestra "is a model of tonal brilliance," and com-

(Continued on page 23.)

MARGARET SITTIG

Violiniste

SCORES SIGNIFICANT SUCCESS IN New York Recital, Town Hall, January 21st, 1925

WHAT THE CRITICS SAID:

The New York Times, Jan. 22, 1925

"MARGARET SITTIG, A YOUNG AMERICAN VIOLINIST, WINS INSTANT FAVOR IN TOWN HALL. She established herself in the favor of her audience from the start by a fluent mechanism and a fresh and vivid imagination. . . . displaying a tone at once firm and sweet and a fine sense of contrast."

The New York Sun, Jan. 22, 1925

"Margaret Sittig disclosed some very admirable qualities as a recitalist. Her bowing was firm and vigorous and when desirable energetic and forceful. Her tone was full and sonorous and thorough musicianship and sound intelligence were evident throughout the program. The somber themes of Burleigh's concerto were painted most convincingly in rich deep tonal colors. . . . A musician of considerable depth and power who deserves to be heard again soon."

New York Herald Tribune, Jan. 22, 1925

"MISS SITTIG GIVES VIOLIN RECITAL OF CONVINCING QUALITY. She displayed well developed technical skill and a tone of quality notably above the average, of ample size and breadth. She played vigorously, but was able to retain the smoothness and volume of her tone in energetically bowed passages—an ability not widespread."

New York Evening World, Jan. 22, 1925

"She is a forceful player of sure technic and intonation. . . ."

New York American, Jan. 22, 1925

"Margaret Sittig is a capable and cultivated musician with speedy and flexible fingers and supple wrists. Her tone is full and warm and her intonation accurate."

Brooklyn Standard Union, Jan. 22, 1925

"Miss Sittig's breadth of style was strikingly brought to bear in her playing of Vitali's chaconne, which she played with complete scope in phrasing and a masterful handling of its many intricacies. Her tone was of glowing warmth, vibrant and thrilling, and her interpretation was fired with life and imagination."

NEXT RECITAL: BOSTON, JORDAN HALL, FEBRUARY 19, 1925

Address: SITTIG TRIO MANAGEMENT: 167 West 80th Street, New York City
'Phone Trafalgar 9030

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Alfred Cortot Plays Rachmaninoff Work

Damrosch Conducts Williams' London Symphony in Last N. Y. Concert Before Tour.

Vaughan Williams' London Symphony was played by the New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, at its concert in Aeolian Hall on January 25. Alfred Cortot, as soloist, played Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, and the other orchestral numbers were a movement from Mozart's Les Petits Riens, and the Turkish Rondo from his A major Piano Sonata. This concert was the last before the orchestra left for Cuba.

Olin Downes of the Times commented that Mr. Cortot's performance "could hardly have been excelled for its musicianship, its phenomenal technical skill and power, and for virtuoso spirit" and added that it was unfortunate that he had "so poor a vehicle." According to Deems Taylor of the World, he gave the Concerto "a magnificently vital and articulate performance."

The writer in the Telegram-Mail found it a "beautifully planned and wholly brilliant performance." The Sun reviewer found it a pleasure to hear the Concerto, which "speaks in large and passionate phrase," played with "so much technical mastery and such insight and sympathy." The Herald Tribune referred to Mr. Cortot as "a superb artist, worthy of better things" than this work.

Mr. Taylor wrote of the Williams work that it was less a symphony than a suite because of its sameness of mood, but he added that "the music itself is beautifully conceived and beautifully put together, and the orchestral garb with which he invests it is strikingly appropriate."

According to Olin Downes, it is a work "which becomes more original, poetic and expressive with rehearings." The Telegram-Mail reviewer found that it "has a certain provocative appeal for the imagination—an appeal which, one is inclined to believe, outweighs the intrinsic qualities of the score. The music itself is variously derivative, unmarked by profound or arresting invention." The Herald Tribune writer said that Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra gave "a memorably fine performance" of the work which "wears exceedingly well." He continued that "for musical distinction, for poetry of mood and accent, this is surely an outstanding achievement in modern symphonic writing." Other writers agreed with Mr. Taylor in his statement that "Mr. Damrosch gave the work a highly successful and vivid reading."

At the orchestra's concert for young people the previous afternoon, Mr. Damrosch offered the andante cantabile and valse from Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, an air and gavotte by Bach, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Caprice Espagnole. Alfred Cortot was also soloist at this concert in the same Rachmaninoff Concerto.

Guest Artists Heard With Coast Ensemble

San Francisco Society Hosts to Los Angeles Quartet; Heifetz, Elman, and Schmitz Play.

San Francisco, Jan. 24.—With the members of the Philharmonic Quartet of Los Angeles as guest artists, the San Francisco Chamber Music Society presented a concert last Tuesday evening. This first exchange of musical courtesies was arranged by Elias Hecht of the San Francisco ensemble.

The press comments concerning the playing of the visitors were laudatory. Mr. Mason, reviewer of the Examiner, thought the Suk B flat Quartet, the novelty of the program, "admirably done," and hoped that the Los Angeles group would visit San Francisco again. In the Chronicle, Mr. Brown wrote that the Suk Quartet was "a strongly vitalized composition, except in the third movement."

This reviewer declared also that the visitors were "technically perfect, abounding in beauty of tone, and sympathetic in their co-operative interpretation." Mr. Woodman wrote in the Call that the Suk work "was given full justice by the Philharmonic artists—they worked well together, and pleased the audience immensely." It was the opinion of Mr. Elliot, observer of the Herald, that the program, which included Brahms' Sextet in G major and the Mozart G minor quartet, was not too well chosen, but the performance left nothing to be desired. The San Francisco ensemble opened the program with the Mozart piece, and Messrs. Ferner and Firestone assisted their Los Angeles guests in the sextet.

Mr. Hertz conducted the Symphony Orchestra in its third popular municipal concert on January 15, with Mischa Elman as soloist. Mr. Woodman in the Call lauded Mr. Elman as "being superb," and the other reviewers had remarks in the same vein. The program was made up of Beethoven's Lenora Overture, No. 3; the Peer Gynt Suite of Grieg; in the Village of Ippolitow Ivanow; Hertz's own arrangement of Kreisler's Caprice Viennois, and Sowerby's Irish Washerwoman. Mr. Elman played the Tschaikowsky Concerto.

On Sunday afternoon, January 18, Jascha Heifetz gave a recital, and the reviewers were most enthusiastic. To quote Ray C. B. Brown in the Chronicle, "Heifetz displays rare artistry" and the "detachment of youthful musician suffuses his violin playing with magical glamour." His art is "extraordinary" was the phrase used by Mr. Mason in the Examiner. Mr. Elliot in the Herald expressed the opinion that "Heifetz has no equal among present day virtuosi of the violin, either in technical brilliancy or profound understanding of the materials of his art." In the Call, Mr. Woodman spoke of him as an "impeccable artist," and Mollie Merrick in the Bulletin said that "the art of Heifetz deepens with the years."

MISS DAI BUELL

Was Heard in a Distinctive Piano Recital in the New Chickering Hall in New York Last Wednesday Evening.

Brunswick Announces Contest

A radio Music Memory Contest designed to further the understanding and love for good music throughout the United States is announced in the completing of the arrangements between the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, the Radio Corporation of America, and the General Electric Company.

Three broadcasting stations, WJZ, WGY, and WRC, will be linked together for one hour every Tuesday evening commencing tonight for the transmission of the contest programs. Leading figures in the musical world will be heard over the radio in programs of the highest class of music. No names will be announced, and monthly cash awards totaling $5,000 will be given to listeners guessing the largest number of artists and compositions correctly.

The list of compositions from which the programs will be selected, and the names of the Brunswick artists who will take part will be given out.

Wood May Visit U. S.

Sir Henry J. Wood, conductor of the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra in London, is reported to have written recently to a friend in New York. "It is more than probable that I shall go on an Empire tour of six months early in 1925, preceded by a visit to the large American cities."

Ruth Breton Appears Under Sokoloff Baton

Cleveland, Jan. 27.—Ruth Breton, violinist, was the soloist at the fifth popular concert given by the Cleveland orchestra, under the direction of Nikolai Sokoloff. The works played by Miss Breton were Sinigaglia's Piemontese Rhapsody, and Sarasate's Gypsy Airs; and the orchestral numbers were the William Tell Overture, Saint-Saens' Danse Macabre, a Strauss Waltz, and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony.

According to Archie Bell of the News, Miss Breton not only has a "fine stage appearance" but plays "with distinction, with a big, vibrant tone" which gives the impression "of authority and well rounded musical intelligence." James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer admired the "irresistible verve and animation" of her playing and asserted that she "scored an impressive success." Writing of her "many brilliant assets besides brilliance and dexterity," he continued that "she phrases well, there is incisiveness in her clear cut, biting rhythms; and she commands, when she wills, a tone of rare and searching beauty."

Eleanor Clarage of the Times found Miss Breton "one of the specially blessed who have not only a fine talent but an attractive personality as well . . . she has that quality known as the 'fire of youth;' her playing is emotional, expressive and indicative of fine musicianship."

A quartet by Milhaud was played here for the first time at the concert given by the Cleveland String Quartet last night, under the auspices of the Musical Arts Association.

The reviewers seemed surprised that there was nothing shockingly modern about the Milhaud composition. According to Miss Clarage, the music "is fresh, vigorous and highly original; it contains much that is worthwhile, and its beauties were admirably brought out by the instrumentalists."

In Mr. Roger's opinion, the work was "genuinely interesting. It has vigor, originality, spontaniety. And it has moments, not a few of them, of beauty and suavity." He added that "unstinted praise is also rightfully due the Cleveland musicians for their finished and spirited delivery."

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

RE JOHN McCORMACK

"Perfection in an Imperfect Word"

"What is there left to say of that golden voice, that masterly technique, that perfect use of a perfect instrument? His singing was, as it always is, one of the perfect things in an imperfect world."

—The Evening Bulletin.

"A Finely Matured Artist"

"Mr. McCormack has come back to us a finely-matured artist. The old beauty of voice, with even more richness, is there, and the expressive sympathetic quality of his art has deepened to a point at which his singing is a delight both on the vocal and interpretative sides."

—The Daily Chronicle.

Philadelphia Hears Civic Opera Carmen

Julia Claussen, Mae Hotz, Althouse, and Patton Sing; Smallens Conducts.

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.—The Philadelphia Civic Opera Company in its presentation of Carmen last night (in the words of the Public Ledger reviewer) "added enormously to its laurels by giving an extremely spirited and unusually fine performance." The North American chronicler added that the "richness of ensemble work marked the performance as one of high professional standing." Alexander Smallens conducted and, to again quote the Ledger, gave "quite the finest exhibition of conducting that has yet been shown in this city."

According to the North American, Julia Claussen, as Carmen, "gave a spirited interpretation of the part, supplementing a powerful voice with no less telling dramatic ability." Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) found her characterization consistent and her singing beautiful. The Ledger, on the other hand, found her "rendition very beautiful" but her dramatic conception of the role one which departed from the best traditions. In the Record, the reviewer called her "an admirable, if not thrilling" Carmen, and added that her performance "was a great one vocally, and entirely conventional dramatically."

This commentator said that Paul Althouse "captured the honors of the evening, singing with real musical feeling and having an excellent conception of his part, dramatically." The Ledger writer agreed that he was "in beautiful voice" and Mr. Muschamp agreed that his work was excellent. This reviewer lauded Mae Hotz's work repeated that she sustained her high notes "with great ease and charm." In the opinion of the Ledger writer, she was the most personable Micaela, both vocally and dramatically, ever seen in Philadelphia. The Record characterized her as "delightful."

Although this observer considered the Toreador's music too low for Alfredo Gandolfi's voice, the Ledger found him "vocally a superb toreador." Other writers commended his work. Fred Patton, as Zuniga, according to the Ledger reviewer, displayed "his magnificent voice" and "did the dramatic part of the role ably." The local singers, who, as this writer expressed it, "covered themselves with glory," were Jennie Kneedler Johnson, Ruth Montague, Valentine Figaniak, Albert Mahler, and Theodore Bayer.

Syracuse Conductor Will Lead at Guild Concert

Vladimir Shavitch, the American conductor who recently directed one of the regular subscription concerts of the London Philharmonic Society, will make his New York debut as conductor at the next concert of the International Composers' Guild, which takes place next Sunday night in Aeolian Hall, New York. Mr. Shavitch is conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra. Among the novelties will be an ensemble for small orchestra by Henry Cowell, in which will be heard an old Indian musical instrument, the thunder stick. There will be an orchestral fantasy called The Land of Dreams, by William Still, a negro composer who has developed a very modern technique. He has been a pupil of Chadwick and Varese.

Another unusual feature will be a suite of Three Preludes for orchestra by M. Cotapos, who is vice consul for Chile in New York. Carlos Salzedo will contribute Three Poems of Mallarme for soprano and harp, which will be sung by Greta Torpadie. Colin O'More will sing Tres Exagonos for tenor with chamber orchestra by Carlos Chavez, one of the most advanced Mexican composers.

Ballester Sings in Rigoletto

Vincente Ballester was the only new member in the cast of Rigoletto, which was repeated by the Metropolitan Opera Company Wednesday. Galli-Curci headed the cast, which included Miguel Fleta, Marion Telva, Leon Rothier, and Paolo Ananian. Tullio Serafin conducted. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail said Mr. Ballester's performance "was a credit to his musical and histrionic intelligence and to his artistic ideals." The World found him "suave, intelligent, and melodious." W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that he was "capable and conscientious" and was a traditional Rigoletto.

Schmitt and Williams Novelties in Detroit

Detroit, Jan. 23—Two novel compositions were introduced to Detroit by Ossip Gabrilowitsch at the concert of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra last evening. They were Vaughan Williams' London Symphony, and Florent Schmitt's Rhapsodie Viennoise. The other numbers were Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun, and Strauss' Don Juan.

W. K. Kelsey (News) asserted that "it was a great concert, greatly conducted, and greatly played." Of the Williams work, he wrote that it was "a great symphony, masterfully conducted." Charlotte M. Tarnsey of the Free Press mentioned that Mr. Gabrilowitsch gave the symphony "a very finished reading." The writer in the Times considered the work more a "symphonic poem, or suite of impressions, than the conventional symphony."

The audience was more enthusiastic in its response to the other novelty. Miss Tarney found the piece "extremely modern in the manner of its development, with a marked rhythmic swing, and sufficient melodious appeal." In Mr. Kelsey's opinion, it was "a delightful work" with "richly varied orchestration." Both Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the orchestra were commended for their work throughout the program.

Clara Clemens was the soloist at the third Young People's Concert of the orchestra, conducted by Victor Kolar. Edith M. Rhetts appeared as lecturer. Tschaikowsky, Saint-Saens, Strauss, Brahms, Mendelssohn were represented on the program.

Music of the Movies

S. L. Rothafel himself is conducting the orchestra of the Capitol Theatre, New York, this week in Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance. The program includes also a short version of Pinafore. At the Strand, Carl Edouarde is leading excerpts from Cavalliera Rusticana, and Judson House, tenor, is singing Siciliana. Edward Albano, baritone, and a ballet ensemble are also appearing.

Liszt's Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody heads the bill at the Rivoli, and August Werner, baritone, is singing at each performance. Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz is the feature music at the Rialto.

"A conductor of Real Authority and Knowledge"—
The London Times

SHAVITCH

(Conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra)

Enthusiastically Received as Guest Conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, Queen's Hall, January 12, 1925

The Evening Standard

"The most attractive item was a dashing glittering performance of Strauss's 'Don Juan.' This obviously appealed to the conductor's temperament, and was given with immense verve. I have never heard better quality brass tone, or the fine horn theme, which is the clou of the work, stand out so well."

The Morning Post

"In the orchestral numbers Mr. Shavitch confirmed the good impression of his former appearance and more. He is a believer in firmness of outline and an advocate of sonority, and the chief numbers, the 'Don Juan' of Strauss and the C minor Symphony of Brahms, proved excellent material. It was the right mood for both, and there is something gained when a present-day conductor is content to interpret rather than impress personal view and a personal manner which may or may not have anything to do with the case."

The London Times:

"The fifth concert of the London Symphony Orchestra's series at the Queen's Hall last night was conducted by M. Vladimir Shavitch, a conductor of real authority and knowledge. There is little of the sensational in the effects he aims at, rather a broad line, a firm rhythm, and depth more than brilliance of tone."

"Such a method, naturally, was well fitted to reveal the character of Brahms's 'Academic Festival' overture and his C minor Symphony, but this is not to say that M. Shavitch missed the note of eloquence or impulse; indeed, the performances were really enjoyable by reason of the general steady flow of music, bending here and there to some moment of special significance or charm and yet not so much as to break the continuity of the whole. Similarly in Strauss's 'Don Juan,' although the high lights of its picturesque instrumentation came out vividly enough, M. Shavitch kept one in touch with the structure and did not let the music fall into a mere string of brilliantly coloured episodes."

"The one other work in the programme was Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor. In this Miss Tina Lerner played the solo part extremely well; she was very sure and showed great power, while her tone in the slow movement had beauty and in the climaxes a fine sonority."

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Berlin Hears Mahler's Tenth

Kemperer Conducts Unfinished Symphony; Opera Houses Continue Productions Though Bankrupt.

Berlin.

Mahler's unfinished Tenth Symphony, which recently was played for the first time in Vienna, has just had its Berlin premiere. The reception of this posthumous work in the latter city was very different from that which the music public and music authorities of the Austrian capital accorded it. In Vienna the general reverence for the personality and reputation of Gustav Mahler, the man and artist, assured the cordial greeting which the work did get. In Berlin a more critical attitude was taken, for Mahler's position is here not so strong as it is in Vienna, as much as Berlin may admire and respect this composer.

Gustav Mahler worked many years in Vienna, brought opera to a rare height, influenced decisively the musical life of the city, and pointed out new paths to the younger school of composers. Berlin never felt the warmth of such personal contact. It was quite natural that the German capital should have regarded the Tenth Symphony with a cool and critical ear.

Composition Coolly Received

The Berlin judgment may be summarized as follows: It would have been a greater reverence not to have published the unfinished work in a form which Mahler certainly would have altered a good many times if he had only lived to complete the composition. Among others Dr. Leopold Schmidt held to this view. He wrote: "Mahler was accustomed to altering his works even after they had had considerable public hearing. He would not have performed this work, or allowed anyone else to perform it in its present state, were he alive to make the choice. Who knows what would have been created from this material if he had had more time to work on it?

"We have to do throughout with an unfinished work. The B minor movement, which ends with a harp glissando, followed by tam-tam, for example, did not make any considerable impression. It is not Mahler's characteristic coloring. Also the Adagio cannot be judged in its present condition. It is a piece of music full of devotional humor which begins with an expressive theme, followed continually by a sad song in the violas. This is a movement with many affecting passages, strange sound effects, and new (even for Mahler) harmonic progressions. But as it stands at present, the impresion is weakened by its too broad arrangement."

Believes Work Merely a Sketch

Mr. Pisling found in the Scherzo movement (the B minor) some delightful pastoral themes of pure Mahler coinage, but in respect to the Adagio, he agreed with Dr. Schmidt. To complete his review he declared that our knowledge of Mahler receives no enrichment from the display of this torso, and he expressed the opinion that Mahler knew what he was about when he ordered that this Tenth Symphony be not given out to the public.

Prof. Weissmann also deplored this performance. He wrote in his report of the concert: "The score was merely a sketch, but one so complete that it seemed possible to complete it in Mahler's style. Ernst Krenek did this work. But what does this really mean, to finish a work in Mahler's manner? That is an impossibility. Mahler's works were never complete before the time of performance. He always relied on the final test of performance, and made alterations after it. Doubtless Mahler's friends felt that it was their obligation to produce and perform every line of his music. He should have been protected against his friends."

The musical structure of the two movements of the Tenth Symphony have been described in detail in The Musical Digest by Paul Stefan, the Vienna correspondent. To this nothing need be added except the report that Otto Kemperer conducted the Berlin performance admirably.

Remember Peter Cornelius

Another of the important dead has just been honored in Berlin: Peter Cornelius, the composer of the Barber of Bagdad, who was born one hundred years ago. Max von Schillings innocently invited the son of Cornelius to say a few words about his father before the beginning of the festival performance. The younger Cornelius (who is already over sixty himself) turned out to be a very talkative gentleman.

Perhaps it was the first time that he had ever talked before the footlights. He seemed to lose his head entirely, but not his tongue. He spoke for upwards of an hour, and showed no signs of letting up. By order of von Schillings he was told from the prompter's box to stop, but it was no use. It was nearly an hour and a half after he began that Herr Cornelius finally gave up the stage. By that time a large part of the audience had left the Opera House.

EDUARD ZATHUREZKY
Czech Violinist Whose Debut Was One of the Outstanding Features of the New York Music Season So Far.

The most important deaths in Berlin, however, have been those of the Volksoper and the German Opera House, both of which have gone into bankruptcy. They are continuing their performances for the present, but merely to secure some receipts for the orchestra, chorus and solo singers. There seems to be no prospect of restoring these houses to a healthy footing. Yet their artistic work is still worthy of notice. This was shown particularly by the performance of Boris Godunoff, with Pasquale Amato as guest artist, in the title role at the Volksoper.

On the concert platform Berlin had another opportunity recently to admire the artistry of Vasa Prihoda, the twenty-four-year-old Czech violinist, who is considered here a musician of the highest rank. Mrs. Elizabeth Rothwell appeared in a song recital. Prof. Weissmann wrote of her: "Mrs. Rothwell is an artist of originality and temperament. She was born for the platform. Endowed with a beautiful voice, she has achieved perfect freedom in its use." She sang a program consisting of songs of Brahms, Handel and a number of American composers, including Walter Henry Rothwell. In the opinion of Prof. Weissmann, "she succeeded everywhere with a rare surety of style."

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Mme. Melius Active Abroad

Luella Melius, coloratura soprano of the Paris Grand Opera, is engaged from January 15 to February 8 in Naples, Bologna and Milan, for the Barber of Seville, Rigoletto, Lucia di Lammermoor and Traviata. She will sing these roles also, from February 10 to March 10, at Monte Carlo, and from March 12 to April 19 in Madrid, where one of her principal colleagues will be Muratore. Mme. Melius will finish her present season at the Paris Opera late in April.

State Opera Accepts New Work

Vienna.—The State Opera has accepted for performance a comic opera by a young Viennese composer, Wilhelm Gross. It is called Sganarelle, and is based on one of the comedies of Moliere.

Bilotti Engaged in London

London, Jan. 27.—Anton Bilotti, pianist, will appear as soloist in the Sunday afternoon concert with the Queen's Hall Orchestra on February 8.

Fontainebleau School of Music
PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU, FRANCE
Directors: Ch. M. Widor and Camille Decreus, supervised by the French Government.
For American Artists, Teachers and Advanced Students Only
JUNE 25 TO SEPTEMBER 25, 1925
Greatest French Teachers, including Widor and Libert Organ; Andre Bloch, Composition and Conducting; Miss Nadia Boulanger, Harmony (the Appreciation and Philosophy of Modern Music); Isidor Philipp and Decreus, Piano; Remy and Hewitt, Violin; Hekking, Violoncello; Grandjany, Harp; Mauguiere and Salignac, Voice, Repertory and Mise-en-scene; Pillois, the French Language and History of Music; Fauchet, Solfeggio and Instrumental Ensemble.
Tuition, board and lodging 5000 francs three months' course
3500 francs two months' course
American Office: National Arts Club Studios
FRANCIS ROGERS, Chairman
119 East 19th Street, New York City.

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

New York String Quartet
Season 1925-1926

OTTOKAR CADEK
First Violin
JAROSLAV SISKOVSKY
Second Violin
LUDVIK SCHWAB
Viola
BEDRICH VASKA
'Cello
Concert Management
Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., New York
Brunswick Records
Now Booking

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Shavitch Leads London Symphony

Syracuse Conductor Is Praised in Guest Appearance; Tina Lerner Plays Tschaikowsky Concerto.

London.

Despite the fact that one of the densest fogs in London history interfered with traffic, and drifted heavily into the concert hall, the appearance of Vladimir Shavitch, conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, as leader, by invitation, of a concert of the London Symphony Orchestra's current series, brought out a very large audience in Queen's Hall. Though dampened and chilled externally, the crowd was moved to hearty applause and many recalls for the conductor both during and at the close of his program. Mr. Shavitch, incidentally, was not merely a "novelty" to London, for he had appeared with the same orchestra during the June season last year.

The soloist of the occasion was Mme. Tina Lerner, pianist, not unknown to the London of pre-war days, who assisted in the Tschaikowsky B minor Concerto. She shared the honors of the evening with the conductor, in private life her husband, according to the reviews.

Reviews All Favorable

The Post found "so much that is distinctive in the conducting of Mr. Shavitch" that it regretted that an even larger audience was not accommodated by the hall. Mr. Shavitch "confirmed the good impression of his former appearance and even more. He is a believer in firmness of outline and an advocate of sonority; the right mood (for his program), and there is something gained when a present-day conductor is content to interpret rather than impress a personal manner which may or may not have anything to do" with the music in hand. The same writer thought Mme. Lerner "a very able exponent" of the Tschaikowsky work, "there was much that was notable in her reading, and not the least was her fine and free octave playing, as well as a general neatness and authority."

Equally favorable was the Times' comment: "Mr. Shavitch (is) a conductor of real authority and knowledge. There is little of the sensational in the effects he aims at; rather a broad line, a firm rhythm, and depth more than brilliance of tone. Such a method was well fitted to reveal the character of Brahms' Academic Festival Overture and his C minor Symphony, but this is not to say that he missed the note of eloquence or impulse; indeed the performances were really enjoyable by reason of the general steady flow of the music, bending here and there to some moment of special significance or charm. Similarly in Strauss's Don Juan, although the highlights of its picturesque instrumentation came out vividly enough, Mr. Shavitch kept one in touch with the structure and did not let the music fall into a mere string of brilliantly colored episodes." Mme. Lerner "played extremely well; she was very sure and showed great power, while her tone in the slow movement had beauty and in the climaxes a fine sonority."

The Telegraph critic felt that both Brahms numbers were "well played," and the Don Juan "soundly" interpreted; Mme. Lerner's part was "bold, eloquent, emphatic, in the authentic Tschaikowsky manner, and one could only regret that so fine a pianist was wasted on such a work."

Sir Henry Wood Conducts

In the previous week, of January 4-11, another symphony orchestra resumed its activities: the Queen's Hall, under Sir Henry Wood; the most interesting item on its program being a performance of Holst's The Planets. Toscha Seidel was soloist, having chosen the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, to which he brought an entirely adequate "technical equipment" (The Sunday Times); "consummate skill, like the virtuoso he is" (the Telegraph); "easy command of the resources this showy music requires" (the Observer).

Chamber music was provided by the London Trio. Miss Evelyn Scotney again won warm commendation at a Sunday "pop;" another vocalist was Mme. Blanche Marchesi, who teaches in London, and was commended for the "exquisite, finished art" of her performance, to quote only the Telegram.

In a somewhat different category came a concert universally voted delightful by the critics and very largely attended, in which the English tenor John Goss presented "an evening of sociable songs" with the assistance of the Cathedral Male Quartet. This included English folk songs, sailors' chanteys, Noels, rounds, traditional (secular) plain-song, etc., and was carried out with great informality in the small and cozy Wigmore Hall, for which special permission to allow smoking had been secured. P. L.

Cassado Gives Cello Recital

Paris, Jan. 17.—In his violoncello recital at the Salle des Agriculteurs last Monday evening M. Cassado played compositions of Bach, Beethoven, Cassado, and Saint-Saens.

Organ of Notre Dame in Paris Reported Decaying

ANOTHER great organ of Paris is falling into ruin through neglect, reports the Musical News and Herald. It is the instrument of Notre Dame, formerly considered the finest of its kind in the world. According to the veteran organist of the Cathedral, M. Vierne, it has not been cleaned since 1894. The organ, he says, is filled with dust, dead bats and swallows, and mildew. Even parts of the mechanism are rotting away.

Recently one of the biggest of the 5,246 pipes fell on to the stone floor of the Cathedral. The parish of Notre Dame is very poor, and there is not sufficient money to repair the organ, it is said. The instrument was installed in 1868.

Ganna Walska Sings Again

Ganna Walska sang in Madame Butterfly in Nice, France, on January 28. She was warmly applauded as the opera proceeded, although she was obviously nervous at the beginning. Newspapers reported that previously she had appeared in Yonne and Burgundy under the assumed name of Anne Navarre.

Violinist Appears with Colonne

Paris, Jan. 19.—Just before leaving for America Jacques Thibaud, violinist, was soloist with the Concerts Colonne under the leadership of M. Pierne last night. He played the Brahms Concerto and Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso from the First Concerto. The program included also the first hearing of Andalousie, by Lamotte de Grigny.

Perform Rimsky Music

Paris, Jan. 17.—Rimsky-Korsakoff's Dit de la Ville Invisible de Kietj was given at the concert of the Revue Musicale at the Vieux-Colombier on Tuesday. The composition is not complete. Alexander Tcherpnine conducted the orchestra, chorus, and soloists.

Williams Preparing Choral Work

London, Jan. 22.—Vaughan Williams is working on a new choral work of large dimensions. He plans to have it ready for its premiere at the Oxford Music Festival a year from May.

Paris Hears Carmen And the Magic Flute

Paris.

After an absence of a year Marthe Chenal returned recently in a performance of Carmen at the Opera-Comique, and proved immediately that she has lost none of her popularity with the Parisian public. Her delineation of the Spanish flower girl is imbued with the true Spanish verve and passion, and she knows how to bring out all the dramatic details which are necessary to make the role convincing.

Now that this singer is back at the Opera-Comique for a number of guest appearances, the management has commenced rehearsing Camille Erlanger's Aphrodite, the leading role of which was created by Mme. Chenal.

In the Carmen in question M. Friant sang the melodramatic music of Don Jose with good effect. He excelled histrionically. M. Albers, who took the part of Escamillo, again displayed a polished and well trained voice, and sang with pure and steady tone. The scenery at this performance was effective, and M. Frigara conducted.

Mozart's Magic Flute has been revived at the Grand Opera after a short interval. The return was not entirely welcome or happy, because, although the production did not lack in luxury or appropriateness of setting, it was wanting dramatically.

As the Queen of the Night, Mme. Monsy sang with good style as well as diction and musicianship. Mme. Cesbron-Viseur showed many of the qualities of a great singer. M. Huberty, baritone, made the best of Mozart's music. He was received with much enthusiasm by the public. Philippe Gaubert was the conductor. K. H. S.

Gives Manuscripts to Library

Paris, Jan. 20.—M. Jacques Durand, music publisher, who several years ago presented the autographed orchestra scores of Pelleas and Melisande to the Conservatoire Library, has now donated to the same institution all his remaining manuscripts of Debussy, fifty-six in number. M. Durand has also donated in the past a number of manuscripts of Saint-Saens.

Paris Hears Choral Music

Paris, Jan. 17.—M. R. Siohan directed the singers of the Chorale Francaise and of the Art Choral in a program last Monday evening which included the second act of Monteverde's Orfeo and Honegger's Le Roi David. The soloists included Mmes. Croiza and Gills and Messrs. Paulet and Manuel.

Mengelberg Arrives

Willem Mengelberg, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society, arrived in the United States from Holland on January 24. He will conduct the first concert of his half of the season tomorrow evening at a students' concert. On Thursday he will lead the orchestra when Igor Stravinsky plays his own piano concerto.

Each issue of The Musical Digest

in MILANO, Italy

will be found at the news stands of

ALCANI E TERRAZZI, Piazza della Scala (Near the famous Opera House itself)
and
NATALE DONISELLI, Piazza Duomo (Opposite Santa Radegonda)

And Our Correspondent: SIGNOR FEDERICO CANDIDA is located at: Via Palermo No. 12

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Announce I.S.C.M. Programs

Four American Compositions to Be Presented in Prague and Venice; All Dates Not Yet Set.

With the exception of the dates of the Venice concerts, complete details have now been received of the programs to be given this year at the Venice and Prague festivals of the International Society for Contemporary Music. Four American works are to be presented. Henry Eichheim's Nocturnal Impressions of Peking and Korean Sketch, both for chamber orchestra; a work for six trumpets by Carl Ruggles entitled Angels, and a symphonic tone poem for small orchestra by Louis T. Gruenberg entitled Daniel Jazz. These works are to be given in Venice during the International Society's concerts to be held there in the first part of September, the exact dates to be announced later. The jury, which met at Winterthur, consisted of Zoltan Kodaly, Alfredo Casella, Egon Wellesz and Vaclav Talich.

The complete programs of these concerts are as follows: First concert —String quartet (Edwin Schulhoff); L'Horizon Chimerique, for voice and piano (Gabriel Faure); duet for violin and cello (Hans Eisler); two works for chamber orchestra (Henry Eichheim); Jazzband, for violin and piano (Wilhelm Grosz); Epigrammas Ironicos Sentimentaes, Historieta No. 5 (Villa-Lobos); Chamber Music No. 11 for twelve solo instruments and piano obbligato, op. 36, No. 1 (Paul Hindemith).

Second concert — Sonata for piano and cello (Casper Cassado); Three preludes, op. 15, for piano (Samuel Feinberg); Sonata for violin alone (Zoltan Szekely); Five pieces for string quartet from op. 26 (Max Butting); Three songs (Ladislav Vyvpalek); String quartet (Leos Janacek).

Third concert—String quartet, op. 16 (Erich Wolfgang Korngold); two movements for two flutes, clarinet and bassoon (Jacques Ibert); Sonata for cello and piano (Arthur Honegger); Joueurs de Flute, four pieces for flute and piano, op. 27 (Albert Roussel); Tzigane for violin and piano (Maurice Ravel); Sonata for piano, oboe, clarinet and bassoon (Vittorio Rieti).

Fourth concert—String quartet (Mario Labroca); Sonata for piano (Arthur Schnabel); Merciless Beauty, three rondels for voice with accompaniment of two violins and cello (R. Vaughan Williams); Serenade, op. 24 (Arnold Schonberg).

Fifth concert—String quartet (Karol Szymanowski); Le Stagione Italiche (G. Francesco Malipiero); Angels, for six trumpets (Carl Ruggles); Sonata for piano (Igor Stravinsky); Daniel Jazz, for voice and small orchestra (Louis T. Gruenberg). The last named piece is a musical setting of a poem by Vachel Lindsay.

The three Prague concerts, all of them for orchestra, are to be given May 15, 17 and 19. The programs are: First concert—Berceuse Elegiaque (Busoni); five pieces for chamber orchestra, op. 33 (Ernst Toch); Tempo di Ballo (Roland Manuel); two pieces for piano and orchestra (Rudolf Reti); orchestra suite from the Ballet L'Arche de Noe (Vittorio Rieti); Partits (Paul Amadeus Fisk); Daemon, a symphonic poem (Rudolf Karel).

Second concert—Concerto Grosso for double orchestra (Heinrich Kaminski); six orchestra pieces (Gyorgy Kosa); Parting, a symphonic poem (Fedilio Finke); Half Time (Bohuslav Martinu); Pastoral Symphony (R. Vaughan Williams).

Third concert — Concerto Grosso, No. 2 (Ernst Krenek); Variations without theme, for piano and orchestra (G. Francesco Malipiero); Toman and the Woodnymph, a symphonic poem (Vieslav Navak); Symphonic fragments from the drama Proteus (Darius Milhaud); Symphonies for wind instruments (Igor Stravinsky); Dance Suite (Bela Bartok).

The International Society for Contemporary Music was organized informally at Salzburg in 1921. The American section was organized in the spring of 1923.

This year the American Music Committee, consisting of John Alden Carpenter, chairman; Richard Hammond, vice chairman, acting, inasmuch as Mr. Carpenter was unable to attend the meetings; Howard Hanson, Frederick Jacobi, Carlos Salzedo, Lazare Saminsky, E. Robert Schmitz and Emerson Whithorne, selected the following works to be sent to the International Jury: Kubla Kahn (Griffes), Oriental Impressions (Eichheim), Piano Sonata (Griffes), Angels (Ruggles), Sextet (Luening), Daniel Jazz (Gruenberg), Introspection, Turbulence (Marion Bauer), Trois Epigrams (Engel), Jazz Sonata (Antheil), Piano Sonata (Ornstein).

The American Section of the I. S. C. M. is affiliated with the American Music Guild, the Society for the Publication of American Music, and the League of Composers, and these societies are aiding the Music Committee in the task of unearthing suitable compositions to be performed at the European festivals. The American Section aims to act as a clearing house for American chamber music and orchestral compositions, and is striving to get American performances for works of merit, whether room is found for them on the European programs or not.

MME. SIGRID ONEGIN-PENZOLDT
Became the Mother of a Baby Boy in Berlin Last Month.

Novelty at Nice Opera

Nice.—The premiere of Alfred Kullmann's opera, Satan Vaincu, was received enthusiastically by press and public. The artists who appeared were Mary Viard, as Sabine, M. Perret in the leading tenor part, and M. Valmoral, baritone. M. Bovy conducted. The author was called to the stage by the applause several times.

Prepare Handel Opera

London, Jan. 22.—Arrangements are being completed for the production of Handel's Semele on February 10 and four following days at Cambridge. Dr. C. B. Rootham and D. D. Arundell will conduct. Amateur performances have already been given there of the Magic Flute, Fairy Queen, and the Two Sisters.

Blind Italian Tenor Gives Paris Concert

Paris.

One of the recent Paris concerts which aroused great interest was the appearance of Giuseppe Borgatti, once one of the leading Italian Wagner opera singers. He is said to have done more to popularize the operas of the German master in Italy than any other one person.

Borgatti had not sung in Paris in many years, and those who came to his recital recalling him as he was in the role of Siegfried in his prime were much moved to see the change in the appearance of the Italian tenor. He no longer has his eyesight, but his voice has lost only a little of its old warmth and lyricism.

His program consisted of varied Italian and German pieces. The spring song from the Valkyries, and the popular aria from Tosca aroused the most applause among the considerable audience.

Another concert which attracted a large gathering at the Salle Gaveau was the recital of Dmitri Smirnoff, formerly tenor of the Imperial Opera House in St. Petersburg. The Russian tenor has a big following here, for he is well known through his series of guest performances each season at the Grand Opera.

His program was made up of Russian and German songs, which he sang well. His voice did not show itself equal to the Wagner excerpts on the program. Nevertheless he was much applauded by his many compatriots in the audience, and was compelled to give a number of encores.

A number of modern compositions for the cello had their first hearing at the recital of Marguerite Chaigneau. The most interest was aroused by a Sonata in G, by A. Tcherepnine, who accompanied the recitalist in this number. Louis Gruenberg was also represented by several pieces, in which he was at the piano. His playing brought marked notice from the reviewers. Mlle. Chaigneau had some happy moments during the recital, but she is not a cellist of the finest technique.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Paderewski to Play in London

London, Jan. 22.—Ignaz Paderewski will give his only London concert in Albert Hall on the 17th of next month. He will play also in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Cardiff, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Bradford and Brighton.

Hamburg Position Offered Reiner

Berlin, Jan. 18.—It is reported here that Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, has been offered the position of general music director of the Hamburg Opera.

Holbrooke Tours in Wales

London, Jan. 22.—Josef Holbrooke is giving a series of concerts in Wales to introduce modern chamber music to the audiences of that country.

Samaroff

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York, N. Y. — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia, Penn.
VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS — STEINWAY PIANO

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO — BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER, D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York — STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

ON January 18, Frank LaForge and Ernesto Berumen gave a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett. Among the guests were Mrs. Paul D. Cravath, Mae Brower, Harriet Brower, Catherine Bacon, Gena Branscombe, Zelina Bartholomew, Albert Morris Bagby, Mlle. Yvonne de Treville, Mr. and Mrs. Paolo Gallico, Mr. and Mrs. Theo Karle, Pierre V. R. Key, Mr. and Mrs. Wasili Leps, Mrs. Charles Lathrop, Dr. and Mrs. G. P. MacNichol, Laura MacNichol, John Majeski, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Paterson, John Palmer, Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Rice, Max Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop P. Tryon, Mrs. E. J. de Coppet, Juliet de Coppet, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lhevinne, Mrs. Phillip Lewisohn, Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Ethyl Hayden, Mme. Marie Gabriel Leschetizky, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bloodgood Peck, Henriette Weber, Father W. J. Finn, John Luther Long, Winifred T. Barr, Florence Easton, Francis Maclennan, Ernest Urchs, Miss Thursby, Caroline Beebe, Mr. and Mrs. Sergei Klibansky, and Kendall Mussey. Musical selections were rendered by Mary Frances Wood, pianist, and Valeriano Gil, tenor, accompanied by Alice Vaiden Williams.

Germaine Schnitzer was the guest of honor at the second meeting of the Clarence Adler Club at Mr. Adler's New York studio on January 17. Mme. Schnitzer was unable to play for the club because of an injury to her finger, so she made a short address to the members of the club.

Some of the advanced piano pupils of Louise Robyn and the voice pupils of John T. Read gave a recital in Kimball Hall, Chicago, on January 24.

The newly organized students' orchestra of the American Conservatory will make its first public appearance on February 21 under the direction of Herbert Butler.

Nadia Boulanger, French organist, who is now in America, paid tribute to Gabriel Faure when speaking at the Davis Mannes Music School in New York regarding the composer's work and personality. Mlle. Boulanger sang to her own accompaniment at the piano an excerpt from that composer's Requiem and two songs, and played the Theme and Variations for piano.

"Because I speak of a French composer," said Mlle. Boulanger, to an invited audience of musicians, "do not think this is for propaganda purposes. I speak of Faure to ask that you will help us to give to this man, who was surely a genius and who is now dead, neglected, solitary, his rightful place.

"Faure showed us the most beautiful way to be young," she said after having given a brief outline of the master's career, analyzed some sections of his works and spoken of his constant kindness to his pupils. "Having lost the agitation of youth, he reached a serenity, a magnificent confidence in life. If we are a little depressed we need only come to his music to find beauty in life.

"Faure is always a classic. His language is the language of a few words, but these simple words appear as new in having another feeling, another meaning."

Mlle. Boulanger is in America for only a short visit. She will return to France late in February after many appearances in the East, Middle West and South.

Lorenzo Camilieri, conductor of the People's Chorus of New York, gave a lecture, under the auspices of the Board of Education of New York, on January 18 at the Natural History Museum. Mr. Camilieri spoke on Sight Reading and the Elements of Ensemble Singing, and demonstrated with the aid of a blackboard with staves, the ease with which one can learn to read music.

A recital was given at Chickering Hall, New York City, by the pupils of Alfred Y. Cornell on January 21. Those appearing were Marion Angus, Ruth McIlvaine, Albert Hewitt, Jr., John Kuebler, Viola Hailles, Earl Waldo and William Spittal, with Charles Gilbert Ross at the piano.

The final contest for young artists in cello, violin, piano, and voice for an appearance with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra as prize was held at Orchestra Hall on January 13. The winners were Richard Beidel, a pupil of Herman Felber; Robert Quick, who is studying with Richard Czerwonky of the Bush Conservatory; Rae Bernstein, a pupil of Glenn Dillard Gunn School; and Kathryn Witwer, a pupil of Richard de Young.

In the case of the male voices, the judges exercised their right to declare none of the four contestants capable, in their opinion, of appearing with the orchestra. They suggested, however that because of immaturity, further study was needed. The judges were: Earl V. Moore, Professor of Music, University of Michigan; Arne Oldberg, director of the piano department of Northwestern University School of Music; Alfred Wallenstein, cellist of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra; Jacques Gordon, concertmaster of the orchestra; Adolph Muehlmann, vocal instructor at the Glenn Dillard Gunn School; and Alexander Raab, of the piano department of the Chicago Musical College. Henry G. Weber, conductor of the Chicago Opera Company, was unable to be present, due to a changed opera schedule.

ERNESTO BERUMEN

Prominent New York Teacher Who Gave a Piano Recital in Aeolian Hall on Sunday.

Music Schools Association Adopts Code of Ethics

One of the features of the recent initial meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music and Allied Arts was the report of the Commission on Ethics, composed of Dean Peter C. Lutkin of Northwestern University School of Music; George C. Williams, President of the Ithaca Conservatory, and Francis L. York, Director of the Detroit Conservatory. The recommendations made and adopted were:

(1.) That all advertising be strictly accurate, avoiding exaggeration and flamboyance.

(2.) That no teacher in one school be approached by another school without the full knowledge and consent of the school where the teacher is already employed, and that incompetent teachers be not engaged for ulterior reasons.

(3.) That no direct attempt be made by one school to influence the students of other schools or private teachers to change, and no false hopes of advancement or promise of engagements be made to influence students.

(4.) That teachers give due credit for work done by students with a former teacher, not claiming such students as their own until at least one semester's instruction has been given.

(5.) That the granting of unearned degrees or diplomas be condemned.

(6.) That unjustifiable cutting of rates or offering of fake scholarships to increase attendance be discouraged, and the number of free or partial scholarships be restricted.

When the Association changes from one of individual membership to one of school membership, the question of enforcing the above recommendations will be dealt with. The next general meeting of the Association will be held in Rochester, N. Y., on February 28, when the question of the standardization of courses and their content will be discussed.

Dr. Kali Prosad Sarkar, a graduate from the University of Calcutta and an authority on Hindu music, was guest of honor at a reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Spiering in their New York home Sunday afternoon, January 25.

A brief program of Hindu melodies was presented by Dr. Sarkar, in which he demonstrated the unique qualities of two native instruments, the esrad and sarad. The esrad somewhat resembles the obsolete viola d'amour with its extra set of echoing strings, and the sarad is like our banjo.

Helen A. Kuhn, a graduate of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, and the A. K. Virgil School, New York City, has opened a studio in New York for instruction in piano and violin.

BONCI
VOCAL STUDIO
For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.
Knabe Piano

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

THE recent publications of Enoch & Sons, New York, include a group of ballads. Published in three ranges are All in a Lily-White Gown, from the song cycle The Philosopher and the Lady, by Easthope Martin; Journey's End, by Sidney King Russell; If I Such Wondrous Music Knew, by Manlio di Veroli, and When You Come to Me, from the Songs ot a Gypsy Trail, by Easthope Martin. The Bells of San' Clar, by H. O. Osgood, and A Kentucky Melody, by Robert Coverley, are published in keys suited to voices of high and low range. Alfred Wooler has taken his text from the Eighteenth Psalm for his sacred song, The Lord Is My Rock. It is issued in three keys.

The J. & W. Chester (London) Reference Book of Miniature Scores is an index to the publications of that publisher. The Chester series is unusually long and complete, especially in respect to chamber compositions, both classical and more recent.

Besides this list, the catalogue contains a thematic index of the symphonies and chamber music of Bach, Beethoven, Dvorak, Handel, Haydn, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, and Tschaikowsky.

The catalogue is prefaced by some informing hints by Henry J. Wood on the subject of score-reading.

Two pieces for violoncello with piano accompaniment are published by G. Schirmer. They are Arthur Kay's Troubador and Autumn Thoughts. The compositions are marked by a flowing melodiousness well fitted to the cello tone quality, and accompaniment and leading voice alike have the interest of rhythmic richness.

P. D. de Coster's Serenata, for violin and piano, also published by Schirmer, is a somewhat conventional piece in the general Spanish rhythmic style, with a middle section of smoother melody contrasting with the first staccato theme.

This house has issued also a number of new songs. Wake for the Night Is Dead, by Carl Deis, is published in high and low ranges. It is composed to the poem of Charles Algernon Swinburne, and enhances the mood of the verses with beautiful and fitting melody. Blessing, by Pearl G. Curran, is a Thanksgiving Song, religious in mood. The same composer is the author of I Know, a quaint song of love well adapted by its quaint sentiment and capricious rhythm to a place in the concert singer's encore repertory.

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Metropolitan Artists Are Pursued by Jinx

MARCELLA ROESELER is the latest victim of the jinx which has been pursuing the artists of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company this season with a number of ills in its wake. On her way home from the production of the Walkuere in Brooklyn last Tuesday evening, she left her taxicab at Central Park West to walk to her home in West 83rd street. A fall on the icy sidewalk gave her a double fracture of the leg. She is in Roosevelt Hospital.

Michael Bohnen, another recent unfortunate, dislocated his ankle during the rehearsal of Gotterdammerung last Thursday, but he was able to take his place in the cast at the revival on Saturday.

Misfortune started last month when Giovanni Martinelli fell seriously ill with typhoid. A horse stepped on the foot of Mme. Larsen-Todsen during rehearsal a short time ago, Mme. Jeritza was injured in a fall in the performance of Fedora last week, and Mme. Claussen was forced to discontinue singing in the Walkuere on Tuesday because of a sore throat.

Boston Music

(Continued from page 16.)

mended the way in which he conducts.

Rossini's Stabat Mater and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise were sung by the People's Choral Union under the direction of George Sawyer Dunham yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Claire Maentz, soprano; Abbie Conley Rice, contralto; George H. Boynton, tenor, and Frederick Millar, bass. The Boston orchestral players, led by Frank L. MacDonald, furnished the accompaniments. The organist was Harold F. Schwab, and the pianist Mildred Vinton.

The reviewers were agreed with the Herald in its statement that Mr. Durham "has worked wonders with his chorus." This writer added that the soloists, "blessed with good voices, brought vigor and intelligence to their work." Mr. Boynton sang "with a full understanding of the meaning" of the works, and with a "clear enunciation," and Mr. Millar sang the Pro Peccatus "nobly." The Globe writer was of the same opinion and added that Mr. Millar "sang both smoothly and dramatically. He should have a notable career in oratorio, perhaps also in opera."

Puccini's Suor Angelica and Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel were given by The Wheatcroft Opera Guild at the Heckscher Theatre, New York, January 24. Appearing in the costs were Mary Lothrop, Margaret Solley, Jane Eller, Katherine Kimmel, Vanette Van Sweringen, Gladys Basham, Nancy Bartlett, Mildred Pearson, Sally Litz, Marjorie Ashmead and Rose Kearney.

Ora McCord Wheatcroft was musical director and Armando Agnini of the Metropolitan Opera dramatic director. Frank Scherer was at the organ.

The Wheatcroft Opera Guild will present the same two operas at Columbia University, New York, March 21. Debussy's L'Enfante Prodige and Wolf-Ferrari's Secret of Suzanne will be given at the Heckscher Theatre February 28.

Above is a scene from the production of Suor Angelica.

THE January issue of the League of Composers' Review (published at 29 West Forty-seventh street, New York) is as interesting as the other numbers of this periodical devoted to new music which have appeared so far. Leigh Henry has written for it an article on The New Music of Spain, with Manuel de Falla as the principal figure. William J. Henderson has taken for his text the words of Berlioz: "Whatever [in harmony, melody, and modulation] produces a good effect is good, and whatever produces a bad effect is bad," and has written a paper (entitled Modern Homage to Doctrine) in which he urges that modern composers be independent of all doctrine and method except those which they create themselves.

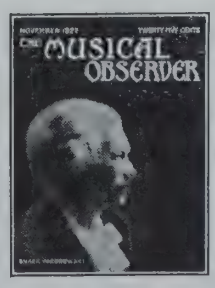
Paul Stefan is represented in the Review by an informing article on Schonberg's operas, and Roland Manuel writes about the relation of Ravel to the new French school in music. In the shorter articles Vaughan Williams and Gustave Holst are considered by Jeffrey Mark; that new enfant terrible, George Antheil, is considered by Aaron Copland; and Irving Schwerke writes on A Brazilian Rabelais, meaning Villa-Lobos.

Another new music periodical, The Franco-American Musical Society Quarterly Bulletin (published at 130 West Forty-second street), has had a new issue. It includes a biographical sketch of Albert Roussel with a chronology of his compositions, by Ely Jade; an account of the Contemporary French school of composers, by J. Herscher-Clement; an article on the Development of Hungarian Music from the year 1700, by Benedict Szabolcsi; and a paper entitled The Song Recital and the American Song, by Francis Rogers. In the last-mentioned article Mr. Rogers writes of the origins of the song recital in the United States, and closes his historical account with a consideration of the effects of radio on this form of musical art.

To Hold Third Glee Club Contest

Nine schools will be represented in the third annual inter-preparatory glee club contest in Town Hall next Sunday evening. The prize song is Brahms Suabian folk song.

EVERY READER OF "THE MUSICAL DIGEST"
SHOULD READ
"Music & Letters"
The British Musical Quarterly
"By far the most interesting Musical Quarterly in the English Language."
—Daily Telegraph, October 11th, 1924.
"The most authoritative voice at present speaking on music."—Liverpool Post, September 25th, 1924.
100 pages; 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
LONDON: 22 ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2.



This Coupon Is Worth 25c
LET'S GET ACQUAINTED!
If you are interested in a Music Magazine full of good, practical, interesting, novel reading matter and carefully selected musical compositions, mail this coupon with 25 cents and let us send you two issues of the MUSICAL OBSERVER.
THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY
NAME .....ADDRESS .....
CITY .....STATE .....

SUMMY'S CORNER
Karleton Hackett, of Chicago Evening Post says, "It is a monumental work, the fruits of many years of deep thought and of active labor both in the writing of music and in the teaching of its laws."
Harmonic Material and Its Uses
by
ADOLF WEIDIG
Price, $3.00, plus postage
Published by
Clayton F. Summy Co.
429 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Stravinsky Assists In Chamber Concert

Plays Piano and Conducts in Program of Own Works; Several Premieres.

With Igor Stravinsky conducting his own compositions, the Auxiliary Board of the New York Philharmonic Society presented a concert of that composer's chamber music in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of January 25. The assisting artists were Greta Torpadie, soprano; Colin O'More, tenor; John Barclay, bass; Hubert Linscott, bass; Carlos Salzedo, pianist; Zoltan Kurthy, harpsichordist; and an ensemble from the Philharmonic Orchestra.

The novelties were the Octuor for wind instruments, which was played for the first time in America, and Ragtime, which had never before been given an orchestral performance here. Miss Torpadie sang a group of songs from the Rossignol, and others, with the composer as accompanist. The other number was Renard, sung by the Messrs. O'More, Barclay, Frank, and Linscott, with Mr. Salzedo at the piano.

According to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, the Octuor, although not beautiful, "bears the marks of the singular genius that created the Sacre du Printemps." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune found it "a dreary little piece, imaginatively sterile, feeble in invention and of a peculiar oppressive dullness even in its 'tempo giusto' finale." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, it is "written with consummate certainty and virtuosity" and has "striking architectural qualities, but, as it seemed, little else." Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that "for the composer of Petrouchka it is poor, imitative stuff."

The World reviewer commented that the "sardonic and highly sophisticated intentions" of Ragtime "would be lost among those remote jungle echoes from Barbary Coast." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail thought it "a thing of extremely sophisticated rhythms, quite dazzling in its effects of tone color, but curiously lacking in melody, spontaneity, and elemental exuberance." Mr. Henderson considered it "a delicious bit of musical travesty." Although Mr. Downes thought it "technically brilliant," he called it "poor ragtime, often vulgar and farcically obvious."

Mr. Gilman found most of the songs "delightful music' sung by Miss Torpadie "with poetic understanding and complete artistic devotion." According to Mr. Sanborn, the difficulties of the songs "seemed to hold no terrors for the cleverness of Miss Torpadie." Mr. Henderson wrote that she "sang them with admirable interpretative skill and with that characteristic voice of hers so well suited to them."

The ensemble was congratulated for its competence by Mr. Gilman.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
Dimitri Buchowetzki production
"THE SWAN"
By FRANZ MOLNAR
With Adolphe Menjou, Francis Ford and Ricardo Cortez
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
BEBE DANIELS
In "MISS BLUEBEARD"
EMIL JANNINGS
In "THE LAST LAUGH"
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

MISS CAROLYN BEEBE
Pianist and Founder of the New York Chamber Music Society Is Appearing in the Concert of the Society Today in Aeolian Hall.

Play New Bloch Work

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Rossin were hosts at a reception given in honor of Ernest Bloch in their New York home on the evening of January 24, at which the premiere performance of Mr. Bloch's Poeme Mystique for violin and piano was given by Andre de Ribaupierre and Beryl Rubinstein.

Messrs. de Ribaupierre and Rubinstein also played Mr. Bloch's first Sonata for violin and piano, preceding which Mr. Bloch discoursed interestingly upon his concepts of music, especially as expressed in these two compositions.

Among the guests were Wilhelm Furtwaengler, Ernest Schelling, Paul Kochanski, Mr. and Mrs. Olin Downes, Willem van Hoogstraten, Kurt Schindler, Henry Hadley, Carlos Salzedo, Ethel Leginska, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Prince, Clarence Adler, Adolph Lewisohn, Mme. Charles Cahier, Walter Koons, Michael Press, Charles McBride, Theodore Spiering, and Henry T. Fleck.

New Philadelphia Orchestra

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.—A new orchestra is being formed here by the local unit of the Musicians' Protective Association. It will be called the Pennsylvania Symphony Orchestra. Joseph A. Pasternack, formerly of the Philadelphia Philharmonic Orchestra, has been invited to conduct. The first concert is scheduled for March 1. Members of the orchestra are already being recruited from the best players in the Philadelphia theatres and amusement houses. It is planned to have an orchestra supported entirely through subscription.

Harpsichordist and Tenor Appear

Mme. Frances Pelton-Jones, harpsichordist, gave her annual New York recital at the Plaza Hotel last Tuesday afternoon. She was assisted by Paul Reimers, tenor. The Sun reported that "her skill and appreciation in her performance were warmly applauded," while Mr. Reimers' singing "was marked by its usual taste and was much liked."

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
'Cheaper to Marry'
With Conrad Nagel, Lewis Stone and Marguerite de La Motte
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Charlie Hackett stopped off in New York, en route to Boston from Chicago, where the Hub residents were waiting to welcome their home-town tenor. Considerable water has flown under the bridge since this distinguished artist made his first public appearance, so near to Worcester, his birthplace.

* * *

Back from her Pacific Coast tour has come Sophie Braslau, all smiles. There is a reason. Miss Braslau has found her popularity still more pronounced, even, than formerly.

* * *

Friends of Arthur Judson sympathize with him in the death, last week, of his father.

* * *

Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok is in Florida, at her winter home at Mountain Lake.

* * *

According to President Insull, of the Chicago Opera Company, air is less useful than is money for meeting deficits.

* * *

Mrs. Carlyle Scott, the Minneapolis music impresario, paid a brief visit recently to New York. Hearing Toti Dal Monte, she decided that the coloratura soprano was eligible as one of her concert attractions for the coming season.

* * *

'Tis whispered that in addition to having had his Boston Symphony contract renewed Serge Koussevitzky is to have an associate conductor, a musician well known to the music public.

* * *

Mischa Leon is said to have tried on several masks, lately, such as a tenor might wear.

* * *

Miss Libbie Miller, the dynamic executive of National Concerts, informs Lines-o'-Newser that Rosa Ponselle is singing merrily and is in excellent health. Which will help to cheer a number of local managements which are anticipating the appearance of the Metropolitan Opera soprano before their respective audiences.

* * *

Admirers of Wilhelm Furtwaengler were loath to have that admirable conductor wave an au revoir to New York. There is consolation in the strong likelihood of his return, next season, as guest leader of the Philharmonic.

* * *

"Love me, love my music triumvirate," says Manager Charlie Foley; which means that he likes to book Geraldine Farrar and her operaites where he books Fritz Kreisler and Sergei Rachmaninoff.

* * *

All's quiet along Lake Michigan's shores; the Chicago Opera Company has gone on tour.

* * *

Maurice Rosenfeld, music editor of the Chicago Daily News, dropped into Musical Digest editorial rooms during his recent visit to New York, his eighth annual pilgrimage to the East.

* * *

One of our linotype compositors must be an admirer of Jacques Thibaud. He brought back that French violinist for his 1925-1926 tour a few months earlier than he really should have done.

* * *

An artiste due shortly to arrive in this country is Eleanor Painter. The American soprano has stirred Berlin opera-goers to a considerable pitch by her singing and acting at the Staatsoper.

* * *

Quoth Edmund Burke, with a wave of his hand, "I may have some news to announce in the sweet by and by." Then he smiled a baritonal smile which left this writer guessing.

* * *

Illness has confined W. E. Beckhard, of the New York managerial firm of Beckhard and McFarlane, to his home for the past fortnight.

* * *

A keen ear, held close to the ground, might catch the faint sound of something doing in those circles which surround the American Institute of Dramatic Art. Some news should be forthcoming before long.

* * *

Did anyone mention anything about a purposed civic light opera venture for Cleveland next summer?

* * *

If it were possible to repeat all the conversation touching music which is heard in Browne's Chop House (directly across the street from New York's Metropolitan Opera House) it would make snappy reading.

* * *

"Two persons with ideals," purred Conductor Artur Bodanzky, looking up from his luncheon-table seat and smiling at F. C. Coppicus, directly opposite. "One with a mission, the other with a commission." Not so bad for Br'er Bodanzky.

* * *

Don't be surprised if Manager Charlie Wagner announces shortly his intention to build and operate a New York theatre.

* * *

Antonio Scotti had a birthday last Sunday week. Lines-o'-Newser queried: "How old are you, Tony?" Said the baritone in reply, "I was so small when I was born that I forgot to put down the date."

* * *

Myron D. Kinsey, son of Carl Kinsey, head of the Chicago Musical College, is married . . . his bride having been Miss Lucille Woodyat. News of the ceremony, which took place last autumn, has just become known.

* * *

The latest subscriber to the Musical Digest is Suomen Mussikkilihiti, Aleksanterin Katu, 19, Helsinki, Finland. It should be remembered that Paavlo Nurmi comes from Finland.

* * *

Freddie Schang, of the Metropolitan Musical Bureau, is back at his desk after a trip through Canada. Finding the thermometer thirty degrees below zero, the resourceful Freddie used the telephone while covered warmly in his bed, and found the results wholly satisfactory.

* * *

When Richard Hageman and his good wife, Renee Thornton, give a soiree in celebration of The Musical Digest's seventy-eighth birthday Andreas de Segurola must be invited to preside as master of ceremonies . . . he certainly kept things moving merrily at Mrs. Flint' celebration.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

"I Am a Collector" See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 17 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Miguel Fleta, Spanish tenor, has completed his season with the New York Metropolitan Opera Company, and after a series of concerts in Florida will proceed to his operatic engagements abroad. In March and April he will appear in leading roles in Madrid, Siviglia, and Valencia, Spain, and in May he will sing in concert in the Isle of Majorca in his native country.

Bulletins of News

The first performance in America of the opera Giovanni Gallurese, book by Francesco D'Angelantonio, music by Italo Montemezzi, who will be present on this occasion, will take place on February 19 at the Metropolitan.

In the cast will be Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, Maria Mueller, Giovanni Martino, Giuseppe Danise, Angelo Bada, Millo Picco, Adamo Didur, Vincenzo Reschilian, Pompilio Malatesta, and Mary Bonetti. The opera has been rehearsed and will be conducted by Tullio Serafin, who supervised and conducted its first performance in Turin, Italy, in 1905.

General Manager Giulio Gatti-Casazza has confirmed the news that Carmela Ponselle, contralto, will appear as a regular member of the Metropolitan Opera Company next season. Miss Ponselle, who sang recently with her sister, Rosa, in a concert at the Metropolitan, will now have the opportunity to appear in opera on the same stage as her sister.

Portland, Ore., Feb. 6.—The cast for the premiere of the opera of Frank Patterson, The Echo, has just been announced. The American piece will be produced here at the ninth biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs on June 9, with Forrest Lamont, tenor; Marie Rappold, soprano; and Lawrence Tibbett, baritone. The Portland Symphony Orchestra will take part in the production.

Boston, Feb. 7.—Ethel Leginska, pianist, who suddenly disappeared while an audience of 2,000 persons awaited the beginning of her scheduled recital in Carnegie Hall, New York, on January 26, is still resting in the home of a friend here. She is said to have suffered a break-down from over-work. Her condition is improving, and it is believed that Miss Leginska will be able to resume her concert work in a fortnight.

Clark A. Shaw, tour manager of the Chicago Opera Company, Forrest Lamont, and Harry W. Beatty, technical director, who are jointly interested in a piece of oil property in California, were elated to receive a telegram from their partner in California that a gusher had been struck last Friday which is yielding 1,000 barrels of oil a day.

Germaine Schnitzer was unable on account of illness to give the piano program in her historical series of music of the Romantic composers in Chickering Hall, New York, on Sunday evening. Harold Henry played instead

Cincinnati Orchestra to Have Increased Schedule

CINCINNATI, Feb. 5.—It was decided yesterday at a meeting of the Board of Directors to increase the number of concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra next season. Twenty subscription pairs of programs will be listed.

This season fourteen pairs of concerts are being given under the leadership of Fritz Reiner. Besides these subscription programs the orchestra is presenting a series of twelve Sunday afternoon popular concerts and four concerts for children. Next season will be the thirty-first year of the existence of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

N.Y. Musicians' Wage Situation Unsettled

FEB 18 1925
UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

Possibilities of Pay Raise Still Being Considered.

No agreement has yet been reached by the managers and the New York orchestral musicians in regard to the request for a weekly wage increase of $25. Although representatives of the managers of the various orchestras and of the union have met and discussed the proposition, the situation is as unsettled as it was last week.

Following a meeting of the Board of Directors' committee of the Philharmonic Orchestra and representatives of Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, it was announced that two months of negotiations and then a compromise were predicted. It is understood that the amount of the increase asked for is considered merely a bargaining figure by the directors. The annual deficit of the orchestra, which is made up of one hundred members, is, even now, usually a large one.

George Engles, manager of the New York Symphony Orchestra, made it known that no settlement had been reached at the meeting with a committee from Local 802 at which the question of the proposed increase was discussed. The offices of the Philharmonic Society stated that the Board of Directors might determine their policy either today or tomorrow.

Memorial Campaign Progressing

According to a report read at a recent meeting of the Edward MacDowell Memorial Association at the home of Benjamin Prince, the Association is progressing satisfactorily in its drive for $300,000 with which to endow the Peterboro Colony.

Those organizing the movement have had cause for great encouragement in the active and immediate response to the call for committee members, workers and individual pledges to the campaign. To raise the necessary amount, the committee is being formed into fifty units, each unit to raise $6,000. Already several of the units have fully, or partly, subscribed their quota.

Carnegie Hall Will Continue as Center Of New York Music

Buyer Announces That Studios and Auditorium Will Be Kept If They Pay.

SALE IS COMPLETED

Carnegie Hall may continue indefinitely as New York's music center. Assurance has been given by Robert E. Simon, real estate operator who last week completed the deal for the purchase of Carnegie Hall and adjoining buildings, that the auditorium will not be replaced by office buildings or apartments as long as the income is sufficient to warrant the maintenance of the buildings in their present capacity.

Since the sale was reported, there has been much speculation in the city's musical circles as to the ultimate fate of the hall and as to the possibilities of the development of a new center of musical activities in New York.

It was understood that Mr. Simon had agreed to a stipulation in the contract which provided for continuance of the building as a concert hall for a period of five years or until another "suitable" auditorium was erected. However, in a notice sent last week to the tenants of Carnegie Hall, Mr. Simon said:

"You will have read in the newspapers of the sale to me of Carnegie Hall. While I am not yet in possession of the actual title to the property and shall not become your landlord in fact for thirty or sixty days, I wish to take this opportunity of assuring you that you may with tranquility disregard any talk on the part of real estate agents trying to induce you to move to the various office studio buildings in the neighborhood.

"The tradition of Carnegie Hall and its studios will be maintained by me in the future as in the past. Mr. Smith will continue to act, and any new leases which you may wish to discuss at this time can be taken up by him on my behalf even in advance of the passing of title.

"As to the report that the building may be torn down at the end of five years, or sooner if a suitable music hall is elsewhere erected, I have absolutely no plans with respect to this, nor any intentions to demolish the present buildings. If the income proves sufficient (and there is no reason why it should not) to warrant the maintenance of these buildings, I see no reason why they should not remain as they are indefinitely."

According to current rumors, the properties, which include beside the hall, the Rembrandt Apartments, the stables, and the buildings at 155, 157, and 159 West Fifty-sixth street, were held at $3,000,000, but it has not been learned just what Mr. Simon paid for them.

Welsh Chorus Manager Dead

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 2. — Trevor Evans, manager of the Rhondda Welsh Chorus, which is at present in the United States for a concert tour, was found dead of acute indigestion here in a hotel bed. He was from Porth, Wales.

Mengelberg Returns To N.Y. Philharmonic

Igor Stravinsky Is Soloist in Gotham Premiere of His Concerto.

Stravinsky's new Piano Concerto was heard here for the first time in New York when the composer played it as soloist at the concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted for the second time this season by Willem Mengelberg, in Carnegie Hall Thursday night. Mr. Mengelberg made his first appearance on the conductor's platform the night before at the students' concert, in a program consisting of Schubert's C major Symphony, Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite, and the 1812 Overture.

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that the Concerto "is undoubtedly the most important and individual composition of Stravinsky's present 'period.' In the melodic sense there is not an original idea in the score. But as the expression of an individual temperament, it is an amazing and electrifying development."

According to Deems Taylor of the World, it is "the most fumbling, featureless work that we have ever heard from Stravinsky's pen." W. J. Henderson observed in the Sun that "it has strongly marked rhythms and it contains strangely wrought phrases, acrid harmonies and curious scoring" and added that the second movement with its "simple, lyric theme" was the surprise of the evening. Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) commented on Mr. Stravinsky's statement that he will allow no other pianist to play the concerto that most pianists "would find it insuperably ugly" and "too ridiculously easy to attract a professional pianist." According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, the music "lacks integrity of character" and "essential originality," although it is "sometimes entertaining, sometimes charming in a conventional way . . . it is not a coherent work, fused and poised and consistent." Mr. Gilman added that "the instrumental color scheme is ingeniously worked out" and that, in playing it, the composer showed a "technique quite equal" to the demands of the work. Ernest Newman of the Post found that he played "with uncompromising hardness of tone" and demanded "what has become of the Stravinsky who was once a genius?"

Mr. Newman spoke of his "great pleasure" in hearing Mr. Mengelberg again, writing that "he is evidently the same rare master as of old." The Symphony and the 1812 Overture were again on the program. According to Mr. Henderson, the conductor gave a "vigorous" reading of the Schubert, and in Mr. Downes' opinion, he "glorified himself" in this reading, displaying "the extraordinary authority and orchestral control" peculiarly his, although there were "details of instrumentation that seemed unimportant and climaxes of needlessly noisy quality." Of the performance of this Symphony at the students' concert, Mr. Gilman wrote that it was a "full-veined, unaffected, and beautifully lucid reading, elaborately pointed and detailed, and unflaggingly vital and alive." Mr. Sanborn and Mr. Taylor considered it too stormy.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Tosca—with Mmes. Jeritza and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Scotti, and Malatesta; Mr. Serafin conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Gotterdammerung — with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Mueller, and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Thais (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Galli; and Messrs. Errolle and Whitehill; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Africana (evening) — with Mmes. Rethberg and Mario; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Rothier, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

FRIDAY

Traviata—with Mmes. Galli-Curci and Galli; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi and de Luca; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Tristan and Isolde (matinee) — with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen and Branzell; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci (evening) — the former with Mmes. Peralta and Alcock and Messrs. Chamlee and Ballester; the latter with Mme. Bori and Messrs. Johnson, de Luca, Tibbett, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Papi conducting in both.

MONDAY

Walkuere — with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Rethberg; and Messrs. Taucher and Whitehill; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Dai Buell Plays

The first of a series of five recitals of piano music with interpretative remarks was given at Chickering Hall, New York, January 28 by Dai Buell. The subject of the concert and talk was Humor in Music, illustrated by numbers from Bach, Haydn, Schumann, MacDowell, Grieg, Debussy, and Hadley. Miss Buell was assisted in some numbers by Ardine Mance, child pianist.

In the opinion of the Sun reviewer, Miss Buell "entered into her subject with delightful enthusiasm, her playing had fluency, tonal variety and charm and her remarks greatly interested her audience, which was of good size."

Lauri-Volpi Returns

Giacomo Lauri-Volpi returned to the Metropolitan Opera Company Tuesday night as Rodolfo in La Boheme. Maria Mueller, scheduled to appear as Mimi, was indisposed, and Frances Alda took her place. Others in the cast were Mme. Hunter and Messrs. Danise, Rothier, Picco and Malatesta. Gennaro Papi conducted.

In the opinion of the Times reviewer, Mr. Lauri-Volpi "was in fresh voice and form, singing the poet's narrative to the evident pleasure of a brilliant subscription audience." The World writer said "his voice showed the effect of a varied interval in its freshness and fluency and its obvious enthusiasm for a favorite role."

Hoogstraten in Last Concert

At his final New York appearance of the season as conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, at Carnegie Hall on January 31, Willem van Hoogstraten was presented with a wreath as a token of the appreciation of the Philharmonic Society. Myra Hess was soloist of the occasion in the Schumann Concerto. The other numbers were Weber's Oberon Overture and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Gotterdammerung Revived

Nanny Larsen-Todsen Makes Postponed Debut at Metropolitan; Taucher Is Siegfried.

An extremely large and appreciative audience heard the first Gotterdammerung given by the Metropolitan Opera Company in seven years on the afternoon of January 31. Nanny Larsen-Todsen made her long-delayed debut as Brunnhilde.

According to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, "for the coherence, intelligence and unflagging earnestness of the interpretation the praise assuredly goes to Artur Bodanzky, the conductor, and Wilhelm von Wyemetal, the stage didector." Deems Taylor of the World wrote that Mr. Bodanzky's reading of the score "was impressively vital, articulate, and balanced, far-reaching in its general conception and often absorbingly beautiful in detail."

Ernest Newman (Post) found it "in the main an admirable performance, particularly on the part of Mr. Bodanzky and the orchestra." It was thought by Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune to be "a justly conceived and vividly imagined performance of the orchestral score under Mr. Bodanzky's direction." Olin Downes (Times) wrote that on the whole his reading "had authority and dramatizing power."

This reviewer considered Mme. Larsen-Todsen's voice one "of a good deal of power. . . . She is of a dramatic disposition, and her sincerity was evident." In Mr. Gilman's opinion she showed herself "an actress of force and temperament, with a voice that is able to penetrate the orchestral tempest that in Gotterdammerung often rages." He did not find her voice of the finest quality, but wrote that "her evident genuineness of feeling, her attractive presence, her intelligence, commended her and she was cordially received."

Ernest Newman wrote that "she has not quite voice enough to be an ideal representative of the part, and her vibrato was at times trying; but she is an intelligent actress, and she makes Brunnhilde at once a dignified and a sympathetic figure." Mr. Taylor also mentioned the tremolo, but nevertheless thought her voice one of "power and wide range" and added that she has "force of personality." Mr. Henderson commented: "She looked well as the Valkyr, acted with much energy, and some evidence of stage experience and sang with unceasing vigor." This writer felt that Mme. Larsen-Todsen might well have sung with more reserve and subtlety.

Mr. Henderson considered that Curt Taucher's Siegfried "grew better as the drama progressed, and his death, while not rising to the full possibilities of the occasion, was creditable and in some moments admirable." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail found him "the most steadily commendable feature" of the performance with his impersonation "intelligent and well planned." The other reviewers did not find his work commendable.

In the opinion of Deems Taylor, "the finest individual performance of the day" was given by Michael Bohnen, "who gave an impersonation of Hagen that was superb in sustained tragic power, sinister dignity of pose and economy and mordant expressiveness of gesture. . . . His singing was as varied and expressive as his acting." Mr. Taylor continued that Friedrich Schorr was, to his mind, a close second, "both in the reality he contrived to give to the rather dim role of Gunther and the beauty of his singing." Olin Downes considered that Mr. Schorr sang with "admirable art" and that Mr. Bohnen's "came near being a great performance." According to Mr. Henderson, Mr. Schorr's Hagen was one "unrivaled" on the Metropolitan stage." Mr. Gilman agreed that these two gave the best performances of the afternoon.

Karin Branzell's "exquisite singing" was praised by Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Downes said that her Waltraute "showed again the fine fiber and color of the voice." As Mr. Henderson expressed it, "hers was a noble contribution to the afternoon, rich in vocal beauty and because of that opulent in meaning." Mr. Gilman considered that she sang "with beautiful understanding." Maria Mueller was "a sufficiently ingenuous and lyric Gutrune," according to Mr. Henderson. As Mr. Gilman reported, her Gutrune "was the comliest we have ever beheld, and she sang very well and charmingly."

Others in the cast were Gustav Schutzendorf, who was "excellent" in Mr. Gilman's opinion; Laura Robertson, Phradie Wells, Marion Telva, Merle Alcock, Henriette Wakefield, Max Bloch, and Arnold Gabor.

Holst Novelty in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, Jan. 30.—Henri Verbrugghen's program of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra last Friday evening included Holst's symphonic poem, The Planets, played for the first time here, Dvorak's Carnival Overture, and Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, for string orchestra, harpsichord, flute, and violin. Lewis Richards was the guest artist at the harpsichord, Henry C. Woempner played the flute, and Gustave Tinlot, concertmaster of the orchestra, played the violin.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones — Aeolian-Vocalion Records — Aeolian Hall, New York

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Heavy Schedule in Washington

Paul Whiteman Starts January Music; Performance of Faust the High Point of Month.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The month of January was inaugurated musically by the appearance of Paul Whiteman and his orchestra. Jessie McBride in the Times referred to this type of music as the clown in the art. At the same time she recalled that comedy often requires greater art than that which is serious.

Other concerts under Mrs. Wilson-Greene's management included appearances of Samuel Dushkin, Sergei Rachmaninoff, the New York Symphony Orchestra in a Wagner program, Toti dal Monte, and the Boston Symphony. Mr. Dushkin made especial appeal with his playing of Ravel's Tzigane. The Damrosch forces were particularly alert in the playing of Wagner. The soloist of the occasion was Bertha Morena.

Rachmaninoff's program had the unique announcement that he would not play his C sharp minor Prelude. His house was filled. In Toti dal Monte Jessie McBride found a "wide-eyed rotund little prima donna beauty, personality, a voice with depth and mellow beauty, and flights into altissimo on a scale that is perfect,—a rare songbird."

The appearance of Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston players and Willem van Hoogstraten as guest leader of the Philadelphia Orchestra were in the nature of revelations. Mr. Koussevitzky gave the impression "of the utmost refinement and reserve," but he never lost rhythmic vigor. The Philadelphians were on their mettle at their concert. This concert was arranged by T. Arthur Smith, who presented also Pablo Casals, John Charles Thomas, and Mabel Garrison to large audiences.

The reviewers agreed that if Mr. Casals did not surpass himself, he was at least as good as ever. Mr. Thomas was compelled to give many encores, and Miss Garrison filled her house despite the bad weather. Helen Fetter wrote in the Star that this was one of the best concerts of the winter and added, "A charming personality, a rich and beautiful voice used with fine skill, and scholarly interpretation make Miss Garrison an incomparable artist."

Perhaps the largest enterprise of the month was the Faust of the Washington Opera Company under Edouard Albion's direction. Some six thousand hearers filled the hardly completed Washington Auditorium, and rose, to the tune of The Star Spangled Banner, after the second act, to honor the arrival of the President and Mrs. Coolidge. Mr. Chaliapin, in all his flaming Mephistophelian red, was presented in the "Court box," and there were dedicatory and complimentary speeches from the stage.

Artistically the performance ranked high in the achievements of the company. The orchestra under Jacques Samassoud was the best yet presented, and the chorus had the vitality and effectiveness always notable in these productions. Chaliapin dominated the cast rather unduly, but it would be as hard to subordinate his personality and art as to conceal his towering physical stature.

Kate Scott Brooks of the Herald thought that Ralph Errolle, as Faust, showed "a tenor of pure lyric quality and abundant temperament," and "Thalia Sabanieva was a beautiful Marguerite, ideal in voice and personality. In the superb finish her voice rose gloriously . . . Ivan Ivantzoff as Valentine was a surprise, and a pleasant one, with a rich, vibrant voice of good cultivation."

The writer in the Post thought Chaliapin "the very devil of a fellow . . . He was in fine voice and proved himself a consummate actor." "Errolle was a youthful and ardent Faust," said this reviewer, "and his ringing high notes poured out in floods of song. As an actor his talents were most apparent and he was always a sincere and intelligent artist. Winsome Sabanieva was an appealing Marguerite, with a fresh lyric soprano of surprising volume at its top." Rose Pollio as Siebel, Albert Shefferman as Wagner, and Ruth McIlwain as Martha, added to the opera's success.

* * *

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's Musical Mornings have attracted consistently large audiences. Her successive pairs of artists during January were Donna Ortensia and Edward Johnson, the latter of whom had an unusual ovation; Mary Carlisle Howe and Anne Hull in two-piano numbers on the same morning with John Barclay; Marie Sundelius and Socrate Barozzi, and Oscar Seagle with Mlle. Odette Le Fontenay.

* * *

Offerings under the auspices of the Washington Society of Fine Arts included a lecture-recital on the Romantic Composers, by Ralph Leopold; the monthly evening concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra with explanatory remarks by Mr. Damrosch, in which Dvorak's Third Symphony was included; and the first concert of the series of the Flonzaley Quartet.

The City Music League of New York sent to Washington the Duchesse de Richelieu and Salvatore de Stefano in joint recital.

The writer in the Star praised both singer and harpist. She regretted that "the audience seemed to regard the concert as a social function rather than an occasion for the presentation of beautiful music."

An auspicious debut was made by the Washington Chamber Music Ensemble. The National String Quartet, composed of Henri Sokolov, Max Pugatsky, Samuel Feldman and Richard Lorleberg, played Beethoven's Quartet a A, Opus 18, with marked success. Mrs. Beach's Theme and Variations for String Quartet and Flute was given a faithful reading, with Mr. Arcaro in the added part, and Dvorak's Dumky Trio, with Mr. La Salle Spier at the piano, brought the concert to a close in a grateful note of moody, poetic rhapsody.

M. G. S.

MME. MARIA CARRERAS

Italian Pianist, Praised by Reviewers Once More in Her Recital Appearance in New York Last Thursday Afternoon.

Schmitz Plays on Coast

San Francisco, Jan. 31.—E. Robert Schmitz gave a piano recital here on the twenty-second. The comments were all favorable, the Examiner reporting: "He has grown in authority since he was with us last year." The Call commentator declared, "He is a pioneer protagonist of the modern schools and must be congratulated upon the courage and skill with which he accomplishes his self-imposed task," and the Chronicle writer reported that this "was a brilliant recital from a pianist who has the power of holding one's interest simultaneously in the technical, intellectual and emotional values of music." M. G. C.

Pottsville to Have Orchestra

Pottsville, Pa., Feb. 3.—After a lapse of nine years Pottsville will again have a symphony orchestra. Frederick E. Hahn of the Zeckwer-Hahn Musical Academy of Philadelphia will be the conductor. First rehearsals of the orchestra have been held, and a public concert is planned to be given soon.

Erna Rubinstein Is Soloist With Hertz

Maier and Pattison Appear in Two-Piano Recital; Maria Ivogun Sings.

San Francisco, Jan. 31.—Erna Rubinstein was the soloist last Friday at the regular concert of the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Alfred Hertz. Miss Rubinstein played the Mendelssohn Concerto. The other numbers were the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven and the Don Juan of Strauss.

Redfern Mason of the Examiner felt this was "a musical treat by the Symphony" and that Miss Rubinstein had "the audacity of youth—distinction will come later." W. F. E. of the Herald wrote that "Miss Rubinstein played with admirable clarity of intonation," and that the rest of the program "was one of the best balanced and most enjoyable of the season." Ray C. B. Brown of the Chronicle praised the soloist, saying, "Her tone, suave and beautiful, seems as yet undeveloped to its full rondure." He went on to say, nevertheless, that "what one admired especially in her reading of the concerto was the zest and vitality."

Guy Maier and Lee Pattison gave a two-piano recital Sunday afternoon. Ray C. Brown in the Chronicle remarked that Messrs. Maier and Pattison seem best in recital, blending their individual characteristics in a manner which indicates that each is an artist. In the Examiner, Redfern Mason felt that "the two artists are delightful foils to each other and they have convinced an incredulous world that the piano duet is not an outmoded form, but in hands of men who are masters of their craft it can give rare pleasure to the most exacting." Mollie Merrick in the Bulletin thought that "no greater example of two-piano art exists than these two artists."

Maria Ivogun gave a recital Monday evening, January 26, and was received enthusiastically by the big audience. In the Call, Charles Woodman spoke of her as having "perfect intonation, particularly with her high notes; no wonder she has been called Europe's greatest coloratura soprano." Mr. Mason of the Examiner felt that although Mme. Ivogun is called a coloratura, "she had no limitations which usually accompany the type; she has great dramatic depth."

Mr. Elliot of the Herald wrote that "in presence, in voice and in artistry Mme. Ivogun is the ideal concert singer"; and in the Chronicle Mr. Brown called her the "greatest coloratura of our day."

M. J. C.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 17

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Men and Music

Women in music—American women—have served as subject matter for editorials in various issues of The Musical Digest. Their discernment, their initiative, their untiring and devoted efforts to promote the art have been commented upon; and their success in bringing about a betterment of conditions calculated to add to the welfare of those fortunate enough to come under music's influence.

The women of our country were responsible for interesting those amongst the men who may be regarded as pioneer concert and opera patrons. It was the women who swung into the line of march for the financial support required those members of the stronger sex who were polite enough, first, to listen and then to act.

Years have passed since those early days when business and other offices were invaded by those who at the time had no vote. Times have changed. No longer does the masculine element hold back when someone mentions music. It charges, on innumerable occasions, with the vigor of a football rush line, and carries through with the completeness of a well swung golf-club.

Is it a wonder that our men of affairs have begun, of their own accord, to find in music something worth their time and thoughts? By no means. Rather is it an awakening of a heretofore dormant consciousness . . . followed by a degree of understanding and appreciation of an art which carries a form of message no other art can.

The men of our country are rallying in steadily increasing numbers to the cause of good music, well interpreted. They are sufficient, and widely enough scattered, to form an array which may be contemplated as a guaranty of the art's future in these United States of America.

The men have at length joined forces with the women in the furtherance of what has been discovered to aid in happiness and good citizenship, as well as to promote culture. Credit the women for having gotten the men started; but now that the men are proceeding on their own accounts it is pertinent to bestow a recognition justly due.

Modern Compositions

The classics must forever form the substance of the world's music literature. Purity of line and form are as imperative to any art as aristocracy of content and design. The composer iconoclastically inclined is rarely more than a violator of established formulas recognized as necessary for the rearing of an enduring structure. So, by all means, let there be a sufficiency of the classics in music, to meet whatever are the needs.

But with them there should attend such modernism in music composition as liberalism permits. Progress cannot ensue by adhering unswervingly to procedure which has gone before. In the arts as in the sciences, open-mindedness should prevail. And granting a hearing to some composition by a modern musician is necessary, even where extremist methods prevail.

In the symphony orchestra field there is much material which ought to have its chance. To deny hearings of new modern works because of their dissimilarity to great works that have gone before surely is not fair. There is no danger attached to any such plan. What is inferior will not prevail. It is the creative musician, using a new idiom, who may perhaps have something new to say. Given his chance, his product must inevitably find its true level, and the listening public must, in every such experience, profit accordingly.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

WILLEM MENGELBERG has returned for his season in New York. He is somewhat slimmer than he has been in the past, but that is all the change in him which one could notice at his first appearance. Although his girth is diminished, his genius remains great.

To certain tastes and judgments Mr. Mengelberg's conducting is incomparable. His orchestral body has a clarity and transparency which reveal in every score music which often even the experienced listener has never heard before.

He accomplishes this lucidity in a number of ways. Mr. Mengelberg insists on a precision and unity of playing which makes the instrumental groups sound as one man. One can rarely hear under his leadership two unison trumpets, or oboe doubled with strings, make ragged entrances which betray the number of instruments which are playing. This unity is with him more than an idea,—it is a fact. Even the heaviest of his brass instruments hit right on the beat, and do not drag.

BESIDES, there is Mr. Mengelberg's unerring rhythm. Through all changes of pace his time is marked with a regularity and firmness which carry his entire orchestra through whatever tempi he may desire.

There are other conductors not strange to New York who have not this control; who allow themselves to be carried into wrong accelerandi when the music demands a swift, metronomic, even pace; who change from one tempo to another by cutting the length of beats so precipitously that one part of the orchestra is left to scurry after the leader, dropping beats here and there at the end of measures, while other choirs, newly entered on the fresh beat, run ahead by themselves.

The Amsterdam leader's greatest skill, probably, is the infinite scale of dynamics which he is able to draw from his musicians. It is to this that the clarity of his ensembles is due. There are few things more thrilling in music than to observe the manner in which he restrains a heavy brass passage to the true mezzo-forte which the composer intends while he draws out the more important melody which is being sung in lightly scored woodwinds.

NEVERTHELESS even Mr. Mengelberg's heartiest admirers can feel little besides disappointment at the programs which have been announced for his early concerts. Novelties of importance or interest are entirely too few. In his third program he repeated Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which Mr. Furtwangler played very well only a few weeks previously. Also he is repeating Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, which has been heard very much in recent seasons, and he is giving disproportionate attention to such over-familiar pieces as Chabrier's Espagna, Tschaikowsky's Overture 1812, and Beethoven's Leonore Overture.

The leaven needs a little loafing.

INCIDENTALLY the performances of the 1812 Overture last week were funny. The score includes staves for Banda ad Libitum in the climactic final measure. Mr. Mengelberg took Tschaikowsky at his word, and increased the brass parts with an organ and nine extra wind players, standing up and with the bells of their instruments pointed high in the air, who blew with all their might.

It does not matter that the performance was unusually perfect. The device was cheap (in taste, although it cost the Philharmonic money for added players) and unnecessary.

The conductor took at least one other liberty with Tschaikowsky's score which was in excellent taste. In the nineteenth measure, where that ingenious cello and viola sextet reaches a fortissimo, and enters a dialogue with the woodwinds, he used his entire cello and viola groups, instead of six solo instruments (four cellos and two violas) as the score indicates.

The addition of the extra instruments was done imperceptibly, however, and the strength attained was probably much nearer to what the composer actually desired than the six instruments called for probably would accomplish.

THIS feat of re-orchestration calls to mind the unusually clever arrangement by Maurice Ravel of Moussorgsky's piano work, Pictures at an Exhibition, which Serge Koussevitzy has included on a number of the programs of the Boston Symphony this season.

Orchestration has traveled a long way since Beethoven set his bull fiddles to prancing in the Eroica. It was particularly interesting to hear Ravel use the trumpet in the Goldenburg and Schmuyle episode more as a swift light wood instrument than as a brass. It was hard work for the solo trumpet, but the Boston player did beautifully.

An interesting development in orchestration has been that of the mixing of tone qualities in unison. In Strauss one finds many themes given to solo instruments to which they are so perfectly fitted by their nature that it would be ineffective to transfer them elsewhere. Now we find composers showing the same minute discrimination in regard to mixed orchestration. Hindemith doubles piccolo and bassoon for special effect (not ludicrously either); Stravinsky ingeniously imitates the tones of two distinct and separate street organs by clever handling of his woodwinds; and Ravel paints the most delicate of colors by combinations of muted trumpet, English horn, clarinet, oboe, flute, and piccolo.

THE tones of the various orchestral instruments can frequently be made to blend and interchange beautifully with skillful handling. In the Domestic Symphony Strauss has written at one point a descending figure on the G string of his violins, doubled with English horn, which goes as low as an F sharp, and then rises again. Naturally the fiddles cannot play below G, but if the English horn is properly welled out on the F sharp, which it must take alone, one is not aware that the strings have broken off at any point in the passage.

I have been surprised more than once to hear horns in their middle range hand over a theme to violoncellos, played with plenty of vibrato, in such a way that for a few moments they may sound like a single instrument. And then again it is astonishing to discover how close is the tone quality of a muted trumpet played very quietly just above the middle C to the luscious alto timbre of the flute in the same range.

All of which reminds one of the reply of Berlioz, when he was asked what was his favorite instrument. "The orchestra," he said.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

"I Am a Collector"

So Declares Rudolf Laubenthal, Whose Music Is the Expression of What He Gathers in Experience and the Other Arts.

by ALICE MASON

SO long as the art of song is expounded by the sort of mind which Rudolf Laubenthal employs in the skirmishes of life, the bogey of the excessive separation of the arts may be disregarded. For it is in the masterpieces of literature that Mr. Laubenthal finds his recreation from the concert and opera platform; not merely in an occasional casual glimpsing at a book during a train ride, but for a frequent hour of relaxation as well as inspiration to continue the daily toil. To see him, however, is to dispel any gloomy conception one may have of hard work. Rather it is to learn that a lively interest in the wonders of this world will keep one awake and happy.

From the windows of Mr. Laubenthal's hotel drawing room, looking through the blue haze of a moist morning over the roofs, one can see in the distance the lake, like some irregular, horizontal mirror, catching and concentrating the deeper tones of a gray-blue sky. From the park drive come the incessant crackling of cord tires on the pavement and the muffled sounds of the city below us.

Turning from the window, we spoke of the view—of painting—and, inevitably, of books.

"I am a collector," said Mr. Laubenthal, "although the volume you have in your hand is not one of prepossessing appearance. My literary treasures are kept together at my home in Berlin. Perhaps I should say, my pet volumes; because after all the real value is inside the covers, and back of the print. But the latter we store away in our minds as we are able, and if our memory is good, we keep there our best library." He smiled.

"However, as with paintings or engravings (I am especially fond of them and of woodcuts), I grasp them whenever I have the opportunity." He laughed with a hint of the triumphant. "I delight in fine wrappings and rare editions. It is not so different, I suppose, from a woman's interest in a vase of flowers, or antique jewelry. I should like you to see a special binding I have had made; there is not a sample here." He glanced hastily about the room. "Living so much of the time away from Berlin I must carry some with me, but very few of the hoarded three thousand, for fear of losing them. . . . Oh, no, I do not worry about them, what would be the use of having them if they were not pure delight? Simply, one cannot be bothered looking after things like that on visits or traveling.

"It is during these sojourns abroad that I am able to revitalize my outlook, and, in the great museums of the world, see the results of the progress of art through the different channels of civilization. All this helps my singing—I hope it does not sound pompous to say so," he added apologetically.

"And you know," said he with the air of one whispering a confidence, "just as some people rush gleefully to the movies for a spare hour, when I can run up there I go into the Metropolitan Museum or the Museum of Natural History and get a tremendous kick out of it! That Egyptian collection for instance is wonderful!" —his expression was very like that of a small boy recollecting a Christmas tree.

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL

"It is necessary that we have these things to keep us out of ruts," he continued, "singing some of our roles so many times. Although even in the German opera I must be ready with quite a number. And Wagner alone is very satisfying to sing. His genius has not been surpassed, it shines ever brilliantly." . . . For readers who do not follow the doings at the Metropolitan closely, it may be proper to remind them that Mr. Laubenthal was expressly sought last year for the singing of German tenor roles.

His home opera house is in Berlin, where he will be again before many months. Between that time and his present season at the New York house there will be what he calls the "pleasant contrast" of a recital tour, and "I do not know positively, but I hope there will be included a South American visit"—new worlds to be conquered by insatiable curiosity. It seems Mrs. Laubenthal aids and abets this catholicity of program.

Italian opera is also in Mr. Laubenthal's repertoire, in fact he admits a great affection for it.

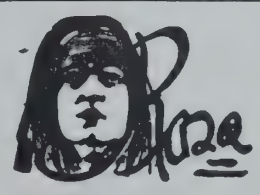
Speaking of his work, the singer recounted an incident that took place in Berlin not long ago. Mr. Laubenthal was singing the title role in Meyerbeer's Prophete, at the Royal Opera. He had to make an impressive entrance on horseback, followed by the "populace," a chorus of men and women. His mount was a handsome white animal named Peter. Now Peter was something of an actor himself, and like most modernists, had added movie technique to his other accomplishments. But on the afternoon of the day we are talking about Peter had filled an engagement in the studio, so that in the evening, either because he got his cues mixed, or because his nerves were on edge and the orchestra excited him to a display of temperament, he nearly stopped the opera.

He let the scene progress until he and his long-robed rider were at the center of the stage, amid the crowd of choristers. Suddenly with a baritone snort and a wild look at the Royal box he reared on his hind legs and pawed the air in front of him. He rose straighter and straighter, until his rider feared he would lose his balance and take them both over backwards. At his first fling into the air the crowd on the stage dispersed. Men and women rushed from the side of Peter and Prophete to the protecting wings. Fortunately Mr. Laubenthal is a horseman, and by dint of sheer strength and will-power forced the excited animal down and kept him there after a short struggle and some coaxing. It was an anxious moment, and embarrassed the dramatic thread of the performance considerably; but the indulgence of a thrilled audience and the concentration of a harassed company carried the rest of the evening to a satisfactory close.

Mr. Laubenthal illustrated the humor of the situation by playing a cadenza on the piano. "So you play the piano?" I asked. "Yes, a little, and the violin sometimes. And I have a fine reproducing-piano, with records by Busoni, Carreno and other great artists. The invention is almost too wonderful—reproducing even their mistakes," he laughed, "that is, mistakes of expression which they would not themselves repeat."

The conversation returned to books and prints, old ones, done in France and Germany. "Ah, and the Japanese wood-cuts are especially interesting. I was overjoyed to receive from a Japanese lady, Mme. Chikusa, one three hundred years old. . . . There is something about Oriental art, a naive simplicity of line and a sophisticated perfection of finish, that is baffling. It makes one feel young—they have been at it so long. Then they have such an appreciation of flowers. Did you by any chance get to the flower show held recently by the New York Chrysanthemum Society and others?"

I admitted that I was among the hundred thousand, and saw the orchids, which Mr. Laubenthal calls in poetic, scarcely translatable language, "animate, like delicate, fluttering butterflies." . . . And these are some of the objects that thrill a collector, who translates his appreciation into songs about one thing or another.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

"In our opinion one of the greatest contraltos." —Ohio State Journal, October 11, 1924

MERLE ALCOCK

"A great American singer"

(Cleveland Plain Dealer), Dec. 12, 1924

Contralto

with

Metropolitan and Ravinia Park Opera Companies

OPERA 1924-1925

"Merle Alcock (as Cieca in La Gioconda) deserves particularly hearty congratulations. Mrs. Alcock had her real opportunity and test and acquitted herself nobly. She was most effective, giving a performance that was remarkable for its sincerity; making of the blind mother a living and genuinely tragic figure." (New York World.) Nov. 9, 1924.

"Merle Alcock's version of the old blind woman had moving sincerity and she sang with fine tone quality. (New York American.) Nov. 9 1924.

"The blind woman has had no better presentation in Philadelphia and was sung with a fine tone quality and phrasing by Merle Alcock." (Philadelphia Inquirer.) Dec. 10, 1924.

"Merle Alcock rich of voice and a fine exemplar for the part of La Cieca." (Philadelphia Record.) Dec. 10, 1924.

"One of the finest contraltos now to be heard." (Chicago Daily Journal.) July 8, 1924.

"A Regal appearance as Ortrud." (Chicago Daily News.) August 21, 1924.

"Voice of luscious quality and she has the physical attributes that go to make the part of Maddelena alluring." (Chicago Journal of Commerce.) July 7, 1924.

"Merle Alcock looked indeed a Countess in Andrea Chenier." (Chicago Daily News.) July 14, 1924.

"Merle Alcock's exceptionally beautiful voice as Suzuki . . ." (Chicago Journal.) July 3, 1924.

"Merle Alcock sang splendidly as Suzuki." (Chicago Journal of Commerce.) July 3, 1924.

CONCERT 1924-1925

"In our opinion one of the greatest contraltos." (Ohio State Journal.) Oct. 11, 1924.

"Her artistry is of the highest order." (Toledo Times.) Oct. 9, 1924.

"Hers is a fresh voice, brilliant, in quality—in the upper range and vibrant in the lower." (Denver Post.) Oct. 17, 1924.

"She was in glorious voice and achieved a real triumph. Her rich and splendidly resonant voice is not only beautiful in quality, it is also highly individual in its timbre. Furthermore it is produced with ease and certainty that mark a finished art. A great American singer. There was great enthusiasm." (Cleveland Plain Dealer.) Dec. 12, 1924.

"Miss Alcock repeated former successes in Cleveland. She has a fine voice of velvety texture and she uses it to advantage. Also her stunning personal appearance is no disadvantage." (Cleveland News.) Dec. 12, 1924.

"Magnificent handling of a voice, rich in all its registers and refreshingly free from throaty quality, unfortunately prevalent in so many contraltos. Not often is it granted an audience to hear such perfect diction." (Cleveland Times.) Dec. 12, 1924.

"A favorite with Ravinia patrons and she should be for not only has she a lovely voice but she can sing their language for her fellow countrymen so that they can appreciate its unrivaled beauties in song." (Chicago Herald Examiner.) July 24, 1924.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

MANAGEMENT:

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, INC.

250 WEST 57TH ST., NEW YORK CITY

Victor Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

THE SITUATION touching New York's concert auditoriums has reached a vital stage. Now that Carnegie Hall has been sold and consigned, though the date is five years hence, to oblivion, and with the availableness of Aeolian Hall not assured to the public beyond another year or so, something will have to be done to insure the music future of the national metropolis. For it is obvious that there can be no future without adequate places in which music may be interpreted.

The situation is one which has for long been threatening. Those close to music activities in New York have known for several years that Carnegie Hall's days were numbered; that the Aeolian Company could not afford to carry on its hall indefinitely; that some move or moves would be necessary to provide, and in permanent fashion, suitable auditoriums in which symphony and choral concerts might properly be given, and recitals, and chamber music.

Then there has been the frequent reference to a new Metropolitan Opera House.

INCREASED land values and rentals in floor space, have proved a bugaboo to anyone at all interested in a concert auditorium. There has been, as there always will be, the difficulty —along with the many others attached to a concert auditorium—of the briefness of a season. Three months of comparative idleness confront the average auditorium designed primarily for music affairs. So the problem has not offered easy solution.

It would seem that the one way out will be through the public spirit of citizens who recognize in music a civic asset that must be fostered. That spirit will eventually supply the funds required to purchase or lease the land for a site, and to build an edifice in which music may be played and sung.

The outcome may be through several channels or through one. If it be the former there will ensue, no doubt, two concert halls. If the latter, then a music center might be brought about . . . along lines which already have been suggested.

PRIOR to the combining of the National Symphony with the Philharmonic the directors of the latter society had considered erecting their own auditorium. Measures had even gone so far as considering a plot of ground; and there was some discussion also of the character of the edifice to be constructed.

It would facilitate matters if there might be a concentration of New York's music interests in providing a place fitted to house everything in the way of music performances; and that means, naturally, a common center.

With the passing of Aeolian Hall—which may come sooner than some anticipate—the New York Symphony will be without a home; for its Sunday afternoon programs sometimes conflict with those of the Philharmonic, which have so long taken place in Carnegie Hall that there scarcely is available all the time required for the New York Symphony in that auditorium.

Therefore, some hall of adequate size and suitableness, rightly situated, is needed for the Flagler-Damrosch institution.

WHAT APPEARS to be the ideal solution to solving the housing problem for New York concerts is, therefore, the obtaining of just the right piece of land and the erecting of an edifice that will serve in all ways the purposes so sorely needed.

The first obstacle is the site. Where is the spot? And, once decided as the best in the matter of centralization, can it be purchased? Cost is a factor, and a vital one. Thereafter, the various ideas of different organizations would have to be merged . . . a matter by no means simple.

If the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company were to express a willingness to cooperate in any such undertaking there would be presented further obstacles wholly natural in the circumstances. Operatic requirements are of a very specific character, and despite the manifest shortcomings of the present Metropolitan Opera House it does possess distinct advantages. On that account any plan which touches on the abandonment of the present quarters would have to present elements of marked superiority to what now obtains at Broadway and Thirty-ninth street . . . and one of those elements has to do with the coin of the realm.

IDEALISTS enthuse over a music-housing center project. They do not all see clearly, however, the difficulty of acquiring a site sufficient in size and properly located for so vast an enterprise. Nor the huge cost it would involve.

There has been considerable random talk about what "ought to be done" by the wealthy persons who, of course, can do whatever they set out materially to accomplish. At the same time one must take into consideration the extent of the investment —which could not be short of more millions of dollars than many of those idealists realize.

Even so brief an outlined analysis of the situation discloses how serious it really is. I have no apprehensiveness that it will not be successfully met; New York must and will have its music, and adequate places wherein it may be given will come. Still it will not be disposed of without causing grave and anxious moments to those to whom the public will eventually be indebted for what is done.

Patience, wisdom, and financial generosity will solve the problem. If by some bit of good fortune there might ensue a music housing-center—and it were to arise, on a large parcel of land, architecturally beautiful—then New York would have occasion to feel proud.

The city might find in such a center the stimulus necessary to a more complete appreciation of its music blessings. And if ever it were to happen, New York might have something in artistic beauty, as well as in fully modernized utility, comparable with the finest anywhere in the world.

SINCE THE matter seems peculiarly pertinent, it were well to ponder somewhat the obligation which the great majority of the music public (not to mention many of the musicians themselves) owe to the men and women who contribute generously and constantly to maintain so much of the music which is made available.

Would the symphony orchestras be possible without their support?

No.

Would some of our fine chamber music organizations go on if private contributions were suddenly to be withdrawn?

No.

How long could the Chicago Opera Company have continued save for the financial aid given it during its formative period—and even now, when much of its pecuniary assistance comes from public-spirited citizens?

Did the Metropolitan Opera Company have an easy time of it during the early years of its existence? And who were the persons who furnished money when it was imperative?

Finally, how numerous are the worthy music projects (in all parts of the country) which are financed by unselfish and constructive men and women?

They are many, and they constitute much of the backbone of the nation's music fabric.

FAIRNESS of attitude in such matters as the foregoing, and a spirit of appreciation should be forthcoming from those who benefit through the public-spiritedness of these citizens.

Less of accepting what is made available as one's due, and more of gratitude would seem to be fitting. For without all these music opportunities the United States would not be all it now is. No misunderstanding should exist concerning the influence exerted upon the life of the country by our music fabric. It is definite; it is vital; it is becoming more and more necessary.

All kinds of every-day activity is helped by music: by those who create and who interpret it; by those who participate in it in some fashion; by those who teach some branch of music to others; and by those who study music.

Give the affluent citizens who make much of our music possible the credit which is theirs. In the meantime, those who can contribute something themselves—for there are not a few ways wherein those lacking much means can contribute—should do so. A word, some deed, can help. Let the spirit be what it should be; then an all-sided movement may gradually come which will bring about the sense of appreciation which apparently is lacking.

YEARS AGO an American tenor, Ellison Van Hoose, was well and favorably known to many people. At one time he was a concert favorite; and his achievements in opera were not insignificant, either.

I received the other day a letter from Van Hoose. He lives in Houston, down in the vast State of Texas where the Texas Rangers were recently passed into history, by legislative action.

Van Hoose sings publicly very little these days, but he is not musically inactive because of that fact. On the contrary he is busy teaching others how to sing, and, according to reports, successfully busy.

Five years ago this musician organized a chorus and, with the aid of local singers as principals, gave The Messiah. The latest two performances of that oratorio attracted audiences larger than could be comfortably accommodated; and Gounod's Redemption is to be given at Easter time.

So able a journalist as Ellen Douglas MacCorquodale, writing in the Houston Chronicle in two recent issues of that newspaper, recognized the quality of those Messiah performances—and Miss MacCorquodale is not the one to bestow credit (even for a home-town effort) which has not been earned.

Van Hoose conducts the Mendelssohn Club of Beaumont, which is made up exclusively of women, and the Kiwanis Glee Club of Houston. All of which demonstrates what may be done for the music good of a community by a musician who steps from public solo work to a field where there is great need for an experienced and conscientious leader.

IT was very pleasant to read that the work of Albert Morris Bagby had been recognized by New York University and that the officials of that institution had decided to award him the honorary degree of Master of Arts in recognition of the work he has accomplished during the past thirty-four years in elevating the music taste of New York.

In that period of time three hundred audiences of ever-increasing size and musical discrimination have gathered in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria to hear the morning programs which Mr. Bagby has arranged. Beginning at a time when music was to some extent regarded merely as a luxury and a means of social ostentation, this pioneer has aided in winning it its true place as a personal and spiritual necessity to everyone . . . including those whom fortune and hard work have blessed with an abundance of the world's goods. For years the Bagby series have had as great a purely musical significance as most courses of concerts anywhere, whether in public auditoriums or in the more confined spaces of hotel halls.

THE universities in New York, and in the rest of the United States also, have not been too generous in recognizing and honoring musicians of leading rank. In Europe artists are apt to be more frequently paid homage, both by civil governments and by more private institutions, such as academies and universities.

It is true that Paderewski was awarded a degree by Columbia University not long ago, but he probably was honored more for his political achievements than for what he has done in a music way. Frederick Stock and Ossip Gabrilowitsch have also lately been given degrees, and I believe that Walter Damrosch and Leopold Stokowski are honorary doctors . . . but the number of the elect is not as great as it might be or should be, when one considers what the work of music artists means to the public.

For my part I would gladly turn more than one corner to see John McCormack arrayed in cap and gown . . . or Willem Mengelberg, or Giulio Gatti-Casazza.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Max Rosen

After an absence of nearly four years, Max Rosen returned to the New York concert stage in his violin recital at Carnegie Hall last Tuesday night. As the Sun writer put it, "throughout his recital Mr. Rosen maintained a confident grasp of his subjects. He played with a firm, full tone of translucent quality and impeccable intonation. His bowing was exceptionally smooth and finished." This reviewer remarked, however, that his readings "were not remarkable for poetic and emotional qualities."

The Herald Tribune reporter found that "his playing seemed to have gained notably in breadth of tone and maturity of style. A tone of ample size and rich and fluent quality, barring a few drier spots in double stops and one or two moments verging on wiriness, devotion to the pitch and technical brilliance marked his performance." Alison Smith (World) observed that Mr. Rosen "displayed the smooth tone and the security of interpretation with which he has been identified."

According to Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail his playing "fluctuated decidedly in its merits. His left hand showed notable technical cunning, but his bowing suffered from disturbing mannerisms." The Times referred to Mr. Rosen's new accompanist, Richard Wilens, who made his first American appearance, as an "able pianist." Other writers commended his work.

Fernand Francell

A French tenor from the Opera Comique sang at Town Hall, New York, last Tuesday evening "with marked intelligence and artistry," according to F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune). His program was composed entirely of French songs, except for Giordani's Caro mio ben.

In the words of the Sun reviewer, M. Francell's "delivery was above the average in portrayal of mood, use of diction and ability to convey the substance of songs to his auditors." Yet this writer said that his voice "has evidently undergone good service and his use of it not the best."

In the Times. the reviewer commented that "he showed what can be done by beautiful diction, phrasing and intellectual interpretation to overcome the handicap of a voice suffering from tremolo." According to the World, "his voice is occasionally threadbare in texture, the result obviously of a strain which affects even its intonation, but it revealed for the most part steadfast vigor and richness." Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail said that at first his "white, reedy and intractable tones told heavily against him, while his delivery lacked interest and variety. He did, however, phrase like an artist." In the later numbers, added Mr. Peyser, he exhibited "a grace, sprightliness and finish of delivery, as well as the intimate charm of manner that recalled Clement."

Chamber Music Society

Deems Taylor's new work, Portrait of a Lady, was given its first performance by the New York Chamber Music Society last Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall. The organization includes Carolyn Beebe, piano, Anselm Fortier, double bass, the New York String Quartet, together with Lamar Stringfield, Bruno Labate, Gustave Langenus, Benjamin Kohon, and Bruno Jaenicke.

According to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, Mr. Taylor's work is "a singularly delightful piece of music . . . he has written music of delicate, imaginative charm and mellifluous beauty." W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that "whatever Mr. Taylor writes has fluent and clearly defined melody and rich harmonization. His treatment of instruments is also happy and frequently brilliant." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, the rhapsody "is substantially composed, and ranks with the best writing we have had thus far from Mr. Taylor."

Ernest Newman (Post) remarked that he "evidently has an excellent ear for instrumental timbres; his colors always blend beautifully, and yet retain the individuality that is the charm of chamber music. The rhapsody is delicately made and finely balance." As Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune put it, the "distinction" of Mr. Taylor's music, "is in its apparent spontaneity" and lauded his "flexibility, richness and expressiveness."

Other numbers played were Schubert's Octet in F, a Divertimento by Paul Juon, and Novak's piano quintet in A minor. Mr. Gilman wrote that Miss Beebe's "excellent company . . . played Mr. Taylor's piece with lucidity" and with poetic effect. Deems Taylor of the World said they played with "rhythmic vitality, tonal brilliance, and fine musicianship." Both Mr. Sanborn and Mr. Newman thought that they played admirably, but Mr. Henderson thought the performance "lacked finish."

James Woodside Sings

James Woodside, baritone, was heard in recital at Town Hall, New York, on January 28 with Walter Golde at the piano. To quote the Sun, Mr. Woodside "sang with spirit, good intonation and a sure grasp of his offerings. His voice was not large and his range was quite limited. But he used his vocal material skillfully."

Russian Tenor Heard

Abraham Znaida, tenor, was heard in recital at the Town Hall, New York, on January 31 in a program of operatic arias, Yiddish and Russian songs. Elfrida Boss, violinist, and L. Berditchewsky, accompanist, assisted Mr. Znaida.

Miss Alice Rosseter

Alice Rosseter, mezzo-soprano, made her debut at Town Hall, New York, on Febuary 3 in an unconventionally arranged program, including songs by Secchi, Carissimi, and Szuli, Poldavski, Reger, Falla, Wolff, Watts, Carpenter, Milligan, and Richard Hageman, who was her accompanist.

The World reviewer wrote that she revealed "a fresh and sympathetic voice with great tenderness and warmth in its lower register and a certain faltering reediness as it mounted the scale. But her interpretations always had the saving grace of good taste and intelligence and a certain eager originality." According to the Times, Miss Rosseter "has a voice inherently of a warm and expressive quality, presumably a mezzo-contralto, although the lower register had not its full measure of depth and sonority on account of breath support that was too often inadequate."

In the Sun, the reviewer commented that "this artist's voice was of pleasant quality, but it was rather formless and inflexible throughout much of its register. . . . Her upper tones were good." The Herald Tribune reporter said that she "used a voice of fair size with intelligence and an increasing degree of expression." Herbert Peyser (Telegram-Mail) spoke of her "indubitable elements of personal charm."

Mme. Euphaly Hatayeva

The program sung by Euphaly Hatayeva, Russian soprano, at her concert in the Princess Theatre, New York, on February 1, consisted of songs by her countrymen, Miaskovsky, Medtner, Prokofieff, and Stravinsky. Most of this was post-war music, and much of it was new to American audiences. The Miaskovsky songs, to quote the Herald Tribune, were "marked hardly by melody," but had a "rather effective poignancy."

This reviewer observed that Mme. Hatayeva "handled the difficult music with skill, though her vocal equipment seemed rather limited." The Telegram-Mail writer thought her capacities were "extremely limited." In the Sun, the chronicler wrote that "her delivery was of Russian type, with much uneven tone, loss of pitch at times, great sympathy with the text and fine phrasing and accentuation." Leroy Shield was her accompanist.

Other newspapers did not carry analytical reviews of the concert.

Maximilian Pilzer

To quote the Times, Maximilian Pilzer's violin recital at Town Hall, New York, on February 1, "placed him as a musician of fine craftsmanship and intuitive perceptions." Handel, Dvorak, Brahms, Chopin, and Sarasate were, again to quote the same paper, interpreted by Mr. Pilzer "in a masterly manner."

According to the Sun, the violinist "played well yesterday, not over-impressively, but with a full firm tone, bowing of confidence and authority, and a bright clean technique admirably adapted to the more brilliant offerings of his program. The smooth flowing melodies of Handel's Sonata were played with a fine sense of form and color."

F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune) wrote that, "as before, Mr. Pilzer's playing gave an impression of distinct skill and technical competency, while his tone, if not always as fluent in fast, difficult passages as sustained ones, was generally full and smooth." As the World writer put it, "He exhibited his usual clear-cut and steadfast tone," and the Telegram-Mail reviewer commented that he "always possesses merits of musicianship, and has to a good extent freed himself from his former handicap of an excessive left hand vibrato."

Miss Tina Filipponi

Tina Filipponi, a pianist from Italy, played for the first time in some years in New York in a recital in Aeolian Hall on the evening of February 2. She appeared in public as a child prodigy several seasons ago. Miss Filipponi's program included Bach's G minor Fantasy and Fugue, Chopin's B minor Sonata, and a Spanish group of compositions by Albeniz, Granados, and Infante, "in which the pianist's vigor and dash were used to advantage," according to the Herald Tribune.

Deems Taylor, reviewing the concert in the World, also spoke of the "vigor and despatch" with which Miss Filipponi's program was played. "Her performance had a natural, simple charm," wrote the reviewer of the Times, and the Sun judgment was that "her performance disclosed much talent, but not fully developed, and a tendency to dramatic expression that often went beyond control."

"In general Miss Filipponi's playing suggested no light degree of technical skill," said the observer of the Herald Tribune.

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1921
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building, Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.; or
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

MARION TELVA
Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Alexander Borovsky

In his piano recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, the afternoon of January 30, Alexander Borovsky played what was, according to the World, "an interestingly contrasted program" featuring three first performances in America. These were a Sonatina by Auric, Lourhie's Children's Corner, and a piano transcription of the carnival scene in Stravinsky's Petrouchka. Other numbers were by Bach, Scarlatti, Rameau, and Chopin.

Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) wrote that it was "one of the outstanding recitals" of the season and that, in it, Mr. Borovsky disclosed "the measure of his art." Mr. Sanborn also wrote that "in the first place, his program, original, shrewdly combined and graced with a large measure of novelty, was half the battle for any one who could play it at all. And Mr. Borovsky played it with superb mastery." In the 18th century pieces, added this reviewer, the pianist "showed his command of style and a technical control well nigh phenomenal."

The Sun writer found him "more at home in compositions calling for great technical agility and power of finger," and in the Herald Tribune, the commentator said that he played the novelties "decisively and with clear outline." The Times reviewer said it was the recital "of an admirably equipped musician and pianist, who, however, had not always the capacity to evoke poetic mood which some of the music demanded."

In the opinion of this writer, the Petrouchka arrangement was "remarkably brilliant and resourceful." The Herald Tribune reported that neither the Auric or Lourhie pieces seemed of "major importance." Mr. Sanborn agreed.

Miss Astrid Fjelde

"A recital in quality and interest distinctively above the average," to quote the Herald Tribune reviewer, was given by a young Norwegian-American soprano, Astrid Fjelde, in Aeolian Hall, New York, on January 29. This writer continued that "she displayed a voice of very satisfactory volume, personality, and marked expressive ability."

In spite of "colorless" pianissimo passages and a slight nervousness at first which made her tone uneven, according to the Sun chronicler, "she revealed a voice capable of considerable development—rich in dramatic color, exceptionally full and free in the upper register and capable of an extensive range of mood and expression . . . Miss Fjelde has charm, intelligence and plenty of vocal material with which to labor."

Alison Smith of the World credited her with "an understanding which had depth and warmth and heartbreak in its touching simplicity." The only flaw in her production, continued Miss Smith, was the "unsteadiness" of her pianissimos, as "her full tone was true and steadfast and of a satisfying richness and beauty." In the Post, Miss Fjelde was commended for the excellence of her tones, "over which she had pleasing control."

Boston Symphony

At the second concert of the third New York pair of programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on January 31, Serge Koussevitzky offered a Handel Concerto Grosso, Ravel's transcription of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

The Moussorgsky work was somewhat in the nature of a novelty, as the work has been played here before only in another orchestration, that by Leonidas Leonardi. F. D. Perkins' statement in the Herald Tribune that the Ravel interpretation "is far and away the better" exemplified the opinions of most of the reviewers. Mr. Koussevitzky had never before played Beethoven in New York. The following assertion by the Post reviewer is more or less indicative of the general reaction to his reading: "Few liberties were taken, and it was an interpretation marked by clarity and cleanly-marked rhythms rather than by any violation of accepted conventions." According to the World it was played "with true eloquence and fidelity."

C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D major for orchestra, the Debussy-Ravel Sarabande, and Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony were played at the first of this pair of concerts. Roland Hayes was the soloist. According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, he "sang this music with his usual refinement of style and depth of feeling." Deems Taylor (World) wrote that his interpretations "were exquisitely finished and deeply moving in their brooding sincerity." Other reviewers joined in congratulating him for his work. Writing of Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the Fifth Symphony, Ernest Newman of the Post commented that "one might or might not agree with it or like it; but it will be some time before any one who heard it will forget it."

Miss Ada Viola Wood

Beginning with a group of unfamiliar early Italian songs, Ada Viola Wood gave a recital in Aeolian Hall the afternoon of January 29. In this group were an aria from Jacopo Peri's Euridice, Cavalli, and Torelli. The Times reviewer considered that Miss Wood interpreted these songs with "musicianly intention, leaving the finer phases of interpretation to be supplied by the first-rate accompaniments of Richard Hageman."

Alison Smith (World) found that her singing indicated "careful training and earnest devotion" to her studies. The Herald Tribune reporter mentioned that her singing of the French numbers "gave indications of a voice of fresh and agreeable quality, though, in this recital, a somewhat variable quality of tone."

Ernesto Berumen

His annual New York recital was given by Ernesto Berumen, pianist, in Aeolian Hall on January 31. Lending interest to his program were revisions by Siloti of the G sharp minor Sonata-Fantasy of Scriabin, and Liszt's Benediction in Solitude and St. Francis on the Waves. The Times reviewer observed that Mr. Berumen "has gained in breadth and command of style. . . He played with unaffected personal charm several adaptations by Albeniz, Busoni, Sgambati, a novel Etude of Alpheraky and a Scherzo by the late American composer, C. T. Griffes."

According to the Sun chronicler, "Mr. Berumen revealed as of old, his good touch, his excellent taste, his sound musicianship, and he is to be thanked for a list of offerings arranged far from the formulated factories of colorless and hackneyed programs." This writer thought the concert "a distinct success," and added that "the descriptive passages of his later offerings were distinguished by a warmth and vitality of temperament, a color and verve that were delightful."

Miss Jocelyn Clarke

Jocelyn Clarke, contralto, made her New York debut at Town Hall the afternoon of January 30. In the Times, the reviewer commended her as "an earnest and sincere young musician, who possesses a good natural voice in need of more cultivation." He continued that her voice was at its best when she allowed it to soar freely. Miss Clarke interpreted her songs with a fresh and genuine emotion very much to the liking of the audience."

The Herald Tribune writer mentioned that "nervousness tended to obscure her natural vocal assets in the first number," but that, afterward "she showed a voice of ample size and full, rich quality, especially in the lower notes, with considerable expressive ability." According to the Sun chronicler "she made known those instincts of native refinement, taste and culture, which form such valuable assets in the higher art of a singer of songs. . . . Miss Clarke has a voice of sufficient power and range, the natural quality is very good and her appreciation of texts and moods is beyond that noticed in the average recital debutante."

Barozzi in Second N. Y. Concert

Socrate Barozzi, "a violinist of merit," to quote the Times, gave his second New York recital of the season on the evening of January 25 in Carnegie Hall. The Herald Tribune reviewer referred to Mr. Barozzi's technique as being "distinctly skillful and for the most part of operatic very commendable quality, smooth, and of ample volume."

State Symphony

Casals was the soloist at the concert of the New York State Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ignatz Waghalter, at the Metropolitan Opera House on February 1. Mr. Casals played Dvorak's Concerto in B minor, and the orchestral numbers were Goldmark's Rustic Wedding Symphony, the Prelude from Tristan and the Ride of the Valkyries.

The Post reviewer expressed the prevailing sentiment of most of the commentators when he wrote that Mr. Casals' "genius needs the approval of neither handclapping nor newsprint." In the Sun, the chronicler commented that "Mr. Casals, of course, played like a master." Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail observed that the cellist "lavished" upon the Concerto "the splendor of his art and almost managed to transfigure the music in spite of a raw accompaniment." In his tone, the Herald Tribune writer found "a slightly wiry timbre" although, otherwise he played with "the usual tonal and technical mastery which marks his performance." Olin Downes of the Times mentioned that, when the music was dull, Mr. Casals' mastery "turned dross to gold."

Mr. Downes added that "the strings of the orchestra continued to show improvement in plasticity of phrase and crispness of attack."

Miss Mary Bennett

Mary Bennett, mezzo-soprano, made her debut in Town Hall, New York, on January 29, with Richard Hageman as accompanist. In addition to French and Russian songs, Miss Bennett sang a group in English by Josten, Carpenter, Hageman, and Sidney Homer.

According to the Sun reviewer, the debutante "used her voice with considerable skill, but her tone was often uneven and lacking in warmth and color. . . . In light lyrics which called for careful phrasing and a moderate volume of tone, Miss Bennett sang with charm and delicacy." The Herald Tribune writer remarked that she "sang with taste and expression, with a voice of moderate volume somewhat hampered at the start by occasional unsteadiness and a certain metallic quality of tone which gained, however, in clearness and steadiness during the recital, as the singer acquired confidence." In the Times, the chronicler said that her voice, "while of slight volume, was agreeably used, with musical intelligence and taste."

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

SASCHA FIDELMAN
Russian Violinist
Management H. & A. Culbertson, Aeolian Hall, New York.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Chicago En Courant

Pavlowa Reigns in the Auditorium; Stock Conducts Mason Symphony; Organists Give Program.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Feb. 3.

IF DOUBT still remains as to the demand for ballet performances in Chicago, the doubters should be led to the Auditorium to observe the audiences as well as the lovely dancing of Anna Pavlowa and her associates of the ballet.

The attendance has been large. The receipts for the fortnight ending next Sunday will approximate $65,000, a tribute to the art of the dance as exemplified in its classic perfection by Pavlowa and her company. Together with the growth of interest in ballet has come a corresponding growth in intelligent appreciation. As one professional dancer in the audience the other night remarked in surprise: "Why, this audience understands what is being done. It knows when to applaud."

Pavlowa's visits to Chicago offer numerous opportunities for reminiscence between herself and Adolph Bolm, her confrere, of the days of the Imperial Ballet at Petrograd. At a luncheon given in honor of Pavlowa at the Arts Club, Mr. Bolm spoke feelingly of the gratitude due to Pavlowa for her pioneer work in presenting ballet to the highways and byways of our country.

ON A VISIT back stage at the end of Friday night's performance a clue to the Pavlowa creed was discovered. At the end of a taxing program she and Novikoff were intently working out a detail of the Syrian dance just finished. "That is the time to make corrections," said Pavlowa, "when the dance is fresh in the mind."

And just in assurance that she is not bidding Chicago farewell forever she added: "Some day I hope to bring a perfect production to Chicago, one right in every detail. At present one does what one can, and strives for perfection." Which brings to mind a statement which she made last season to the effect that she had in mind a big production, one which would be very expensive, but that if $75,000 could be raised she herself would add $25,000 to the sum to cover costs.

THE regular pair of concerts by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra offered last week ambrosian fare. The Mozart Overture to The Marriage of Figaro, and the Bach Concerto No. 3 in G major, received glowing performances. Perhaps this joyous, clean cut music reacted to the disadvantage of the Daniel Gregory Mason Symphony, C Minor, which followed. This was Chicago's first hearing of the revised work. Mr. Mason received cordial applause from both Symphony audiences last week.

There was no question as to the quantity or quality of the applause awarded Alfred Cortot after his playing of the Schumann A minor Concerto for piano. Here was playing that matched the orchestra's Bach, and almost converted the anti-Schumannites.

BEETHOVEN'S name headed the composers listed by the Sunday recitalists. Joseph Lhevinne played the Beethoven Farewell Sonata; at the Playhouse Mr. Bachaus offered the same composer's Sonata in D minor; and at the Blackstone Frederic Freemantel was at the same time engaged in singing an All-Beethoven program with interspersed explanatory remarks. The songs are of especial value and interest to singing students.

Marie Sundelius pleased a large audience in a diverse program of songs. She was particularly happy in a group of Scandinavian songs. All critical comment praised the lovely quality of her voice. Miss Sundelius made herself popular with Chicagoans during the season she spent at Ravinia.

THE ILLINOIS state council of the National Association of Organists arranged a concert on Monday night of especial interest to organists. The program was planned to demonstrate the resources of the organ with orchestra and as a solo instrument. To this end, a group of solos was played by Edwin Stanley Seder. Clarence Dickenson, formerly of Chicago, and now living in New York, was the soloist in his own Storm King Symphony, assisted therein by Frederick Stock and a goodly portion of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Robert R. Birch played Guilmant's First Concerto, and Mildred Fitzpatrick demonstrated the use of the organ in connection with motion pictures.

JAVANESE influence seems to be affecting an ever increasing group of composers. Henry Eichheim, who is deeply interested in Java music, declared during his recent visit to Chicago that Debussy shows evidences of Javanese influence. Stravinsky, he added, has undoubtedly, delved deeply into the intricacies of Javanese tonality. Now comes Leopold Godowsky to Chicago to introduce privately to his friends his own Javanese Suite. There are eight numbers in the work.

To quote freely from Mr. Gunn of the Herald Examiner: Gamelan (the native name for orchestra, the music it makes, its literature and all that pertains thereto) is weird, spectral, fantastic, bewitching; Wayan Purwa (puppet shadow plays) is program music without a detailed program; The Ruined Water Palace at Djokja is a miracle of glamourous beauty; The Sand Sea and the Bromo Volcano at Daybreak forms a mighty climax of realism in a strange idiom; Boro Budur in Moonlight is an impressive description of the greatest of Buddhist temples; Chattering Monkeys at the Sacred Lake of Wendit is a delicate bit of humor; and Hari Besaar presents an animated picture of an Oriental Kermess.

Mr. Godowsky, who was formerly a resident of Chicago, is a somewhat enforced visitor at the present time owing to the severe illness of Mrs. Godowsky, who is undergoing treatment at Battle Creek. An urgent summons called him there on Monday. It is feared that Mrs. Godowsky may lose her eyesight.

ONE SEES a variety of artists and artisans among the Pavlowa clientele. Painters, architects, sculptors are among the many of the dancing profession who came to see her dance.

Last week brought one visitor from a different field, when Battling Siki, the French Senegalese pugilist, came to pay his homage to the art of Pavlowa.

Approve Plans for Second Los Angeles Opera Season

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 1.—Plans have been approved at a meeting of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association which assure Los Angeles its second annual opera season next October.

"We feel a distinct obligation to the public of Los Angeles to perpetuate our first highly successful achievement in the production of grand opera with resident chorus, orchestra and management," said United States District Judge Bledsoe, president of the association, after the meeting. "We shall immediately set machinery in motion to again insure the financial success of the enterprise without placing any undue burden on any individual."

The engagement will again be at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Manager Smith announced that in order to protect the association financially in the fall the hall will be closed to any other opera company.

Leading singers will be brought directly to this city from New York and Chicago, as last year.

"The world's greatest operatic stars will again be engaged," said Merle Armitage, manager. "Negotiations are now on for a celebrated conductor. Not only will Los Angeles singers again have an opportunity to display their ability, but in addition the scenery and costumes and electrical equipment will this year be provided on a large scale by Los Angeles scenic artists and designers."

Salzburg Wants Metropolitan Cast

The Metropolitan Opera Company has been asked, through Artur Bodanzky, who conducts Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte here, if it would be possible to arrange for the appearance of the entire Metropolitan cast in that opera at next Summer's Mozart festival at Salzburg, Austria.

Cable messages from the Salzburg festival authorities said it was desired to secure Mmes. Easton, Peralta and Bori and Messrs. Meader, de Luca and Didur. The orchestra and scenic production would be those of the Vienna State Opera.

Denishawns Dance in Chattanooga

Chattanooga, Tenn., Feb. 2.—The Denishawn dancers appeared here last Monday evening. A program of chamber music was given not long ago by J. O. Cadek, violinist, Lester Cohn, violinist, Dorothy Phillips, cellist, Lillian Cadek, violinist, and May Hickman and Hugh Ridout, pianist.

T. E.

Mason Symphony Is Played in Chicago

Alfred Cortot Plays Schumann Piano Concerto; Sowerby Piece Given at Pop.

Chicago, Feb. 2.—The concert last Friday of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Frederick Stock conducting, was featured by the appearance of Alfred Cortot as soloist in Schumann's A minor Concerto, and by the first presentation here of Daniel Gregory Mason's Symphony in C minor. Other numbers were Mozart's Marriage of Figaro Overture, and Bach's Third Concerto for strings.

According to Karleton Hackett of the Post, Mr. Cortot "had penetrated to the inmost recesses of Schumann's thought, and his mode of expression seemed the only one to make clear the full meaning."

Edward Moore of the Tribune said "his steely fingers are dedicated to efficiency, to marking out sweeping rhythms, to stimulating, propulsive energy."

Mr. Cortot, wrote Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald Examiner) "realized all the beauties of the work, yet fell short of the expectations of his many Chicago admirers." Writing in the News, Francis M. Ford commented that his "intellectual conception was evident. His is a flawless technique equal to any demand, and he played brilliantly."

This reviewer found Mr. Mason's Symphony "built in modern fashion upon themes that are distinctively individualistic. It has intellectual content and it has dramatic quality as well. There are strains of delicate beauty, contrasted with big climaxes, resolute and far-reaching, and there is an interesting and gratifying variety in the orchestration that was cleanly brought out in Mr. Stock's reading."

Mr. Gunn wrote that the music "is contemplative, restrained, earnest, unhappily touched by modern harmonic elements which seem to intrude." According to Edward Moore, it is more of a "treatise on the art and practice of symphony composition, with a somewhat unconventional scale passage here, a neat bit of tone color there, an interesting harmonic progression elsewhere, and excellent counterpoint almost everywhere." Mr. Mason was lauded by Mr. Hackett for melodic, if not spontaneous themes, and for excellent craftsmanship.

Leo Sowerby's orchestral setting for Money Musk was played by the orchestra at the popular concert. Also on the program were the Freischutz Overture, Bizet's Roma, the Andante from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, selections by Elgar and Herbert.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Nicholson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Many Recitals Follow Opera

Anna Pavlowa, Medtner, Lhevinne, Bachaus, Freemantel and Marie Sundelius in Chicago.

Chicago, Feb. 2.—The past week has been one of unusual concert activity now that the Chicago Civic Opera Company's season here is ended. Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe, Nicholas Medtner, Josef Lhevinne, William Bachaus, Marie Sundelius, and Frederic Freemantel are among those who have appeared on the concert platform during the week.

Pavlowa's two-week season, which opened Monday evening, is in full swing, and the response of both the public and the press has been most enthusiastic. Karleton Hackett wrote in the Post that Pavlowa is "still as graceful and buoyant as ever." Other reviewers lauded her work and that of her assistants.

* * *

Nicholas Medtner, in his piano recital devoted to his own compositions, was assisted by Mrs. Louise Hattstaedt Winter, soprano. According to Edward Moore of the Tribune, Mr. Medtner emerged from the concert "as a striking personality in music." Frances M. Ford wrote in the News that his music "has originality in thematic ideas, and he brings them out pointedly. He uses many a primitive rhythm, and there is a certain strength and vividness in his imagination that makes it distinctive."

The Post reviewer found him "an interesting personality . . . so fine a player and so sincere an artist that he held the attention of his audience to the end. . . . His melodies are not simple tunes, but genuine creative impulses cast in strange molds." On the other hand, Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner said he "voices conventional ideas in established idiom" and relegated him to "secondary position."

Mrs. Winter sang, to quote this writer, "with lovely tone and art," and in the Post she was commended for singing with "interpretative feeling." Mr. Moore wrote that she "sang gracefully and with excellent taste and intelligence." Frances Ford of the News agreed that she "sang in beautiful style."

* * *

In the Post, the reviewer stated that Mr. Lhevinne "seemingly loves to play the piano." In his recital yesterday, to further quote this writer, "the many shades of tone color, all essential to the music and all in themselves lovely that Lhevinne drew from the piano were amazing. There was breadth of power and exquisite delicacy each in its appointed place and each necessary."

His playing of Chopin, continued this reviewer, had an "instinctive appreciation for how the music was meant to sound." Edward Moore wrote of the playing of Beethoven, Schubert, Liszt, and Taussig: "They were brilliant, they were not overweighted with emotion, and they missed just enough notes to prove the playing was human and not mechanical." On the other hand, the Post reported that the Taussig Gypsy Airs were played with "virtuoso brilliance" by Mr. Lhevinne, who "tossed aside" the technical difficulties.

* * *

William Bachaus, a "consummate master of the keyboard," in the words of Glenn Dillard Gunn, was also heard in recital yesterday. According to the Post, he played Beethoven "with an objective attitude, as though he were fearful of obstructing the flow of the music by intruding his own personality. . . . He is a clear thinker and his fingers respond admirably to his purpose," although at times "this clarity resulted in a sharpness of outline that was hard. Not that the tone itself was hard in quality. There was a variety of tone coloring and excellent shading."

* * *

Writing of Mme. Sundelius' recital, Mr. Gunn testified "to the growing luster of her tone, the ease and grace with which she delivers the vocal phrase" and asserted that "hers is one of the loveliest of soprano voices."

Edward Moore agreed that she "has one of the rarely lovely soprano voices of this generation." In the Stravinsky Pastorale, according to the Post reviewer, Mme. Sundelius "sang so that it sounded gracefully melodic," although in the Debussy songs "her voice sounded heavy and inelastic." She was assisted by Edgar Nelson.

* * *

Another song recital was given by Frederic Freemantel, who interspersed his songs with explanatory remarks. Mr. Freemantel is particularly concerned with Beethoven, and, as Mr. Gunn expressed it, "one need not hesitate to describe him as an authority in his specialty. His voice is pleasant, intelligently used, nor does he exceed its lyric limitations."

Mr. Moore characterized him as a "studious enthusiast" whose recital was meant more for other students than for concert-goers in general, "but interesting on that basis." The Post reviewer commented that "there were evident sincerity of purpose and excellent understanding of the subject."

Wagner Manuscripts Coming Here

A collection of manuscripts and photographs of Richard Wagner has recently been acquired in Paris for Mme. Marie Gabrielle Leschetizky, the Polish pianiste, and will be sent to her here for disposal. Among the manuscripts are Dors, Mon Enfant, signed by the composer in Paris in 1840. There is also a rare edition of Parsifal in leather binding with gold decorations, with a personal dedication written by Wagner. The collection also includes a photograph of Wagner and letters written to his sister Ottillie in 1832.

Coast Ensemble in Two Concerts

San Francisco, Feb. 2.—Two concerts are to be given this season by the Wind Instrument Ensemble of San Francisco, of which C. Addimando is the director. The ensemble consists of Mr. Addimando, oboist, H. Benkman, flutist, N. Zannini, clarinetist, E. Kubitschek, bassoonist, and C. E. Tryner, hornist. Isabelle Arndt will take part in the two programs, which are scheduled for the evenings of February 13 and April 14.

QUEENA MARIO

Whose Singing of the Role of Micaela in Carmen at the Metropolitan on Friday Was One of the High Lights of the Performance.

Hartford Hears Many Concerts

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 26. — The heavy schedule of concerts here continues. Roland Hayes sang in recital yesterday afternoon, and a week ago 2,000 turned out for Rosa Ponselle. Other recent concerts have been those of the Alda Quartet, John McCormack, and John Charles Thomas. Elena Gerhardt appeared recently at the Porter School, and Percy Grainger and the de Rezke Singers sang in a morning musical at the Bond hotel.

The disbanded Philharmonic Orchestra is missed, but the Boston Symphony visit is looked forward to. Others on the Hartford schedule are Feodor Chaliapin, the San Carlo Opera Company, the Choral Club and the Oratorio Society, the latter with Arthur Kraft, and the Elshuco Trio with Georges Barrere. A. H. C.

Hanna Brocks in Recital

A song recital was given by Hanna Brocks, lyric coloratura soprano, last Saturday afternoon in the Wurlitzer Auditorium, New York. Miss Brocks was assisted by the Wurlitzer Trio, consisting of Florence McKeough, pianist; John Savasta, violinist; and Ch. C. Parkyn, cellist. Miss Beatrice Raphael was Miss Brocks' accompanist. The program included works of Parkyn, Fourdrain, Decreus, Borowski, Mana Zucca, Buzzi-Peccia, and others.

Damrosch Honored in Cuba

Havana, Feb. 1.—Walter Damrosch, leader of the New York Symphony, which is in Cuba for a series of concerts, has been voted a corresponding member of the Cuban National Academy of Music. At a banquet in his honor last night Mr. Damrosch was presented with a gold medal and certificate.

Two Soloists Appear With L. A. Orchestra

Los Angeles, Jan. 28.—Appearing as soloists at the popular concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Walter Henry Rothwell, were Edna Gunnar Peterson, pianist, and Emile Ferir, viola of the orchestra. Miss Peterson played the Grieg Concerto, and Mr. Ferir was heard in Berlioz's Harold in Italy. The purely orchestral numbers were Dubois' Rigoudon, the Brahms Academic Festival, Wagner's Rienzi Overture, and Ravel's Waltz.

According to Carl Bronson (Herald), "Miss Peterson's powers of interesting and holding her hearers were taxed and proven equal to the occasion, the ingenious pianist being warmly received for her musicianly interpretation." The Daily News reviewer thought the concerto "brilliantly executed."

In the Express, she was praised for her "brilliant and musically sensitive performance of the rather dramatic Grieg Concerto . . . She meets technical demands well . . . Her rhythmic energy is exuberating." This writer considered Mr. Ferir's playing excellent, and commented that "it was tone and phrasing which will haunt one's memory."

Nose-Bleed Delays Opera

The repetition of Janacek's Jenufa at the Metropolitan last Wednesday was twenty minutes late in starting because of a slight indisposition of Mme. Jeritza, who had a nose-bleed just as the curtain was due to rise. Nevertheless she sang her role as well as in the past. The cast was familiar.

Forty-Eight
Preludes and Fugues
BY J. S. BACH
Pianoforte edited by Donald Francis Tovey and Fingered by Harold Samuel TWO PARTS
each part with separate
MUSIC TEXT:
each net $2.50
An edition of Bach's "Forty-eight," embodying the views of the highest scholarship and musicianship obtainable.
Oxford University Press
American Branch
35 West 32d Street New York

CARYL
BENSEL
SOPRANO
Now on Tour in Florida
EXCLUSIVE DIRECTION
MOLLIE CROUCHER
Metropolitan Opera House Bldg.,
1425 Broadway, New York

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

Opera Continues in Boston

Tosca, Romeo, Carmen, Tannhauser, Boheme, Boris Godunoff, and Louise Are Sung.

Boston, Feb. 1.—The first week of the Chicago Opera Company's season here was brought to a close last evening with Claudia Muzio making her first and only appearance of the season in Puccini's La Tosca.

H. T. Parker (Transcript) wrote of Mme. Muzio that "to the sight, there has been no comparable Tosca in years" and added that her vocal performance was of equal excellence. Joseph Schwarz as Scarpia also received general commendation in the press. The Herald reviewer thought Mme. Muzio's voice "beautifully shaded, full of eloquent modulations, effulgent, clear, alike in her lyric passages and in her dramatic moments." According to this writer, Mr. Schwarz was most effective vocally and histrionically.

Others in the cast were Antonio Cortis, whose warm, free singing was praised by Mr. Parker, and Antonio Nicolich, Vittorio Trevisan, Lodovico Oliviero, Gildo Morelato, Gladys Swarthout, and Max Toft. Roberto Moranzoni conducted.

* * *

In the afternoon Romeo and Juliet was presented before a large audience. In the cast were Edith Mason, Gladys Swarthout, Maria Claessens, William Beck, Jose Mojica, Charles Hackett, Desire Defrere, Antonio Nicolich, Edouard Cotreuil, and Gildo Morelato. Mr. Polacco conducted, to quote the Herald, "as is his custom, in a masterly manner."

This reviewer found the performance "excellent," and continued that Mme. Mason "sang Juliet's music with tonal purity and beauty, with warmth and genuine expression, while she acted the part intelligently." Of others in the cast he wrote "Mr. Mojica's beautiful voice and Mr. Cotreuil's dignified and impressive Friar were features of a performance which will be remembered gratefully. Miss Swarthout was a charming Stephano, pleasing the eye and ear." The Transcript chronicler agreed with this in the main.

* * *

The production Friday night of Carmen with Mary Garden in the title role was, in the words of Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor, "unusually spirited." Also singing in this opera were Fernand Ansseau, Antonio Nicolich, Edouard Cotreuil, Alice d'Hermanoy, Gladys Swarthout, Georges Baklanoff and Edith Mason. Mr. Polacco conducted.

According to the Transcript, Miss Garden was "in the mood" but not in her best voice. Philip Hale (Herald) considered the whole performance "brilliant." Mr. Mason wrote that "the principal interpreters played their parts according to accepted traditions, they were far from being perfunctory and merely conventional in them. There was real life and fire in both singing and acting." Mr. Baklanoff's portrayal of Escamillo, wrote Mr. Hale, was "incomparable."

* * *

The Herald reviewer considered the performance of Tannhauser the night before an "excellent" one, and added that Henry G. Weber, the conductor, "had much to do with the success." The cast included Alexander Kipnis. Olga Forrai, Forrest Lamont, Joseph Schwarz, Romeo Boscacci, William Beck, Jose Mojica, Antonio Nicolich, Cyrena van Gordon, and Gladys Swarthout. The production was praised by the Monitor chronicler, but Mr. Parker (Transcript) thought Mr. Weber's conducting, for the most part, uneven, and considered the opera dull at first, although it gained in interest and effectiveness during the evening. The cast came in for general commendation, although some reviewers found Mr. Lamont not as excellent as in the role of Siegfried.

* * *

La Boheme was the offering of the Chicagoans on Thursday night with Edith Mason, Antonio Cortis, Giacomo Rimini, Virgilio Lazzari, Desire Defrere, and Alice d'Hermanoy in the cast.

In the Herald, the reviewer wrote: "Last evening's performance was on the whole a good one, both vocally and technically, and Mr. Moranzoni conducted his excellent orchestra with musicianly skill and a fine sense of orchestral shading. . . . There was effective ensemble singing in the first act of the garret, and in all of the large choruses." Agreed as to the excellence of the ensembles was Stuart Mason who also thought: "The opera was well sung throughout, but more than this, it was well acted, which is a rare thing indeed. In more ways than one is the work of the Chicago company of surpassing interest." Other writers lauded the members of the cast.

* * *

On the afternoon of the same day, Feodor Chaliapin sang in Boris Godunoff. Others in the cast were Gladys Swarthout, Elizabeth Kerr, Jose Mojica, Forrest Lamont, Virgilio Lazzari, Edouard Cotreuil, Lodovico Oliviero, Cyrena van Gordon, Maria Claessens, Desire Defrere, William Beck, Louis Derman, and Alice d'Hermanoy. Giorgio Polacco conducted.

Chaliapin's portrayal of Boris was the subject of laudatory reviews. In fact, the entire performance received practically unstinted praise from the press. The Monitor spoke of it as "a remarkable performance." The audience was equally enthusiastic in its applause.

* * *

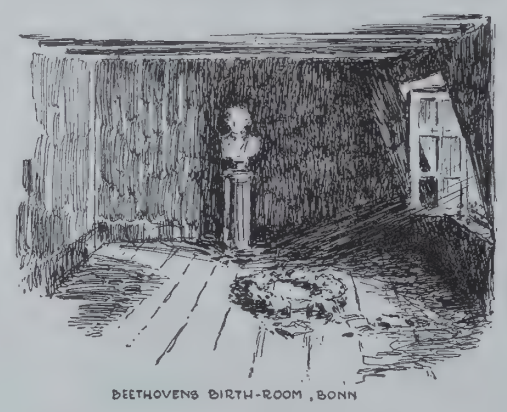
Appearing in Charpentier's Louise on Tuesday night were Mary Garden, Maria Claessens, Georges Baklanoff, Fernand Ansseau, Jose Mojica, Alice d'Hermanoy, Jean de Keyser, Vittorio Trevisan, Eugenio Correnti, Louis Derman, Desire Defrere, Antonio Nicolich, Edouard Cotreuil, Anna Correnti, and Alexander Kipnis. Mr. Polacco conducted.

Philip Hale considered Miss Garden "vocally and dramatically closer to Charpentier's heroine than she has been for some seasons. Her voice was fresher, it was under firmer control, it was more expressive." According to Mr. Hale, Mr. Ansseau "confirmed the deep impression he made last season by the vigor and charm of his singing and by his spirited acting." Mr. Baklanoff's performance, he continued, was even more finished than usual.

Tokatyan Sings in Falstaff

Verdi's Falstaff was given its third performance at the Metropolitan on the evening of February 2. Mr. Tokatyan took the place of Mr. Gigli in the part of Fenton, "of which he gave an effective impersonation" (the Sun). Otherwise the cast was as before.

RUDOLPH POLK
Was Assisted by Symphony Orchestra in His New York Violin Recital on Friday Evening.



ARE YOU GOING?

Europe—combining a summer of excursions and sightseeing in the wonder cities of Europe with

A summer in Musical Europe, visiting the scenes of musical history, intimately seeing today in music, attending the incomparable summer Festivals—

Distinguished leadership of Howard Brockway!

Booklet.

MUSIC TRAVEL CLUB OF AMERICA

500 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

L.E. BEHYMER, 705 PHILHARMONIC AUDITORIUM BLDG., LOS ANGELES

CALVIN COXE

Tenor and Voice Teacher

Tone-Production, Diction

Complete Repertoire

570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City

Billings 1593

Hundreds of music patrons force their way through fire lines to attend the Recital of

ETHEL GROW

at Aeolian Hall in an

All-American Program

"Miss Ethel Grow, contralto, appearing at Aeolian Hall, under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club Tuesday night, gave a recital of American compositions. She was assisted by Charles Albert Baker as accompanist. She interpreted pieces by the eighteenth-century composer, Francis Hopkinson, arranged by Milligan, a couple of Kentucky Mountain songs from the collection of Loraine Wyman and Howard Brockway, the scene, 'Cleopatra's Death,' Shakespeare's text and Henry Holden Huss's music together with works by Pettis, Watts, Cecil Burleigh, Nevin, La Forge, Woodman, Mokrejs, Kramer, Hadley, Beach, Rihm, Delamarter, McKinney, Cathcart, Johnson, MacDowell, Carpenter, Homer, Chadwick, Ware, Taylor, Sharp, and Curran.

"She scarcely seems to have left out anybody; but necessarily, letting so large a company of song writers have representation, she could allow but few of them to be heard more than once. Her problem must have been, when compiling her selections, to determine the work which best stands for the genius of each man or woman; and she managed to pick out something strong and interesting in every case, without having too many numbers of the concert-worn type.

"To judge of the present state of affairs by her program, American composers may be described as being as sentimental as ever, but as inclining distinctly away from mere showiness. They find it possible to express themselves in pure lyric terms, refraining from use of so-called dramatic effect, which in the songs of a former day often meant nothing but forced climax.

"A little group of four short pieces with which Miss Grow especially pleased her audience bears the general title 'Fragments,' and the subtitles. 'Deserted Garden,' 'November Night,' 'Iris Meadow' and 'So Far Away,' and is by Horace Johnson."—Winthrop P. Tryon, Christian Science Monitor.

"The wide-flung fire line prevented hundreds of music patrons from reaching Aeolian Hall, where a voice recital by Ethel Grow was scheduled. Finally the police let ticket holders through to the hall. They took their seats in a smoke-filled auditorium."—The New York Times.

"Lines of hose flanked Aeolian Hall at the hour set for Ethel Grow's song recital and those seeking to approach its main entrance by Forty-Third Street were turned back by police . . . audience entered from Forty-Second Street.

"Miss Grow's voice seemed of good size . . . climactic notes rang full and clear. She showed expressive capacity and her program was increased by encores."—The New York Herald-Tribune.

"A fire broke out a few doors from Aeolian Hall just at concert time, and for a while the audience was limited to those music lovers who happened to have reporter's police cards.

"Ethel Grow sang an all-American program. . . . Many of the songs were most engaging, and they were all delivered with Miss Grow's usual enthusiasm."—The New York World.

Miss Grow was obliged to repeat five of the programmed songs and to sing three additional encores.

For Terms and Rates for Season 1925-1926 Address:

ETHEL GROW

200 West 57th Street

New York City

Studio 7A

Phone Circle 10117

Russian Leads in Philadelphia

Igor Stravinsky Conducts Orchestra in Program of His Own Compositions; Varied Concerts.

Philadelphia, Feb. 2.—A capacity audience at the Academy of Music Friday afternoon welcomed Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, in his appearance as guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. There were two unfamiliar numbers on the all-Stravinsky program: Scherzo Fantastique and a Suite from Petrouchka. The Fireworks Fantasy, Le Chant du Rossignol, and L'Oiseau de Feu completed the program.

However, to quote Linton Martin (North American), "the stamp of novelty was upon all of them yesterday because of the composer's highly personal interpretations, both in time and tone." Stanley Muschamp wrote in the Inquirer that "the composer is a good conductor even though he is not a great conductor. The beat of his baton is regular almost to a scholastic degree, but there is another directing that imbues the players until the music becomes a thing alive that vibrates with great intensity. The orchestra was in prime condition and gave to this famous musician the best of its talents, which must have been a delight to his heart and soul."

In the Record the reviewer observed that Stravinsky "has magnetism and the power to stir an audience as well as to get the best efforts out of the musicians. . . . The interpretations placed on his music by Stravinsky were much more rational and conservative than we have been accustomed to. There was an absolute absence of striving for effect."

The Public Ledger writer commented that "as a conductor, Mr. Stravinsky is the most insistent of all elements upon the rhythms which he desires. His interpretations seemingly are based first of all upon this phase and upon tempi of extreme exactness. . . . His interpretations, in a word, may be said to be a great deal more rhythmical and suitable in tempo to any which have been heard here previously and at the same time less elastic and, in some instances, less poetical."

This chronicler thought the Petrouchka Suite "complex" with many "fine places" in it. Mr. Martin said that Stravinsky possessed "an individuality as marked in his manner on the conductor's stand as in the program of his own music." The Scherzo, according to Mr. Martin, is one of Stravinsky's "most descriptive works, and the Wagnerian influence is unmistakable."

Following the concert a reception for the visiting composer and conductor was given in the foyer by the Women's Committee of the Orchestra.

* * *

There were two operas sung here during the past week. I Pagliacci was given at the Metropolitan Opera House Thursday evening for the benefit of the Columbus Italian Hospital. A concert program preceded the opera. Fortunato de Angelis, of the Brooklyn Opera Company, made his first appearance here and according to the Ledger, "was admirable, both vocally and dramatically." Anna Fitziu, continued this reviewer, "was in excellent voice" and Alexander Smallens "gave a notably fine reading of the score." Others in the cast were Nelson Eddy, Ettore Verna, and Nino Mazzio.

In the preliminary concert program, Gianetta d'Ippolito, pianist, made her local debut in Beethoven's Pathetique Sonata. Others appearing were Francesco Marina, baritone, Miss Fitziu and Mr. de Angelis.

The other opera was Stanislaw Moniuszko's Halka, presented by the Polish Opera Company of New York Friday night. According to the Inquirer reviewer, "the opera is one of melodic beauty and strong rhythmic accent." He considered the opera well sung and equally well acted by Mmes. E. Rostkowska, and L. Ogrodzka, and Messrs. L. Reconi and L. Cortilli.

* * *

Among other recent concerts were the following: the appearance of Harry Aleinikoff, violin, Henri Elkan, viola, Milton Prinz, violoncello and Clarence Fuhrmann, piano, with the Friends of Chamber Music; the song recital given by Laura Evans-Williams, Welsh soprano; the annual winter concert of the Junger Maennerchor; a two-violin recital given by David Madison and Louis Gabowitz; the presentation of Gounod's Redemption by the Temple Combined Choruses and the Temple University Glee Club; the appearance of an eleven-year-old pianist, Lucie Stern; the production by the Catholic Operatic Society of Gilbert and Sullivan's Patience, and a concert by the Main Line Orchestra, conducted by Adolph Vogel.

Joseph Coleman

Of Joseph Coleman, American violinist, who made his first New York recital appearance in Carnegie Hall on the evening of February 2, the Sun reported, "He certainly revealed many musical qualities worthy of cultivation." This reviewer continued, "He has talent, a smooth legato and a tone of considerable purity and sweetness. but he lacked a necessary poise and an authority which time may give him." Harry Kaufman was the accompanist of the evening.

Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail and Deems Taylor of the World commented on the smallness of Mr. Coleman's tone, but the Times commentator reported that Mr. Coleman displayed "that indefinable something which captures the audience, and makes it oblivious or indifferent to minor considerations." This writer felt that the beauty of tone and "deep feeling" with which Mr. Coleman played Handel's Sonata in A, were not maintained in the Paganini Concerto in D, but that they returned once more to the Mendelssohn Concerto. This last piece was played, in the words of the Post observer, "with rare grace and appreciation of tone shading."

The Herald Tribune review commented that Mr. Coleman's technique was more than equal to the difficulties of his program, and that his tone was "smooth and agreeable."

Cellist Leaps to Death

On the arrival of the S. S. Orduna in Halifax, Canada, on January 31, the officers of the vessel reported the suicide at sea of Heinrich Schuetz, Austrian cellist, en route to Vienna to see his sick mother. He was twenty-three years old. He acted queerly, and was guarded for several days, but normal behavior caused the ship's authorities to remove the watch, and he leaped overboard.

YEATMAN GRIFFITH

"Recognized Authority on Voice Production and the Art of Singing"

Summer Vocal Master Classes

For Artists – Teachers – Students

THIRD SEASON	PACIFIC COAST
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.	June 3rd to July 1st
LOS ANGELES, CAL.	July 6th to Aug. 3rd
PORTLAND, OREG.	Aug. 10th to Sept. 7th

Teacher of World Famed Artists

Teacher of Teachers in America and Europe

© Mishkin

"Basso Cantante and Vocal Pedagogue of International Fame"

Enrollments Now FOR — Address Communications TO

San Francisco, Cal.---IDA G. SCOTT, Kohler & Chase Bldg.
Los Angeles, Cal.---L. E. BEHYMER, 705 Auditorium Bldg.
Portland, Oreg.---OTTO WEDEMEYER, 611 Bush & Lane Bldg.

NEW YORK STUDIOS, 318 West 82nd Street

Associate Teacher
MRS. YEATMAN GRIFFITH

Assistant Teachers
MISS EUPHEMIA BLUNT
MR. JOHN CLAIRE MONTEITH

MR. VINCENT JONES
Harmony and Sight Reading

YEATMAN GRIFFITH Teaches in NEW YORK Oct. 1st to May 25th

New York Studios Open During Summer in Charge of Miss Blunt.

Many notable successes of this season in grand opera and concert have been scored by eminent Artists who are working with Yeatman Griffith.

Many prominent positions in Universities and Colleges are held by Teachers of the Yeatman Griffith principle of voice production.

Secretaries
MISS E. BLUNT: MISS E. RICHMOND

Telephone
Endicott 8144

On The Music Highway

MR. AND MRS. EDWIN HUGHES will give a recital of music for two pianos at the MacDowell Club in New York on the evening of February 18. The program will include the Suite Op. 17 by Rachmaninoff, the Rondo Op. 73 by Chopin and the Variations on a Beethoven Theme by Saint-Saens.

Royal Dadmun sang in Springfield, Mass., Sunday evening and will be heard in Wooster, Ohio, next Monday before commencing his Pacific Coast tour which opens at Modesta, Cal., March 3.

Joseph Calleia, a tenor born in the Island of Malta, will make his American debut at Town Hall Saturday evening. He will offer a program drawn from his operatic repertoire and from the works of French, English and Italian composers.

Ferdinand Greenwald, who will add a solo number to the program, will be at the piano.

Ben Levitzky, Lilly Kass and Murray Feldman, American violinists, entirely American trained, will appear in recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on Sunday evening.

Angna Enters, in original compositions in dance form with specially designed costumes, and Rosalind Fuller, in 14th, 15th and 16th Century English and Scottish folk songs, will give a recital at the Greenwich Village Theatre next Sunday evening. This is Miss Enters' first recital of the present season. Miss Fuller is the leading woman of the current revival of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic operetta Patience, in New York.

More commendatory notices have been received of Ellenor Cook's Slavic folk song recitals. The latest is from the Montreal Daily Star which says in part of Miss Cook's recent recital in Montreal: "She gave the songs in a simple, sometimes rather different way, which made them all the more effective and she sings certainly better than most of the people who sing these same songs."

Lynwood Farnum is giving four Bach organ recitals at the Church of the Holy Communion, New York City. His third recital on next Monday will include All Glory, Laud and Honour, Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Trio-Sonata in E flat, two Choral Preludes on the Christmas tune, In Dulci Jubilo, and others.

The young violinist, Sylvia Lent, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, appeared at the White House on January 30 at a musical following the dinner given in honor of the Supreme Court.

The Lyric Club of the Park Baptist Church of Utica, N. Y., gave a recital on January 21 assisted by Mrs. Harry J. McCormick, soprano, Leonore Kubiak and Walter Griswold, violinists, and Alice Newman and Harry J. McCormick, accompanists. Frank Parker is director of this club which includes among its members Mildred Baird, Jane Davies, Kathryn M. Davies, Mollie Davies, Elan Ferrazz, Anna Harris, Cathryn Harris, Marion Z. Jones, Mrs. R. B. Knapp, Mildred Kopp, Reba Ladd, Mary de Marco, Margaret Menge, Anna Pearlman, Jeannette Scherline, and Mildred Ueltschi.

Sigismond Stojowski, pianist, will give a recital at Aeolian Hall on February 21.

Daisy Jean will give a Boston recital in Jordan Hall on February 26.

The San Francisco Chamber Music Society has always featured well known artists in its series. Some of the artists who have been identified with concerts of the Society are Alfred Cortot, Leopold Godowsky, Harold Bauer, Arthur Rubinstein, Felix Salmond, E. Robert Schmitz, Myra Hess, Jacques Thibaud, May Mukle, Horace Britt, Benno Moiseiwitsch, Erno Dohnanyi, Elly Ney, Arthur Schnabel, Ethel Leginska, Emile Ferir, Germain Schnitzer, and others.

A contract for a tour of concerts in five leading Canadian cities has been signed for Marie Rappold by her manager, M. H. Hanson. There is a clause in the contract which stipulates that the tour will be postponed until the fall of 1926 if, by March 1, Mme. Rappold decides to accept an invitation to sing during the coming season in Copenhagen, Helsingborg, Aarkus, in Denmark, and Stockholm, Nalmo, and Gothenburg in Sweden, and in some ten Norwegian cities, including three appearances with the symphony orchestra in Christiania.

Arthur Shattuck filled engagements with music clubs in Ashland, Wis., and Ironwood, Mich., on February 2 and 4. In the two weeks following he is playing a recital program in the series of Twilight Musicales in Milwaukee, with the Detroit Symphony orchestra in Ann Arbor in combination with Messrs. Maier and Pattison, and a recital program under the auspices of the Piano Teachers' Association in St. Louis. During early March, Mr. Shattuck will play with the Chicago, Detroit and Cincinnati symphony orchestras.

Mme. Charles Cahier has been engaged by the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam for three performances of Bach's St. Matthew's Passion in May under the direction of Willem Mengelberg. With her family, Mme. Cahier will sail on the Rotterdam on May 2.

The Schola Cantorum, Kurt Schindler, conductor, announces as soloists for its next concert at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, February 24, Lillian Gustafson, soprano; Alma Kitchell, contralto, and Frederic Baer, baritone. The chorus will sing an a cappella program of English choral works, Basque and Catalan songs, music from the Rhineland and Switzerland, Kentucky Mountain tunes and Swedish folksongs, including, as usual, many novelties.

Extending his tour right up until his departure for Europe, George Perkins Raymond, tenor, has been booked to appear in Garden City on March 7 and in Plainfield two days later.

Samuel Dushkin will give his second violin recital in New York on Sunday afternoon, February 22, at which he will play a Viotti concerto, a group of music from the eighteenth century, another group of modern pieces, and the Rhapsody on Hebrew themes by Blair Fairchild. It will be the premiere of this work in America which had its initial orchestral performance by Dushkin at the Colonne concerts in Paris.

Claire Dux will give her second New York recital of the season at Aeolian Hall Sunday afternoon, the program being made up entirely of German and American songs. The composers represented are Mozart, Deems Taylor, Hageman, Carpenter, Liszt, Strauss and Hadley. Mr. Hadley will be at the piano for a group of his songs and Bruno Seidler-Winkler will acmopany the rest of the program.

Rudolph Polk, American violinist, gave his first New York concert of the season at Carnegie Hall last Friday evening. He was accompanied by sixty members of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Artur Bodanzky.

The Letz Quartet played at Columbia University on Thursday afternoon. It will be heard in Pittsburgh, Pa., on February 27 and in Birmingham, Ala., on February 28. Other southern engagements will follow in Spartanburg, Chapel Hill, S. C., and Roanoke, Va.

Cecil Arden of the Metropolitan Opera Company sang at the Annual Alumni Banquet of Emory College in Atlanta, Ga., at the Capitol City Club, on Monday evening, January 26.

The Chicago String Quartet gave a concert in Peoria, Ill., recently, under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club. The Quartet, made up of Herman Felber, Carl Fasshauer, Robert Dolejsi, and Naoum Benditzky, played Haydn's Quartet in B flat major, Bridge's Londonderry Air, Speaight's Puck, and Dvorak's Quartet in F major.

Renee Thornton's next appearance in Chicago will be on March 23, when she will give a recital program there under the auspices of the Musicians Club of Women. Richard Hageman will be at the piano for Miss Thornton, who in private life is Mrs. Richard Hageman.

The fourth of the series of free orchestral programs given last month in the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art, David Mannes conducting, closed the series for January on the evening of the 24th. The program included Dvorak's New World Symphony, excerpts from Gluck's Iphigenia and Wagner's Tristan, and compositions of Brahms, Tschaikowsky, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Johann Strauss. Another series of four concerts will be given in March.

In the sixth of his historical series of recitals in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of January 24, Ernest Hutcheson, pianist, gave the first of his two programs devoted to modern musicians. He played compositions of MacDowell, Brockway, Griffes, d'Albert, Strauss, Korngold, Reger, Dohnanyi, Paderewski, Moussorgsky, and Godowsky.

Gitta Gradova will give the first public performance in America of Scriabine's piano concerto at New Orleans on March 28, when she will be soloist with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

It has been announced that Rudolph Laubenthal, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing the leading tenor parts in Verdi's Requiem, Schumann's Pilgrimage of the Rose and others with the San Francisco Symphony under the leadership of Alfred Hertz.

A new ensemble, consisting of a string quartet, piano and clarinet and calling itself the Stringwood Ensemble, will make its debut at Aeolian Hall on Monday evening, March 2, and will introduce for the first time in public a trio by Stravinsky and a sextette by Prokofieff.

Spring festival engagements lately booked for Marie Sundelius include an appearance at the Chicago North Shore Festival Association at Evanston, Ill., on May 28, 1925.

From Havana, where he is spending the winter, John Philip Sousa, the famous bandmaster, has sent the news that he has found the material for a Cuban suite, which will be one of the features of his forthcoming thirty-third annual tour. The suite utilizes in the Sousa manner previously existing themes, and is divided into three movements, 1875, 1898 and 1925. The 1875 movement is an impression of Cuba under the Spanish rule, while in the 1898 movement the American ragtime (with even a bar or two of Hot Time) is heard working its first influence upon Cuban music. The last movement is the composer's reactions to modern Latin-American jazz.

Mischa Elman and his string quartet will give the second of a series of three chamber music concerts at Town Hall on Wednesday evening. The program will comprise quartets by Beethoven and Schumann and a quintet by Mozart.

Mr. Elman's associates in the quartet are Edward Bachman, second violin; Nicolas Moldovan, viola, and Horace Britt, cello. The assisting artist for the Mozart quintet will be William Schubert, viola.

A second song recital will be given in Aeolian Hall, New York, by George Morgan on Wednesday evening, February 18.

Eduard Zathurezky, violinist, who made his debut at Carnegie Hall January 20, has been engaged to appear as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Bruno Walter, conducting, on February 26 and 27. He has also been booked to appear in recitals in Boston on February 23 at Jordan Hall and in Chicago February 13 at Orchestra Hall.

Mischa Levitzki has just made arrangements for a tour of China, Japan, Java and the Philippine Islands which will preclude his being heard in the eastern part of the United States the greater part of the coming season. Mr. Levitzki will play first in Java and make the final appearances of his tour in Japan, opening at the Imperial Theatre in Tokyo on November 27. His last New York recital of this season will occur on March 14 at Carnegie Hall.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

WINIFRED BYRD
America's Pianist
Management: Marie Gouled
25 West 42d St., New York

Signor Bossi Discusses Organs

Italian Virtuoso Praises the American Instruments Which He Has Played on His First Tour Here.

MARCO ENRICO BOSSI, Italian organist and composer, who made his American debut on January 20 in the New York Wanamaker Auditorium, will make his final appearance here this season tomorrow afternoon in the same hall.

Next Saturday Signor Bossi will sail for Italy, after having given six concerts in this country in the Wanamaker Auditoriums in both New York and Philadelphia. Signor Bossi admitted that he would be glad to get home, much as he has enjoyed his American trip. In his slow English, he explained that he has been troubled with an abscess in his ear during his visit which bothers him particularly when he is playing. He seemed to feel that the warmer climate of his native land will help to effect a cure.

With Signor Bossi ill-at-ease in English, and the interviewer floundering in extremely bad French, it was deemed advisable to call upon Mr. Russell, concert manager of the Wanamaker Auditorium, to act as interpreter. In fluent and rapid French, the organist told of his great admiration for the American organs that he has seen. He has found, he said, that the organs in this country more than live up to the enviable reputation which they have in Europe.

"These organs in your country are marvelous," he said. 'Their mechanical perfection—their suppleness and flexibility—enable the artist to obtain a great variety of colors and orchestral effects. This absolute freedom from mechanical restraint allows a wider variety of expressive means."

Signor Bossi has played hundreds of organs in his own and other European countries, but, as a rule, these have been typical church organs. He admitted that playing this sort of an organ with an orchestra is not entirely successful because the instruments do not blend perfectly.

"They are like—how shall I say?" he struggled to express his thought but, in desperation, lapsed into the more familiar French. "Ils sont comme le Pape et l'Empereur—they do not get along together very well. But the organs in this country, they would blend beautifully."

When the Italian organist first came here, it was difficult for him to accustom himself to the curved pedal board of our large concert organs. Having always used the old-fashioned flat pedal board, he found himself at a loss for a time. Now that he has become familiar with this innovation, he is enthusiastic over it, and plans to recommend highly this type of pedal board on his return to Italy. Signor Bossi said that, having found it both comfortable and logical, and permitting of greater freedom, he thought that the change would be particularly valuable for students.

Another feature of the American organs which the visiting organist indorses is the slanted keyboard which enables the player to keep his hands at right angles to the keys of any of the three rows.

"With the orchestral colors and effects which one can draw from such an instrument," continued Signor Bossi, "it would be indeed simple to make transcriptions for the organ of many great orchestral compositions. This eventually will greatly enrich organ literature."

Born of a musical family, Marco Bossi was graduated from the Milan Conservatory, and became organist of Como Cathedral at the age of twenty-one. In addition to making concert tours and composing many chamber music works, oratorios, and orchestral compositions, Signor Bossi has been indentified at various times with the Royal Conservatory at Naples, the Marcello Lyceum at Venice, and more recently as director of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome. K. K.

MARCO ENRICO BOSSI

Van Vliet Chamber Music

Elly Ney was the assisting artist of the second of Cornelius van Vliet's Chamber Music Concerts given in Rumford Hall, New York, on January 29. The program, devoted to romantic music, included Mendelssohn's B flat Sonata, six Travel Pictures by Kiel, an Adagio and Allegro by Schumann, and Schubert's Forellen Quintet. Others appearing in the concert were Hans Lange, violin; Samuel Lifschey, viola; Bruno Jaenecke, French horn; A. Fortier, double bass, and Mr. van Vliet, cello.

Mme. Ney, who appeared in each number, was, to quote the Sun reviewer, "very warmly received." Special mention was made by this writer of the "beautiful" playing by Mme. Ney and Mr. van Vliet in the Kiel number.

Enesco Recital Is Heard in Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Feb. 4.—The recital of Georges Enesco, violinist, last Thursday evening at the Hotel Sinton under the management of Minnie Tracy, aroused keen interest among an audience of musical distinction. The program included a Nardini Sonata, the Chausson Poeme, and pieces by Corelli, Saint-Saens, and Sarasate.

Mr. Enesco's playing called forth from Samuel Wilson, reviewer of the Commercial Tribune, the opinion that there were "moments when one felt that one had never before heard the voice of the violin; Enesco the artist matched Enesco the technician."

Mr. Goldenburg of the Enquirer was particularly impressed by the artistic bowing and beauty of tone of the Roumanian violinist, and Mrs. Smith wrote in the Times-Star that in the ordinary sense of the word Mr. Enesco was not a virtuoso, but that his playing was an "effort of the soul to assert itself spiritually."

"An artist in a class by himself," was the judgment of Mrs. Plogstedt in her report of the concert in the Post.

The young people's concert of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra on January 20, featured Ary Van Leeuween, flutist, in a Rigoletto paraphrase. Selections of Tschaikowsky, Weiner, Sibelius, and Jarnfeldt were played, with Mr. Reiner conducting.

In a concert at the St. John's Unitarian Church last Sunday afternoon Mme. Liszniewska played the piano in a Chopin group, Schumann's Scenes from Childhood, and Beethoven's Sonata Opus 18. John A. Hoffmann, tenor, sang, and was accompanied by Leo Palz. Mme. Liszniewska's "technical perfection" and "musicianship" were noted in the Press. B. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY
of
SAN FRANCISCO
(Founded 1916 by Elias Hecht)
Musical Direction—Louis Persinger

Distinguished American Ensemble Organization

Louis Persinger Nathan Firestone
Louis Ford Walter Ferner
Elias Hecht

AVAILABLE FOR AMERICA FOR 1925-26 SEASON

For Terms and Dates apply to

MANAGEMENT:
CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY
708 Kohl Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

or

MAUD W. GIBBON
New York Representative
129 West 48th Street, New York

Voice, Vocal Art and Personality are Qualities being Emphasized by Reviewers of

MAY KORB

"MAY KORB SHOWS POLISHED ART IN SINGING AT WALLACE HALL.

"Coming from a song recital by May Korb, the sensitive hearer who has heard many masters and mistresses of bel canto carries away the impression that she is one of the most polished vocal artists to be heard on lyric stages and in concert halls today."—Newark Evening News, Dec. 4, 1924.

"2300 PERSONS VIGOROUSLY APPLAUD MISS MAY KORB AND CITY ORGANIST CRONHAM AT SUNDAY RECITAL.

"May Korb delighted her listeners with a voice of exquisite quality and flexibility, coupled with a dainty and attractive personality."—Portland, Me., Press Herald, Jan. 19, 1925.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Exclusive Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York City

Announce North Shore Schedule

Fifteen Soloists to Take Part in Seven Programs; Stock to Lead Prize Work.

The complete schedule of the Chicago North Shore Music Festival, to take place on the evenings of May 25, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30, and the afternoon of the last day, has been announced.

The solo artists who will take part are:

Florence Macbeth, soprano; Arthur Kraft, tenor; Elliott Shaw, bass; Marie Sundelius, soprano; Theo Karle, tenor; William Gustafson, bass; Gladys Swarthout, contralto; Ernest Davis, tenor; Vittorio Trevisan, bass; Rosa Ponselle, soprano; Lawrence Tibbett, baritone; Tamaki Miura, soprano; Mario Chamlee, tenor; Tito Schipa, tenor, and Percy Grainger, pianist.

Frederick Stock will conduct the orchestra, which will consist entirely of the personnel of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Peter Lutkin, music director; Osbourne MacConathy, associate conductor; Percy Grainger, guest conductor and composer, and Charles M. Loeffler, guest conductor and composer, will also take part in the various programs.

The seven programs for the festival follow:

Monday, May 25—Haydn's Creation, sung by the festival chorus of 600, augmented to 1,000 for the evening, together with Florence Macbeth, Arthur Kraft, and Elliott Shaw as soloists, and Peter Lutkin conducting.

May 26—First artists' night, with Rosa Ponselle and Lawrence Tibbett in arias and duets, and the Chicago Symphony under Frederick Stock in orchestral numbers.

May 27—Tamaki Miura and Mario Chamlee in operatic selections, and the orchestra under Mr. Stock in orchestral numbers.

May 28—Horatio Parker's St. Christopher, sung by the chorus, together with Marie Sundelius, Theo Karle, William Gustafson, and the orchestra under Peter Lutkin.

May 29—Orchestra competition contest, at which five compositions chosen from the eighty-four orchestral scores already submitted will be played under Mr. Stock, and the jury (Percy Grainger, Charles M. Loeffler, and Richard Hageman) will choose the best work for the prize of $1,000, and the two next best for performance by the Chicago Orchestra during its regular concerts next season.

May 30 (afternoon)—Young people's matinee, at which the opera Martha will be given with a children's chorus of 1,500 singing the choral parts. The cast to sing in costume will be Florence Macbeth, as Martha; Gladys Swarthout, as Nancy; Ernest Davis, as Lionel; Mr. Trevisan, as Tristan, and a Plunkett yet to be chosen. Mr. MacConathy will conduct.

May 30 (evening)—Final concert, at which Tito Schipa will sing two arias, Mr. Grainger will play with orchestra, and Mr. Stock will conduct the prize winning composition and other orchestral numbers.

Chicago Opera on Tour

TONIGHT
Boris Godunoff, in Washington, D. C.
WEDNESDAY
Thais, in Baltimore, Md.
THURSDAY
Mefistofele, in Baltimore, Md.
FRIDAY
Lucia, in Washington, D. C.
SATURDAY
Thais (matinee), in Washington, D. C.
Gioconda (evening), in Baltimore, Md.
MONDAY
Boris Godunoff, in Pittsburgh, Pa.

French Composer Arrives

Mlle. Germaine Tailleferre, French pianist and composer, a member of the Paris Six, arrived in New York on February 1. She said that her newest composition, a piano concerto, was to be performed this season by the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Philharmonic orchestras.

Vladimir Shavitch and Mrs. Shavitch (Mme. Tina Lerner, pianist) were on the same ship, the France, returning from their recent London appearances.

Opera Singers in Concert

Under the leadership of Giuseppe Bamboschek, Mmes. Peralta, Dalossy, Ryan, Sabanieva, Wells, Bonetti, Gordon, and Wakefield and Messrs. Altglass, Chamlee, Errolle, Paltrinieri, Tokatyan, d'Angelo, Picco, Tibbett, Schutzendorf, Ananian, Didur, Gustafson, and Rothier together with the Metropolitan orchestra and chorus, took part in the Sunday evening concert at the opera house on Feb. 1.

To Give Tschaikowsky Operetta

Natja, an operetta by Tschaikowsky, is scheduled for presentation at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, next Monday evening.

Arthur Hadley Plays In Brother's Piece

Boston, Feb. 2.—Henry Hadley appeared for the second time this season as guest conductor of the People's Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. His brother, Arthur, violoncellist, played Mr. Hadley's Suite Ancienne. On the program were also Haydn's Symphony in B flat, Liszt's Love's Dream, and a Strauss Waltz. Henry Hadley is well known to Bostonians and, according to the reviewers, he deepened the excellent impression he has made here before. The Globe reviewer said that Arthur Hadley was "an admirable violoncellist who played with fine musicianship."

At his first recital here, Hyman Rovinsky offered a program featured by modern compositions. In spite of a tendency to "blur his outlines" and "over aesthetize in his interpretation," the Herald reviewer considered that he showed "both musical taste and sensibility." The Christian Science Monitor writer, who wrote that "he promises much," found that his "playing is based on a sound technique, far from infallible but very dependable. . . . His tone color is varied." In the Transcript he was lauded for an "impeccable, large technique," although this writer disliked the way he over-emotionalized each phrase.

During the last week there were three second appearances. Roland Hayes returned to Boston yesterday and added to the high opinion the public and critics have of him by his excellent singing; Alexander Brailowsky gave his second piano recital and confirmed the impression he made here before; and Kathleen McAlister's song recital was commended by the press.

Ellen Ballon

Pianiste

made a distinct impression at her New York recital on January seventh and in Montreal on January fourteenth

Olin Downes in New York Times, Jan. 8, 1925

"Youth," said Franz Liszt, "is the time for Virtuosity." Budding virtuosity, a natural gift, which has evidently been sedulously cultivated, for piano playing, and a tone which when unforced had singing and sensuous quality, were the outstanding characteristics of the piano recital given by Miss Ellen Ballon yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall.

New York Sun, Jan. 8, 1925

Her tone was firm and resonant, revealed in glowing legato of considerable flexibility, and her musical structures revealed an intelligent appreciation of significant details.

New York American, Jan 8, 1925

Her program provided a representative test and Miss Ballon again emphasized that she is a highly gifted pianist, possessing individuality, solid musical foundation and complete technical equipment. Everything she does is tempered by sound art and colored by lively interpretative fancy.

La Presse, Montreal, Jan. 15, 1925

In Miss Ballon are united all the qualities expected of a great pianist.

Montreal Herald, Jan. 15, 1925

Miss Ballon's recital was a masterly performance, clearly demonstrating the intellectual as well as the emotional qualities of her art.

Montreal Gazette, Jan. 15, 1925

Ellen Ballon, in recital at Windsor Hall last night, brought Montreal music as is often read about but rarely heard; masterful, facile, intellectual and at the same time emotional without being extravagant.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Management
DANIEL MAYER

STEINWAY PIANO

Aeolian Hall, New York

Nicholas Medtner in Recital of His Works

Russian Composer Plays Piano and Is Assisted by Elizabeth Santagano, Soprano.

Appearing as composer and pianist, Nicholas Medtner gave a recital at Aeolian Hall on February 2. Elizabeth Santagano, soprano, sang several of the Russian composer's songs, with him as accompanist. Some of the works played by Mr. Medtner were an early Sonata in C major, the Russian, the Magic Fiddle, the Morning Song, the Woodland Dance, and the Dithyrambic Dance.

Ernest Newman of the Post considered him a musician's musician who makes little "immediate appeal to the man in the street." Medtner's music, to him, is "as stark and strong as Brahms at his best . . . it is sinewy, athletic, and, for its weight, amazingly flexible, for Medtner is a master of combined and contrasted rhythms." According to Mr. Newman, Mr. Medtner "plays his music in his own spirit—with thorough technical competence."

Writing of his compositions, W. J. Henderson of the Sun commented that "his feeling for harmony holds him to clearly defined tonalities and fundamental key relationship . . . he is fond of sharp rhythms and of syncopation." F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune) found "the shorter pieces were agreeably melodious."

According to Deems Taylor of the World, "one admired the technical command of Mr. Medtner, and his economy in handling material, without being inordinately stirred by the emotional content of the works themselves."

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that "he writes for the piano with scholarship and brilliancy. . . . For Mr. Medtner, the composer, our admiration is qualified; as a pianist he gave performances of the first rank, playing with complete technical mastery and with a fire and rhythmic vitality that won a richly deserved applause." In the Telegram-Mail, his pieces were spoken of as "thick, ponderous, austere, drab in color, monotonous in mood."

Of Mme. Santagano, Olin Downes commented that "often she intensified the music by her feeling and conviction" and that "technical shortcomings" were forgotten "as the voice became warmer, the performances more vivid, and the personality of the singer gained sway with the audience." The other reviewers wrote likewise.

Sokoloff Conducts All-Wagner Program

Elsa Alsen and Whitehill Assist; Deering Is Soloist in Pop Concert.

Cleveland, Feb. 2.—An all-Wagner program was offered by the Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff conducting, with Elsa Alsen, soprano, and Clarence Whitehill, baritone, as soloists. On the program were excerpts from Lohengrin, Meistersinger, Tristan, and the Valkyries.

Eleanor Clarage (Times) wrote that Mme. Alsen revealed herself as a "superb artist" who sang "with a vital glowing enthusiasm that swept her audience along in the excitement of her magnificent interpretations." Wilson G. Smith of the Press found her voice "opulent, voluminous, and vibrant," one which fulfills "all the requirements of intense emotional and dramatic expression." According to Archie Bell (News), Mme. Alsen "naturally scored a triumph." In the Love Death song from Tristan she sang, to quote James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer, "with compelling fervor and passion, and reached heights of moving exaltation."

In Mr. Rogers' opinion, Mr. Whitehill found his "greatest success, as well as his greatest opportunity, in the excerpt from the Valkyries. He was a vocally commanding Wotan. His voice has impressive volume and sonority, as well as agreeable musical texture." Mr. Bell agreed that it was in this work that "he maintained his position as a singer fully deserving of his reputation and the good things that have been said of him." According to Mr. Smith, his voice "seemed inadequate to its demands." Eleanor Clarage wrote in the Times that his voice "is a powerful baritone, which he handles easily and pleasingly."

Henri Deering, pianist, was the soloist at the pop concert yesterday afternoon of the orchestra. Mr. Sokoloff offered Wagner's Tannhauser Overture, Von Suppe's Light Cavalry Overture, Debussy's Sarabande and Danse, and Gillet's waltz Loin de Bal.

According to James H. Rogers, Mr. Deering played the Rachmaninoff Second Concerto in "effective, well rounded and thoroughly enjoyable fashion." Mr. Smith thought he played the work "with much brilliancy and virility." However, this writer thought that he lacked "tonal variety."

Eleanor Clarage declared that passages were often blurred "and Mr. Deering's effects hampered by a lack of tone and a certain listlessness."

A large crowd heard Fritz Kreisler play at Masonic Hall Monday night.

Louise Homer did not appear as scheduled with her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, in the concert Friday night under the auspices of the Business Woman's Club. At the time of the concert Mme. Homer was snowbound near Utica together with her accompanist. Mrs. Stires appeared, however, and was assisted by Andre de Ribaupierre, Cleveland violinist, who was called upon at the last moment, and by Ruth M. Edwards, as accompanist.

Mrs. Stires, in the words of Eleanor Clarage, displayed a voice "of pleasing clarity, although not remarkable either in warmth or power. But she sings with admirable finish, and reveals an exceptionally gracious and charming personality." Mr. Rogers wrote that her voice is of "fresh, clear, youthful timbre; round, full and telling. It is also of noteworthy range and of no little flexibility."

According to this reviewer, Mr. Ribaupierre "played with admirable finish and assurance" and "charm, skill, and ripe intelligence were manifest in the performance."

MISS TINA FILIPPONI

Whose Recent New York Piano Recital Included a Distinctive Group of Spanish Compositions.

Seattle Concerts

Seattle, Jan. 25.—Variety has been the key-note of the offerings for the month of January. Something for every music lover and a fine attendance for the various attractions have been the rule.

St. Olaf's Choir, directed by F. Melius Christiansen was heard here for the first time. The large auditorium of the First Presbyterian Church was filled to overflowing and hundreds were turned away.

Sophie Braslau's voice has never been heard here to better advantage than when she sang on January 2. Her recital was the first scheduled by the Men's Club of the First Presbyterian Church.

The Spargurs were heard in concert in the Spanish Ballroom of the Olympic Hotel and the large audience enjoyed a program composed of selections from the works of Schubert, Bridge, Glazounow and Debussy.

The Palmerton-Mendel Concert Bureau featured the Cherniavsky Trio on January 13 at the Metropolitan Theatre. The playing of these artists was greatly enjoyed by the audience, among whom was Jascha Heifetz, who dropped in during the concert and remained throughout the performance. The following evening Mr. Heifetz once again demonstrated his popularity with a Seattle audience. He played to a crowded house and responded generously to encores. This was the second of the Men's Club series of the First Presbyterian Church.

Marcel Grandjany, harpist, appeared here on January 5 and was well received.

Maria Ivogun drew a packed house on January 23. Her fine singing of the previous year was remembered and this year she gave even greater pleasure. Her appearance was sponsored by the Men's Club of the Plymouth Church.

A week of grand opera by the San Carlo forces is just closing. The only opera given which was new to Seattle was Andrea Chenier. The company has been singing to full houses and has been well received.

H. G. S.

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

RE JOHN McCORMACK

"Golden Summertime of Song"

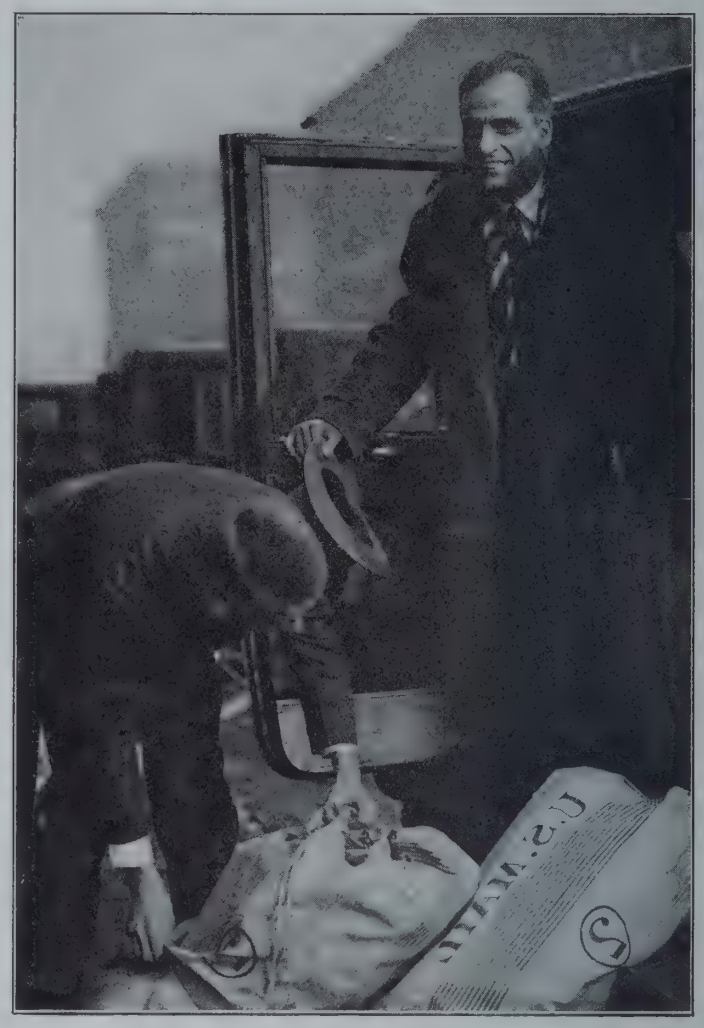
"John McCormack did some golden singing last night at Carnegie Hall. We might use a whole handful of adjectives besides that one but they wouldn't describe the thing any more adequately. There was, indeed, this golden flow to his voice such as no other tenor of the day quite achieves, and that no one has heard from anyone else since Caruso in his best years.

"The tenor is now in the ripe fullness of his powers, his art has grown to be something that is interesting to people not merely satisfied with the obvious, and his voice, as we have said, is in its golden Summertime."

N. Y. Evening Journal.

IN RESPONSE TO THOUSANDS OF REQUESTS FROM THOSE WHO HEARD HIM OVER THE RADIO ON JAN. 26

FRANCIS MACMILLEN



At the left, Macmillen playing into the Microphone at K S D, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch high-powered station. At the right, Macmillen arriving at the Post-Dispatch Building to get his mail 48 hours after having been broadcasted. He received thousands of congratulatory letters from all over America, as the bulging sacks indicate.

AGAIN WILL BROADCAST

FROM THE FAMOUS ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH HIGH-POWERED STATION

TIME OF CONCERT
Eastern - - -	10:00
Central - - -	9:00
Rocky Mt. - - .	8:00
Coast - - -	7:00

K S D

(New Wave Length 545.1 Meters)

TIME OF CONCERT
Eastern - - -	10:00
Central - - -	9:00
Rocky Mt. - - -	8:00
Coast - - -	7:00

LISTEN IN!

Monday Evening, Feb. 16

HAVE A RADIO PARTY!

To Those Who Have "Listened In" on Macmillen

Did you enjoy Mr. Macmillen's playing? If you did, wouldn't you like to see and hear him "in person"? If you would, do you know that you can create the opportunity with a two-cent postage stamp? How? Here's the answer:

Write to your local concert manager or the president of your musical club, or the heads of any other organizations in your city who annually promote concert series for which distinguished artists are engaged, and tell them that you wish to hear Macmillen and that you are a prospective ticket purchaser for the series if Macmillen is engaged.

To the local manager this should mean "drawing power"; this means a demand for and the sale of tickets; it means a large audience; a large audience is an inspiration to an artist; this means that he will be at his best when you hear him. If you enjoyed Macmillen over the radio, how much more do you believe you would enjoy the "real thing"?

Write to your local manager or talk with him at the first opportunity and urge him to engage Macmillen, thereby proving to him that the "Radio" has created an entirely new clientele for the concert business. The booking season for the 1925-26 concert season is now in full swing. Therefore, if you wish Mr. Macmillen to play in your city, write or see your local manager at once.

. . . PROGRAM . . .

1

Andante and Finale from the Concerto . . Mendelssohn
(Repeated from last Radio Program by Universal request)

2

First Movement, Allegro Moderato, from the Concerto
Tschaikowsky

3

Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso . . . Saint-Saens

4

Aria . . . . . Bach
Gigue . . . . . Rust
Gavotte . . . . . Chantrelle-Macmillen

5

Senerade . . . . . Arensky
Swing Song . . . . . Ethel Barnes
Senerade a Colombine . . . . . Pierna
Saltellato Caprice . . . . . Randegger

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

British Opera Goes on Tour

Gustav Holst Writes on the Falstaff Motif; Budapest String Quartet Heard in London.

London.

After a season and a half of concert-giving in England Evelyn Scotney, soprano, has been engaged to sing coloratura roles with the British National Opera Company. She is not unknown to the American public,

The tour of the B. N. O. C., now in receipt of a grant-in-aid from the Carnegie United Trust, begins at Bradford on February 2, and Miss Scotney makes her debut a week later as Gilda in Rigoletto. The press notes that she was at one time a member of the Boston Opera Company and the Metropolitan of New York.

From Bradford the company moves to Liverpool, then to Birmingham, Manchester and Cardiff.

While New York is still discussing Verdi's Falstaff, the announcement is made in London that Gustav Holst, composer of The Perfect Fool, will have an opera on the same subject ready for production this season. It will probably be called Henry IV, and the text is supposed to be drawn largely from Shakespearean historical dramas of the period.

Continue Praise of Shavitch

One more critique from a late paper remains to complete the story of Vladimir Shavitch's reception as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. It comes from the Sunday Times, and says in part: "His quiet bearing is consistent with a cast of mind that plainly aims not at taking the listener by forced marches through tortuous by-paths known only to himself, but with willing feet, along the well-conned highway, in following which the pleasure of picking up each well-beloved landmark shall be shared by all. The method is one that calls for the deeper qualities of generalship and won him cordial respect."

The same writer thought that there were "many gratifying moments in the piano concerto" in which Mme. Lerner, Mr. Shavitch's wife, was soloist. "The unhasty precision of her arm and finger work, in noticeable evidence in the difficult double-octave passages, and the unforced elasticity of her interpretation, were exemplary."

Notable recitals have not been many recently. The local pianists in repeat appearances won hearty commendation—Harriet Cohen and the young Solomon, who, for reasons best known to himself, keeps his first name a closely-guarded secret. Benno Moiseiwitsch also gave a concert, not his first for the season. Only the Telegraph comment is available at the moment, which commends the "inherent sense of fitness and proportion" his playing evidenced.

A new chamber music body—new, that is, to London—chose this week for its debut. Opinions as to its merits differed. It hails from Budapest, and bears the name of its native city. The Times puts the ensemble "among the many fine string quartets which have recently visited us from the Continent," giving the players "a high place." The Sunday Times complained only of an occasional too rigid rhythm, a criticism in which the Post writer concurred, but Mr. Scholes of the Observer was "disappointed," finding the playing "sound, but not subtle."

P. L.

American Sings in Nice

Madeleine Keltie of Boston achieved a triumph at the Nice Opera House in Madama Butterfly on February 3, according to a dispatch in the New York Times. Miss Keltie will sing again in Cannes and will then go to Milan for a season, and later to the San Carlo in Naples. The American singer has appeared in concert as well as opera on the continent.

Wagner Opera at La Scala

Milan. — Wagner's Valkyries was produced at La Scala at the end of December. The tenor Dolci, and Signora Llopart sang, and Panizza directed.

Toscanini Calls Off Opera; Cast Declared Inadequate

Milan.

THE expected performances of Trovatore at La Scala this season have been called off. The opera will not be in the repertory of the company this year, although the preparations for its production got as far as a general rehearsal. It is said that Toscanini is dissatisfied with the cast, which he considers inadequate.

Such an occurrence is not without precedent in the history of La Scala, although the last incident of the kind took place a number of years ago, when Giulio Gatti-Casazza was director of the company. At that time a scheduled performance of Norma was withdrawn, and La Scala found itself unexpectedly besieged with the law suits of the protagonist, the now deceased Signora de Frate. At that time also the withdrawal took place at the request of Arturo Toscanini.

F. C.

French Works in Spain

Barcelona. — A series of French operas have been given recently at the Liceo Theatre. Those produced thus far are Louise, with Trantone of the Paris Opera in the part of Julien; Mme. Davidoff, as Carmen; Mlle. Sadoven and Vigneau, the baritone, in Herodiade, and Mlle. Luart with MM. Trantone, Vigneau, and Delval in Manon. M. Defosse, in charge of the French section of the opera, has received many congratulations for his part in the productions.

Nantes Hears Boris

Nantes.—The outstanding event of the present season has been the first production of Boris Godunoff at the Theatre Graslin. The presentation was made possible by the efforts of Director Georges Coste, who even engaged the Chorale Nantais to participate in the Russian work.

Those appearing in the opera were Redon, as Boris, Mlle. Buscaglia, as the Tsarevitch Theodore, and Mme. Freville. M. Dobbelaer conducted.

Acclaim Paderewski In Return to Rome

Rome.

Ignatz Paderewski, after long absence from Rome, appeared in public here on January 14. The auditorium of L'Augusteum was crowded with one of the most intellectual and aristocratic audiences which Rome is able to gather. The Queen herself was present, with the Princess Mafalda.

The reception accorded the pianist by the public was one which will be remembered for many years. According to Roman reviewers Mendelssohn's Variations Serieuses were played with ideal clarity. In the Schumann Fantasy, Op. 17, Paderewski overcame the technical difficulties of the composition with ease, and revealed in admirable clearness the melodic line and the symphonic substance of the music, said Signor Alaleona, in Il Mondo.

This reviewer described the interpretation of Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata as "calm, noble, and largely conceived," and said that the calm, the self-control, the Olympian serenity, together with the passion, feeling, and fervor of the interpretation breathed the very spirit of the composer.

Signor Gasco wrote that the dizzy ending of the Sonata was performed with a dash and technical perfection which were above praise—which made the listener think of that "unique pianist," Ferruccio Busoni.

"It would be impossible," wrote Signor Alaleone, to give any idea in words of the manner in which Paderewski created again the music of Chopin." The pianist included in his program a Nocturne, Ballad, Scherzo, and Mazurka of his compatriot.

The reviewers made the same enthusiastic comments concerning the technical skill, the fire, and the poetry with which Paderewski played the Liszt group on his program. Signor Gasco summed up his remarks in the words: "More than a pianist, Paderewski is a sublime poet." This was the tenor of all the other reviews.

F. C.

BONCI

VOCAL STUDIO

For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.

Knabe Piano

GALLI-CURCI

Homer Samuels Pianist

Victor Records

Manuel Berenguer Flutist

Steinway Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA

Victor Records

Mason & Hamlin Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

GRAVEURE

IN

LEADING MUSIC CENTERS

"By musical experts here, Graveure is considered the first of living concert singers." Stockholm, Sweden, Somder Dagbladed.

"Graveure's highly instructive singing-culture, his superior control of his wonderful voice, his art of respiration and finely characterized manner of phrasing are exceptional." Stockholm, Sweden, Nye Daglij Allehanden.

Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau Aeolian Hall New York City

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Miarka Revived at Opera

Revised Piece Heard Again in Paris; Ukrainian Chorus Sings; Academy Elects Bruneau.

Paris.

After it had been absent from the repertory for twenty years, Miarka, a lyric drama in a prologue and two acts by Alexandre Georges, has just been revived at the Grand Opera. Originally the piece was given at the Opera-Comique in 1905 in a form which included five acts.

At its premiere at that time French critics were divided in their opinions regarding the merits of the work. Alfred Bruneau and Gauthier-Villars were inclined to speak of Georges' work in terms of praise, while Gabriel Faure and Paul Souday were severe in their judgment.

Despite the great changes which have been made in the piece, even so far as the omission of whole parts, Miarka seems to have been little improved. The story remains incoherent.

There were shortcomings in connection with this recent production at the Opera which might have been avoided. The settings were not effective, and the orchestra was permitted frequently to drown out the voices of the singers.

Singing Excellent

Nevertheless the singers in the leading parts did excellently. Yvonne Gall in the title part stood out. She was obliged to repeat the principal air of the second act. Her brilliant voice was used with utmost delicacy.

The baritone Duclos sang his part with fervor and conviction, and showed considerable acting ability. M. Dutreix, tenor, sang the part of the King of Bohemia. It was clear that he understood the role, and his voice was well suited to it. Mme. Lise Charny was somewhat uncertain of her lines, and her voice was uneven.

Henri Busser was the conductor, but his influence was not felt as much as it might be because of the fact that the opera had only two rehearsals before it was publicly produced.

Rigoletto holds its own at the Opera. Scarcely a fortnight passes but what it appears on the bill. The performances of this work are usually good vocally, but the scenery needs repainting. The Opera usually uses Rigoletto as a vehicle for the presentation of the various guest coloraturas who appear here from season to season. Strangely enough it does not draw very well with the public. It is one of the poorest paying operas in the entire repertory of the company.

An all-French cast sang in the most recent Opera Rigoletto. M. Duclos had the title role, of which his delineation was dramatic and convincing. He sang well, too, the upper ranges of his voice being especially clear. Mlle. Monsy did the flourishes and trills of the part of Gilda with an easy technique and good intonation. M. Dutreix was the Duke. He sang his music with good taste and precision. Henri Busser conducted.

Ukrainian Chorus Sings

The Ukrainian Chorus is giving a short series of concerts at the Theatre Albert I. The organization has been reduced in numbers since its past Paris appearances. It includes now about five woman singers and twice that many male voices.

The general rendition of the Russian songs in the repertory of the chorus was excellent, but the group is too small to gain the necessary mass effects in the choral compositions which it undertakes. The effectiveness of the chorus is therefore limited, and the limitation becomes more noticeable from the fact that the ensemble chooses its programs too consistently from music of a heavy and serious nature.

Alfred Bruneau, one of the most popular of the contemporary French composers, has been elected to fill the chair at the Academie des Beaux Arts left vacant by the death of Gabriel Faure. In 1923 Bruneau's latest composition, Le Jardin du Paradis, was produced with success at the Opera.

At present M. Bruneau is at work upon a new opera entitled Angelo, Tyran de Padone, drawn from the play of Victor Hugo. This composer is also the author of several books relating to French contemporary music.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Singers Leave Brussels Opera

Brussels.—The Theatre de la Monnaie has sustained two losses this season in the resignations of Mme. Bovy, and the tenor, Burdino, to take effect on June 30, 1925.

Talks on Humor in Music

Paris, Jan. 19.—A lecture-recital on humor in music was given last Saturday evening by M. Y. Margat, pianist. To illustrate his views M. Margat played compositions of Bach, Rameau, Daquin, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Grieg, Schumann, Ravel, Debussy, and others.

Sing Meistersinger at Costanzi

Rome.—Wagner's Meistersinger was the last opera of the old year at the Costanzi. Journet sang the role of Hans Sachs, the baritone Parvis was Beckmesser, and the part of David was taken by Nardi. Signora Bugg appeared as Eva, and Walter was sung by Merli. Edoardo Vitale was the conductor.

PADEREWSKI AT HIS STEINWAY

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

ONLY the most extraordinary instrument can meet the demands of the great pianists. It must give perfect voice alike to the exquisite cadences of Chopin, the blazing fervor of Liszt, the serene magnificence of Bach. It must endure years of the hardest daily practice. Always it must become a live and singing thing at a touch, ever responsive to the hand and spirit of the musician. And the perfect tribute to the supremacy of the Steinway lies in its use and ownership by such pianists as Paderewski and Hofmann, Rachmaninoff and Levitzki. So universal is this recognition that, where only sincerely artistic motives are involved, the Steinway is invariably the choice of the master pianists.

The Steinway is made in numerous styles and sizes, sold at the lowest possible price and upon the most convenient terms. The majority are bought by people of moderate means and limited incomes. Yet they are bought on the same sound principle of economy that determines their purchase by the great musicians—that of buying the best. Always the cheapest. Always the assurance of the greatest advantage and return to the owner. You need never buy another piano.

There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. *Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

Plus transportation

STEINWAY & SONS, STEINWAY HALL
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

Give Second Augusteum Concert

Molinari Conducts Vittadini Novelty; Charpentier's Louise Again Sung at Costanzi.

Rome.

Bernardino Molinari has just presented to the public of the Augusteum concerts his second novelty of the season, Franco Vittadini's Armonie della Notte. The work pleased the audience, but there was a note of reserve in the reviews.

Signor Gasco of the Tribune declared that the use of the orchestral timbres in the work was skillful and colorful, and thought that the mood of the work was delicate in its sentiment. Nevertheless this writer did not feel that the composer has said anything of importance in his Armonie della Notte. To him the melodic ideas lacked freshness, and the composition was not firm in its structure. There were reminiscences, he added, of the styles of Wagner and Puccini.

Gasco concluded, "The personality of the composer in this work remains indefinite, nebulous; the most that one can say is that it is a music of pathetic lyricism."

Maestro Molinari was very much applauded by the audience, especially after the playing of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. He directed also Spontini's Olympia Overture, Elgar's Symphonic Variations, and Saint-Saens' Danse Macabre.

Louise at the Costanzi

With some of its superfluous social philosophy omitted, Charpentier's Louise was put on at the Costanzi on January 6. The public drank the beverage (some Italian critics would call it bitter) which had been prepared for them. The reception of this work was much warmer than it was in 1915 when Louise was first presented to the Roman opera-goers.

The reviewers considered the work at some length and in great detail. The attitude generally was one of reserve. Signor Gasco of La Tribune alone showed marked enthusiasm for Louise, so much so that the reader is apt to be driven to the conclusion that this writer had something to do with the decision of the impresario of the Costanzi, Emma Carelli, to produce the French opera again. He wrote, "Louise will live when all those bloodless operas of our own day are languishing deep in their graves among the perfumes of the lilies of the inconsolable aesthetes who will mourn them."

Vitale Conducts

Edoardo Vitale, the conductor, brought out in excellent detail and finish the two principal elements of the opera, its sentimental lyricism and the lovely atmosphere. The orchestral score was appropriately treated throughout.

Genevieve Vix sang the title part in a most spontaneous and human manner. In the duet of the first act, in the romanza of the third, and above all in the dramatic scene of the fourth she disclosed her talents as an excellent singer and an actress of nervous, vibrant passion. Marcel Journet with his clear voice and always eloquent gestures was effective in all his scenes, and in the last act particularly created an excellent illusion.

Francesco Merli sang the part of Giuliano with good voice, and acted with vivacity and passion. Anna Gramegna sang the part of the mother. The versatile tenor Nardi had two parts, and the minor roles were taken by Signore Lauri, Tesorieri, Santoro, Benincori, Porter, Caputo, de Franco, Panaleoni, and de Scusa, and Signori Belli, Soffiantini, de Petris, Marcotto, Tega, Giusti, Marucci, Ferretti, and Pastocchi.

The chorus, prepared by Maestro Consoli, and the scenery of Antonio Rovescalli earned much praise. The Montmartre scene was the most effective from the point of view of ensemble in the entire production.

In general the newspaper reviewers concluded that the Costanzi would have done better, if it wished to import French novelties, to give its clientele an opportunity to hear Pelleas and Melisande than to revive the always questioned Louise.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

New Baldi Opera Is Performed in Lucca

Lucca.

Luigi Baldi's latest opera, Edelweis, had its first production at the Teatro del Giglio here on January 7. The work was composed to a libretto of Carlo de Carli. The newspapers reported a warm success on the part of this novelty. One of the airs of the first act was encored, and the composer, a native of Lucca, was called many times before the curtain at its end.

In the second act a delicate romanza sung by the protagonist was encored, and at the end the composer was forced to take his bow again. The same enthusiasm on the part of the audience was repeated at the end of the final act, which was skillfully constructed as to technique and profound in its musical conception.

According to the Lucca papers Edelweis is destined to join the number of the best Italian grand operas. It follows in the footsteps of the other masters of the Lucchesan school, Puccini and Catalani. The music is rich in attractive melody, and is modern in respect to its polyphonic complexity.

Edelweis was directed by Armando Buratti. The cast included the soprano Emma Lattuada, the mezzo-soprano Pfrinner, the tenors Dutto and Darlini, the baritones Marzanzi and Luci, and the basso Lenzi. Maestro Baldi was accompanied to his home after the performance by a throng of enthusiastic opera lovers. F. C.

New Krenek Concerto Is Played in Berlin

Berlin.

A new violin concerto by Krenek has been given its premiere in Berlin by Alma Moodie, the Australian violinist. Franz von Hoesslin was the conductor of the occasion.

It is difficult to establish the exact status of this new opus of the Bohemian composer. Krenek has been much discussed in recent years, and in recent months, too. A few months ago his opera, Zwingburg, had its premiere at the Berlin State Opera, and within the last fortnight his edition of Mahler's Tenth Symphony was heard in a Philharmonic concert. Without agreeing with Dr. Schmidt entirely one must admit part of his contention that Krenek's music is largely a mechanical construction, a striving after novelty of sound and effect.

Serge Prokofieff, pianist and composer, is at present in Berlin. Up until the present he has not been heard except in private circles. He will soon give a concert in public of his own compositions. The works of this thirty-four year old Russian have been interesting Berlin musicians for some time, and expectations are running high with his personal appearance in sight.

Amato and Kubelik Appear

Of the virtuosos of the week, Pasquale Amato must be named first of all. Together with Mafalda, Salvatini and the Bulgarian tenor Raitcheff he gave a more than attractive trio evening at Philharmonic Hall. He was in splendid voice.

Jan Kubelik, the celebrated violinist of old, has returned to the Berlin concert platform, but has brought with him only disappointment. He seems now a man without personality, a virtuoso merely of the second class. Fifteen years ago he failed to conquer Berlin as he had Vienna, Prague, and Budapest, and now his return to the ground of his old defeat at a time when his glory has faded elsewhere is doubly tragic.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Children's Concerts Fail

Birmingham, England, Jan. 28.—An experiment of the City of Birmingham Orchestra in the way of a series of three children's concerts has failed. The Town Hall was practically empty at the three morning concerts. Many free tickets were given out to draw an audience. It is likely that the attempt to give orchestral concerts for children will not be repeated here in the near future.

Czech Conductor in Glasgow

Glasgow, Jan. 26.—At the second concert of the Scottish Orchestra under the leadership of Vaclav Tachlich, Czech conductor, St. Andrew's Hall was quite filled. The program was popular, consisting of Rieti's Concerto for wind instruments with string orchestra, Novak's In the Tatra Hills, and Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 12.

Italian Notes

Milan.—Traviata was produced at the Scala on January 17. The opera was conducted by Arturo Toscanini, and the cast included the tenor Piero Menescaldi, Signora Dalla Rizza (who sang Violetta), and the baritone Molinari.

Rome.—Paderewski made his second and final recital appearance here at the Augusteum on January 17. His program included a Chopin group and Liszt's Don Juan Fantasy.

Rome.—Alexander von Zemlinski of the Prague Opera conducted an orchestral concert at the Augusteum on January 18. The program consisted of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, a Mozart Serenade for strings, Wagner's Siegfried Idyll, and the Prelude and Love-Death of Tristan and Isolde.

Rome.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the premiere of Tosca was celebrated with a gala performance at the Costanzi on January 14. The opera was sung by Signora Llopart, the tenor Capuzzo, and the baritone Parvis. The conductor was Teofilo de Angelis. In 1900 the cast was Signora Darclee, the tenor de Marchi, and the baritone Giraldino, with Maestro Mugnone conducting.

Naples.—Strauss' Rosenkavalier was presented for the first time in Naples at the San Carlo on January 6.

Venice.—Boito's Mefistofele was the opening opera of the season of the Corporazione Nazionale del Teatro. Other operas scheduled are Lualdi's Le Furie di Arlecchino, Gli Amanti Sposi of Wolf Ferrari, and Boris Godunoff.

Milan.—It is reported that an offer has been made by an American group of entrepreneurs to take Umberto Giordano's new opera, La Cena delle Beffe, on tour in the United States and in Europe with much the same cast which took part in its recent premiere at the Scala here.

MARJORIE MEYER
SOPRANO
Management: Standard Booking Office, 17 East 42d St., New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

FOR the season 1925-26, Martha D. Willis of the Willis Studio, New York, will give a course of six lectures, The Listener's Guide, for the "music-lover and concert-goer who wish to enjoy music more intelligently" with the object of developing appreciation of music. Mrs. Willis also announces a series of Musical Chats for clubs, schools, etc.

Dagmy Portersen, a Norwegian pupil of Percy Grainger's, recently played with the orchestra of the Gefle Orkesterforeningen at Gefle, Sweden, where she received warm commendation from the reviewers.

Eduardo Petri is receiving encouraging news of one of his pupils, Helen Mason, mezzo-soprano, who is singing in Chicago at present.

When visited between lessons in her New York studio, Ethel Grow spoke of the recital given recently by her pupil, Regina Kahl, at Aeolian Hall, as well as of her appearance at the Wanamaker Auditorium at the organist's concert of the Washington Heights Musical Club during January. At Miss Grow's own recital given for the junior branch of the club, she sang Charles Griffith's Chinese Tone Poems, and a song dedicated to Miss Grow by Carl Brandorff. Another manuscript song offered was Glenn Hier's Japanese Lullaby, which had to be repeated.

The anniversary issue of The Baton, the magazine published by the New York Institute of Musical Art, of which Frank Damrosch is director, which has recently been published, is almost entirely devoted to the history of the school. In spite of this, there is room in the magazine for the inevitable cross-word puzzle. But this puzzle is a most ingenious one with its squares blocked out to form notes. It includes such definitions as "Japanese harp," "Man whose death Grieg immortalized," and so forth.

On February 18 a recital will be given in the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, by piano students under George Boyle. This will be the first students' recital in the history of the Curtis Institute. Subsequent recitals will be given by students under Mme. Sembrich, Mme. Cahier, Carl Flesch, and other members of the faculty. Several students' recitals have already been given in the Preparatory Department of the Curtis Institute, including one by piano students under George Boyle.

Five piano students at the David Mannes Music School have been selected by Alfred Cortot as winners of the Walter Scott Scholarships for study with him in Paris in the summer. The five pianists, who have been preparing with his representative, Berthe Bert, for the competition, are Norma Drury of Boston, Marie Flanner of New York, Carl Bricken of Kentucky, Eugenia Folliard of Virginia, and Pauline Danforth of Boston. They will sail with Mlle. Bert late in May for six weeks of study in Paris.

This year M. Cortot will teach only the scholarship pianists. Mlle. Bert will herself give a course for a limited number of pupils at the Ecole Normale de Musique. For this course and others students may join Mlle. Bert's scholarship group in the sailing in May.

At the hearing to select the winners of the scholarships M. R. Drouin represented Gaston Liebert, who, with Mr. Scott, Mlle. Bert and M. Cortot, is trustee of the fund. M. Cortot, however, was the sole judge of the pianists to be selected.

Zelina Bartholomew, soprano, and Ernesto Berumen, pianist, gave a joint recital in the LaForge-Berumen Studios Thursday evening, January 22. A large audience assembled for this occasion, and both artists were warmly received. Miss Bartholomew gave her New York recital at Town Hall February 4, and Mr. Berumen appeared February 1 at Aeolian Hall.

William Joseph Flusk, tenor, assisted by Helen Jane Waldo, contralto, and Will J. Stone, accompanist, was heard in a recital at the Burritt Studio, New York city, on January 20.

A recital was given by Jeanne le Vinus, mezzo-soprano, at the studio of Hilda Grace Gelling last week. Lou Olp was at the piano. Miss Gelling entertained about fifty pupils and friends at her studio on January 17 at a musical and dance. Those who contributed to the evening's entertainment were Mrs. Paul Althouse, Mrs. Marion Navarro, Mrs. Gladys Owen, Mrs. Marion Pendill, Jeanne le Vinus, Irma Good, and Gladys Ackerman. Miss Gelling also sang.

Photo by Kubey-Rembrandt

Joseph Hofmann Pores Over His Plans With His Assistant, David Saperton, (on His Right) in His Studio at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, Where He Is Teaching Piano. Berthe Bert, George F. Boyle, Austin Conradi, and Isabelle Vengerova Are the Other Members of the Piano Faculty of the Institute This Season.

Dippel Is Chosen to Lead Ithaca Operatic School

Johann Andreas Dippel, former administrative manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has been chosen to head the new School of Opera which has just been established at the Ithaca Conservatory of Music. Mr. Dippel plans to devote every week end to the school, the remainder of his time being occupied in New York and Philadelphia. The new director has also been connected with the Chicago Grand Opera Company, the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, and other operatic enterprises.

The training provided in the new branch of the conservatory will give practical experience in all phases of its field, and a representative opera will be presented by the students at the conclusion of each term. The subjects to be dealt with include: vocal and dramatic interpretation of operatic roles; ensemble singing; stage deportment; physical expression; chorus training; stagecraft; make-up; pantomime and lyric action; stage and ballet dancing, and preparation and presentation of scenes from operas.

The operatic course is intended to supplement the regular course in vocal training at the Conservatory, though persons who wish to acquire a knowledge of opera work alone will be taken as special students. In the vocal department only such students as have shown, through advanced training, a capacity for operatic music will be admitted to the course.

Dinh Gilly, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company, opened a studio in London last month along the lines of his Paris atelier, where he plans to teach histrionics and singing to more advanced professional students of voice. Opera and lighter theatre music will fall within the scope of his instruction.

The third of a series of All-Musical Vespers by the School of Fine Arts of the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas, was given in Fraser Hall recently, before an audience that completely filled the auditorium. These programs, given once a month, stress especially chamber music and ensemble material of the better class and have made a strong appeal to the campus and city as attested by the fine audience present at each program.

The Anna Tomlinson School of Music at Berwyn presented Theodora Bleidung, violinist, and Geraldine Lacey, pianist, in a joint recital at the Berwyn Baptist Church recently. Among other numbers, Miss Bleidung played Lalo's Spanish Symphony.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

PIETRO CIMINI
CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

AFTER Deems Taylor's adventures with this subject, Edgar Stillman Kelley has composed in a new form on the Alice in Wonderland motif. This new work is a two-part chorus with piano accompaniment. It is in four parts: Alice on Her Way, The White Rabbit, In Wonderland, and The Banquet of the Red Queen. The work is published by Oliver Ditson, Boston.

Mr. Kelley has written with a melodiousness, a rhythmic ingenuity, and a humor which fit the quaint subject. These four pieces will enrich the repertory of any chorus or glee club which ventures to study them over. The texts for the Alice in Wonderland choral suite have been written by Clara Louise Kessler. The task of the librettist to achieve the mood of delicate humor and quaint imagination of Lewis Carroll was obviously tremendously difficult. Miss Kessler has succeeded moderately.

Ditson has just issued a number of other choral pieces of varied style and interest. Among them are three four-part songs for chorus of mixed voices. They are A Roundelay, by Frances McCollin; At Twilight, by Edward Shippen Barnes (this piece includes a violin obbligato ad lib); and May Comes Laughing, by May A. Strong, a madrigal whose parts include one for soprano solo.

For two-part chorus of women's voices are At Twilight, by Mr. Barnes, in this arrangement also with violin obbligato; and a Hunting Song of William Lester. Harvey B. Gaul's Summer Noon is scored for three parts of women's voices.

The Ditson School Octavo has one addition in this latest issue: Welcome, Spring, a minuet by Poldini which Mr. Barnes has arranged for unison or two part chorus of young people's voices.

Theodore Presser & Company, of Philadelphia, have just published two new songs of Buzzi-Peccia, the composer and vocal teacher. They are his Nothing in the World Is Single, and Canto di Primavera (Song of Spring), an arrangement for voice and piano of Dvorak's Humoresque.

Pianist Makes Debut

A young Brooklyn pianist, Sara Eisenberg, made her recital debut at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 1. Miss Eisenberg, who was accompanied by Boris B. Feibish at another piano in Liszt and Saint-Saens' fantasies, displayed, to quote the Herald Tribune, "dexterity of fingers, but nervousness it seemed, prevented her from giving a real demonstration of her pianistic ability."

Joseph Calleia, Tenor From Malta, Whose New York Debut Is Scheduled for Next Saturday Evening.

Mme. Carreras Gives First New York Recital of Season

Maria Carreras opened her concert at Aeolian Hall, New York, on last Thursday afternoon with some sixteenth century Italian arias and dances by unknown composers, transcribed by Respighi.

Alison Smith (World) wrote that Mme. Carreras "has lost nothing of the command and authority which has identified her with these traditions and her familiar style and intensely personal style was warmly greeted by a devoted audience." According to the Times reviewer, if she had played nothing else but the Beethoven Appassionata "she would still nave earned the gratitude of those present, for she gave a distinguished performance. Mme. Carreras summoned her whole musical armory to give voice to her artistic faith. She found the reflex of her own emotion in the deep, unwavering attention which followed her through three movements."

As the Herald Tribune writer expressed it, her playing of the Beethoven Variations "served to prove her remarkable talent; she played with clear-cut vigor, but also ability to produce lightness and delicacy in softer passages, with an expressive palette of many and varied colors."

Heifetz Plays Again

The second New York recital of Jascha Heifetz on the afternoon of February 1 drew a typical capacity audience, and the playing of the violinist was characteristic of his best too. The program included a Locatelli Sonata in F minor, Sarasate's Habanera, and pieces by Ravel, Hue, Bach, and others. Isidore Achron was the accompanist.

Ernest Newman wrote in his review in the Post, "Jascha Heifetz did everything we have come to expect of him. His agility and his sureness were astonishing, his tone splendidly full and always beautiful, and his intonation impeccable." The other reviewers wrote in a similar vein.

He added that "the pianist's elan and power gave the Sonata an effective performance."

The writer in the Sun found that the pianist's performance "had its wonted power, sweep and dynamic control, and she maintained her position among the best of the comparatively new pianists heard here. . . . A Petrarca Sonetto of Liszt was, on the whole, a rare piece of pianistic workmanship, combining lovely colors, exquisite nuance and musical sensibility." On the other hand, this commentator did not consider that Mme. Carreras was always entirely at her best 'in poetic expression and use of rhythm."

A NEW book of interest to piano students and teachers has been issued by that tireless author and musician, Harriette Brower. It is called What to Play—What to Teach, and is published by the Theodore Presser Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Brower's pre-occupation in this book is partly with the construction of artistic and effective programs for the public appearances of pianists of all stages of advancement; and partly with instruction and help in the interpretation of a number of specific masterpieces of the piano repertory.

After a consideration of some of the factors which must be kept in mind in the arrangement of a program, such a variety in mood and style, length of time required for performance, contrast of keys, variety of content, and perfect mastery of the various numbers, Miss Brower offers nine specimen programs of varying difficulty as illustration of what can be done in the way of program-building.

The first lesson begins unostentatiously with two minuets of Bach, Mozart's Variations in C, a Schumann group from the Album for the Young, and shorter pieces by Lange, Heller, Grieg, and Reinold. The last program is one for almost a full-fledged virtuoso, including excerpts from d'Albert's first Suite, part of Schumann's Kreisleriana, a Scriabine left-hand nocturne, Liszt's Fourth Rhapsody, a Liszt-Chopin arrangement, and Rachmaninoff's G minor Prelude. Regarding each of the compositions and composers mentioned Miss Brower makes some explanatory remarks.

The second part of the book is devoted to minute studies in the interpretation of eight well known compositions of varied style and difficulty; the third part considers in detail a dozen programs, actually played at one time or another by famous pianists; in part IV there are a number of remarks by artists of high standing on the subject of program-forming, and the last section of the book includes several distinctive programs, and descriptions of the classroom procedure of Alfred Cortot and E. Robert Schmitz.

Frances Nash Gives Second Concert

A second piano recital was given by Frances Nash at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 1. Miss Nash played Godowsky's transcription of Bach's C minor prelude, Cesar Franck's Prelude, Aria and Finale, a group of Children's Pieces by Casella, and Chopin's Finale and Second Impromptu.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

Fontainebleau School of Music
PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU, FRANCE
Directors: Ch. M. Widor and Camille Decreus, supervised by the French Government.
For American Artists, Teachers and Advanced Students Only
JUNE 25 TO SEPTEMBER 25, 1925
Greatest French Teachers, including Widor and Libert Organ; Andre Bloch, Composition and Conducting; Miss Nadia Boulanger, Harmony (the Appreciation and Philosophy of Modern Music); Isidor Philipp and Decreus, Piano; Remy and Hewitt, Violin; Hekking, Violoncello; Grandjany, Harp; Mauguiere and Salignac, Voice, Repertory and Mise-en-scene; Pillois, the French Language and History of Music; Fauchet, Solfeggio and Instrumental Ensemble.
Tuition, board and lodging 5000 francs three months' course
3500 francs two months' course
American Office: National Arts Club Studios
FRANCIS ROGERS, Chairman
119 East 19th Street, New York City.

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

Coq d'Or Presented At the Metropolitan

Galli-Curci, Merle Alcock, Didur, and Diaz Sing; Bamboschek Conducts.

An enthusiastic audience welcomed the first production this season of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Coq d'Or at the Metropolitan on Thursday afternoon, in the pantomimic version introduced in this country by Fokine. In the singing cast were Amelita Galli-Curci, Adamo Didur, Merle Alcock, Rafaelo Diaz, Louis d'Angelo, Giordano Paltrinieri, Vincenzo Reschiglian, and Charlotte Ryan. The pantomimists were Rosina Galli, Alexis Kosloff, Florence Rudolph, Giuseppe Bonfiglio, Ottokar Bartik, Isidor Sweet, and Domenico da Re. Giuseppe Bamboschek conducted.

Olin Downes of the Times found the performance, as a whole, "creditable to the organization which achieved it." In the opinion of Ernest Newman of the Post, the "purely operatic way of playing the opera is far richer in humor." He was disappointed in the Fokine version after having been accustomed to the other version, but felt that the performance "was a charming entertainment of its kind."

According to F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune), Mme. Galli-Curci seemed "rather breathless" at first, "but her singing became clear and fluent later in the act." Agreed was Mr. Downes that "later the tone was usually of a good quality, and as the performance went on, the singer gained in self possession and a surer employment of her voice." The World reviewer found her voice "crystal clear and generally true in intonation," and the Sun writer thought her in "better voice" than in previous appearances and that she "sang the music of the siren fluently and with pleasing tone."

This writer thought Mme. Galli "a picture of grace and symmetry," and Mr. Perkins said she was in "excellent form." Other writers agreed to this and to the humor and effectiveness of Mr. Kosloff. The Sun reported that "the ensemble was generally commendable."

The World reviewer commented that "the performance was much better than those of last year, with Mr. Didur in excellent voice . . . and Merle Alcock unbelievably improved . . . Rafaelo Diaz, back for the role that he sings probably better than any one else on earth, was the astrologer." Mr. Perkins added that Charlotte Ryan "sang the warnings of the golden fowl with clearness and greater steadiness of tone in the last act than in the first," while Mr. Diaz "was, as usual, happy in his permanent office of astrologer." According to Mr. Downes, Mr. Diaz "gave again his well conceived characterization;" Mr. Didur "sang the music of the King with his accustomed intelligence and expressiveness;" Miss Ryan interpreted her difficult music "with spirit and oftenest a fresh and brilliant quality of tone;" and Mme. Alcock's Amelfa "had the humor the part demands and a measure of imagination."

Mr. Newman wrote that Mr. Diaz "sang the astrologer's high-pitched music better than I have ever heard it sung," and Mr. Didur "also did justice to the King's music;" and the other parts were all "fairly well done." In the opinion of the World writer, Mr. Bamboschek's tempi "were a bit deliberate, but his orchestra was well balanced and limpidly beautiful in tone."

Preceding the performance was a repetition of Cavalleria with Mmes. Peralta, Anthony and Telva and Messrs. Gigli and Ballester. Mr. Papi conducted.

MME. MARIA JERITZA

A New Photagraph of the Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, Who Commences an Extensive Concert Tour at the End of This Month.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

THOMAS MEIGHAN in "COMING THRU"

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

"PAMPERED YOUTH"

With ALL STAR CAST

A Vitagraph Picture

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

"THE GREAT DIVIDE"

Reginald Barker Production

With ALICE TERRY, CONWAY TEARLE, WALLACE BEERY and HUNTLEY GORDON

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

It seems that the entire La Scala personnel with Toscanini at the head will go to the Colon in Buenos Aires next June to give the annual season of opera at that house. Special arrangements will probably be made in regard to the orchestra and chorus of the Milan company. The laws of Argentina forbid foreign musicians to perform there unless they register as permament members of the local union.

* * *

Margot Duncan, one of the Duncan dancers, has just died in Paris, according to a cable which Freddie Schang of the Metropolitan Bureau received.

* * *

Come to town lately to arrange for their concert courses next season, and to see the sights perhaps, are R. W. Grant, director of music at State College, Pa., Philip Shailer, of New Britain, Conn., W. Albaugh, of Baltimore, and Prof. Howard McKinney of New Brunswick, N. J.

* * *

Martinelli fans are looking forward to the return of Giovanni to the Metropolitan stage in a fortnight or so. Already he is well enough to take daily walks in Central Park.

* * *

There's no better place to eat spaghetti than the home of Giuseppe de Luca of the Metropolitan, especially when genial Gennaro Papi leaves his conductor's baton and assumes the cap and gown of chef to look after the welfare and happiness of Giuseppe's guests.

* * *

A testimonial dinner is being given Tito Schipa tonight at the Astor. There will be singing, dancing, speeches . . . yes, and something to eat.

* * *

If Lines-o'-Newser had his choice he would like to see Un Ballo in Maschera and I Gioielli della Madonna restored to the Metropolitan repertory.

* * *

Bob Simon, herald of the Judson artists, has been calculating. He reports that if all the information he supplied the press on Igor Stravinsky were placed end to end it would take a lot of trouble to pile it up again. When interviewed in this regard while repairing his mimeograph in the Wolfsohn offices next door, Horace Coon came out from under his machine for a moment and said, "Why place it end to end?"

* * *

Herbert Braham, who has worked these seventeen years to give Brooklyn a representative symphony orchestra, will be feted at Sherry's on the eighteenth. The occasion will be the fifth birthday of Mr. Braham's Brooklyn Orchestral Society.

* * *

Can Clarence Adler explain why the city fathers of Ka-ren-ni-o-ke, N. Y., have decided to rename their town Adlerville?

* * *

"Zimy" Zimbalist and Mischa Levitski took a Saturday afternoon off and played piano and fiddle duets just for the fun of it.

Cyrena van Gordon was a recent visitor to New York. She passed through on her way to Washington, D. C., where she is singing, of course, with the Chicago forces when they make the second stop of their tour there.

* * *

Italo Montemezzi was guest of honor at the Boston Opera House on Thursday. He heard the Chicagoans give his Amore dei Tre Re, with Mary Garden as the heroine and Giorgio Polacco waving his baton and seeing that things went right.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser is pleased to inform friends and anxious inquirers that the world did not come to an end as predicted last Friday night. At time of going to press all remains well.

* * *

"Only Marseilles can compare with this tempestuous reception," writes Walter Damrosch from Havana . . . and the audience of the French city went "literally crazy" over the New York Symphony players as George Engles' scrapbook reminds.

* * *

Marie Rappold will create the leading roles of Frank Patterson's The Echo when it is given its world premiere in Portland, Ore., June 9, 1925, by The National Federation of Music Clubs.

* * *

From a very reliable source comes the news that Leff Pouishnoff will be playing the piano among us again next season.

* * *

Fred Patton looked puzzled when we met him in the smoking room of the Metropolitan Saturday after the second act of Gotterdammerung. . . . "Can you tell me what the next act's about?" whispered Fred. "Oh, yes, I have a Wotan and an Alberich in my repertoire, but neither Dippel nor Blumenthal got this far in the Ring."

* * *

And along came Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld wearing his customary smile. . . . "The Metropolitan makes a good show of Wagner, but wait until you see the film version of Siegfried imported from Germany. We will run it at the Rialto soon with Wagner music and Wagnerian singers, and, really, it will make this look like a dolls' show." . . . Well, maybe we'll get to see the rainbow and Walhalla after all.

* * *

Royal Dadmun looked weary when we met him on 42nd street Friday. . . . "Just back from a hard job of recording in Camden," he explained.

* * *

Strange sounds are heard emanating from the apartment of Tomford Harris. Neighbors of the young pianist suspect him at work on a score for the Rochester competition.

* * *

At the invitation of its chairman, Otto H. Kahn, a luncheon meeting of the National Music Week Committee was held at the Midday Club, New York, on January 27. Representatives from fourteen of the national organizations whose presidents make up the personnel of the Committee were present. A large amount of business was transacted, including approval of the budget and plans for raising it, and reports and speeches on the plans and work of the organization were heard.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Spirit
in Interpretation
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 18 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

THE LIBRARY OF THE

Photo by Elzin Studio.

Elisabeth Rethberg, soprano, has returned to complete her season with the New York Metropolitan singing leading roles in Italian and German operas.

Bulletins of News

Theodore Stearns, music reviewer of the New York Morning Telegraph, has been commissioned by that newspaper to finish his new opera, Atlantis, with its support. The Morning Telegraph has sent Mr. Stearns to spend the summer on the Island of Capri, at the expense of the paper, where he will have the leisure to complete his score. Mr. Stearns' opera, The Snow Bird, was produced last season by the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

Paul Draper, tenor, who often appeared in concert and as soloist with the Boston and Chicago symphony orchestras, died early Sunday morning of heart disease after a short illness at the home of his sister, Miss Ruth Draper, at 147 East Sixty-first Street, New York City. He was thirty-eight years old and is survived by two sons, Paul and Sanders, four sisters and three brothers.

After a year at Harvard, Mr. Draper went to Europe to study piano, but later abandoned the idea and began vocal lessons under Braggiotti in Florence. Because of his fondness for German Lieder, he went to London where he studied with van Zur Muhlen.

Services were held yesterday morning at Grace Church.

Germaine Schnitzer was obliged to cancel the third recital in her series of romantic piano music at Chickering Hall due to an attack of ptomaine poisoning. It is expected that Mme. Schnitzer will resume her series on February 27.

From Miami, Florida, comes the news that John McCormack is almost entirely recovered from the attack of grip which caused him to postpone six concerts. He is resuming his concert tour very soon.

Charles Hackett, who has been suffering from influenza, is reported as being over the worst of his illness. It was learned at the Hotel McAlpin where Mr. Hackett is staying that his condition is greatly improved.

So much better was Giovanni Martinelli after his recent trip to Atlantic City that it is predicted that he will return to the Metropolitan early in March, probably singing in Boheme at his re-appearance.

Philadelphia, Feb. 16.—Hedda Van Den Beemt, composer, conductor and teacher of music, died suddenly yesterday of pneumonia. He was conductor of the Philadelphia Operatic Society, the Frankford Symphony Orchestra, the Savoy Opera Company, maestro of the band and orchestra of the University of Pennsylvania, and director of the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music.

He was born in Holland forty-five years ago. He came to Philadelphia in 1901 as first violinist of the Philadelphia Orchestra, of which he subsequently became concertmaster. He is survived by his wife and three children.

Report Metropolitan Has Signed to Give La Cena

MILAN, Feb. 14.—A contract has been signed between the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York and the Milan publishing house of E. Sonzogno granting the former the exclusive rights for performance up until May, 1926, of Giordano's La Cena delle Beffe (the Jest) in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Cleveland.

(The management of the Metropolitan, when approached on the subject of the information contained in the above cable, denied that such a contract exists.)

Music Contest for U.S. Composers Ends

Chosen Compositions to Be Played by Rochester Orchestra.

Rochester, Feb. 14.—The music contest for American composers, which is being conducted by the Eastman School of Music here, has resulted in the entering of forty-six orchestral scores, according to an announcement made yesterday by Howard Hanson, director of the school. The contest officially closes tomorrow.

These scores, which range from symphonies and suites to short orchestrial sketches, are by American-born composers from many different States from coast to coast. Mr. Hanson said that he felt that this ready response proved the value of such a contest, and that the scores were "more than gratifying in quantity and averaging very high in quality," and served as conclusive evidence that a real musical talent exists in America which has not been given an opportunity to show itself.

The judges of the contest will, during the coming week, read the scores and arrange them for production by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra in April, when the program of chosen works will be given in one double bill Musical reviewers from many cities, and other persons prominent in the musical world have been invited to attend the concerts. It is intended that, if the contest proves a success, these concerts will become annual affairs. Next year, according to Mr. Hanson, the school plans to give a series of four such concerts.

In this contest, George Eastman has given American-born composers a chance of getting a hearing for their works with the intention of fostering the development of American music and of providing young and struggling native composers with the opportunity for recognition.

Will Sing Verdi Requiem

It has been announced that Verdi's Requiem Mass will be sung at the Metropolitan Opera House on next Sunday, with Marie Sundelius, Jeanne Gordon, Beniamino Gigli, Jose Mardones, and full chorus and orchestra. Tullio Serafin will conduct.

Philharmonic Grants Musicians Increased Pay on New Contract

Clarence H. Mackay Predicts Higher Rates for Concert-Goers to Cover Rise.

COMPROMISE EFFECTED

An advance in the price of tickets for the concerts of the N. Y. Philharmonic Orchestra for next season has been predicted by Clarence H. Mackay, chairman of the board of directors of the orchestra, as a result of the $10 a week increase in salary granted to members of the orchestra.

Mr. Mackay's prediction followed the previous announcement that the Philharmonic board of directors and representatives of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians had compromised on the request made by the union for a $25 a week increase in the musicians' wages. The $10 increase agreed upon will raise the weekly budget of the orchestra $1,100.

In order not to add too heavily to the already large annual deficit of the orchestra, it is proposed that the scale of prices, now ranging from 50 cents to $2.50, be raised from 75 cents to $3. Whether this will apply to the students and children concerts is not yet known. According to Mr. Mackay's announcement, the officers of the society felt that the cost of living was as much a problem to the union musicians as it was to the society, and the increased cost would be cheerfully borne by concertgoers, who would be willing to pay slightly higher prices for tickets.

It could not be learned whether any action had been taken on the request for a longer season which accompanied that for a raise in wages. The new contract will probably cover the next two years.

There has as yet been no settlement between the musicians' union and the New York Symphony Orchestra or the Metropolitan Opera Company. It is expected, however, that the negotiations which are still in progress will soon be settled on a similar basis to that effected by the Philharmonic.

The New York Symphony Orchestra players, under their present contract, also get the $60 a week minimum wage and have asked for the same increase as that originally requested by the Philharmonic. The members of the opera orchestra, who, because of their seven day week, receive at present a minimum of $88 weekly, have demanded a $16 a week increase.

The Philharmonic settlement is the culmination of three weeks of negotiations and conferences. Early in January the directors of the orchestra suggested to the musicians' union that they draw up terms for a new contract to replace the present one upon its expiration with the end of the present concert season. In answer, Edward Canavan, chairman of the union, sent a request for the $25 weekly increase. At the time this was understood to be a debatable demand rather than an ultimatum.

San Carlo Commences San Francisco Season

Hertz Conducts Bloch Novelty; Salvi, de Pachmann, and Roman Choir Appear.

San Francisco, Feb. 9.—The San Carlo Opera Company opened a two weeks season at the Curran Theatre last Monday night with Tosca, including in the cast Alice Gentle and Messrs. Salazar and Valle. The reviewers wrote in the same vein as to the performance—"Gentle, Salazar and Valle interpret theme effectively" was the Chronicle comment, and the Herald observer felt that "Tosca requires strong individualization of character in almost every role, and the San Carlo people met the demand honorably."

The second performance, Aida, with Anne Roselle, Gaetano Tommasini and Stella de Mette, brought the honors of the evening, according to the reviewers, to Fulgenzio Guerrieri, the conductor, although there was much praise for Miss Roselle and Miss de Mette. The third performance was Andrea Chenier. Bianca Saroya, according to the Chronicle, had "her due reward of applause last evening for her excellent work in the second and last acts." The Call wrote that "she sang, one might almost say, divinely, and was acclaimed again and again by the enthusiastic audience."

The fourth performance was Madama Butterfly, with Tamaki Miura in the title role. The Chronicle observer wrote: "Since I first saw and heard Miss Miura, I have never been quite satisfied with any other interpreter of Butterfly." The Examiner writer commented that the "almost child-like note in the voice, probably almost instinctive at first, is conscious art today." In the performance of Rigoletto, Mr. Basiola came into his own and was warmly praised by the reviewers. "Sterling qualities as vocalist and actor," and "thoughtful and gifted artist" were some of the typical press comments of his appearance. Josephine Lucchese was the Gilda. The reviewers felt that her voice has potentialities which are yet to be fully developed.

* * *

In the eighth pair of subscription concerts Mr. Hertz conducted the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra in a novelty, Ernest Bloch's Three Jewish Poems. Mr. Woodman of the Call liked the second, Dancè, Rite and Funeral Procession, most of all. Mr. Mason wrote in the Examiner: "It is stimulating music, sometimes very beautiful, and it leaves you with the feeling that the better you know it the more you will like it." In the Chronicle, Mr. Brown wrote: "Bloch's Jewish Poems have intense sincerity, a flame-like vitality and rhapsodic poetry." The Herald commentator, Mr. Elliott, was impressed that "the scoring and structure of these pieces is very interesting at all times, and often very beautiful."

The program included the Franck Symphony and Brahms' Academic Overture.

Alberto Salvi, harpist, played here for the first time on Monday afternoon at the fourth Matinee Musicale of Alice Seckles in the Fairmont Ballroom. The Examiner commentator remarked that "every now and then there comes an artist who leaves a mark on the consciousness of the community, and Albert Salvi is one of the number." The writer in the Chronicle agreed that "not only is he a brilliant performer, but in his playing he reveals sound musicianship and poetic sensitiveness."

Vladimir de Pachmann gave his farewell recital here yesterday afternoon at the New Columbia Theatre. The reviewers were unanimous in praise of the pianist, Mr. Elliott referring to him as the "eighth wonder of the world and the first of music."

In the same afternoon at the Civic Auditorium the Roman Choir sang. The Examiner writer thought that "although less in number, the choir is as well knit, balanced and finished as the Sistine." On the other hand, the Chronicle felt that "coming after the Sistine Chapel Choir, the smaller group of voices inevitably undergo comparison and suffer a little in the process." In the Call, C. W. spoke of them as "generous artists" and "beautiful voices," while the Herald headed its review "Roman Choir Reveal Superb Art." M. J. C.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

WEDNESDAY

Tannhauser (matinee) — with Mmes. Jeritza and Gordon; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Falstaff (evening)—with Mmes. Alda, Bori, Telva, and Howard; and Messrs. Scotti, Tibbett, Tokatyan, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Giovanni Gallurese (premiere) — with Mmes. Mueller, Alcock, and Galli; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

FRIDAY

Madama Butterfly—with Mmes. Rethberg, Telva, and Wells; and Messrs. Gigli and Scotti; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Traviata (matinee)—with Mmes. Bori and Galli; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi and de Luca; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Boris Godunoff (evening)—with Mmes. Bourskaya, Delaunois, and Dalossy; and Messrs. Johnson, Didur, and Rothier; Mr. Papi conducting.

MONDAY

Carmen (matinee) — with Mmes. Bourskaya and Mario; and Messrs. Johnson, and Whitehill; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Rigoletto (evening) — with Mme. dal Monte; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Henderson to Talk on Singing

W. J. Henderson, music reviewer of the New York Sun, will deliver a lecture to the members of the City Music League on the evening of February 21 in Town Hall, New York. His subject will be Good Singing. Eight soloists will take part to illustrate Mr. Henderson's remarks.

Chorus Re-elects President

St. Paul, Feb. 5. — The Municipal Chorus at its annual meeting re-elected J. B. Wollan president of the organization.

Enesco Appears With Cleveland Orchestra

Roumanian Musician Conducts Own Composition and Is Soloist in Violin Works.

Cleveland, Feb. 9.—Georges Enesco appeared in the subscription pair of concerts of the Cleveland Orchestra on Thursday and Saturday in the triple capacity of violinist, conductor, and composer. As soloist with the orchestra under Mr. Sokoloff's direction he played Bach's Concerto in E and Chausson's Poeme. He conducted the Cleveland premiere of the Dance of the Theban Shepherds from his opera Cedipus, and Mr. Sokoloff led his First Roumanian Rhapsodv. The program included the ballet from Cephale and Procris, by Gretry, which Mr. Sokoloff conducted.

The reviewers found much to praise in Mr. Enesco's violin playing. "Mr. Enesco is a violinist of eminent attainments, a master of his instrument," wrote James M. Rogers in the Plain Dealer. "He plays his Bach as though he found rare pleasure in it. . . . His delivery of the adagio was beauty's voice itself." The other writers preferred his interpretation of the Chausson. Eleanor Clarage wrote in the Times, "The Poeme has never been heard to the greater satisfaction of the writer. Mr. Enesco played it with an extraordinary insight into its meaning; with a tone that was gentle, subdued, and yet emotional enough to fire his hearers to a high pitch of enthusiasm."

Wilson G. Smith reported in the Press that the Roumanian violinist had "facile and fluid technique," and a mellow and suave tone that "made his playing the epitome of tonal beauty." Archie Bell's judgment in the News was similar, although he preferred Mr. Enesco as a composer.

Mr. Smith spoke of the Theban Dance as being an interesting novelty conceived in the modern spirit, and with well defined rhythms effectively developed and orchestrated." Mr. Rogers' opinion of the same piece was that it was a composition "of great vivacity, glitter, and rhythmic effect. . . . It is orchestrated with remarkable ingenuity and cleverness."

"The dance is written with a fine command of orchestral resources and in a spirted, enthusiastic style, in which manner it was conducted," wrote Miss Clarage.

Wagner Program Is Played in Detroit

Clarence Whitehill Assists at Symphony Concert; Guy Williams Heard.

Detroit, Feb. 9.—An all-Wagner program with Clarence Whitehill, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, as assisting artist was given by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting, in its regular subscription series last Thursday evening. Mr. Whitehill was heard in Hans Sach's Monologue from the Meistersinger and the Dutchman's Lament from the Flying Dutchman. The program of Mr. Gabrilowitsch included also the Meistersinger Prelude, the Tannhauser Overture, the Prelude and Love-Death from Tristan, the Ride of the Valkyries, and the Funeral March from Gotterdammerung.

"He sang with amazing clarity of diction and appropriateness of expression, and clearly displayed the vigor, elasticity, and strength of his rich, sonorous baritone," wrote the reviewer of the Times of Mr. Whitehill's singing. "The program was ideal, the orchestra keen in its response to the vibrant baton of Gabrilowitsch," said this writer further.

Cyril Arthur Player summed up his impressions of the entire concert similarly in the News: "There needs no criticism. It was the best of Wagner, given with a grandeur and impressiveness to challenge not criticism, but admiration." Of Mr. Whitehill's singing he said, "As sturdy as ever, and if not with just the voice so well known in American homes, through the Bedouin Love Song, at least still sonorous and true, able to give rich meaning and full measure of beauty to the noble monologue written by Wagner for Hans Sachs. Charge much to his vocal powers, carefully cherished, and much also to a fine intelligence, which supplements tone with significance."

In the fourteenth noonday concert of the Detroit Capitol Symphony Orchestra on February 1, Guy Bever Williams, director of piano at the Institute of Musical Art, was soloist in Rachmaninoff's First Concerto. Ralph Holmes of the Times called Mr. Williams' interpretation "masterful," and the Free Press reported, "The pianist was accorded an enthusiastic greeting and was forced to return several times."

JOSEF ADLER
Teacher of Piano
ACCOMPANIST
137 West 86th St. New York
Phone Schuyler 3580

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Shavitch Leads New Music in N. Y. Debut

Greta Torpadie, Rovinsky, O'More, and the Letz Quartet Assist in Guild Concert.

At the concert of the International Composers' Guild at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 8 Vladimir Shavitch, leader of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, made his first appearance in this city as a conductor. The assisting artists of the occasion were Greta Torpadie, Colin O'More, Hyman Rovinsky, Marie Miller, Carlos Salzedo, and the Letz Quartet.

Those compositions on the program which were heard for the first time in public were Three Preludes for Chamber Orchestra by Acario Cotanos; Carlos Salzedo's interpretation of three of Mallarme's poems; a Fantasy for small orchestra and three women's voices, From the Land of Dreams, by a pupil of Varese, William Still, and Tres Exagones, by Carlos Chavez. The other numbers, which were given their first New York performance, were Bartok's Sonatina; Zanotti-Bianco's Materia; Henry Cowell's Ensemble for chamber orchestra, and von Webern's Five Pieces for String Quartet.

Of the various works, Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) wrote that he enjoyed Mr. Cowell's "lean, muscular, fibrous style;" that he had "no doubt" of Mr. Still's "complete sincerity;" that Mr. Salzedo's songs were "the most engrossing music of his" yet heard, and that the Cotapos Preludes "are full of sensibility and charm." On the whole, however, the reviewers were disappointed in the music. Olin Downes wrote in the Times that "most of the music performed was very bad and ineffectual. Some of it was puerile and ridiculously self-important . . . one of the best compositions was Bela Bartok's sonatina for piano, admirably played by Hyman Rovinsky." According to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, Mr. Cotapos' work "suggested a possible talent distorted by efforts to produce modernist stuff;" Bartok's piece "rejoiced in captivating rhythms and bright melody." In the opinion of Ernest Newman (Post), "the best things in the program were a trifle for the piano by Bartok" and the von Webern pieces.

The World reviewer commented that the effect of the "thunder sticks" introduced by Mr. Cowell was "undeniably arresting and stirring, but so is the sudden thumping of a radiator at midnight or the clank of milk bottles at dawn." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail agreed with Mr. Gilman.

The writer in the World said that Mr. Shavitch "maintained an attitude of sympathy and perfect poise even when the Thunder Stick narrowly missed his head by flying off its handle." Mr. Downes said the conductor "discharged ungrateful tasks with every evidence of understanding and mastery." Mr. Downes added that Mr. O'More "sang very competently," and that the Letz Quartet "played in a musicianly and expressive manner." Mme. Torpadie deserved the applause she won, according to Mr. Newman, for her clever singing, and Mr. Gilman called Mr. Rovinsky's playing effective.

Minneapolis Hears Flesch With Symphony

William Lindsay Plays in Final Orchestra Concert Before Tour; Brailowsky in Recital.

Minneapolis, Feb. 5.—Just before departing on its fortnight tour, which is to end on February 18, the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Henri Verbrugghen conducting, gave three final concerts at home. In the Sunday afternoon popular concert on February 1 William Lindsay, pianist, of the University of Minnesota Music Department, was soloist. The final subscription pair of programs on the preceding Thursday and Friday (the former in St. Paul, the latter in Minneapolis) presented Carl Flesch, violinist, as assisting artist.

The programs of the subscription concerts included Liszt's Mephisto Waltz, Braunfels' Wedding of the Doves, the Finale from Wagner's Rheingold, Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture, and Brahms' Violin Concerto. Mr. Flesch was ill with neuritis, and was compelled to play in a sitting posture, but the reviewers were unanimous in the opinion that his performance did not suffer from this. They declared that Mr. Flesch's interpretation of the Brahms was one of the finest that the concerto has ever had in Minneapolis.

James Davies spoke in the Tribune of the violinist's "wealth of musical scholarship and virtuosic ability," and called the performance a memorable one. Victor Nillson wrote in the Journal that although Mr. Flesch sat, "he soared to the skies with his music."

At the popular concert Mr. Lindsay played Liszt's Piano Concerto in A. James Davies wrote of his playing: "Mr. Lindsay has proved himself in the past a poet of the piano . . . in this concerto he passed to the other extreme and carried his hearers along a tidal wave of brilliant, scintillating, spectacular rush of tone and technique." Mr. Nilson agreed as to the virtues of the performance.

The quartet made up of Harold Bauer, pianist; Bronislaw Huberman, violinist; Lionel Tertis, violist, and Felix Salmond, cellist, appeared on the concert course of the University on January 26. In a program consisting of Brahms' Piano Quartet in G minor, Beethoven's Trio in D, and Faure's C minor Quartet the ensemble played individually in a manner which was to be expected of musicians of their standing, and yet the reviewers agreed that, throughout, the performance was well balanced and restrained, with each individual subordinating himself to the collective effect.

Alexander Brailowsky, Russian pianist, played last month in recital at the Lyceum Theatre. Before the recital was completed it was announced that Mr. Brailowsky would appear again on February 8. The reviewers greeted the newcomer with extraordinary praise. Southworth Alden, commentator of the Daily Star, called Mr. Brailowsky the greatest pianist in his memory with the exception of Paderewski.

Mr. Nillson declared that the Russian "is a tone poet with the nicety of a miniaturist and only in the proper place with the broad sweep of the impassioned artist or the luminous frenzy of the virtuoso. . . . While he warms your heart you feel that his own is not cold." The audience received the pianist with enthusiasm, and applauded vigorously when his re-engagement was announced from the platform.

MISS ROSINA GALLI

Who Appeared Again in the First Coq d'Or of the Season at the Metropolitan and Who Will Head the Ballet at the Premiere of Giovanni Gallurese Next Thursday Evening.

Move Concerts to Larger Theatre

To accommodate its increasing audiences the League of Composers has moved its concerts from the Klaw Theatre, New York, to the larger Times Square Theatre, where it will give the remainder of its programs this season. The League's next concert will be held on the evening of February 22. Schonberg's Pierrot Lunaire, Lazare Saminsky's one-act opera Gagliarda of a Merry Plague, and Louis Gruenberg's Daniel Jazz will be presented. Mr. Saminsky and Howard Barlow will conduct; Colin O'More, Richard Hale, Patricia O'Connell, and Greta Torpadie will sing; and Paul Oscard, dancer, will take part in the opera.

Maria Ivogun Sings With L. A. Orchestra

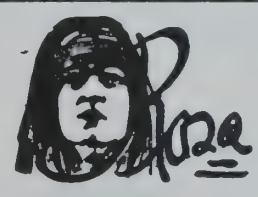
Los Angeles, Feb. 1.—Maria Ivogun, soloist, and Honegger's Pacfic 231 were the features of the latest subscription concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Walter Henry Rothwell. On the orchestral program were also Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries.

Mme. Ivogun was hailed by Francis Kendig of the Times as having "the most remarkable voice in the world today;" she "sings as a violinist phrases, and with the same amazing speed and accuracy." Ralph Greene (Examiner) wrote that her voice is "phenomenal, retaining its caressing quality even in its uppermost reaches, and possessing unusual body for a voice of this type."

Acording to Jose Rodriguez of the Record, Mme. Ivogun "gave a demonstration of singing which has never been equalled in this vocally arid city." Bruno David Ussher (Express) remarked that he did not remember "more musicianly, more colorful coloratura singing than that in the Mozart aria . . . Notwithstanding slight diversions from pitch, the Ivogun voice is of flute-like virtuosity and, which is more, human in expression." The writer in the Daily News found her voice "round and full," with "the freshness of not too much cultivation."

This reviewer thought the Honegger work "a most interesting example of the new school of modern music." Mr. Rodriguez considered it "a hilarious and exciting symphonic movement," and Mr. Ussher called it a "rhapsodic paean of a giant locomotive" and referred to Honegger as "a tone painter of imaginative and skillfully evolved technique." Francis Kendig thought the piece "a masterpiece of musical engineering." To Mr. Greene, it sounded "approximately as if a drunken trumpet player were trying to find the notes of 'Flowers That Bloom in the Spring' while the rest of the orchestra was tuning up."

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARION TELVA
Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

Elena GERHARDT
Management: GEORGE ENGLES—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 18

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Walter E. Koons, Executive Editor Alexander Fried, Managing Editor

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Bruno Zirato, Business Manager

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Building Prestige

One hears discussed, with more or less frequency, the question whether the artist-attraction or the manager is responsible for acquiring such prestige that large audiences are moved to be present whenever that artist-attraction appears publicly.

The artist attraction believes that its excellence is responsible for whatever drawing-power it possesses.

The manager is of the opinion that without his skill in publicity promotion the artist-attraction would not get very far.

Building prestige is generally a co-operative affair. Given an artist, or an organization, of superior merit it is possible to make a beginning; for rarely does the musician or music organization which lacks distinctive merit achieve widespread recognition of the sort known to be of box-office value.

In most instances the manager of an artist or an organization contributes his share to the creating of desired prestige. Skill in arousing the public interest is always necessary . . . save in those rare instances where the sensational element enters into the case, as sometimes happens.

Publicity, in this country, consists of the uniting of various elements calculated to attract attention to and to arouse the desire to hear and to see the artist-attraction in question. It can be and ordinarily is utilized to the advantage of all concerned; occasionally to what might be termed their disadvantage.

Yet there is gratification in the fact that dignity plays a rather important part in building prestige for an artist-attraction; and that the most serious musicians prefer dignity to the commonplace methods of showmanship which seem not always to belong to exploiting what is allied to an art.

Paying the Freight

Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, chairman of the board of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, in his announcement touching on the Philharmonic's decision to grant a salary increase to most of its musicians, indicates the probability of advancing the prices of certain tickets.

That is a perfectly natural procedure. In view of the heavy deficit already being carried by the Philharmonic the added expense could not well be borne otherwise.

As generally happens in other lines of endeavor, a rise in the cost of labor must be passed on to the public. In this instance there is, as has been pointed out, ample justification for the move which must be made.

One thing, however, can be relied on: whatever additions may be placed on the prices of Philharmonic tickets will be limited to actual financial necessities.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

FOR the benefit of the readers of Il Corriere del Bronx the General Manager of the Metropolitan recently spoke winged words. He said:

"The theatre is made to give pleasure, emotion, and refined taste to the public, but not to give them a theatrical flavor.

"A theatre that is not frequented has no meaning; a theatre, as Verdi has put it, is made of fullness, not emptiness.

"Everything that is tiresome is not theatrical; when people wish to sleep, they can repose gratis in their own beds and not on the uncomfortable paid seats of the theatre.

"The organization of a theatre is founded on order, on good administration, on discipline, on the variety and worth of the performances and the artists. Artistic exigencies are never so well managed as when one is doing good business. You spend freely when the receipts are large.

"The new works of the last twenty years live at the expense of the old well sung operas.

"The old operas, when well sung, are the things that the public of nearly the whole world demands more and more. The old operas will never go into decline until they can be replaced by novelties that will interest the public just as much.

"The public in general scorns schools, systems, formulas, and recipes for the writing of operas. Wagner triumphed not because of his theories, but because he composed operas bursting with genius and theatrical effect."

Coming from Mr. Gatti-Casazza these aphorisms are in the nature of information, not theory.

A REALIZATION of the theatrical qualities of a theatre seems to be a very obvious thing, but many persons do not have it. Theatre managers usually do; critics of the opera often do not.

A lover of the theatre does not see and hear performances with the impression that he is getting perfect illusion. He knows that he must go a great deal more than half way to feel the reality of what is going on on the stage. Too perfect illusion would be undramatic, distracting.

If in the Gotterdammerung a live horse were really to leap into actual seething flames, it would spoil the evening for a good many lovers of Wagner's operas; a half of them would be wondering how it was done, and the rest would be in a dead faint. The pantomime needs only to be genuine enough to give the impression that the composer intended, and the observer must help.

In the recent discussions of various music reviewers in New York I was unable to sympathize with the contention of the party which asserted that the operatic artist must act and sing as though he and the stage manager were oblivious of the presence of an audience. An audience is a convention of the theatre just as is an impersonation. I can see no more objection to a singer's declaiming in the direction of the audience, provided he does it gracefully, than to his demanding that it consider him for the evening to be Signor Scarpia when everyone knows that his name is Antonio Scotti.

One must object to a singer's stepping to the very footlights for a bow, but I for one am not in the least offended when Brunnhilde, Hagen, and Gunther face out to the audience to resolve that Siegfried must die.

IF conductors could possibly be persuaded (which they never will be) to try to follow not only the directions of the composers whose music they are playing, but also the opinions of music critics concerning the music, they would soon be very bewildered men.

I am thinking particularly of one of the reviews of Mr. Mengelberg's recent performances of Schubert's C major Symphony. One newspaper commentator wrote of it, "The music soared, not like a lark, but a good deal after the fashion of a missile propelled from a catapult. . . ." He considered the first and last movements particularly stormy.

One can only look into Schubert's score to search for the origin of the belief that the symphony must be played lark-like. In the opening movement the first twenty-six measures are marked to be played quietly. Then in two measures there is an abrupt crescendo from pianissimo to fortissimo. The fortissimo, scored for strings and brass, lasts two measures, and is followed by a sudden pianissimo measure scored in the woodwinds; and this measure is in turn broken in upon by two fortissimo measures.

To proceed with the dynamic markings (supported by the orchestration): there follow in turn one measure marked piano, three measures beginning fortissimo and decreasing to a piano, which lasts two measures, another sudden fortissimo lasting one measure, two measures of piano, one of fortissimo, one of piano, one of fortissimo, one marked sforzato, one piano, one forte, one piano, one forte, one fortissimo, and then several measures of piano, etc.

The last movement is in the same spirit. Its tempo is Allegro Vivace, and it opens with two measures fortissimo, two piano, two fortissimo, nine piano, increasing into a single measure of fortissimo, followed by more than a dozen measures of successive sforzati.

These swift and abrupt variations of dynamics are by no means unusual in this symphony of Schubert. Rather, they are characteristic. The music is nearer to the spirit of Sturm und Drang than it is to the classical placidity and charm of Haydn. The "lark theory" hardly fits the score, although the Philharmonic presentation of the symphony very painstakingly did.

THERE has been considerable speculation as to which of the Metropolitan conductors is to have the duty of the direction of Stravinsky's Petrouchka. It is quite definite now that Tullio Serafin will have charge of the presentation.

Maestro Serafin in Italy has been a conductor of other music besides operas. For a time he conducted the Augusteum symphonic programs in Rome, and during the period of his conductorship there he paid considerable attention to the music of modern composers.

It is a far cry from l'Africana to Petrouchka. The selection of Mr. Serafin for the task must cause as much surprise among those who know him only as a conductor of Italian operas as it will satisfaction to those who are better acquainted with his work.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Spirit in Interpretation

Music Lovers Demand More From Artists Than Simply Expert Craftsmanship in Performance, Says Gitta Gradova

by KAY KENNEDY

"THE message I want to give to students is this—let them think less of ambition for personal glory and more of spiritual development." Gitta Gradova leaned forward on the uncomfortable little hotel room chair, and emphasized her words with a quick, jerky motion of her hand.

Slim in a blue blouse and short dark skirt, with her straight bobbed hair, Miss Gradova seemed very boyish and very, very young. Somehow, although she is but twenty years old herself, it did not seem incongruous that she should so vehemently speak of "young" students. For in spite of her youth there is in this pianist an intensity and sincerity that bespeak experience and understanding.

"The public has progressed in artistic appreciation beyond the stage where it demands only great craftsmen," she continued. "It has advanced to the point where it wants something more—something truer, more vital. And there are so many things the student must learn before he or she can satisfy this demand."

Miss Gradova brushed back her hair with one of her characteristic short gestures. There was a half smile in her eyes as she learned back in her chair.

"You know, in this age of cynicism and ultra-sophistication, I am almost afraid of being accused of sentimentalizing," she said, "but I do mean it so very much when I say that the student must cultivate a religious attitude. Or perhaps 'attitude' is hardly the right word. Rather they must attend to the growth of the spiritual side of their art. As I said before, the desire for material success—although a human enough aim—must not be emphasized, and must never be allowed to overshadow the aspirations for real artistic achievement." The pianist paused, and her eyes were thoughtful. "To me, at any rate, music is the greatest religion in the world."

"Of course," continued Miss Gradova, "it is quite as easy to be a poseur in art as in any other branch of human activity. It is even comparatively simple (at least to those who have some natural talent) to surmount all the technical obstacles that confront those studying music. To comment further on this wide divergence between talent and genius, or technical ability and art, would be platitudinous. Anyone who wishes to attain something more than mere craftsmanship must work and study—and work and study some more. Incidentally, there is no reason, to my way of thinking, why the pupil should go to Europe for 'polishing' or for 'atmosphere.' It is possible to get an all round education right here in America—and, after all, this 'atmosphere' is something entirely of your own creation."

MISS GITTA GRADOVA

Every word, every gesture, evidenced Miss Gradova's reverence for her work and her keen interest in young artists.

"And, of course, by study I don't refer only to application in musical work. Naturally that is taken for granted. But it is equally important that the pupil should become at least conversant with the other arts. Appreciation of literature and painting, for example, will broaden his mind, and make him more receptive to his own work. This breadth of vision is essential to artistic conception. There is one last thing that I would advise the student, and that is to hear every concert he possibly can. Go to good concerts, and go to bad concerts—both will serve as excellent object lessons—but, at all costs, avoid mediocrity!"

Miss Gradova spoke of her regret that her own general education had been so interrupted. "I have always realized what a great loss it has been," she confided. "It has been far from easy to make it up by myself. You have no idea how difficult self-discipline is in trying to study by one's self, especially when most of one's time is quite thoroughly occupied with the piano! I am particularly fond of reading and always spend my time when I'm traveling trying to catch up on the many books I want to read."

Speaking of her early youth and the difficulties confronting her in her ambition of attaining both a musical and a general education, Miss Gradova told of how, when she was fifteen, she had decided that the time had come to cease being a child prodigy. As a result, she started in to study music all over again, beginning with the most elementary work.

"I am still studying with Mme. Hertz, of course, and I'm sure that I will never get to the stage where I feel that I can stop studying. I never feel satisfied with my work and, in a way, I consider myself my own best critic. I feel that, after each concert, I know just where I stand—how far I have progressed, and what a long, long road I have ahead of me.

"While I'm talking of my own work, I do so want to correct the misconception that many people seem to have that I am a Scriabine exponent. True, I am fond of Scriabine and there are many of his works which I love to play, but I don't want to be regarded as a one-composer pianist. Bach is my inspiration and my aspiration, and my ambition is to be able to be a good, all-round artist. I would like to be able to give all-Bach programs, all-Scriabine programs, all-Brahms programs. And then, too, some people refer to me as an ultra-modernist. I am not a modernist any more than I am a classicist. I play those pieces which I love, because, to me, they are clear and cipherable, regardless of who wrote them. My attitude is entirely impersonal towards new music, and I am ready to accept that which has a meaning for me. When I have found this meaning, then I feel that I can give the message to my audience. There is no such thing as a 'Gradova conception' of Scriabine or Bach. What I try to get across to my audience is simply a Scriabine conception or a Bach conception."

Newcomer Sings in Walkuere

The repetition of Die Walkuere at the Metropolitan on February 7 had a new Bruennhilde in Nanny Larsen-Todsen. The others in the cast were the same as at the previous performance. The World reviewer asserted that the Swedish singer "has gained immeasurably in poise and assurance" since her debut and said the role was sung "with simplicity and true sincerity." According to the Herald Tribune writer, Mme. Larson-Todsen's tone "was steadier, clearer, finer in quality. . . . This artist is impressive by reason of her genuineness and vitality of emotion; and last night her Bruennhilde moved us by its fervid sincerity."

Fleta

METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

VIRGINIA CARRINGTON THOMAS MUS. BAC. A. A. G. O.

AMERICAN ORGANIST AND COMPOSER

RECITALS ADDRESS: 516 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK

STELLA de METTE

MEZZO-SOPRANO

Formerly with Metropolitan Opera

Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.

Exclusive Management of ANTHONY BAGAROZY

Aeolian Hall New York

J. HENRI BOVE

FLUTE SOLOIST

Recitals and Obligatos

191 Claremont Ave. New York

Phone—Morningside 4595

FLORENCE MACBETH

Leading Coloratura Soprano Chicago Civic Opera Company

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers

Season 1925-1926 Now Booking

Now Touring the Pacific Coast

Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

Setzer, Vienna

JERITZA

First Transcontinental Tour

FEBRUARY, MARCH, APRIL—1925

Feb. 20	Montclair, N. J.	Mar. 17	Minneapolis
Feb. 24	*New York City	Mar. 20	*Milwaukee
Feb. 26	*Detroit	Mar. 24	Seattle
Mar. 1	*Boston	Mar. 26	Portland
Mar. 3	*Pittsburgh	Mar. 29	San Francisco
Mar. 6	Memphis	Mar. 31	Los Angeles
Mar. 10	San Antonio	Apr. 2	Pasadena
Mar. 13	Tulsa	Apr. 13	Denver
Mar. 15	*Chicago	Apr. 16	Kansas City

* Second Concert Appearances

Baltimore Repeat Sold Out

300 Standees, 300 on Stage for January 12th Concert in Spite of Ice and Blizzard.

"RECITAL IS GIVEN BY MARIA JERITZA AT LYRIC THEATER"

"Largest Crowd of Musical Season Gathers to Hear Soprano of Metropolitan Opera Company"

"It required the regular seats on both floors of the Lyric, the orchestra pit, the stage and the standing room to take care of the crowd which last evening heard Maria Jeritza, of the Metropolitan Opera. It was not only the largest crowd of the season, but one of the most demonstrative."

"In both respects the audience lived up to the precedent established by Jeritza audiences in Vienna, in New York, and wherever else this youthful diva has appeared."

"Although Jeritza's great fame is built upon her remarkable equipment for opera, her performance in recital, accompanied b· piano instead of by full orchestra with all its inspirations, does not disappoint her hearers. To the more intimate relations of the recital hall she brings not only her gorgeous voice and her very great beauty, but a most unusual personal charm which is much more apparent and hence much more effective than in opera. Her radiance of manner is worth half an octave."

"That natural enthusiasm gives to the Austrian soprano's voice a joyous quality, an exultant soaring glory that is at times quite staggering. So frail a snatch of melody as Mrs. Beach's 'The Year's at the Spring,' because its essence is joy, Jeritza makes a thing of genuine beauty and it is in compositions of that mood that her audience last evening appeared to like her best."—Baltimore Sun.

"JERITZA CAPTURES LYRIC AUDIENCE"

"A capacity audience welcomed Maria Jeritza, Metropolitan Opera soprano, in her first appearance here at the Lyric last night."

"The inclement weather did not keep down the size of the crowd, nor did it dampen its enthusiasm."

"Jeritza was in gracious mood and responded with generosity to the repeated applause with numerous encores."

"Her remarkable stage presence captivated the audience from the time she first crumpled down in her dainty, low bow."

"Her lyric voice was displayed to the full of its marvelous qualities. Its clearness, power and expression are extraordinary. It was at all times pleasant to the ear, from the sweet softness of a simple melody to the soaring, full notes of an aria."—Baltimore Post.

"GREAT AUDIENCE HEARS JERITZA AT LYRIC"

"Metropolitan Prima Donna Sings to Season's Record Crowd; Encores Nearly Double Length of Program"

"Maria Jeritza, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang last night at the Lyric before an audience that for the first time this season overflowed the seating capacity of the house to the extent of some eight or ten rows of seats on the stage, and that was so enthusiastic in applause, encores nearly doubled the length of the program."—Baltimore American.

"RECORD CROWD WELCOMES JERITZA"

"First Appearance Signal for Ovation, Which Is Repeated Throughout Performance"

"Baroness Maria Jeritza, or, as she prefers to be called, Madame Jeritza, sang last night at the Lyric to an audience which packed the big house from stage to foyer, filling every seat on the first floor and in the galleries, overflowing into the 300 chairs on the stage and damming up against the back wall in solid rows of standees. It was the largest audience that has greeted a musical artist in Baltimore this season."—Baltimore News

NOW BOOKING

SEASON 1925-1926

••••

Exclusive Management:

Metropolitan Musical Bureau

Aeolian Hall, New York City

••••

Knabe Piano Victor Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

ONE DUTY of an influential and widely read newspaper is to move constructively. All such publications do not, unfortunately, invariably so move. One of those publications is the Chicago Daily Tribune. In a recent issue there appeared an editorial bearing the head "Now It Can Be Told." The subject matter concerned the Chicago Civic Opera Company; and what the Tribune thought should constitute a proper length of an opera season for Chicago.

The temper of the editorial was hypercritical and intolerant. It belittled unjustly the efforts of the Chicago Civic Opera Company; it even charged the Tribune's own music editor (Mr. Edward Moore, an able and conscientious reviewer of music performances) with undue leniency in his writings on the opera company's performances.

In its lack of dignity and in its superciliousness this particular editorial must have shocked discriminating persons who read it. The spirit was aggressive, the content distressingly common in phraseology, as, for example, "But there she is anyway * * *"

THE TRIBUNE could have performed a service had it criticised helpfully what merited criticism. The Musical Digest is aware that the Chicago Civic Opera Company has shortcomings. It has pointed out what it felt to be some of those shortcomings; and it has suggested how remedies might be applied, and urged the consideration of them.

The Musical Digest recognizes that some of the Chicago Opera representations are below the standard its clientele may rightfully expect. The Musical Digest has long felt that there might be brought about a betterment in the managerial procedure of this organization, and that in such circumstances a saving of expense might be effected.

But always has The Musical Digest made its suggestions with respect for what deserved being respected. President Samuel Insull is aware of that, and Business Manager Herbert Johnson, and Musical Director Giorgio Polacco.

WHOEVER wrote, or directed the writing, of the Chicago Tribune's editorial appeared to have slight sympathy with an institution which is exerting a cultural effect upon Chicago. The sneering tone of the editorial justified the assumption that the person responsible for it prefers mud to art.

Mr. Insull and his associates will not be injured by any such piece of writing . . . no matter how much they may have unwisely done, or failed to do, in administering the affairs of the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

What this organization and its officers and sponsors and supporters need is encouragement for what they are striving civically and artistically to achieve; with perhaps some cautioning in matters that appear to deserve such mention.

But harsh words and a truculent attitude will not help. On the contrary it can only harm. The Chicago Civic Opera Company has friends and admirers—many of them. And those friends and admirers can be increased in number . . . by a wise operating policy on the part of the opera organization's heads, and the supplying, where and when needed, performances of a quality which deserve approval.

BOSTON is one of the cities which appreciates the Chicago Civic Opera Company, and is supporting it staunchly. The recent two weeks' season given there, in the Boston Opera House, was keenly gratifying to the guarantors who made possible the visit of the Chicagoans.

The patronage was the largest any opera venture has had in the Hub for many years. Not a seat was to be had for most of the representations during the closing days; and the fore part of the season was well attended.

A reduction of 15 per cent of last year's deficit has caused enthusiasm over making a season by the Chicago company an annual affair; and while no contract for 1926 has yet been signed there is a feeling amongst the guarantors that it will be done . . . as a matter of course.

CERTAIN of the Chicago company's Boston representations enlisted so hearty a response from the public and so warm an indorsement on the part of the daily newspaper music reviewers that one must regard them as having been worthy of their recognition.

I attended the last four, and they revealed elements to admire and commend, even though the Boston Opera House stage facilities are inadequate.

L'Amore dei tre Re, Pelleas et Melisande, and The Jewels of the Madonna were splendidly given. There would have been more to attract attention in The Barber of Seville performance if Feodor Chaliapin had not elected to play Don Basilio in a low comedy vein, thereby compelling his principal associates to follow suit.

GREAT ARTIST though this Russian is, he strays now and again from the path consistency dictates he should follow. The Barber is an opera which merits a touch of aristocracy to its comedy, even if Chaliapin does hold a contrary view. He did move his auditor-spectators to laughter; and yet it is probable that they were impressed by his prestige. It was largely a matter of the king being unable to do a wrong.

Nevertheless, Chaliapin cannot be excused. It would have been more appropriate, also, had Giacomo Rimini (who sang excellently the music of Figaro) borne in mind that a barber does not ordinarily become over familiar with his betters.

Charlie Hacket's Almaviva was admirably done—vocally and dramatically—and Miss Hidalgo pleased, though her singing disclosed a tendency to take many liberties with her music.

THERE WAS not a little in the L'Amore dei Tre Re representation to satisfy the expert listener. Maestro Polacco was for the most part happily placed, and the cast was well balanced. Miss Garden was not heard and seen to such advantage as in Pelleas et Melisande, but all the other principals managed well, and the audience—in which were Italo Montemezzi and Mrs. Montemezzi—was impressed.

The Pelleas performance was a delight; and the young tenor, Jose Mojica, made Pelleas musically welcome and looked and played the role with understanding. Here is an artist who has improved greatly since he joined the company.

Mme. Raisa became a favorite with the Boston public, and so her Maliella, in The Jewels, gained for her much applause. Forrest Lamont provided a sterling portraiture of the tenor part in this opera, and Mr. Rimini was placed to advantage.

So the Chicago company seems soundly established in Boston, and it will be welcomed there whenever it chooses to make the trip.

ACCORDING to advance accounts received from Cleveland, the Chicago company's approaching four performances there should be well patronized. Vigorous work has been done by the Cleveland Civic Music Association, of which John A. Penton is president.

Cleveland is becoming operatically prominent—with both its Chicago Opera and its Metropolitan Opera seasons—and there is a desire on the part of the people that when Mr. Insull's organization appears in that city there will be an artistic and financial outcome which can be pointed to with satisfaction.

One thing is certain—the entire Chicago Opera organization is bent on making its Cleveland endeavors equal to the very best of which it is capable. Quite a little is at stake, in various respects, and as a consequence the Fifth City people may anticipate some opera from the Chicagoans which should be worth hearing and seeing.

TEAPOT TEMPESTS will occur, as most folks realize, in even the best regulated kitchens. In opera families, where sensitive and highly-strung artists dwell, such affairs are prone to happen . . . and with greater frequency, as circumstances naturally must, than in the more tranquil walks of life.

For so large an organization, and one which proceeds during any season under constant pressure, the New York Metropolitan Opera Company is remarkably free from those little dissensions common to most organizations of its kind. When something does crop up to ruffle the surface of the Metropolitan waters it becomes, of course, a matter for rather widespread comment; and the newspaper reporters generally rush about, interviewing one person and another, in an effort to get a "good story."

The latest incident to stir matters up at the Metropolitan was a reported clash between Mme. Jeritza and Signor Gigli, both premier artists and favorites with the public.

IN the latest performance of Tosca, in which the Viennese soprano appeared for the last time this season as Floria Tosca, there was a bit of a flurry prior to, during, and subsequent to curtain calls taken by the soprano and the tenor. There followed, the day after, certain newspaper comment touching of friction between the singers and assertions that they would not appear together in future performances at the Metropolitan; also some other remarks attributed to those artists, and some speculation on the part of the newspaper writers.

Whether Baron Popper, husband of Mme. Jeritza, will or will not accompany her to the Metropolitan when she sings there next season is something over which the public need not concern itself. He may, and then again he may not. But it will not be at all necessary for him to do that in order to insure for Mme. Jeritza a harmonious environment.

Signor Gigli had little to say of the Tosca incident, during which Mme. Jeritza appeared before the Metropolitan curtain seemingly in tears. That started the rumors to flying. And the reporters to reporting.

It is a safe assumption that Giulio Gatti-Casazza is quite capable of adjusting any misunderstandings which may exist between any members of the organization of which he is the administrative head. All's well that ends well, and this affair will doubtless be forgotten long before another Metropolitan season rolls round.

THE HOUSE of John Wanamaker is famed chiefly for its merchandising progressiveness. I have long read, as have so many others, the advertisements of this establishment; and in the course of the reading there has been much of intriguing information quite apart from what was being offered for public consideration in the way of this article or that.

Lately the persistency of Wanamaker's to promote organ music, and present celebrated organists, has borne a surprisingly large crop of fruit. It took some time to impress on a large part of the music public that these organ recitals, and other concerts in which the organ figured, [illegible] altogether unique. This, too, despite the frequent presentation of some of the most illustrious organists to be found in this country and in Europe.

A few evenings ago there was given, in the attractive auditorium in the Wanamaker New York store, a program so unusual and so pretentious that it merits rather special attention. It attracted a large audience, among which were quite a number of musicians well known to the world generally.

RARELY is one privileged to hear such a program as that arranged by Dr. Alexander Russell, himself an admirable organist, who directs the music activities for Wanamaker's. Marcel Dupre, one of the foremost of France's organists; Marco Enrico Bossi, an Italian virtuoso; Charles M. Courboin, a great Belgian player, and Palmer Christian, who upholds well America's organists' honors, were the soloists. A good sized orchestra recruited from the New York Philharmonic, with Henry Hadley conducting, also participated.

First came Dupre's orchestral version of the toccata, adagio, and fugue in C major of Bach; then Bossi's concerto in A minor for organ and orchestra; Eric De Lamarter's E major concerto for organ and orchestra; Dupre's Cortege and Litany, for organ and orchestra; and the Widor sixth symphony, in G minor—all first presentations as orchestra versions in New York.

The value of such a concert is very great, for it discloses the possibilities of the organ as a concert instrument . . . an instrument for which there is needed a larger repertoire of compositions other than sacred which now is available.

In the performance given by the four artists there was much to interest the music lover, and still more to engage the close attention of the musician. For there was offered a variety of individual styles of the four soloists, each of whom had something distinctive to offer. What was particularly gratifying was Mr. Christian's achievement. He was so poised, so authoritative (playing the fine De Lamarter score from memory) and so resourceful that the applause he won was well deserved.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Madama Butterfly

Elisabeth Rethberg made her first appearance of the season in Madama Butterfly at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on February 9, Edward Johnson sang Pinkerton for the first time this year. To quote the Post, "both gave performances of notable excellence, both vocally and histrionically." Others in the cast were the same and Tullio Serafin conducted.

W. J. Henderson (Sun) found Mme. Rethberg's voice "excellently suited to the music and she sang well." Her singing of the duet in the first act "was a display of extraordinarily beautiful tone coupled with poetic interpretation." In the words of Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, she brought "her luscious soprano" to the part, and Deems Taylor wrote in the World that her acting had the qualities of "essential truth and absolute sincerity, and her beautiful voice was at its best. Such full-blown beauty of tone, such flexibility and exquisite expressiveness as her singing offered last night are not often to be heard anywhere." The Herald Tribune writer found her singing "excellent, with notable beauty and purity of tone, unforced strength and polished fluency, capable of expression without losing the melodic line."

This writer thought that Mr. Johnson "gave a most effective performance" and other writers agreed. Deems Taylor considered that he brought "intelligence, sincerity and genuine imagination to the part." According to Mr. Henderson, Mr. Johnson "was not only vocally admirable, but impassioned and convincing. A more interesting Pinkerton the Metropolitan has not known."

Miss Frances Sebel

Accompanied by Giuseppe Bamboschek at the piano, Frances Sebel, soprano, gave a recital at Town Hall, New York, on February 9. According to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, Miss Sebel's voice had "considerable power, with strong and full high notes produced sometimes a little explosively, but her singing grew more even with the fading of a tremolo in the opening numbers."

In the Sun it was said that she "revealed a voice of considerable power and vocal material of value which can be still further developed. She did not use her voice with much skill, and there were few subtleties in her phrasing and coloring. Miss Sebel's tones, however, were well produced. They were clear, well rounded and full of vitality. In the expression of emotion and mood she was convincing and often stirring. The upper part of her voice was especially free and unclouded."

According to the Times, she sang "with much spirit" and was compelled by prolonged applause to give many encores. The World reviewer felt that "her voice wants warmth and flexibility, but she used it intelligently and well. Her diction, particularly in English, was excellent."

Efrem Zimbalist

The program of Efrem Zimbalist's violin recital at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on February 8 included his own composition, Improvisation on a Japanese Theme, which he brought back from the Orient with him. He also played Handel's D major Sonata, Hubay's G minor Concerto, and the Prelude and Fugue in G minor by Bach.

Alison Smith (World) wrote that Mr. Zimbalist "played with his usual command and brilliancy" and the Times reviewer commented that he played "with an artist's absorption in his music, with beauty of tone and ripe musical understanding."

The writer in the Herald Tribune observed that the playing of the violinist "has lost nothing of its skill and finish in the Far East, and yesterday afternoon brought the familiar full, round fluent tone, finely polished surface, and technical mastery." According to the Post reviewer, Mr. Zimbalist "played with the artist's characteristic intelligence and skill."

"The formidable cadenza of the Hubal Concerto," said the Sun reviewer, "was played by the violinist with supreme mastery, with impeccable intonation in the most complicated double stops, with authoritative bow and an exhilarating spirit." This writer added that "he remains one of the most satisfying of violinists, a player who has all the resources of his art at his command, but whose keen intelligence, delicate taste and pure love for elevation of style prevents him from resembling in any way a 'wizard of the bow.'"

Miss Zelina Bartholomew

At Town Hall, New York, on February 4, Zelina Bartholomew was heard in a song recital. The Times reviewer wrote that "her voice is not large and extensive, but it carries well; it is agreeable in timbre, smooth and flowing in its production, and is exactly suited to the half tints and polished phrases of Debussy and Fourdain. Her clear articulation was one of her best assets."

This writer continued that "she sang with natural refinement and delicacy and displayed good taste in the choice and delivery of her program." In the Sun, the commentator remarked that Miss Bartholomew "pleased her auditors by her personal charm and animated delivery." According to the World, she displayed an "interesting personality," and "a fresh and ingratiating voice of excellent quality."

The Post writer commended her for a voice "of fresh and pleasing quality" and the reviewer of the Herald Tribune wrote that "with a voice of rather limited volume, Miss Bartholomew showed a capacity for expressive interpretation, while the quality of her tone was fresh and agreeable when not aiming beyond its compass." Frank La Forge was at the piano.

Mme. Charles Cahier

"An exceptionally well arranged and enjoyable program," in the words of the Sun reviewer, was provided by Mme. Charles Cahier at her Aeolian Hall recital on February 7. In the performance of Bach's aria, Schlage Doch, Gewunschte Stunde, Mme. Cahier was assisted by Michael Press and Edwin Idler, violinists; Alix Maruchess, viola; Weston Gales, organ, and Joseph Passan, bells.

The writer in the Sun continued that "Mme. Cahier gave a performance of intelligence and imagination which easily transcended her minor vocal deficiencies. . . . The variety of contrast utilized by her skill in interpretation won a great deal of applause from a large audience."

According to the Herald Tribune, Mme. Cahier, who "can be depended on for artistic, expressive singing," gave "another convincing demonstration of her skill in interpretation—a skill which offset certain periods when her tone seemed produced with some effort. Despite this, her climaxes were distinctly effective."

Miss Elsie Bishop

Elsie Bishop, contralto, made her debut in Town Hall, New York, on February 9 in a program of early Italian and English songs as well as German Lieder and songs by French and American composers. Her accompanist was Coenraad V. Bos.

In the Sun the reviewer observed that "Miss Bishop has evidently studied her art seriously, and in matters of phrasing, diction, and understanding, her singing brought successful results. Her voice is not large, nor is it one of best quality. . . . An accomplished singer in many respects, her achievements deserve praise."

The Times writer felt that "the quality of her voice is naturally pleasing and she was at her best in moods of simplicity and tenderness." According to the Herald Tribune, she sang with considerable competence and interpretative skill, bringing out and differentiating various shades of expression.

Tito Schipa

His only New York recital of the season was given in Carnegie Hall on February 9 by Tito Schipa, tenor of the Chicago Civic Opera Company. According to the World, he "delighted a capacity audience."

The Sun reviewer wrote that "much praise is due Mr. Schipa for his singing. Fine lyric tenors are indeed rare at the present time, and Mr. Schipa belongs among them. With his voice under excellent control, his delivery last night had taste and style in song and the appropriate dramatic sense in operatic work."

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail considered him "that rare phenomenon, an Italian opera tenor at home in the concert room. . . . Save for an occasional jerkiness, which may have arisen from an unresponsive accompaniment, Mr. Schipa phrased with his customary taste." Mr. Sanborn also commented on the fact that his tones were "veiled" and that his top notes "wavered and spread."

The Times found him "in capital voice," and the Post writer said that "he was in fine voice, which so greatly pleased his admirers that repeated encores were demanded." In the Herald Tribune, the chronicler wrote that "Mr. Schipa is a very pleasing recitalist. He sings with ease, but judiciously, sparing his loudest notes and favoring a fluent mezzo-forte which reached the farthest parts of the hall without any apparent effort."

Guiomar Novaes Repeats

There was a large attendance in Aeolian Hall on January 31 to hear Guiomar Novaes in her second New York recital of the season. According to the World Mme. Novaes' program "was rich in variety and significance, and she brought to it that velvety smoothness of tone and depth of interpretation which characterizes her work."

Three Artists at Biltmore

Marguerite Namara, soprano, made her first New York appearance in several seasons at the Hotel Biltmore morning musicale on February 6. Tina Filipponi, pianist, and Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, appeared also.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

GRAVEURE
IN LEADING MUSIC
CENTERS

Graveure is perhaps the greatest phenomenon of voice who has given performances here in the present century. It is difficult to find words to describe the always changing pictures of mood which this peerless singer creates. (Christiana, Norway, Orebladet.)

Graveure is the finest, most exquisite singer who ever came here. He possesses every quality and unites all perfections in one person. (Christiania, Norway, Morgenbladed.)

Management:
Metropolitan
Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

John Charles Thomas

A large audience applauded the recital given in Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 8 by John Charles Thomas, baritone. According to the Times reviewer, Mr. Thomas' voice "has depth, color, sonority and when required, nobility. And he has added to his natural gifts diction, phrasing, interpretation and all the human emotions."

Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) wrote that "the beauty of Mr. Thomas' voice, his general skill and taste in using it, his fine diction in four languages, and often his art as an interpreter merited such cordial expression of pleasure and appreciation." Although Mr. Sanborn thought that his tones were "breathy and wooden" in the lower scale, Mr. Thomas "distinguished himself particularly in his expressive, finely shaded delivery of Ravel's Nicolette," he added.

In the opinion of the World writer, the baritone's voice "seems to gain immeasurably in range and volume with each concert appearance; both his tone production and his appearance have now reached Wagnerian proportions." The Sun reviewer remarked that Mr. Thomas "has seldom sung better." And, although his French diction was "not of the purest and his intonation was not impeccable," according to this commentator, "in matters of interpretation, however, he maintained a high artistic level. His breath control was good, his head tones clear and free, and his voice has greatly increased in depth and range of expression. The invocation of Orpheus was admirably sung, with a fine flow of lyric tone and an elevated style that bespeaks confidence and authority."

The Herald Tribune reported that "Mr. Thomas' record has been one of steady development and his voice showed an unusual combination of power and quality of tone."

Miss Beatrice Martin

A recital was given at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 4 by Beatrice Martin, soprano. Walter Golde was at the piano. According to the Sun, she sang with a voice "of naturally good quality and much taste a conventional program of airs and songs which began with old English airs and included German, American and French songs and an air from Le Cid of Massenet."

The Herald Tribune writer remarked that she "displayed a voice of moderate volume and generally pleasing tone. Her lower notes had a smoothness less apparent at the other end of the scale, where there seemed to be a slight occasional forcing." The Times reviewer reported that "a voice of natural charm and pleasing tunefulness carried Beatrice Martin successfully through her song recital." This writer added that her "group of German Lieder in particular was sung with a touching and unaffected tenderness, a gentle emotion, very captivating to the listener. Four lovely songs by American composers deepened the impression of vocal charm which the singer had created.

Rudolph Polk

Rudolph Polk, violinist, with the assistance of sixty members of the Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Artur Bodanzky, gave his first New York performance of Respighi's Concerto Gregoriano in Carnegie Hall, February 6.

According to Olin Downes of the Times, "Mr. Polk played this music in a musicianly manner, with a rather small but smooth tone, and a technique usually adequate to the very considerable demands of the music." Alison Smith of the World felt that he "paid Respighi the tribute of an eager and animated interpretation and Mr. Bodanzky surrounded the soloist with a beautifully balanced and sensitive accompaniment."

F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune) wrote that the violinist "played it moderately well. He displayed his usual technical skill and his tone was usually fluent and of pleasing quality, but there were times when its volume diminished, when the solo became lost in the orchestral background. This was very well handled by Mr. Bodanzky's forces." The Sun chronicler thought that Mr. Polk "gave a good account of himself in this and in the Tschaikowsky Concerto which followed. He has gained confidence and his readings were commendable for the insight and grasp of thematic structure which they displayed."

This writer observed that the Respighi Concerto "as a whole was infused with romanticism from beginning to end." Mr. Perkins considered it "a distinctly playable work, offering the soloist ample chance to show his talent, but not making any sacrifices for this purpose; well wrought and pleasing to the ear." As Mr. Downes expressed it, it is "freely in the ecclesiastical style" with a "sameness of mood and coloring" which "causes doubt as to whether this work is sufficiently well knit and contrasted in its contents to take a durable place in the repertory."

Miss Suzanne Kenyon

Suzanne Kenyon, young lyric soprano, made her debut in a costume recital in Chickering Hall on February 4. Included on her program were old English songs, numbers by Gretry and Valette and Southern songs.

In the Sun she was called "a young singer of considerable charm and ability" who "revealed a lyric soprano voice of much grace, not very impressive in its range, perhaps, but well adapted to the qualities of her offerings. She sang with freedom and spirit, and with a sensitive understanding of the varying moods of her program. The group of early English arias was charmingly rendered, with fine intonation and phrasing of delicacy and significance."

According to the Post, her voice was "suited to the music of lighter vein" and in the Southern songs "her cadences and interpretation were excellent." F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune) wrote that she "sang with a light, clear voice with considerable effectiveness and charm."

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO

A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 21, 1925
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Roderick White

The program offered by Roderick White at his violin recital at Town Hall, New York, on February 5 was, in the words of the Times reviewer, "proportioned with fine taste, ranging from a classic Mozart Sonata in G to the rarer Faust Fantasy of Wieniawski." There was also included "an interesting group of folk-songs transcribed by Mr. White and played with his usual clarity and skill," (Alison Smith in the World).

The Sun reviewer wrote that "the Glazounow Concerto revealed Mr. White at his best, for his bowing was firm, his technique clean and sharply outlined, and the work as a whole was played with a fine regard for its form and structure. Mr. White's palette of tone colors is limited and he is not an artist who succeeds in swaying the emotions to any great degree. But he did play with intelligence, a more than adequate technique and a clear full tone, often of considerable beauty. Moreover, he is a good, sound, musicianly scholar, and whatever his art may lack in soul stirring qualities, his recitals are thoroughly musical and enjoyable."

In the Herald Tribune, the writer felt that he gave a "serious performance, marked by taste and thorough technical competence." This reviewer agreed that his tone in the Glazounow Concerto, "while not of particularly large volume," had an "agreeable mellowness." Samuel Chotzinoff accompanied.

Lectures on Poetry and Musicians

Poetry and Musicians was the theme of the piano recital given by Dai Buell on the evening of February 9 in the second program of her series in Chickering Hall, New York. MacDowell, Schumann, Ravel, and Chopin were represented on the program.

Mme. Marguerite Sylva

The first of her three song recitals was given in Wallack's Theatre on February 8 by Marguerite Sylva. In addition to French, Spanish, German and Italian songs, Mme. Sylva, assisted by Ray Vir Den, tenor, and Henrietta Maston, soprano, offered a scene representing a rehearsal of the third act of Werther. Corinne Wolersen was the accompanist.

The reviewer in the Sun remarked that "Mme. Sylva was in good voice and her concert was amusing and entertaining, despite occasional gaps in memory." The Post writer commented on the enthusiasm of the audience, and the Herald Tribune chronicler stated that "Mme. Sylva's performance was distinctly expressive and animated. . . . She took the audience into her confidence and did not hesitate to apologize in advance for possible linguistic deficiencies or turn a lapse of memory to her own advantage. It was entertaining, if not, perhaps, always art."

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer

At the first of her series of six programs of romantic piano music at Chickering Hall, New York, on February 5, Germaine Schnitzer divided her concert between Weber and Schubert.

The Sun reviewer observed that "in this style of music, as was noted again last evening, she shows fine technical equipment with spirited style and seriousness combined with musical intelligence of high order." According to the Herald Tribune, "vigor and brilliance were the principal features of the pianist's performance yesterday, giving ample dash and sparkle to the Weber numbers, zest and momentum to the Schubert Fantasy, but Mme. Schnitzer also gave lighter, softer tones their due."

The March Tour of
DAYTON WESTMINSTER CHOIR
60 Mixed Voices, Singing a Cappella
Directed by JOHN FINLEY WILLIAMSON
INCLUDES CONCERTS AT CLEVELAND, MASONIC HALL, MARCH 13
DETROIT, ORCHESTRA HALL, MARCH 14
CHICAGO, ORCHESTRA HALL, MARCH 17
MAY TOUR: SOUTHWEST FALL TOUR: EAST
For all Particulars Address: M. H. HANSON, 437 5th Ave., New York

FROM THE PRESS NOTICES

What the Cincinnati critics think

One need have no fears for choral music in the United States if such organizations as the Dayton Westminster Choir continue to appear upon the musical horizon. . . . There were no flaws in the tonal beauty of the ensemble and at no time were any of the voices either singly or in groups thrown into unpleasant relief. The clarity of enunciation made the printing of the words unnecessary. —Samuel T. Wilson in "The Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune," April 7, 1924.

The Westminster Choir stands today as a shining example of well-nigh perfect choral singing. The voices are evenly balanced, always true to pitch, and the quality and graduation of tone from a fortissimo to the softest mezza voice, is produced with apparently no effort.—Mrs. Corinne Moore Lawson in "Cincinnati Times-Star," April 7, 1924.

The Dayton Choir is a remarkable organization of some 50 voices which, under the leadership of John Finley Williamson, has achieved extraordinarily fine results. . . . They gave a program of religious numbers of the most exacting type with a quality of tone and beauty of shading nothing short of phenomenal.—Lillian Tyler Plogstedt in "The Cincinnati Post," April 7, 1924.

Musical Chicago En Courant

Pavlowa Company May Join Opera, Says Rumor; Mlle. Boulanger Talks; Plan Jubilee for Pianist.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, February 10.

DURING the past week, Chicagoans have demonstrated in no uncertain numbers their interest in dancing, particularly as exemplified by Pavlowa and her efficient company at the Auditorium. Perhaps the greatest interest was centered in performances listing the new ballet concerned with the adventures of the famous Don Quixote. This had eight performances during the two weeks engagement, the last an extra on Sunday night to fulfill the demand for seats.

No wonder that smile on the face of Manager Hurok! He reporetd an intake at the box office of just under $70,000 for the two weeks. No wonder also that Mr. Samuel Insull was an interested spectator at several performances. Report has it that the Chicago Civic Opera Company was offered the entire Pavlowa Company for its last season and that the offer has been repeated for next season.

The public has shown its inclination and willingness to support good ballet. Perhaps in such a combination lies the answer to what every opera manager, excepting perhaps the astute Mr. Gallo,—who, by the way, has just completed arrangements to bring his own opera company to the Auditorium in the spring —wants to know, namely, how to make an opera company pay.

AN INTERESTING visitor of the week was Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, the French musician who spoke, sang and played in behalf of modern and ultra-modern music last Tuesday night under the auspices of the Chicago Woman's Club. Mlle. Boulanger is fitted for such a lecture recital. She is the daughter of a famous family of musicians, and herself is a proficient exponent of music, both as organist and pianist. Though she apologized for her singing, she need not have, for she presented charmingly songs by Faure and others of the modern French school.

Her remarks were illuminating and to the point, delivered with ease and charm, if with a somewhat Gallic accent. Her appearance here brings to mind a story bearing on the extreme ease and accuracy of her sight reading, to the effect that she is the coveted medium for composers trying for the Prix de Rome. It is said that they feel their works will have the most favorable presentation possible from her playing.

"IS ROLAND HAYES, the negro tenor, to be the next rival of John McCormack and Tito Schipa?" So queries one Chicago writer in his review of Hayes' recital of last Tuesday night. Be that as it may, certainly and surely Hayes' singing is bringing him large return in popular esteem. Particularly effective on his program were the songs of Handel and Stradella, and Purcell's Passing By sung by request as an encore. These and the negro spirituals which closed his program, were fine examples of a real simplicity of style in tone and taste.

A VERY joyous occasion was the Children's Concert by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra last Thursday. For the theme of the Allegro of Beethovan's Eighth Symphony Eric DeLamarter supplied the words: "Tomorrow is payday, pay-day, pay-day!" He told the children that the theme was intended to cheer on the orchestra musicians to play faster and more merrily.

In the selection The Young Prince and Princess, from Scheherazade, screen pictures were used to show how the royal pair looked. But the real hit of the program came when Mr. Stock transformed his orchestra into a veritable Sousa band playing the American Patrol. Everyone stood up and sang and shouted, aided and abetted by Mr. Stock. And what a good time they all had!

A QUITE different affair was the next day's formal subscription concert. Here the seldom heard Richard Strauss' Fantastic Variations on a theme of knightly character, Don Quixote, was the main item of interest. Nearly thirty years old, it remains surprisingly new. True, its intricacies seem not so intricate as on their last hearing here eight years ago, and one may laugh at the tricks of muted brass bleating sheep-like, yet its fantasy is charming. The cello Don Quixote Mr. Wallenstein interpreted with sympathy, and the humor of the viola Sancho-Panza as played by Mr. Esser was delightful.

It was interesting to hear intermission comments, which took the form of conjecture as to how the Strauss music would have worked out with the Pavlowa production of Don Quixote, in place of the rather pallid music which at present accompanies the ballet. Of course one would perforce presuppose a considerably larger orchestra than the amiable Mr. Stier now conducts for the ballet.

LARGE audiences greeted four recitals of merit on Sunday. Yolanda Mero played several little heard piano works of Liszt and Chopin, while next door Georges Enesco returned to Chicago in the single capacity of violinist, joining Edward Harris in a performance of the Cesar Franck Sonata for violin and piano.

A new singer is no novelty, but one with the combined merits which Leola Turner displayed at her debut on Sunday, deserves special mention. A program of real interest, a feat in itself, included besides some particularly well chosen French Songs, a new composition by the Chicago composer, Leo Sowerby, entitled The Storm.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT of unusual interest concerns the Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler Golden Jubilee Concert, to take place February 25. As its title implies it is arranged to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Mrs. Zeisler's first public appearance, at which time little Fannie Bloomfield, eleven years old, made her debut as a pianist with the Beethoven Society, at that time the foremost musical organization of Chicago. The program will include Beethoven's Andante in F (played by Mrs. Zeisler at her first appearance), the Schumann Concerto, and the Chopin F minor Concerto. Sponsoring the concert are the Orchestral Association, Musician's Club of Women, Society of American Musicians and the Civic Music Association.

TITO SCHIPA

Who Was Given a Dinner by Five Hundred Friends and Admirers at the Hotei Astor, New York, Last Tuesday Evening.

To Hold Memory Contest

Minneapolis, Feb. 6.—A music memory contest will be held here on the afternoon of March 29 at the popular concert of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, with Henri Verbrugghen conducting. A list of forty musical compositions has been issued, with facilities suggested to contestants for familiarizing themselves with these pieces, and a number of them will be played at the concert. The contestants will be required to name the pieces played. All amateurs of music are admitted to the contest, and the prizes will include among other things a grand piano, season tickets to the Symphony concerts, and a dozen phonograph records.

Duluth Aims to Have Orchestra

Duluth, Feb. 2.—Fred G. Bradbury heads a group of local men and women who have made a start toward the organization of a symphony orchestra here. An orchestra of fifty members has been organized to give a series of low-priced concerts, each with a well known soloist.

Worcester Wins Glee Contest

The Glee Club of Worcester Academy, of Worcester, Mass., won the Interpreparatory School Glee Club Contest on the evening of February 7 in Town Hall, New York. Loomis Institute was second, and the Taft School, the winner of the last two contests, was third.

Don Quixote Revived By Chicago Symphony

Chicago, Feb. 7.—Richard Strauss' Don Quixote was played here yesterday afternoon for the first time in eight years by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Frederick Stock conducting. Also heard at the concert were Handel's Second Concerto, Wagner's Siegfried Idyl and Finale.

Edward Moore (Tribune) commended Mr. Wallenstein's "brilliant and wholly admirable display on the cello" and the shorter solos by Mr. Esser and Mr. Gordon in the Strauss work. Other writers lauded them, and Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner spoke of Mr. Wallenstein's "art and musicianship, beautiful tone, and technical mastery."

The reviewers spoke of the cleverness of Don Quixote and expressed the hope that it would retain a permanent place in the orchestra's repertoire. Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that "it is one of the finest of Strauss' symphonic compositions, and in fact it is one of the most delightful numbers that we have heard for some time." According to Karleton Hackett of the Post, "Mr. Stock gave a display of the powers of perhaps the cleverest man who ever devoted his energies to the exploitation of the orchestra." Mr. Gunn remarked that the piece "sounded surprisingly new" and spoke of the "beautiful message" of the composition. Mr. Moore said that it "shows about all of Strauss' best and a good part of his worst, his rollicking imagination, his high spirits, his melodies that charm the ear, his other melodies that irritate with their commonplace stupidity."

At the children's concert on Friday afternoon Mr. Stock conducted the overture to Wolf-Ferrari's Secret of Suzanne, the Allegro from Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, one section of Rimsky Korsakoff's Scheherezade, and shorter works by Herbert, Shelly, Suppe, and Rubinstein.

SUMMY'S CORNER

FREDERICK STOCK, Conductor, Chicago Symphony Orchestra, writes: "I find Mr. Weidig's textbook a veritable mine of useful information, a book that should be in the possession of everyone interested in the study of Harmony."

Harmonic Material and Its Uses
by
ADOLF WEIDIG
Price, $3.00, plus postage
Published by
Clayton F. Summy Co.
429 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

GRADOVA
"One by one the young pianists smoke and smoulder past. Then, at last — say in Gradova—DARTS THE FLAME."—H. T. Parker. Boston Transcript.
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Bldg., New York
Steinway Piano Duo-Art Rolls

M U Z I O
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger. 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FORREST
L A M O N T
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

Chicago Hears Recitalists

Yolanda Mero, Enesco, and Hayes Appear; Pavlowa Ends Her Stay.

Chicago, Feb. 9.—Among the recitalists of the week were Georges Enesco, Yolanda Mero, and Roland Hayes, Anna Pavlowa closed her two weeks season here yesterday, after an engagement marked by record attendance and brilliant performances.

Mr. Enesco, assisted by Edward Harris, pianist, was heard at the Playhouse yesterday afternoon. According to the Herald Examiner writer, the concert "had every artistic virtue to commend it," and Mr. Harris was in a large part responsible. Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that Mr. Enesco's reading of the Franck A major Sonata for piano and violin "was noble and musical in the recitative-fantasia, and played with technical surety and clarity in the final allegro. . . . He again proved himself a sterling musician and violin virtuoso." Mr. Rosenfeld felt a lack of "assertiveness" on the part of Mr. Harris in this work.

In the opinion of Karleton Hackett (Post), Mr. Enesco's playing "is musicianly, his tone good and his technique clean. It is sincere and deeply felt, yet with a certain heaviness that makes it inelastic."

* * *

Several seldom played works of Chopin and Liszt were revived by Mme. Mero in her piano recital yesterday. Edward Moore of the Tribune said that "only a pianist with the fire and unfailing vigor of Mme. Mero can hope to reproduce their theatrical, best-seller glitter. . . . But Mme. Mero is a magnificent player."

According to Karleton Hackett, "there are delicacy and refinement in her interpretations, yet always with the sense of strength back of it. . . . Her vigor of thought and tonal power were essentially feminine, and when the briliance of virtuosity was demanded, her playing was dazzling. Fine piano playing, genuine in feeling and sure in technique." As Mr. Rosenfeld expressed it, "she produced a refined, musical tone and rose in the bigger momets to power and volume.' On the other hand, although admiring her playing, Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald Examiner) wrote that "large tone Mme. Mero does not command."

* * *

In his recital at Orchestra Hall last Tuesday, Roland Hayes moved both the audience and the reviewers to enthusiastic praise. Mr. Gunn wrote that "it is pleasant to record the advance he has made in his art during the last year. . . . The tone is of finer texture and greater warmth. Also it is steadier and in the softer inflections of incomparable delicacy."

Karleton Hackett wrote that "there is fine intelligence in all that he does" and, writing of his excellence in quieter songs, said "no matter how soft the tone, it retains its quality, and is most responsive to his interpretative purpose." According to Mr. Rosenfeld, "his lyric tenor voice, which poured forth an even, smoothly produced tone, often diminishing to a very fine spun pianissimo, remained pure in intonation and clear in quality." Edward Moore reported that in some songs he showed "finely spun tone, sustained phrasing, and straightforward simplicity" and in others, he sang below the pitch.

* * *

Other musical events of recent days were the concert given by the Chicago String Quartet yesterday which Mr. Hackett commended for "an excellent ensemble;" the lecture-recital given by Nadia Boulanger in the rooms of the Chicago Woman's Club, which was highly commended in the press; the debut of Lawrence Clifford Gibson, tenor, assisted by John McClintock, violinist, and Hubert Carlin, pianist, which was well spoken of; the joint recital given by Tenie O'Shea, mezzo-soprano, and Sonia Skalka, pianist, which received laudatory comments; and the song recital of Leola Turner, soprano, whose voice of "smooth yet sturdy texture, with richness that at moments suggested Schumann-Heink of years ago" was praised by the reviewer in the Herald Examiner.

Chicago Opera on Tour

TONIGHT
Tannhauser—at the Syria Mosque, Pittsburgh, Pa.

WEDNESDAY
Thais—at the Syria Mosque, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THURSDAY
Gioconda—at the Auditorium, Cleveland, O.

FRIDAY
Barber of Seville—at the Auditorium, Cleveland, O.

SATURDAY
Thais (matinee)—at the Auditorium, Cleveland, O.
Tannhauser (evening)—at the Auditorium, Cleveland, O.

MONDAY
Thais—at the Auditorium, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Johnson Sings in Carmen

The third Carmen of the season was presented at the Metropolitan Opera House on February 6 with a new Don Jose in the person of Edward Johnson, who made his first appearance this year in this role.

Deems Taylor of the World commented that Mr. Johnson "is always a distinguished figure in opera, both by reason of the sure artistry of his singing and the easy naturalness of his acting, and he was never more so than last night. . . . His vocalism was as polished as his acting." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, not only did he again prove himself "an exceptionally accomplished singer" but he "enunciates his text with a distinctness and a command of tone color which wrings every ounce of meaning from it, and he seems to grow, season by season, in histrionic power. . . . It is seldom that a tenor in recent years has given such climatic power to the final scene."

The Herald Tribune reviewer wrote that "his intensity, his fervor, his intelligence, made a living thing of the role. . . . Mr. Johnson is an accomplished actor as well as an excellent singer. He has grace and force and imagination. Above all, he has artistic integrity." He was also commended by the Sun reviewer.

Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) did not think this Mr. Johnson's "most impressive impersonation." The remainder of the cast was familiar.

RACHMANINOFF PLAYS "THE TROIKA"

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

It is true that Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, Hofmann—to name but a few of a long list of eminent pianists—have chosen the Steinway as the one perfect instrument. It is true that in the homes of literally thousands of singers, directors and musical celebrities, the Steinway is an integral part of the household. And it is equally true that the Steinway, superlatively fine as it is, comes well within the range of the moderate income and meets all the requirements of the modest home.

This instrument of the masters has been brought to perfection by four generations of the Steinway family. But they have done more than this. They have consistently sold it at the lowest possible price. And they have given it to the public upon terms so convenient that the Steinway is well within your reach. Numerous styles and sizes are made to suit your home. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and ideals. And each waits only your touch upon the ivory keys to loose its matchless singing tone, to answer in glorious voice your quickening commands, to echo in lingering beauty or rushing splendor the genius of the great composers.

*There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

From Recent Triumphs in the Orient

(Eighty-six Appearances)

E F R E M

ZIMBALIST

Returns for an

EXTENDED TOUR

of the

UNITED STATES

February - May, 1925

Only a few
DESIRABLE DATES
NOW OPEN

Exclusive Management
S. HUROK, Inc.
Aeolian Hall New York

Opera Enters Second Boston Week

Chicago Company Gives Barber, Love of Three Kings, Rigoletto, Butterfly, Thais, Faust.

Boston, Feb. 7.—Feodor Chaliapin made his first appearance here as Don Basilio in the presentation of The Barber of Seville by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last evening.

According to H. T. Parker (Transcript) the baritone was "monstrous, incalculable, hugely amusing" and the Globe reviewer found him "a marvelous figure of fun" and thought "his acting more impressive than his singing." The Herald chronicler considered that he overdid the part.

The Globe writer commented that "Evira Hidalgo as Rosina acted with an archness and vivacity that seemed unfeigned, and sang her difficult music fluently." Mr. Parker thought her "an apt and pleasing comedienne." In the Herald, the reviewer said that Giacomo Rimini "made an extremely good Figaro, one able to sing with ease and full tone the barber's voluble chatter."

Others in the cast were Charles Hackett, Vittorio Trevisan, Maria Claessens, Eugenio Correnti, Lodovico Oliviero, and Gildo Morelato. Many received press commendation.. Pietro Cimini, who conducted, "made the orchestra sound exquisite," to quote the Herald.

* * *

Italo Montemezzi was present at the production of his opera, L'Amore dei Tre Re, by the Chicago company on Thursday evening. In the cast were Mary Garden, Virgilio Lazzari, Georges Baklanoff, Fernand Ansseau, Lodovico Oliviero, Jose Mojica, Gladys Swarthout, Elizabeth Kerr, and Maria Claessens. Giorgio Polacco conducted and, to quote the Herald, read the score "with loving care and ardor; he made it glow and flash; he made it sing and throb" but occasionally drowned out the singers' voices.

This reviewer continued that "the performance, while effective enough, was curiously lacking in poetry and beauty. . . . The actors, with exception of Mr. Mojica, had but faint understanding of the art of beautiful and expressive pose."

* * *

Making her first Boston appearance, Toti dal Monte sang Gilda in Rigoletto the night before. Mr. Parker found her voice "velvet-like and lustrous, suave and sensuous" and congratulated her as "a florid singer with intelligence and sensibility." The reviewer in the Christian Science Monitor thought her Gilda "exquisitely clear of voice and had a definite appeal to the eye. Her voice is usually true even in the very highest tones." The Herald writer said she had "a clear, small voice, as pure as crystal and as cold, though it had a sweetness to it."

In the Monitor, Joseph Schwarz was commended for a "deep and wonderfully resonant" voice, and the Herald found him "as excellent a singer as actor." Other comments in the Monitor were: Charles Hackett "was an excellent figure" as the Duke; Sparafucile was "well sung and very well acted" by Virgilio Lazzari; and Flora Perini sang "with marked intelligence and feeling. She made the role outstanding." Of Roberto Moranzoni's conducting, the Herald reviewer wrote that "not only did he accompany the singers with the nicest discretion, but he made of the orchestral score a thing of unfailing beauty, delicate and sonorous both." Also in the cast were Anna Correnti and Antonio Nicolich.

* * *

The matinee performance on Wednesday was Madama Butterfly, with Giorgio Polacco conducting. In the cast were Edith Mason, Flora Perini, Forrest Lamont, Elizabeth Kerr, Giacomo Rimini, Jose Mojica, William Beck, Lodovico Oliverio, Antonio Nicolich, and Gildo Morelato. According to the Herald the company "gave an admirable performance, both musically and dramatically." Mr. Polacco was accorded praise for the excellence of the orchestra and, to quote the Monitor, "Miss Mason's thorough vocal equipment was again exemplified." Other reviewers commended individual members of the cast.

* * *

Mary Garden sang Thais with the Chicago Civic Opera Company on Tuesday night, with Jose Mojica, Edouard Cotreuil, Alexander Kipnis, Lucie Westen, Gladys Swartout, Maria Claessens and Gildo Morelato. Mr. Moranzoni conducted "eloquently," in the words of Philip Hale (Herald).

Mr. Hale wrote that Miss Garden sang "with unaffected simplicity and genuine expression," and added that her portrayal of the role is too familiar to need analysis. He thought Mr. Cotreuil's enunciation "admirably distinct" and his "histrionic diction significant." According to the Monitor, Mr. Mojica "was in character and his beautiful, if fragile, voice, was heard to advantage," but Miss Garden over acted.

The opera presented on Monday was Gounod's Faust with Feodor Chaliapin, Charles Hackett, Edith Mason, Desire Defrere, Maria Claessens, Gladys Swarthout, and Gildo Morelato. The conductor was Frank St. Leger.

The Transcript said that Miss Mason made the music "a delight to hear" and praised Mr. Defrere for giving an "even better Valentine than in the past." Philip Hale wrote that Miss Mason "gave a memorable portrayal of Marguerite, vocally and dramatically." Mr. Hackett's Faust, according to Mr. Hale, "was youthful, virile and ardent . . . one who gave significance to text, song and situation." Chaliapin, to quote Mr. Hale, "gave a singularly vivid and picturesque impersonation, one charged with ingenious and effective detail, admirable in its rhetoric, surprising in its variety of moods. This is true of his singing as well as of his acting." Mr. St. Leger, he added, "conducted with a nice appreciation of the score and with regard for the singers."

Opera Society Gives Rigoletto

The Grand Opera Society of New York, of which Zilpha Bauer is director, presented Rigoletto with full chorus at the Klondyke, Welfare Island, New York, on February 7. Hilmar Carlsen sang the title role, Augustus Post was Sparafucile, Edgrid Telliere sang the part of Gilda, and Belle Fromme was Maddalena. Two days previously the Society had given the last act of the opera at a meeting of the New York Port Society.

Kreisler Appears in N. Y. Again

At his second recital here this season at Carnegie Hall on February 8, Fritz Kreisler played Corelli's La Folia, the Schubert Rondo in B minor, Beethoven's Cavatina, and Brahms' Hungarian Dance. In the words of the World reviewer, "it was, as usual, a series of effortless and incomparable beauty and as usual was greeted by a rapt and devoted audience."

The Washington Heights .. Musical Club ..

Jane R. Cathcart, Founder President

AEOLIAN HALL

Sunday Evening, Feb. 22, 1925

At 8.30 o'clock

VIOLIN RECITAL BY

MICHAEL ANSELMO

EMANUEL BALABAN

AT THE PIANO

Programme

I.

Suite in A minor - - - - - - - - - - - Sinding
(a) Presto (b) Adagio (c) Tempo giusto

II.

Concerto, D major - - - - - - - - - - Beethoven
(a) Allegro non troppo (b) Larghetto (c) Rondo

III.

1. Romance, Op. 9 - - - - - - - - d'Ambrosio
2. Tarantella Napolitana - - - - - - - d'Ambrosio

IV.

Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso - - - Saint Saens

STEINWAY PIANO USED

Tickets, Parquet $1.50 and $2.00 Balcony 50c., 75c. and $1.00
Boxes, $15.00 War Tax 10 Per Cent Extra On sale at Box Office

On The Music Highway

FRASER GANGE has already made nine appearances in New York this season. He has sung with the Beethoven Association, given a program at the Bohemians, given a recital under the auspices of the Lewis and Skye Society, been soloist with the Christian Science Institute Chorus, appeared as soloist with the Old Masters Trio and has been soloist four times with the New York Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Gange is shortly to make it ten appearances with a recital at the Mannes School.

Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn and the Denishawn dancers, after an extensive transcontinental tour, will return to New York for a Carnegie Hall performance on Tuesday evening, March 17.

On February 25 at Carnegie Hall, the seventh Wednesday program of the State Symphony Orchestra's schedule will have the Flonzaley Quartet as assisting artists, on which occasion it will play Moor's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra. Mr. Waghalter will conduct Berlioz's Symphony Fantastique and Dukas L'Apprenti Sorcier.

Among the novelties for the remaining concerts of the State Symphony Orchestra will be included the Third Symphony by Krenek, a Prelude to a Drama by Schreker and an Elegie Eroica by Casella.

Marie Gabrielle Leschetizky will give her second New York piano recital of the season in Aeolian Hall, New York, on Friday evening. She will include on her program Liszt's Fantasy and Fugue on Bach, Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 28 (Pastorale), Liszt's Valse de Mephisto, and a large Chopin group, as well as numbers by Durante, Bach, Brahms and Schumann.

Harold Samuel, English pianist, who appeared in this country last October, will return again to America for a brief tour in January, February and March, 1926, under the management of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau.

Mr. Samuel came to this country at the invitation of Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge to play at the Berkshire Music Festival. He then made his New York debut October 14, 1924. He gave another recital in New York on October 17. He played in Boston October 15 and with the Beethoven Association at Aeolian Hall October 27, the night before he sailed for England to meet his European engagements.

Carl Flesch, whose soloist engagements with the Philadelphia Orchestra earlier in the season had to be postponed on account of illness, will appear with that organization on March 27 and 28.

Unusual interest attaches to the song recital by Dusolina Giannini at Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening, February 28. Since her debut two season ago, Miss Giannini has appeared no less than twenty times in Greater New York, including solo appearances with symphony orchestras, Biltmore musicales, Schola Cantorum concerts, private musicales and charity concerts. On February 28 she will give for the first time in New York a complete song recital in Carnegie Hall.

Ulysses Lappas, tenor, gave a concert in Natchez, Miss., on January 19 and in Philadelphia on February 12.

The appearance of Joseph Hofmann, pianist, in the series of Roosevelt recitals for the benefit of the Music Department at Bryn Mawr and for the City Music League, will be Mr. Hofmann's next to last appearance in New York this season. He will play next Monday, in the last of the four musicales of this course.

On March 1 in Carnegie Hall Cecilia Hansen, violinist, will give her only New York recital of the season. Her program will include the Vivaldi Concerto in A minor, arranged by Nachez. The largo will be accompanied by Charles Albert Baker at the organ. Other numbers will be Szymanowski's Sonata in D minor, and shorter numbers by Debussy, Cyril Scott, Glazounow and Popper-Auer. Boris Zakharoff will be at the piano.

Elizabeth Gutman will sing the soprano part in Pergolesi's Stabat Mater, to be given by the Baltimore Music Club on February 21. Miss Gutman will also sing this part in Rome, the first week in April, when Alfredo Casella will conduct. The string ensemble on this latter occasion will consist of members of the famous Augusteum Orchestra of Rome.

Calvin Coxe, New York tenor, has signed his fourth annual contract as soloist at the First Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J.

Flora Greenfield will be heard in Kansas City, Mo., on February 20, in Detroit, Mich., on February 23, and in Scranton, Pa., on the 26th. During March, Miss Greenfield will have several appearances in New England, Pennsylvania, and in several Southern cities.

For Thursday night at Chickering Hall, New York, the Club of Musicians has arranged a Liebling Night with a program consisting entirely of compositions by George Liebling, pianist and composer.

Leonard Liebling will lecture, and Estelle Liebling, soprano, and Deborah Nadvorney, contralto, will sing. Francis Macmillen, American violinist, will play. Mr. Liebling also will be heard.

Ruth Rodgers was soloist with the Buffalo Symphony Orchestra on February 8 and with the Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia on February 10. She will be heard later in the month with the New York Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Amy Ellerman, contralto, and her husband, Calvin Coxe, tenor, were cosoloists with the Woman's Choral Club of Elizabeth, N. J., January 26, and on February 1 they were soloists in a rendition of Rossini's Stabat Mater at the First Congregational Church, Hackensack, N. J., in which Mrs. Mary T. McLean was soprano soloist and Robert R. Dynes bass.

E. Robert Schmitz has returned to New York after a trans-continental tour lasting four months. Before retracing his steps for several re-engagements Mr. Schmitz will give a lecture-recital of classic and modern piano music for children at Montclair, N. J. A week ago Sunday Mr. Schmitz lectured on quarter-tone music at Chickering Hall, New York, in which he was assisted by Robert Imandt, violinist, and Hans Barth and Sigmund Klein, pianists.

The February meeting of the New York Chapter of the Music Guild was held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Hughes last Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Evadna Lapham played the Brahms Piano Scherzo, Op. 4, and assisted Robert Imandt in the Cesar Franck Sonata for violin and piano. Groups of modern piano and violin music followed.

On March 3, John Charles Thomas, baritone, will sing the role of Amonasro in Aida with the Washington Opera Company at the Auditorium in Washington, D. C.

The Cleveland Orchestra will play in Columbus, Ohio, March 16 and April 30. Pablo Casals will be soloist at the first concert and Beryl Rubinstein at the second. Conductor Sokoloff has promised Stravinsky's Fire Bird and Loeffler's Pagan Poem to his Columbus audiences.

Friday evening the Elshuco Trio and the Festival Quartet gave the sixth of their New York series of Brahms chamber music concerts. The program for this concert included the Trio in B major, the Sonata in F major, and the Trio in C minor.

Paul Kochanski, violinist, who journeyed to Havana with the New York Symphony Orchestra to play at the concert of February 2, will return at once to fill other engagements in the States. For the appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence and Cambridge, he will play a Vivaldi concerto and Ravel's Tzigane.

At the close of her season with the Metropolitan Opera Company, Julia Claussen will give a recital in Duluth, Mich. Other March engagements will be in Sedalia, Mo.; Cape Girardeau, Mo. (with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra); Fargo, N. D.; Rockford, Ill.; Chicago and Philadelphia.

The premiere performance of Lamar Stringfield's Trio for flute, viola and cello was given at the New York Flute Club on February 8 by Messrs. Stringfield, Harry Waller and Charles McBride. Two compositions for flute, cello and piano by Mr. Stringfield, and two by Eugene Goossens for the same combination were also played by the Stringfield Trio. J. Henri Bove, flutist, was heard in the Bach Sonata in E flat.

Richard Crooks will give a recital in Philadelphia on March 3. He was heard in concert in the Quaker City on February 10 and 11.

Nine Metropolitan artists took part in the Sunday evening concert at the Opera House on February 8. They were Mmes. Galli-Curci, Mueller, Gordon, and Telva; and Messrs. Chamlee, Tibbett, Mardones, Schorr, and Rothier. Rudolf Laubenthal, who also was billed to appear, was indisposed. The orchestra was directed by Giuseppe Bamboschek.

Ruth Deyo gave a reception for Georges Enesco in the salon of her New York home last Thursday afternoon after the program of music for violin and piano which she and Mr. Enesco played. Hans Kindler played with Miss Deyo on the 8th in her series of intimate musicals.

For Their Biennial Convention

The National Federation of Music Clubs

Have Selected and Engaged

MARIE RAPPOLD

to create the leading Soprano role in Frank Patterson's Opera "The Echo" at its World Premiere, Portland, June 9, 1925.

Available for Recitals on the Way to and from the Pacific Coast.

Management:
M. H. HANSON
437 Fifth Avenue
New York City

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

VLADIMIR SHAVITCH, just returned from his guest appearance as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, is back in the United States, preparing to take his own Syracuse Orchestra on its first visit to New York. New music and new music-makers are Mr. Shavitch's preoccupation for the moment. Last week, in fact, he made his personal debut in New York when he led the orchestral numbers in the program of new music presented by the International Composers' Guild.

"Strauss has become a classic in the past ten years," declared Mr. Shavitch to an interviewer. "Who shall say that Schonberg will not be another a decade from now? We can judge only by listening. I have no prejudices one way or another, but I have enough sympathy with the newer and younger men to want to give them a chance. They sincerely hear music in a certain way—with all the vowels left out, it may sometimes seem to us, to use a figure of speech. Personally, I am indeed inclined to think that the only limit to the development of music is the physical limit set by the human ear. Have we reached that? Only experiments can tell."

Mr. Shavitch paid generous tribute to his fellow-conductors in the United States who are helping to bring the new music to the test of the concert room. He thinks the receptive attitude towards novelties is growing immensely. And one of the influences which is doing much to spread appreciativeness is the symphony orchestra which many of the American smaller cities are now instituting. Mr. Shavitch's own experience with the Syracuse organization, which is one of America's newer music ventures, has given him, it seems, both new insight and fresh enthusiasm.

"Our 'popular' programs in Syracuse," he said, "are such as might serve larger cities on occasion as models for classical subscription nights. We have not yet played 'over the heads' of our audiences. Indeed, although we work under certain handicaps as to auditorium, and other facilities, our concerts are always well attended, even when we are obliged to begin at twelve-thirty of a weekday afternoon, or at six o'clock in the evening.

"And the audiences are of a character which has caused wondering comment from visitors out of town. 'Where do all these attentive, nicedressed, prosperous-looking people come from to a symphony concert at this hour of the day?' we have been asked."

Mr. Shavitch was happy for Syracuse's sake, he said, that the London Symphony Orchestra invited him to conduct one of its regular concerts. It helps spread the knowledge of what even the smaller cities of America are doing for music for him to be introduced in London as "conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra." New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston—these are well enough known across the Atlantic as centres of art. The time had come for other places to be given their measure of recognition. P. L.

VLADIMIR SHAVITCH

Two Pianists in Debut Recital

Two young pianists, Vera Brodsky and Hanna Lefkowitz, made their debuts on February 6 in Aeolian Hall in a program of solos and duets. The Times writer considered that Miss Brodsky "showed fluency and forceful musicianship, Miss Lefkowitz perhaps more reserve, in solos from Debussy and Liszt and from Chopin."

According to the Herald Tribune, "both young players, fifteen or sixteen years old, showed notable technical skill and competence, promise of future development and none of the nervous fumbling which marks the first appearance of some youthful pianists. Miss Lefkowitz had a vigor which occasionally bordered on the abrupt; Miss Brodsky's playing had considerable shading and nuance, and seemed more mature."

London String Quartet Lauded in Concert

British Players Give Chamber Music Program in Carnegie Hall in Wolfsohn Course.

The London String Quartet gave its first concert of the season at Carnegie Hall on February 7 and, to quote Olin Downes in the Times, "in doing so provided the finest quartet playing that has been heard this winter in New York." Mr. Downes added that the quartet "has consistently grown in precision, flexibility, beauty of tone and sensitiveness of feeling."

The Telegram-Mail reviewer wrote that "the four players, without perceptible striving to that end and also without any marked sacrifice of subtle effects, filled the spaces of Carnegie Hall with a live and penetrating tone."

According to the Sun, the concert, as a whole, "displayed to a high degree well balanced unity and an effective range of dynamics" although the ensemble in the Schubert finale was "a trifle ragged." The World writer said that, in spite of the size of the hall, "the performance lost nothing of the unity and perfect balance of this musicianly group." They played the Fairy Suite, by H. Waldo Warner, "with whimsical humor and charm."

In the words of the Herald Tribune chronicler, the musicians "played with their usual virtuousity, though they were not always in perfect tune, and there was an occasional lack of unanimity, as in the finale of the Schubert Quartet." On the other hand, the Post reviewer thought the "depths of tone" secured in this Quartet, "could not have been more profound or quietly thrilling."

ELSA ALSEN
ELSA ALSEN
ELSA ALSEN

is "undoubtedly the greatest Brunnhilde." Hers is "a gorgeous voice, rich as old tapestry in its color."
The Cleveland Leader News.

"sang with compelling fervor and passion and reached heights of moving exultation."
The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

is "as perfect a Wagnerian Soprano as any of her generation."
The Cleveland Times.

is "one of the best—if not the best—exponent of Wagner on today's stage." Her "superb tones soared over the orchestra like an eagle."
The Cleveland Press.

The Cleveland Leader News

MISS ALSEN SCORES BIG TRIUMPH HERE

"Last evening Elsa Alsen returned to her admirers as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, in the annual Wagner program selected and conducted by Nikolai Sokoloff. Naturally; it was a gala occasion. If there be living a better brunnhilde or Isolde than this same Miss Alsen, if even the Metropolitan can boast a soprano of the dramatic intensity, the magnificent voice, range, interpretation (and perhaps a dozen outstanding qualifications for greatness) we are willing to be convinced. My own memory and ears take into the reckoning many of the celebrated in these roles, both here and in Germany —even at Bayreuth itself—but I hand her the palm. I would consider her undoubtedly the greatest Brunnhilde of them all.

"Madam Alsen naturally scored a triumph last night. Cleveland music lovers have been waiting for her return.

"Her first number was the Dream of Elsa from 'Lohengrin,' which was beautifully delivered, correctly, traditionally, and let us say, atmospherically, because we learned last evening that she creates her own atmosphere with a few phrases.

"Her gorgeous voice, which is as rich as old tapestry in its colors, burst forth in the immortal love-death music from 'Tristan.'"

The Cleveland Plain Dealer

"Mme. Alsen, whose high gifts as a dramatic singer are known to Clevelanders through her splendid performances in the Wagnerian Opera company's engagement last spring, was last night, by turns, Elsa in 'Lohengrin,' Isolde in 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Brunnhilde in 'The Valkyrie.'

"If she planned her offerings, which were delivered in the order named, with a view to cumulative effect, she could not have arranged their sequence to better advantage. . . . And so the song was convincingly done, with beauty of tone and phrase.

"But it was in the 'Love Death' scene from 'Tristan' that Mme. Alsen disclosed her true quality. For here she sang with compelling fervor and passion, and reached heights of moving exaltation. But even this fine and vital singing was surpassed in the closing scene of 'The Valkyrie.' Here one could learn that tenors have no monopoly of the so-called 'heroic' attributes of song.

"Mme. Alsen, even though deprived of the trappings of the theatre, was a Valkyr to the life, triumphant, challenging. Her voice soaring full-throated and vibrant."

The Cleveland Times

SOLOIST TAKES CONCERT GLORY

"The evening was replete with triumph and thrills, but it must be admitted that the honors of the performance went unquestionably to Elsa Alsen, who is as perfect a Wagnerian soprano as any of her generation. Mme. Alsen is a superb artist who very obviously understands and loves the music she is singing. In fact, she seemed to be enjoying every note of it just as much as her audience did; with a vital, glowing enthusiasm that swept her hearers along in the excitement of her magnificent interpretations of Brunnhilde and Isolde until they broke into tumultuous applause.

"The Alsen voice is admirably fitted for the strenuous music of Wagner. It has power, resonance and the mellow, sympathetic quality so necessary in depicting the woes of his heroines. Mme. Alsen uses her voice with a high degree of intelligence, and gets her dramatic effects with telling force. Her Brunnhilde was a noble figure; her Elsa full of sweetness and foreboding, and her Isolde of tragic and grief stricken woman, mourning her dead lover with passionate frenzy."

The Cleveland Press

WAGNER'S MUSIC BRINGS RECALLS FROM AUDIENCE

"The anti climax of the program was reached in the 'Prelude and Love Death' from 'Tristan and Isolde,' in which Elsa Alsen attained supreme heights as an interpreter of Wagner. The post-climax was realized in the scene from 'Die Walkuere' in which Alsen and Whitehill gave a dramatic exposition of Brunnhilde and Wotan respectively.

"Alsen is to be rated one of the best —if not the best—exponents of Wagner on today's stage. Her voice opulent, voluminous, and vibrant, fulfills all the requirements of intense emotional and dramatic expression. She makes an ideal Isolde and Brunnhilde both by her statuesque personality, and the magnificent capabilities of her voice and vocal art.

"In the climaxes, her superb tones soared over the orchestra like an eagle."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Operas, Oratorios, Concert Engagements for current and next season now being booked.— Apply Exclusive Management Annie Friedberg, Metropolitan Opera House Bldg., New York City

ALBERTO SCIARRETTI

PIANIST

"Won a Well Deserved Success"—"A Young Pianist of Unusual Talent"

"Alberto Sciarretti at his second Aeolian Hall recital last night won a well deserved success with Beethoven's 'Appassionata.' He had already in a preceding and captivating group by Scarlatti exhibited a fresh and clean-cut style, which had placed these charming airs in the most favorable light. It was a different thing to turn from their easy grace to a work like the 'Appassionata.' In the allegro the mechanism was still to the fore, but during the Andante the voice of Beethoven made itself heard and Mr. Sciarretti, flying on the wings of inspiration, roused his audience to unwonted enthusiasm and won four recalls." New York Times, February 6th, 1925.

"His style was good, his legato smooth and polished and most of his work revealed keen intelligence and considerable skill in tone color and shading." New York Sun, February 6th, 1925.

"With all his resources of taste and skill at his command, he played compositions by Frescobaldi, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Chopin, Pick-Mangiagalli and Martucci." New York American, February 6th, 1925.

"The Italian pianist displayed technique of notable brilliance, especially in the three pieces by Domenico Scarlatti, which followed the Respighi version of Frecobaldi's organ Toccata and Fugue in A minor. These received a firm, fluent, rapid performance." New York Herald Tribune, February 6th, 1925.

Photo by Amemiya.

"The recital of Alberto Sciarretti at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon revealed him as a young pianist of unusual talent. He has many points in his favor, his touch is velvety, and he produces a tone capable of many modulations. The Bach-Busoni Toccata, with which he opened the program, was excellently done in many particulars and placed him high in the estimation of his hearers. The Sgambati waltz in particular was delicious. The Liszt Rhapsodie Espagnole was really well done. Mr. Sciarretti's next recital will be awaited with interest." New York Times, October 23, 1924.

"He disclosed a talent that is promising. He has a clean-cut style of playing that is impressive and his interpretations are musically sound." New York World, October 23, 1924.

"His entire performance was a general crescendo in style and confidence which resulted in some fine playing toward the end of the program and a demand for a great number of encores." New York Sun, October 23, 1924.

"Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody brought a remarkable display of tossing off fast and tangled passages, and a good-sized audience showed warm approval." New York Herald Tribune, October 23, 1924.

Exclusive Management

DANIEL MAYER

Aeolian Hall :: New York

MEHLIN PIANO

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Dinorah Sung in Philadelphia

Stokowski Returns From Vacation; Sophie Braslau, Bachaus, and Bossi Heard.

Philadelphia, Feb. 10.—At the regular Tuesday visit of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Galli-Curci sang the title role in the revival of Dinorah. Other musical events of importance during the week were the all-Wagner program played by the Philadelphia Orchestra; the appearance of Sophie Braslau and William Bachaus at the Morning Musicales; and the concert given by Marco Enrico Bossi, Italian composer and organist.

In the production of Dinorah, it was Mme. Galli-Curci's evening, to quote the Record, "with many lovely passages of song and with brilliant singing. . . . She sang with fervor and she had that suggestion of high spiritedness that was indicated by smiles of pleasure at the curtain calls she had." Other reviewers did not find Mme. Galli-Curci in her best voice and many were disappointed in the opera as a whole.

According to the Public Ledger writer, the performance was uneven, with Armand Tokatyan (substituting for George Meader) displaying a "fine sense of comedy besides singing the role admirably throughout," and with Angelo Bada (in place of Max Altglass) "excellent" as the shepherd. The quartet sung by these two and Charlotte Ryan and Merle Alcock was commended by the Record reviewer.

Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) thought that Giuseppe de Luca "infused the uninteresting part with as much life as the music will admit," and Linton Martin of the North American reported that he sang with "considerable volume." Other reviewers commended his work. Gennaro Papi conducted and, to quote the Record, brought out "all the wealth of melody that there is in the score." According to the Ledger writer, he "made what was possible of the trivial score."

* * *

Leopold Stokowski resumed his active leadership of the Philadelphia Orchestra Friday, after a three weeks' absence, with a Wagner program which included excerpts from Parsifal, Das Rheingold, Siegfried, and Die Gotterdammerung.

Mr. Muschamp considered "all the renditions of the afternoon were highly individualized interpretations." According to the reviewer in the Ledger, the orchestra "has seldom played better." This program was repeated last night for the members of the Philadelphia Forum.

A mysterious soloist with a derby, an elastic cane, and a dot of a mustache, who was introduced as C. Chaplin, played the cello at the children's concert of the orchestra on Wednesday. That is, after falling on to the stage, thereby smashing his own "cello," the soloist tried out the cellos in the orchestra. Finally finding one that suited his sensitive ear, he played Trees, "a little ballad of the New York streets." The audience was delighted, and applauded long and loud at the conclusion of his number.

* * *

The reviews of the appearances of Miss Braslau and Messrs. Bachaus and Bossi will be summarized in the next issue of The Musical Digest.

MISS NANETTE GUILFORD

Young American Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company Won Warm Praise for Her Singing in Recital Last Tuesday Evening in New York.

Miss Nanette Guilford

Nanette Guilford, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was heard in recital at Town Hall on last Tuesday, with Giuseppe Bamboschek at the piano. According to Deems Taylor of the World, Miss Guilford "has a beautiful voice, warm and eloquent below and brilliant in its upper register, which she does not as yet handle with complete success. A few of her middle notes are throaty and inclined to be tremulous, and the color of her tones is sometimes more at the mercy of her vowels than her intentions. Her diction, likewise is somewhat indistinct. She is, however, a gifted, if not mature singer. She has a vivid personality, and interprets her songs with intelligence and great effectiveness."

The Telegram-Mail reviewer found "an untarnished, resplendent metal" in Miss Guilford's voice which he thought "treasure emphatically worth cherishing." He added that her voice "will never be heard at its full value until its possessor has gained control of her breath." The impression received by the writer in the Herald Tribune was "one of marked promise after further attention to vocal production and quality of tone." The duction and quality of tone." The Sun reviewer liked Miss Guilford's

Henry Hadley Leads Boston Orchestra

Is Guest Conductor in Program Including His Fourth Symphony; Matzenauer Soloist.

Boston, Feb. 9.—Henry Hadley, associate conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, appeared here on Friday as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Included on the program with his own Fourth Symphony, which was heard here for the first time, were Strauss' Don Juan and Smetana's Overture to The Bartered Bride. Margarete Matzenauer was the soloist.

According to the Globe, Mme. Matzenauer "sang with restraint and purity of style," and Warren Storey Smith of the Post wrote that, "although her singing was marked by conspicuous artistry and by exceeding beauty of tone" her choice of songs "seemed not altogether happy." Philip Hale (Herald) thought that she sang with "incomparable beauty of tone, surpassing vocal skill and deep contagious emotion." The Transcript reviewer recorded that she sang "with the glow and warmth of her deep rich voice."

This writer asserted that Mr. Hadley's forte as a composer "lies in his melodiousness; in his ability to invent telling themes; in his skill in developing his material with logic; in his varied and well-planned orchestration." Stuart Mason wrote in the Christian Science Monitor that his symphony "gives evidence of skillful workmanship both in its construction and in its orchestration, which is eminently effective and sonorous." Mr. Hale and Mr. Smith also spoke of the composer's constructive skill, although the former found in the symphony a lack of individuality. The Globe referred to him as "a competent and experienced musician."

According to Mr. Hale, Mr. Hadley, as a conductor, "has authoritative control of the orchestra. He knows what he wishes as an interpreter and succeeds in obtaining it. . . . He is spirited, enthusiastic." Mr. Smith said that he "conducted his music with familiar energy and animation." The Transcript chronicler considered that he led the orchestra through, not only his own work, but the entire program with "ability, with surety, with considerable sense of inevitability."

GEORGE BOYLE

Pianist — Composer

Piano Department { Institute of Musical Art, New York / Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia

"His power of expression amounts to positive genius. . . . Eloquent, impressive and technically bewildering. . . . Unquestionably the greatest piano recital of this season."—Philadelphia Record.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Bldg, New York — Pennsylvania Bldg., Phila.

STEINWAY PIANO — WELTE MIGNON RECORDS

ARTHUR SHATTUCK

PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST

STEINWAY PIANO

Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

GALLI-CURCI

Homer Samuels Pianist — Victor Records

Manuel Berenguer Flutist — Steinway Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA

Victor Records — Mason & Hamlin Piano

Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

RE JOHN Mc CORMACK

"Perfection"

"What there is of art in singing John McCormack displays in perfection. In so doing he makes almost every other member of his profession seem to be relying on anything at all but art, and hoping in the main to make nature sound grand."—Chicago Daily Journal.

. . . VLADO . . .

KOLITSCH

Photo by Morse, N. Y.

NEW YORK TIMES:

"Mr. Kolitsch should be heard on equal plane with artists today, as he showed in his capable treatment of three solo Cadenzas of technical bravura set into Mozart's lacelike mosaic by the deft hand of Auer."

W. J. Henderson in THE SUN:

"Much of the Mozart Concerto was played with delicacy, with considerable charm, and an evident regard for sensitive phrasing."

Grena Bennett in NEW YORK AMERICAN, Jan. 28, 1925:

"Mr. Kolitsch is an impetuous and energetic musician for whom the problems of strings and bow are simple matters."

Frank H. Warren in THE EVENING WORLD:

"It was no starry night for ramble nor for recitals, yet Art was served to the extent of three pianos and a violin, with a humble spinet modestly on guard in the background. The violinist was a newcomer, content with the single appellation Kolitsch. We were fearful when we saw "The Devil's Trille" billed as the opening number, but Kolitsch soon ranged into more delectable fields. We had entirely overlooked the fact that January 27th was Mozart's birthday, but not so Kolitsch. To commemorate the event the violinist dusted off a real spinet, played by Malvine Gardner, to the accompaniment of which instrument Kolitsch BROUGHT BACK THE DAYS OF MASTER MELODIST in playing a Mozart Concerto, for which his tone and style were well adapted."

Wins Significant Comment from New York Reviewers in His First American Recital at Carnegie Hall, January 27th, 1925

EXACT REPRINT

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28 1925

Kolitsch, Croatian, Captures Audience In Violin Recital

Vlado Kolitsch, a young Croatian violinist, made an impression of unusual talent in his first American recital last night at Carnegie Hall. Despite the storm, a large number of persons attended. The opening number was that familiar warming-up exercise, the Tartini "Devil's Trill," in Kreisler's arrangement, followed by Bach's unaccompanied Adagio and Fugue and then the principal number of the evening, Mozart's D major concerto, with three cadenzas by Leopold Auer.

The familiar concerto was accompanied in an unfamiliar manner, not by a twentieth century piano, but an eighteenth century instrument announced as a spinet. It did not seem, however, to be the spinet of Mozart's day, a small harpsichord with only one bank of keys, but the pianoforte, or "fortepiano" of the period, with strings struck rather than plucked. Malvine Gardner accompanied the violinist on the spinet and the piano.

Mr. Kolitsch, using a Stainer violin once in Mozart's possession, was at his best in the concerto. His tone seemed of good quality, but of limited volume in the Tartini number, with lessened smoothness in the rapid flights, but it broadened and increased notably in the Bach solo and, when Mozart was reached, was remarkably smooth and rich, full and sonorous. It flowed through Professor Auer's cadenzas without dryness or ruffling of its services, while Mr. Kolitsch was happy in double-stops, which were resonant, free from scraping. Three Czech numbers, by Fibich, Suk and Dvorak, finished the recital by a violinist well worth hearing again—but, it is to be hoped, in better weather.

F. D. P.

Boston Recital to Be Announced Soon. Booking Now for February, March and April and for the Season 1925-26. Wire for Open Dates.

Mgt: ANTONIA SAWYER, Inc.

Aeolian Hall, New York

or Box 446, White Plains, New York

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Restoring Authentic Boris Text

Paul Lamm Ends Researches and Is Completing Edition of Moussorgsky Opera in Original State.

Moscow.

At present three versions of Moussorgsky's Boris Godunoff are known to the musical world: the composer's edition, the piano score of which was given out in 1875, and the two versions of Rimsky-Korsakoff, those of 1896 and 1906. The original and authentic version of the opera as it came from the hand of the composer is being completed by a Russian musician, Paul Lamm, who has spent some years in study and research, and it will be published shortly.

Lamm is at present putting the finishing touches to the restoration of the piano and voice score, and he plans to commence, immediately this work is through, on the complete version of the orchestral score. The work of this musician was the most important subject of discussion at the latest meeting of the Russian Academy of Arts and Sciences here. He himself was present to make a report of what he has been doing.

Lamm a Musician of Standing

Paul Lamm was graduated from the Moscow Conservatory as a pianist. For a number of years he was the assistant of the teacher and concert artist, Mme. Olenina d'Alheim, a friend and admirer of Moussorgsky. Later he became one of the directors of the Russischer Musik-Verlag, the Russian publishing company organized by Koussevitzky.

After the revolution he was for a while director of the Russian Government Music Publishing Department, and at the same time he was the center of a group of the best contemporary Russian composers. At present he is professor at the Moscow Conservatory of Music and is connected also with the Moscow Association for Contemporary Music and with the Russian section of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Lamm made a careful study of all the versions of Boris and of the sketches and manuscripts that Moussorgsky left. He grouped them into three separate stages. The fundamental version was the composer's original piano score. The next was the shortened form of Boris; the composer cut it according to the requests of the management of the St. Petersburg Opera and the advice of friends in order that it might be practicable for presentation. The final form of Boris was that to which the composer brought it himself for later productions. This involved even further cutting, most of it being done hurriedly and without care.

Restores Early Cuts

In his new version of Boris, Lamm restores practically all the parts of Boris Godunoff which were cut when it was first being produced, and in several places in the score he includes a number of different readings of single passages. So far Lamm has not succeeded in one search, that for about twenty-five bars of the first scene in the fourth act, when Stchelkalov is speaking. The words of this passage are in Lamm's hands, but the music is lacking. It may be found among the papers of Vladimir Stassov, which have not yet been put in order.

According to his report, the following will be included in Lamm's new and completer version of Boris:

A number of bars in the second part of the Prologue which are usually omitted from the scene of the crowning.

A long and very interesting narration of Pimen in the cell scene of the first act in which Pimen tells of the murder of the Tzarevitch Dmitry. The restoration of one omitted bar in the second scene, the inn on the Lithuanian frontier.

Considerable new and unknown music in the second act, including parts of Ksenia's lamentation, the geography lesson (according to Pushkin's text), and the scene with Shuisky in which he tells of the murder of Ouglich. Also there are included four new bars before the tale on the parrot, and one long passage, previously omitted, in the conversation of Boris with Shuisky.

Nothing new in the third act, although some variations of the polonaise are omitted.

An entire new scene in the fourth act, one near the church of Vassily Blagenny. Also four cuts are restored in the first scene, at the time of the death of Boris.

Lamm declared in his report that Moussorgsky's manuscripts are neat and legible, and that the great difficulty of his work was the finding of lost parts and the dating of the various changes. He believes that his edition will not only have scholarly interest, but will form a more reverent and more effective means of presenting the music drama of Boris Godunoff.

VICTOR BELAIEV.

Photo by Underwood

MME. MARGUERITE SYLVA
Gave the First of Her New York Series of Distinctive Intimate Song Recitals on February 8.

Brussels Applauds Operas Of Moussorgsky and Rabaud

Brussels.

Another opera of Henri Rabaud has been introduced here, the French composer's L'Appel de la Mer. The performance at the Theatre de la Monnaie was conducted by M. Molle, and was as favorably received as the most popular pieces of the same composer usually are in Brussels.

Although the general presentation of the piece was of a high order, the outstanding feature of the performance was the singing. Mlle. Cortot as Cathleen distinguished herself particularly, and Mme. Ballard as Maurya proved a tragedienne of unusual power. Her voice also made a good impression.

The remainder of the cast included M. Colonne as Bartley, and MM. Van den Eynden and Destree.

Moussorgsky's opera, The Fair at Sorotchinsk, was received enthusiastically at its first performance at the Theatre de la Monnaie. The interpretation was excellent, the singing of Mme. Bovy winning especial praise. Van Obberf, Claudel, Burdino, and Boyer all sang their difficult parts with fervor and skill. The costumes and mise-en-scene were not only particularly colorful, but also unusually accurate, owing to the cooperation in the production of M. Pouchkine, a grand-nephew of Gogol.

K. H. S.

Bartok Composes Ballet

Berlin.—The Wonderful Mandarin, a new ballet by Bela Bartok, has recently been completed.

Anton BILOTTI Pianist

Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England

Steinway Piano — Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ELSA ALSEN

Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano

Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

CECILE de HORVATH

PIANIST

Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

Season 1925-1926 Now Booking

Baldwin Piano — De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

The Curtis Institute of Music
Founded by Mary Louise Curtis Bok
A national institution offering a thorough musical education by the foremost artists of distinguished accomplishment
A Statement by Mrs. Bok:
IT is my aim that earnest students shall acquire a thorough musical education, not learning only to sing or play, but also the history of music, the laws of its making, languages, ear-training and music appreciation. They shall learn to think and to express their thoughts, against a background of quiet culture, with the stimulus of personal contact with artist-teachers who represent the highest and finest in their art. The aim is for quality of the work rather than quick, showy results.
Mary Louise Curtis Bok
A full catalog is at the disposal of anyone addressing
THE CURTIS INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
JOSEF GROLLE, Director
Rittenhouse Square Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Steinway pianos exclusively

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Pacific 231 Led by Goossens in London

London.

Undoubtedly this is to be a slacker music season for London than last year's. I have written of the paucity of symphonic novelties promised for the year—so great that the premiere of Honegger's Pacific 231 a few days ago stands out like a great event. The holiday season is a month past, and still important recitals are unusually few. This time a year ago the B. N. O. C. was at Covent Garden: now rumors persist to the effect that, subsidy or no subsidy, that organization is going to die.

The Royal Philharmonic, under Eugene Goossens, produced Honegger's railway piece on January 29. The result was a good deal of leg-pulling—or as an American would put it, "kidding along"—for the composer. Thus Percy Scholes in the Observer:

Reviews Flippant

"Arthur Honegger says that he loves locomotives 'as others love women or horses'. It is a strange levelling expression, and perhaps the member of the Philharmonic audience who, red in the face, booed and hissed after the performance of Pacific 231 was a zealous feminist or an ardent equestrian." The reviewer quotes the composer's description of the "pathetic and lyrical" nature of the locomotive, and goes on: "If, after thinking the words 'lyrical' and 'pathetic' back to their very roots, any one of Thursday's listeners can understand this application of them, he is indeed an ingenious etymologist. I would say that if you get another chance, go to hear it again. A year or two and your chance will be gone, for though Pacific 231 is a clever contrivance, its steam pipes and cranks and piston are not of the material that will last forever."

"Behind Pacific 231 it is safe to say there is no definite idea," says the Sunday Times, "apart from the attempt to coerce the attributes of music into performing functions properly those of another art. That of course they fail is demonstrable, for by what strains, pray, are we to be certain that the image presented is that of Pacific 231, and not that of the shunting engine at Hither Green?" (here American readers may substitute Hoboken). "If," demands Robin Legge in the Telegraph, "Honegger loves engines as other people do women or horses, why did he so dissemble his love as to cause a feeling that she, or it—the engine—had fallen over the embankment, or, metaphorically, been kicked downstairs?"

It is on occasions such as these that London misses the trenchant and witty pen of Ernest Newman.

Beecham Leads Again

On 1 February, Sir Thomas Beecham was welcomed at a special Sunday concert in which he made one of his rare appearances as a conductor—the only one, so far, this season. He was, of course, acclaimed by the press. Announcement has been made of a forthcoming recital in a better hall than the Royal Albert of a Miss Paikin, endowed with "a very easy and fluent coloratura soprano" voice, "well worth the hearing." A new quartet, bearing the name of Copenhagen, whence it came, impressed favorably in a chamber concert which included two unfamiliar works: the Stravinsky Concertino and Sibelius's Quartet in D minor. Neither was as well received as a thrice-familiar Schubert number.

P. L.

Berlin Clothing Merchants Outfit Modernized Traviata

BERLIN'S State Opera became a fashion show on the evening of February 9, reports the New York Times, with 2,000 members of the National Organization of Clothing Manufacturers as an audience while grand opera singers, appareled in up-to-date costumes supplied by the manufacturers, sang Traviata. The costumes were gifts to the singers from the clothing men, who also gave a supper and dance later at a prominent hotel, where the opera personnel appeared wearing their new clothes.

Even Eric Kleiber, leader of the orchestra, received a new evening suit from the clothing manufacturers who are holding their Spring Fair in Berlin. Traviata, being a non-historical opera, made it possible for the fashion makers to dress the company in the very latest gowns. Every woman member of the cast, from Violetta de Stozzi, who sang the role of Violetta, to the humblest chorus woman, had a stunning new wardrobe. The men had the latest things in sport suits, morning coats and evening dress.

Give Childhood Opera of Mozart

Vienna, Feb. 11.—The boyhood opera of Mozart, La Finta Semplice, recently discovered, was produced here last night for the first time. It was written when the composer was twelve years old.

Seidel Gives London Recital

Harty Conducts His Irish Symphony With Royal Albert Hall Orchestra; Post Reviewer Dies.

London.

Something very close to a capacity audience filled the Wigmore Hall on January 19 to welcome Toscha Seidel, the violinist, who on that occasion made his first appearance in recital here in some years. It will be recalled that he won warm commendation some days earlier as soloist of a symphonic program in the Queen's Hall. This time the critics were again as well disposed.

The Sunday Times writer said: "All that pertains to the act of fiddling seems to come naturally to him, and he awakens lively admiration for technical prowess out of the common." "The warmth of his audience's applause," thought the Telegraph chronicler, "made it quite clear that to their thinking he had touched nothing which he had not adorned. And with this verdict we believe most people will concur. He is an exquisite and finished violinist, who must have mastered the technique of the instrument more quickly than other boys master the multiplication table. Natural facility is paramount in his playing. Every sweep of the bow, every run, scale, arpeggio, trill, chord, is performed with the ease of the master."

Will Play Again

There are, nevertheless, echoes of the comment which followed Mr. Seidel's concerto appearance: that depth of interpretation is somewhat lacking; complaints, too, of the virtuoso character, of his program. He is to be heard again at the end of the month.

On January 21 Hamilton Harty returned to London to present to it for the first time his new Irish Symphony, through which he led the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra. Some of the critics, putting the music rather into the category of a suite on Irish folk-tunes, were thus enabled to say nice things about it. Others, accepting the title at its face value, found it of less interest, and pointed out the impossibility of developing folk songs—themselves already complete—in the symphonic manner. But folk songs have been made into interesting themes and developed and metamorphosed with skill and grace by symphonic composers. The truth must be that Mr. Harty is not a Dvorak nor a Tschaikowsky. He has taken his tunes over bodily from the Irish, orchestrated them, and modeled his transitions and codas after the familiar standbys of a symphonic conductor, especially Tschaikowsky and Wagner.

Moiseiwitsch Once More

"Benno Moiseiwitsch was in great form for the Rachmaninoff Second Concerto," wrote Robin Legge of the Telegraph after the Queen's Hall Orchestra concert of January 24. "The combined brilliance and delicacy of his playing were above reproach and greatly delighted his hearers." The Observer, too, recorded "pleasure" in this reappearance, although noting a certain "dryness" of tone.

Two other "repeats" drew good houses, a second concert of the Savoy jazz bands and a recital given by Arthur Rubinstein under the auspices of the Pianoforte Society.

Finally the sudden death of Francis Barrett, for thirty-five years music critic of the Morning Post, must be recorded. His father, of the same name, had also been long connected with this journal in the same capacity. His death occurred on January 19; on the 17th he was still making the rounds of the concert halls.

P. L.

Goossens Conducts Radio Program

London, Feb. 3.—Recent programs of the British Broadcasting Company have included a concert in which Eugene Goossens directed and Marie Novello played the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto; a chamber music concert devoted to the music of Gabriel Faure, and the broadcasting of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody by Kathleen Thomson.

Walter Leads in Holland

Amsterdam, Feb. 1.—Bruno Walter, who will appear in New York as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, is directing the Concertgebouw Orchestra here in the absence of Willem Mengelberg. He will sail for America after spending a few days in London in time for his first concert at Carnegie Hall on February 26.

Revive Ballet in Paris

Paris, Feb. 2.—Lumiere et Papillon, a ballet by Louis Urgel, was revived at the Opera-Comique early last month.

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: H. J. ANDERSEN, 67 East 55th Street, New York City
Telephone Plaza 7147

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Boris Revived at Opera

Paris Hears Guest Artists in Moussorgsky Piece; Nina Koshetz and Zalewsky Well Received.

Paris.

Boris Godunoff has been returned to the Opera repertory after an interval of several seasons. Two newcomers to the company sang the roles of Boris and Marina, the Russian baritone Zalewsky, and Nina Koshetz, a soprano who also is a Russian.

M. Zalewsky has been engaged at the Opera for a number of guest performances, and he made his bow in Boris. His success was instantaneous, for not only did he show a good voice of mellow timbre and wide range but also marked acting abilities. Mme. Koshetz also pleased the audience with the quality of her voice and the manner in which she handled it.

The remaining parts were in the hands of the regular members of the Opera roster. The young tenor Dutreix, as Gregory Dmitry, sang as well as his voice of limited capabilities allowed. The contralto Lapeyrette did some sterling singing in the part of the hostess. M. Huberty excelled vocally as Pimen, although his acting left something to be desired, and M. Gresse, basso, sang with force and acted with conviction. Philippe Gaubert was the conductor.

Opera Roster Not of Best

The advent of foreign singers to the Paris Opera has been greeted with pleasure by the music public and music writers. At present it is well known that the regular roster of the company is not up to par in singing abilities. The artists are overworked and tired, and are insufficient in numbers to deal with the extensive repertory of the Opera, especially in view of its policy of including many novelties in the schedule of each season. For these reasons as well as for the exceptional abilities which the two Russian guests displayed, the audience and reviewers were enthusiastic in the welcome which they extended.

Gounod's Faust, one of the mainstays of the Opera repertory, was just produced there for the 1,697th time. It continues to draw the largest houses and receipts of all the pieces that the Opera gives. The casts of Faust are always excellent, but this most recent one was exceptional because of the return of M. Trantoul, the tenor who has been absent from the company for some time. His lyric voice fits the music of Faust, and he acts with a passion which is convincing.

Mlle. Marise Beaujon returned to the role of Marguerite. She has been ill for some time, but her voice seems to have recovered from whatever effects the sickness may have had upon it. M. Gresse was in excellent voice. He remains the most popular Mephistofeles of the present Opera roster. The mise-en-scene was not novel, but it was good. Henri Busser conducted.

In the repetition of Massenet's Herodiade at the same theatre what stood out was the setting. The general pomp and color of the mise-en-scene of each of the acts is rich and impressive.

In the role of Salome Jeanne Cros gave a good account of herself, vocally and histrionically. Always she was the character whom she was portraying; never did any virtuoso attitudes destroy the illusion which her acting created. M. Dutreix sang the part of Jean. His voice is small, but pleasant, and it gives pleasure because he uses it intelligently.

Georgette Caro sang the title part. Her contralto is of good quality and sure in intonation. The baritone Duclos as Herod distinguished himself as singer and actor. He out-Heroded most of the Opera Herods whom Paris can recall. F. Ruhlmann was the conductor of Herodiade.

Brazilian Soprano Sings

Among the recent recitalists was Vera Janacopoulos, Brazilian soprano, who appeared in two programs at the Salle Gaveau. Her concerts were received with mixed feelings by the press and public. Mlle. Janacopoulos has concertized in Paris with a measure of success since 1919, but this season her choice of programs was unfortunate, and she did not win the usual favor which is extended to her.

Her first program, including four arias from Mozart operas, a group of compositions of Bach, and Schumann's Les Amours du Poete, was received well enough, but the recital of compositions of Igor Stravinsky which followed found little favor with the audience. In fact the scattering of applause included a few hisses, although it was quite plain that they were intended for the pieces which she was singing, not for herself.

K. H. STOTTNER.

THE LONDON STRING QUARTET
Consisting of James Levey and Thomas Petre, Violinists, H. Waldo Warner, Violist, and C. Warwick-Evans, Cellist, Was Greeted by an Audience Which Filled Carnegie Hall in Its First New York Recital of the Season.

Warsaw Hears Modern Works

Warsaw.—The concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra have introduced many novelties this season. Among those by Polish composers are two Szymanowski symphonies; a Suite by Rogowski; another Suite, The Sea, by Joteyko; the works by foreign composers were Honegger's Pacific 231; several Debussy pieces; Ravel's La Valse; and numbers by Stravinsky and Prokofieff.

At the opera, Siegfried has been revived and the Poznan Opera has produced a new opera by a Polish composer, Felix Nowowiejski, A Legend of the Baltic.

Joseph Pizzarello Dies

Paris.—Joseph Pizzarello, formerly of New York, died at his home in Cannes on January 15. He had retired there after a period during which he taught in the National Conservatory of Music in the United States. Previously he had been famous as a teacher and coach in France. He was accompanist for Victor Maurel and Emma Calve.

Pasdeloup Presents Aubert Novelty

Paris, Feb. 7.—Caprice, a work for violin and orchestra by Louis Aubert, was heard for the first time at a recent concert of the Pasdeloup Orchestra. M. Asselin was the soloist.

Vittorio Gui Leads Chenier at La Scala

Milan.

After the success of the new Cena delle Beffe, the Milan public showed renewed interest in Giordano's older opera, Andrea Chenier, and crowded La Scala when the work was put on again on January 22. Vittorio Gui, who conducted the last presentation of Chenier in May, was again in the pit.

Maestro Gui was again praised for the rhythmic precision of his conducting, for the dramatic color which he infused in the score, for the poetry with which he brought out the most beautiful passages of the music, for the passion and clarity with which his orchestra sang Giordano's melodies. This leader was admired all the more because of his versatility, for he handles with equal mastery the Italian music of bel canto and such operas of more symphonic structure as Salome, Sakuntala, and the Rheingold.

The tenor Pertile won praise for the intelligence of his interpretation. He displays continually unabated diligence in seeking vocal means by which he may improve the quality of his tone. He was warmly applauded by the audience.

Signora Spani sang her role very well, although her diction left something to be desired and her acting was not sufficiently warm. The baritone Molinari was exceptionally effective as Gerard, as he was some time previously as Germont in the Scala performance of Traviata. The part of Madelon was sung excellently by Signora Masetti Bassi. The secondary parts were well done, with the tenor Nessi standing out. The mise-en-scene of Rovescalli and Santoni was much admired. It was in large measure different from that of the production of last May.

In general the performance was unusually pleasing to the public, and it did not hesitate to express its approval of the entertainment supplied.

FEDERICO CANDIDA

British Music Firms Absorbed

London.—Messrs. Hawkes and Son, music publishers and instrument manufacturers, announce the purchase of the firm of Winthrop Rogers, music publishers. The Rogers house will retain its own name, and transact business independently. Frank Bridge, Roger Quilter, John Ireland, and other modern British composers have their music issued through this firm.

Bantock Composes Boris Prelude

London.—An orchestral Prelude is being composed by Granville Bantock for the performance in Birmingham of Pushkin's Boris Godounoff.

Name Street After Composer

Paris, Feb. 7.—Rue Henri-Martin has been rechristened rue Jules-Massenet, in memory of the composer of Thais.

New Szymanowski Compositions

Berlin.—Karol Szymanowski has just composed a set of mazurkas for the piano.

V. TREVISAN
VOCAL STUDIO
Chicago Civic Opera Association
74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

BONCI
VOCAL STUDIO
For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.
Knabe Piano

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE Fontainebleau School of Music announces that the Minister of Fine Arts in France has given formal permission to the school to install in the old tennis court in the Palace the new three-manual organ which is being built and will be in readiness for use when the school opens June 25. This will provide for the school not only a splendid organ, but a large and well arranged concert hall in which students will have the opportunity to perform themselves and also to hear concerts of all kinds given by the leading musicians of France. M. Decreus, the director of the school, is already arranging a series of concerts to be given by the best organists in France.

Mary Frances Wood, pianist, and Edna Bachman, soprano, artist pupils of the LaForge-Berumen Studios, gave a joint recital in Watertown, N. Y., Monday evening, January 26.

It has been announced by the Juilliard Foundation that Olga Samaroff will continue her master classes until May 15, 1925. This necessitates the postponement of Mme. Samaroff's European concerts until the fall of 1925.

Rozalind Kaplan, youthful artist-pupil of Maurice Rosenfeld, played at Bloomington, Ill., on January 10 under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club of that city. On her program were a Chopin group, Bach-Burmeister, Bach-Tours, Glazounow, Alabiew-Liszt and Debussy compositions.

The judges for the Young Professional Musicians' Contest, which will be held by the Connecticut Federation of Music Clubs on March 7 in New Haven, are: For voice—Dean David Stanley Smith, Yale School of Music; Frederick Weld, Connecticut College for Women, and Isaac Beecher Clarke; for violin—Hildegarde Nash Donaldson and J. L. Dashiell; for piano—Dean David Stanley Smith, Robert Prutting and Walter Edwards.

The Cleveland Institute of Music is ushering in its second semester with a series of artist recitals. The series will include three well-known women musicians of our day and will be open to the public after the students have been given the first opportunity of securing tickets. The first recital was given at the school on February 13 by Nadia Boulanger, French organist, conductor and educator.

Aims to Prove Vocal Cords Not Essential to Speaking

PARIS vocal teachers are paying great attention to discussions now taking place at the Academie des Sciences, says a dispatch to the New York Times, as a result of a memorandum presented by Henri Frossard of the Sorbonne Faculty, wherein he undertakes to prove that vocal sounds emitted by human beings are not at all due to action of the vocal cords as has been believed for many centuries.

According to Frossard's theory, it is not vibration of the vocal cords that produces speech or song, but vibration of air in the cavities and crevices situated alongside the cords, so that the vocal organ, instead of being as always visualized a sort of accordion, which makes sounds through contraction and squeezing, in reality is a sort of harmonica, which makes sounds by blowing into it. All consonants, declares M. Frossard, are merely vowels shattered by air waves.

M. Frossard bases his theory on practical experiments, and cites cases where patients who have suffered removal of vocal cords continued to retain power of clear, intelligible speech and even song.

Savants of the Academie des Sciences are quarreling over the matter, and one of them proposes to show Frossard's theory, like many supposedly new scientific theories, is at least a hundred years old, having been enunciated about a century ago by Professor Savart of the College de France and subsequently disproved.

Loraine Wyman, American interpreter of folk songs, will be the second artist to be presented in recital at the Institute. She will appear February 27, and her program will specialize in French and English folksongs. Miss Wyman has collected and published two volumes of Kentucky Mountain songs in addition to assisting the government research departments in Canada in collecting some 4,000 songs.

The third and last of this series will be given by Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist and pianist.

ANDREAS DIPPEL

Will Head the New School of Opera Which Is Being Organized in Conjunction With the Ithaca Conservatory of Music.

Robert Ringling has notified his former teacher, William S. Brady, of New York, that he has been engaged as principal baritone at the Ulm Opera, Ulm, Germany. Lawrence Wolff, another Brady pupil, sang Nando in Tiefland at the Munich Opera January 19.

Professor Demonstrates Five-Stringed Violoncello

Vladimir Karapetoff, Professor of Electrical Engineering at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., may not be the original inventor of a five-stringed cello but the lecture-recital which he gave at the Institute of Musical Art in New York, February 11, demonstrates the practicality of his instrument.

To the original C, G, D and A strings Prof. Karapetoff has added an E string . . . necessarily of wire, as the tension of this string equals that of the four lower. The resulting difference in timbre offers certain advantages as well as disadvantages.

The addition of the fifth string facilitates the execution of difficult passages in the higher registers, it extends the range of the instrument and increases its value as an orchestral unit. Most of that which is scored for viola lies within the extended range, and as a solo instrument most of violin literature becomes available without transposition or arrangement since the four top strings are tuned just an octave below the violin. As the original instrument is undisturbed no change in cello technique is required, merely an extension.

Before an audience which included cello virtuosi as well as teachers and students Prof. Karapetoff played cello and violin numbers to demonstrate the capabilities of his instrument.

A five and a half year old child pinist, Sol Kaplan, was among those who played at the recital given by the Curtis Institute of Music on January 31. The boy, who is studying piano in the preparatory department of the Institute, was the youngest of the pupils to take part in the recital.

Others on the program were Cecelia Zacharias, Raymond Zacharias, Frances Schanck, Flora Thomas, Ida Byrd, Regina Israeli, Eleanor Cohen, Eleanor Hillerson, Freena Tutelman, Margaret Bergman, Harriet Fleischer, Helen Solis-Cohen, Ida Meroff and Rosalie Yerkes. They are pupils of Esther Cinberg, Ethel S. Drummond, M. Leah Kirshner and Mrs. Ruth Shufro Strauss, teachers in the piano department, and Lillian Cinberg, violin instructor.

Elsa Meiskey, pupil of Madame Marcella Sembrich, who teaches voice at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, together with Perley Dunn Aldrich, Madame Charles Cahier, Horatio Connell and Mrs. Wood Stewart, sang at the first concert of the thirty-second season of the Fortnightly Club. The concert was given at the Philadelphia Academy of Music.

"Music & Letters"
FOUNDED 1920
The British Musical Quarterly
100 pages: 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
"Music and Letters is the best thing of its kind that is published, and forms a valuable addition to the library."—Musical Standard, August 23rd, 1924.
LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

TWENTY MELODIC STUDIES of moderate difficulty for the piano by Pierre Augieras are published by Editions Musicales Janin, of Lyons, France. M. Augieras is a member of the faculty of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, New York.

The studies are prefaced by a few remarks of M. I. Philipp, Professor of the Paris Conservatory, which accurately describe them: "The Twenty Melodic Studies of M. Pierre Augieras are remarkably well written pieces, of delicacy and charm. The student will find them useful both pianistically and musically."

The problems which these etudes include are the fundamental difficulties of smoothness of passage work in each hand, the playing of swift even scales, rhythmic firmness, apreggiations, octave playing, and the like, although no especial attention is paid in this group of works to the playing of thirds and sixths, contrary rhythms in the two hands, or staccata passages. The seventeenth number is an unusually interesting study for the left hand which includes some absorbing practice in differentiation of tone quality in the simultaneous presentation of melody and accompaniment, and in the playing of successive thirds.

Another Janin publication is the Poeme-Berceuse of Emile Bourdon, for violin and piano. It is a composition of genuine character and individuality, with a harmonic style of comparatively conservative idiom. The melody is interesting and moving, and the accompaniment has importance of its own.

Clayton Summy, the Chicago publishing house, has issued a group of works of pedagogical interest. Ethel Lyon's Story of Cinderella is a set of six pieces of varied mood for the piano pupil of medium advancement. H. Smidt-Gregor's Norrland-Scherzo for the piano is somewhat more advanced. It has a vigorous rhythmic stride with particular stress on left-hand octave work.

Work and Play Book by Mrs. Crosby Adams is an elementary aid not only to piano playing by the child pupil, but also to musicianship. It aims more than the ordinary elementary text to make the child aware of the key system at the bottom of music, and of the first steps of harmony.

John McCormack (right) signs a contract with A. Strok, Impresario of the Orient, for a series of concerts in the Far East to begin in April, 1926.

Gotterdammerung

The second performance this season of Gotterdammerung by the Metropolitan Opera Company was marked by the first appearance of Rudolf Laubenthal in the role of Siegfried. Otherwise the cast was the same as previously and Artur Bodanzky conducted.

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that Mr. Laubenthal "proved a personable hero and sang the music with competence." According to Deems Taylor of the World, the change improved the opera, and Mr. Laubenthal's "rather metallic" voice "for its bright definiteness showed to better advantage" in this role. W. J. Henderson of the Sun thought his performance "praiseworthy" and, although his voice was not ideal for the part, "his reading of it was intelligent and fitted well into the ensemble." In the Post, the reviewer liked his work, although he admitted he was not "ideal" for the role. The Telegram-Mail reported that "there was much to commend in his singing and acting."

Mme. Larsen-Todsen was lauded for the improvement in her voice since her first performance. The Telegram-Mail writer found her voice "free from tremolo" and Mr. Henderson was in accord that it "was less tremulous and her singing suffered less from the natural anxiety of a debut." In the Post she was commended for both vocal and histrionic improvement. According to Deems Taylor, Mme. Larsen-Todsen "was obviously more at ease than she had been at her debut, and acted and sang to much better advantage. Vocally, in fact, she was, at times, a thrilling Brunnhilde."

Second N. Y. Recital of Mme. Ney

Aeolian Hall was the scene last Tuesday of the second piano recital of the season by Elly Ney. To quote the Herald Tribune, "she made music in her familiar way. Her piano playing had its customary authority, power, breadth and vitality of conception and depth of feeling."

Noted Artists to Honor Auer

Leopold Auer's eightieth birthday is to be marked by a concert given by Jascha Heifetz and Efrem Zimbalist, assisted by Rachmaninoff, Gabrilowitsch and Josef Hofmann, on April 28 at Carnegie Hall.

YOUR VOICE AND YOU, by Clara Kathleen Rogers (published by the Oliver Ditson Company, Boston) is a summary in a book of 120 pages of the problems of the singer. (Its subtitle is What the Singer Should Do.)

The author, an opera-singer and teacher experienced in Europe and the United States, commences by reducing the vocal student's difficulties to a "mental awareness" of what he (or she) at any moment wishes to accomplish. Then she turns to the matter of aiding the student in learning to bring his technique to the point where it will be able to equal his aspiration with actual accomplishment.

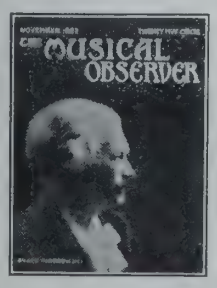
Mrs. Rogers first discusses the problem of breath control, and includes in her discussion a series of exercises in breathing and position. She takes up next the articulation of sounds, and presents a table of the various groups of consonants with explanations of the manner in which they are enunciated. The articulation of the vowel sounds also is considered, after a short discussion of the various theories regarding their formation.

The development of a perfect legato action in the speech organs is urged by Mrs. Rogers, not only for ease and purity of tone and phrasing, but also for the conservation of breath. Resonance and tone attack are subjected by the author to examination in great technical detail. She closes her more technical considerations with a series of warnings against misleading directions of some "authorities" on singing.

Such more general matters as stage poise, the purpose of technique as a means of interpretation, the differentiation of between the two types of voice, light and dramatic, are discussed by Mrs. Rogers, and she closes her compact and authoritative volume with a summary of principles, and valuable directions for practicing.

To Present Waghalter Operetta

Mandragola, an opera comique by Ignatz Waghalter, conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra, will be presented in New York in March, it has been announced. The work has been performed in Berlin with Eleanor Painter in the leading role.



This Coupon Is Worth 25c

LET'S GET ACQUAINTED!

If you are interested in a Music Magazine full of good, practical, interesting, novel reading matter and carefully selected musical compositions, mail this coupon with 25 cents and let us send you two issues of the MUSICAL OBSERVER.

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....ADDRESS .....
CITY .....STATE .....

YOUR VOICE AND YOU
(What the singer should do)
By CLARA KATHLEEN ROGERS
(Clara Doria)
Price, $1.75 net

Mrs. Rogers here sums up her study of what the singer should do—the fruitage of fifty years of rich experience as a singer, teacher and musician, gifted with the faculty of keen observation and an analytic mind.

The book is therefore a direct, practical and compact message from one who knows to the many students of song who are eager to know. That the work stresses of psychological aspects of singing rather than its physiological processes is in accord with the major trend of today.

The volume is a stimulating and authoritative message for every singer and student of the voice; and its purpose is the achievement of free and beautiful vocal utterance.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, 178-179 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 8-10-12 East 34th St., New York, N. Y.
Order of your local dealer

Philharmonic Enlists Bachaus as Soloist

Plays Brahms' Second Concerto; Mengelberg Conducts Iberia Suite of Debussy.

Brahms' Second Piano Concerto was played by William Bachaus with the Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall at its subscription concert on Thursday. Other numbers offered by Mr. Mengelberg were Beethoven's First Leonore Overture, Debussy's Iberia, and Chabrier's Espana.

Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) found Mr. Bachaus "geared to play Brahms. He has the necessary largeness and masculinity of style, the tonic vigor, the blend of sanity and fervor, the poetry that is never languishing or oversweet. . . . He is a virtuoso—there are few more brilliant ones; yet in his case, the musician, the poet, the interpreter, has conquered the virtuoso."

According to Deems Taylor of the World, his performance "besides being beautifully blended with the texture of the surrounding orchestra, had deep imaginative and poetic qualities, and superb vitality. It was a masterly achievement by an artist who once more demonstrated his right to be placed in the first rank of living pianists." W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that Mr. Bachaus gave an interpretation "which was distinguished chiefly by rhythmic insistence and splendor of tone," and that he was capably assisted in this by Cornelius van Vliet, who played the cello solo in the slow movement.

Olin Downes of the Times thought that the pianist played "with the fidelity and enthusiasm of the fine musician that he is." In the opinion of Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, "indisputably Mr. Mengelberg is a prodigious conductor and Mr. Bachaus as pianist is nothing less than colossal." The Post writer agreed to the excellence of Mr. Bachaus' performance. Other reviewers commended Mr. van Vliet.

As Deems Taylor expressed it, Mr. Mengelberg's reading of the orchestral part of the concerto "was equally imaginative and eloquent, and of great technical excellence." Mr. Henderson remarked that Mr. Mengelberg, "of course, conducted with authority and enthusiasm." Both he and his orchestra, to quote Mr. Gilman, "excelled themselves in the performance of Debussy's Iberia."

The program given by Mr. Mengelberg on February 8 included Chabrier's Espana, Cherubini's Overture to Les Deux Journees, Beethoven's Fifth, and Tschaikowsky's Casse-Noisette Suite.

At the children's concert of the orchestra, conducted by Ernest Schelling, selections from Mozart, Bach, Quilter, Godard, Schelling, and Ippolitov-Ivanov were played to illustrate the woodwind section of the orchestra.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
"Top of the World"
With BETTY COMPSON
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
THOMAS MEIGHAN in
"COMING THROUGH"
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Rosalie Miller Heard With State Symphony

Soprano Sings Little Known Works of Bach and Mozart; Waghalter Directs.

Rosalie Miller, soprano, was heard in New York for the first time in several seasons as soloist at the concert of the State Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall Wednesday evening. More or less in the nature of novelties were her songs, which included Bach's solo cantata, Jauchzet Gott in Allen Landen, and a recitative and aria of Mozart's, A Questo Seno del Vieni.

According to Olin Downes of the Times, Miss Miller's "sincerity was unquestionable; there was evidence of what had been a beautiful voice; but the unmuscial and technically faulty character of the singing was inescapable." F. D. Perkins (Herald Tribune) wrote that she "sang earnestly, not inexpressively, but with a rather uneven volume and quality of tone."

The Post reviewer commented that "she seems to have been experimenting with a naturally charming voice and has blundered seriously." Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that her voice was inadequate for the difficult songs. The Sun writer found that she sang "with serious purpose, but she was hampered by frequently losing the pitch and her vocal technique was otherwise uncertain." According to this reviewer, the Overture to Gluck's Iphigenia was played "with sincerity" by Mr. Waghalter and the orchestra.

Lambert Murphy

After a two year absence from the New York concert stage, Lambert Murphy returned in a recital at Aeolian Hall last Tuesday. In the opinion of the Post reviewer, "he sang with his usual artistic skill and pleasing voice."

W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that "the excellence of Mr. Murphy's art was best displayed in his opening number, the familiar recitative and air Waft Her, Angels, from Handel's Jephtha. In this the justness of his phrasing, the clarity of diction and the general propriety of his style were admirable." Agreed was Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, who, though he did not find Mr. Murphy's voice "in its best estate," thought that "he sang with his customary painstaking art and was especially effective in Waft Her, Angels."

The reviewer in the Herald Tribune considered that Mr. Murphy's singing "had its familiar characteristics, artistic use of a tenor voice of moderate volume and considerable interpretative skill."

N. Y. Hears Sciarretti Again

Alberto Sciarretti gave his second piano recital of the season at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 5. In the words of the Herald Tribune reviewer, "as in October, the Italian pianist displayed technique of notable brilliance especially in the three pieces by Domenico Scarlatti."

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
"THE MONSTER"
With LON CHANEY and JOHNNY ARTHUR
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Being a favorite prima donna does have its annoying moments. Any doubts in the matter can be set at rest by Mme. Jeritza.

* * *

Great tenors, too, sometimes lose their peace of mind. Apply to Beniamino Gigli, whose secretary will answer for him.

* * *

Music is harmonious, they say. Musicians also—at times.

* * *

So the New York Philharmonic Orchestra musicians are to get an increase in salaries. Well, this time . . . once again. But there is a story about a certain pitcher which was carried once too often to the well.

* * *

Los Angeles is becoming operatically ambitious. Since W. A. Clark, Jr., did so much for the city symphonically there has ensued a music growth in all manner of ways.

* * *

Edwina Davis, of Loudon Charlton's forces, is clever. Clever Edwina, indeed. She writes: "You seem to be rather a chatty person; why not chat a few lines on the theme of Ernest Hutcheson—un poco sostenuto—and the fact that if he had spent his time hunting for a word of five letters, which means microscopic hairs, he never would have been able to accomplish the truly monumental feat of seven recitals illustrating the literature of the piano from the sixteenth century to our present time."

By the way Edwina (since Lines-O'-Newser is no cross-word expert) what is that word of five letters?

* * *

Mme. Sturkow Ryder has a deep respect for Cincinnati; but she asks that she be credited as a resident of Chicago, which we are pleased to do.

* * *

Yes, the news bulletin printed in The Musical Digest two weeks ago about Koussevitzky's having been engaged by the Boston Symphony was correct. Brother Brennan, manager of the orchestra, confirms the published report.

* * *

Fritz Reiner journeyed to Philadelphia last week by way of New York, and was in last Thursday's Philharmonic Orchestra audience. After hearing Mengelberg conduct, Reiner went on to the Quaker City where, on Sunday, he conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in a special concert.

* * *

The crop of opera seeds which has been planted at various times during the past few years is beginning to sprout. Give the country a little time; then watch the results.

* * *

John McCormack's indisposition was only slight. The tenor will fill all his February engagements, a little later. Just at the moment he is enjoying a brief vacation, which should put him in better vocal condition than if he had not taken it.

* * *

One of the recent visitors to New York was Mrs. Andrew Timberman, president of the Music Club, of Columbus, Ohio.

* * *

Miss Marion De Forest, of Buffalo, is expected in Manhattan this week.

* * *

Mrs. Alvena Springer-Mason, local manager at Guelph, Canada, is in New York. Another impresario, from Hartford, Conn., who spent several days in the big city last week is Robert Kellogg, and Mrs. A. Gillen, of Youngstown, stopped off for a few days on her way, with Mr. Gillen, to Europe.

* * *

An early spring—which seems to be indicated in all parts of the country—may give an impetus to the concert bookings for 1925-1926.

* * *

Far to the west is Claudia Muzio. Pacific coast music patrons are listening, these days, to the concert singing of the Chicago Opera soprano.

* * *

Boston has gotten to like the Chicago Opera Company. There is reason to believe that the Chicagoans will visit the Hub city once a year for some time to come.

* * *

A subscriber writes us to inquire: "Why not Elsa Alsen at the Metropolitan? It would seem that she should be given rather serious consideration by its management."

* * *

Pretty soon, now, we shall probably have from Louis Eckstein some announcement concerning the Ravinia Park opera performances for next summer.

* * *

Yes, and it is about time for Mrs. Guggenheimer to give out the plans for the not-so-far-off Stadium Concerts.

* * *

Vlado Kolitsch has requested that we no longer refer to him as "the new Croatian violinist," . . . for Vlado has decided to become an American citizen.

* * *

If you decide to sell silks for a living don't go around calling yourself Mme. Marguerite d'Alvarez or she'll haul you into court as she did a Mrs. Harriet Bridgeport last week . . . and who wouldn't?

* * *

Tito Schipa admits he is no speechmaker but he is an adept in responding to eulogies with a song, as he did last Tuesday evening at the Hotel Astor.

* * *

Troy Alexander was toast-master at the Schipa testimonial dinner and the eulogizers were H. O. Osgood, Emmanuel Gatti, Giovanni Gaggiano and Gennaro Curci. The Misses Ruth Williams and Flandina sang, Arvid Samuelson played a Chopin Scherzo, and then all present danced to the liltings of Loubet's Orchestra.

* * *

Yes, it is really good news to learn that Tullio Serafin is to conduct Petrouchka at its revival at the Metropolitan. Maestro Tullio is passionately interested in the modern movements in music, especially, of course, those in Italy.

* * *

A reception was held at the home of Lazar Samoiloff last Sunday evening in honor of Claire Dux, who sang in recital during the afternoon.

* * *

Last Friday was Feodor Chaliapin's birthday. He was invited to the home of Mrs. A. L. Garbat in New York. When he stepped in the door Lady Diana Manners, Marguerite d'Alvarez, Kurt Schindler, Elvira de Hidalgo, Mischa Elman, Paul Koshanski, and a number of others leaped from behind chairs and shouted, "Surprise!" . . . Then they had a party.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Music
in Springfield
See Page 10

MAR 3 1925

VOL. VII. NO. 19 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Mme. Fanny Bloomfield-Zeisler, the Fiftieth Anniversary of Whose Career as a Pianist Will Be Celebrated With a Golden Jubilee Concert Tomorrow Night in Chicago.

Bulletins of News

Marco Enrico Bossi, Italian organist and composer, died Friday aboard the S. S. De Grasse after a short illness, according to an Associated Press dispatch. Signor Bossi was returning home after his first visit to the United States. While in this country he was heard in recital at the Wanamaker auditoriums in both New York and Philadelphia.

His wife and Commander Fago, captain of the De Grasse, were at his bedside when he died. It is expected that the body will reach Italy on Wednesday.

Owing to the illness of Alfred Pochon, second violinist of the Flonzaley Quartet, the Quartet has been obliged to cancel its appearance with the State Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall tomorrow night. Instead, Mieczyslaw Munz will play.

Mrs. Charles S. Guggenheimer, Chairman of the Stadium Concerts Committee, announced today that negotiations had been completed for the appearance of three guest conductors at the concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium this summer to supplement the re-engagement of Willem Van Hoogstraten as conductor. The visiting directors will be Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and Rudolph Ganz, conductor of the St. Louis Orchestra.

It was also announced by Mrs. Guggenheimer that the season of concerts at the Lewishon Stadium had been extended to eight weeks, beginning on July 6.

Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has returned from Atlantic City, where he has been convalescing after an attack of typhoid fever, in excellent health. He will appear at the Opera on March 5 as Canio in Pagliacci.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley sailed last Saturday on the Aquitania for England. They will attend the presentation of his opera the Pilgrim at the Birmingham Festival.

At the fourth of the series of artists' concerts at Carnegie Hall on Friday given by the State Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of the Music School Settlement Association, Kendall K. Mussey, chairman of the Settlement, announced that, at the next concert of the series on March 20, there would be given the world premiere of Charles Wakefield Cadman's new opera, The Garden of Mystery.

It will be an all-American evening, with the composer, singers, chorus, and orchestra all native born Americans.

Macmillen Resigns From St. Louis Symphony Post

S. E. MACMILLEN has resigned as business manager and secretary of the St. Louis Symphony Society, a position which he has held for the last three years. In a letter to Hugo A. Koehler, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Symphony Society, Mr. Macmillen expressed the desire that his resignation be accepted at once.

His unexpected resignation is the result of an offer from New York to become associated in a managerial capacity with a large new musical enterprise, the foundation of which is just being completed.

Mr. Macmillen came to St. Louis as manager of the orchestra three years ago, succeeding Arthur J. Gaines, now business manager of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. During the three years of his regime, the Orchestra has made two successful Spring Festival tours, playing more than 180 concerts. He has also booked and arranged a three weeks' tour for this spring, beginning March 16 in Indianapolis, during which forty concerts will be played, or a total of about 225 concerts in three years. Contracts secured by Mr. Macmillen in this period aggregated more than $175,000 in guaranteed engagements.

Plans Are Furthered For Opera on Coast

Los Angeles Association Is Arranging Footlight Season.

Plans for the further development of opera on the Pacific coast are progressing in a manner that gives much promise for the future.

The recently formed Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, in which William A. Clark, Jr., founder and president of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, has become interested, is forging ahead with plans to give a two weeks' season next autumn.

John T. Adams, president of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, who has just returned from a tour which took him to several important far-west cities, states that the Los Angeles organization may be expected to accomplish a great deal; and that Portland, Ore., also has formed an opera association and is to give performances in the fall.

The Wolfsohn Bureau will engage the artists for the Los Angeles Opera Association; and Mr. Adams reports that Willy Tyroler, formerly of the New York Metropolitan, is already at work training the chorus.

Fernando de Lucia Dead

Milan, Feb. 23.—Fernando de Lucia, tenor, one of the last exponents of the Italian bel canto and at one time a leading singer of the New York Metropolitan Opera, died yesterday at his home at the Palazzo Cirella in his native Naples.

Operatic Institute Announces Its Plans; To Open This Summer

Stony Point Project Nearing Date to Start Operations in Behalf of America.

COMPANY NEXT FALL

June next is the month set for the active functioning, at Stony Point, N. Y., of the American Institute of Operatic Art. Max Rabinoff, director general, and the executive committee—speaking for the board of directors and the honorary advisory committee for New York—of the American Operatic and Allied Arts Foundation—issued a statement yesterday concerning progress thus far made and plans for the future.

The erection of necessary buildings at Stony Point will be completed during the next three months; and then candidates for admission to the Institute may begin their activities . . to further develop their resources to enable them to participate professionally in whatever branch of the operatic and allied arts for which they are preparing themselves.

Throughout the summer these artists-in-the-making will be developed, under the guidance of experts: in music interpretation, stage action, chorus singing, dancing, orchestra playing and conducting, scenic painting, and—where occasion arises—in the practical counsel for the writing or reconstructing of opera scores.

It is the purpose of the American Institute of Operatic Art to have ready by next autumn an opera company which, with a repertoire of American and foreign works, may ask and receive the support of the public. A tour is then to be undertaken, over an itinerary yet to be arranged.

Already there have been selected the board of directors, of which Willard V. King is chairman, the honorary chairman, the New York honorary advisory committte, of which Otto H. Kahn is chairman, and the executive committee . . . consisting of William R. McIntyre (chairman), Havrah Hubbard, Philip Miner, Max Rabinoff, W. Rhinelander Stewart, Jr., L. I. Thomas, and Archibald R. Watson. John Brown, former business controller of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company and, later, Eastern representative for the Chicago Opera Association, has been appointed executive secretary of the executive committee.

Since the Musical Digest has published from time to time during recent months details of the purposes of this Institute it is not necessary at the moment to go into those details.

What is of outstanding importance, according to the prominent persons identified with the project, is that it is shortly to begin to accomplish those things for which the Institute was designed.

The nationalistic aim of the American Operatic and Allied Arts Foundation is one of its most important purposes. It desires to promote the interests of Americans seeking careers in opera, and to serve the vast public in providing representations.

Varied Recitals Heard in Boston

Kreisler, Casals and Haigh Appear; Ernest Schelling Assists Flonzaley Quartet.

Boston, Feb. 16.—A violinist, a cellist, a quartet, and a pianist furnished Boston with a varied musical fare during the last few days. Among those heard in concert were Fritz Kreisler, Pablo Casals, the Flonzaleys, and Andrew Haigh.

At his recital in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon Mr. Kreisler had to give many encores in response to the insistent applause of his enthusiastic audience. To quote the Globe reviewer, "in all the musician's art shone forth, for all he brought new lights. It was a day for the young of spirit. . . ." The Herald writer thought he played "with that beauty of tone which has long been his, with all his fine musicianship; his incisive rhythm he had with him still" although he did not show "his former warmth of style."

* * *

Pablo Casals, in his violoncello recital in Symphony Hall on Tuesday, played Breval's Sonata in G major, Bach's C minor Suite, Schumann, Beethoven, Florent Schmitt, Faure, Granados, and Popper.

Of the cellist, Philip Hale (Herald) wrote that he "succeeds where others fail; he is a great virtuoso; he is more than that; he is a musician and a poetic interpreter." According to H. T. Parker of the Transcript, Mr. Casals "was audibly in form and in the vein . . . doing technical feats as though they were the caprices of elegance" and maintaining an extraordinary beauty of tone.

* * *

The second concert here this season given by the Flonzaley Quartet was attended by a capacity audience. With Ernest Schelling as assisting artist, they played Schelling's Divertimento for string quartet and piano obbligato. It recently had its premiere in New York.

The Herald reviewer thought that Mr. Schelling succeeded "admirably" with these sketches with their "delightful" and "vividly illusive" piano music. In his opinion, "the Flonzaley Quartet played Mr. Schelling's pieces admirably, while Mr. Schelling himself, with the piano lid left sagaciously half open, played with a brilliancy of rhythm and a splendor of tone which was a treat to hear." The Christian Science Monitor writer found "the sheer beauty of tone in the last movement of the Beethoven was unforgettable."

* * *

Andrew Haigh, teacher of piano at the University of Michigan, was heard here on Saturday. He was referred to by the Transcript reviewer as "a serious, austere and intellectual musician little given to sensuous beauty either in tone or in the molding of phrase and line."

The Herald chronicler considered the Brahms Intermezzo played very beautifully "with fine tone, a notable sensitiveness to melody and phrase, and with a marked skill in the accompaniment. Always a musician, at his best, Mr. Haigh is also an exceedingly able pianist." According to the Monitor, Mr. Haigh "has equipped himself with a splendid technical foundation, smooth and sure. His playing is free from pedantry save in the one aspect of interpretation, in which he takes no chances of erring on the side of too emphatic contrasts or anything that might put the brand of a marked individuality on him."

* * *

Two other recent concerts were those given by the Handel and Haydn Society and by the Flute Players' Club. With Emil Mollenhauer conducting, the former gave Verdi's Requiem in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Cora Chase, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Richard Crooks, tenor; and William Gustafson, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra played and Frank H. Luker was organist.

In the opinion of the Herald reviewer, Miss Alcock displayed "a lovely and well trained voice, a richness of tone, musical ardor" and Mr. Crooks' qualities "are too well known for more than reiteration now." Mr. Gustafson, according to this writer, was not in best voice, although at times his tones were "round and full." In spite of moments of "lyric delicacy" he did not consider Miss Chase in good voice. Mr. Mollenhauer and the chorus were lauded for their success.

The interest and excellence of the program offered by the Flute Players' Club were praised in the press. Their performances were distinguished, as a rule, by "good tone, keen rhythm, and warmth of feeling," according to the Herald. Mrs. Wyman Whittemore, who sang some Honegger songs, showed "excellent notes in her voice," and seemed "firm as a rock" in this difficult music.

Pianist in Fourth N. Y. Concert

Alexander Brailowsky gave his fourth recital of the season in New York in Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of February 14. The Times headed its review with the remark, "He stirs audience with dexterity and sonority of his playing," and the Sun also reported an enthusiastic audience. F. D. Perkins spoke of the new Russian pianist's "temperament well tempered with reason," and expressed the opinion that he would prove the most brilliant pianistic light of the season.

Miss Duckwitz Heard Again

In a program including works of Beethoven, Chopin, MacDowell, and Debussy, Dorothy Miller Duckwitz gave her second piano recital of the season at Aeolian Hall on February 12. According to the Herald Tribune observer, Miss Duckwitz "gave a performance marked by ample energy and, for the most part, technical skill."

Ethel Leginska Resumes Concerts

Ethel Leginska stopped in New York on February 16 on her way from Boston, where she has been convalescing from a nervous breakdown, to Joplin, Mo., for her recital yesterday.

CARL FLESCH

Violinist, Recovered From Illness, Was Soloist With the New York Philharmonic Orchestra Last Week.

Albany to Have New Concert Hall

Albany, Feb. 18.—Masonic bodies here are planning to erect a $2,000,000 auditorium with a seating capacity of 4,000 at State and Eagle streets, opposite the Capitol. This will provide Albany with its first concert hall of adequate size and fill a need that has been long felt by local concert managers and the concert going public. The site of the proposed Masonic Temple has not yet been purchased, so it will probably be two years or more before the completion of the building.

To Give Concerts at Low Prices

Los Angeles, Feb. 21.—The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, under the leadership of Walter Henry Rothwell, will give three popular priced concerts at the Coliseum under the auspices of the Community Development Association. The first concert will take place on March 1, the others following two weeks apart. Admission will be ten, twenty-five and fifty cents.

Flesch Plays Brahms With Philharmonic

Carl Flesch played Brahms' Violin Concerto with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under Willem Mengelberg, at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening. The rest of the program was made up of Bizet's First Suite and Casella's Italia Rhapsody.

The Post reviewer remarked that "Mr. Flesch again proved himself an artist with a soul." In the words of Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, his performance "could scarcely have been surpassed for its admirable continence, its flawless taste and its style of lovely purity and perfect distinction." Occasional slight defects of tone were noticed by some of the reviewers.

According to the Herald Tribune writer, Mr. Flesch "gave a very good performance," and as the work progressed, "his tone had a fuller flow and deeper quality." The Times chronicler commented on his "impeccable and brilliant" technique and said that he displayed "that musicianship which has made him the practical theorist that he is." As the World said, he gave a "serene and authoritative" performance, and the Sun found that as a whole it "revealed intelligence, technique and taste of a high order."

"Teachers' College Night" of the orchestra on Wednesday drew a capacity audience to Carnegie Hall. In addition to the Bizet and Casella numbers, there were three Wagner compositions played. Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) wrote that Mr. Mengelberg conducted a performance of "irresistible effectiveness." According to the Times, in the Casella work "the orchestra, guided by Mr. Mengelberg, developed the phases with great skill and realism and played the finale with abundant vigor." Other reviewers lauded both Mr. Mengelberg and the orchestra.

In the program of February 15 John Amans was featured in a Capriccio for flute and orchestra by Lothar Kemptner.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARION TELVA
Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones — Aeolian-Vocalion Records — Aeolian Hall, New York

Philadelphians Give Ornstein Concerto

Composer Is Soloist in Piano Work; Stokowski Leads Schumann Symphony.

At the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, in Carnegie Hall on February 17, Leo Ornstein was soloist in his Second Piano Concerto. The work, which was given its first New York hearing in orchestral form, was played here four years ago as a sonata for two pianos by Ethel Leginska and Mr. Ornstein.

Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) found that "each of the three movements is rich in cunningly varied rhythms and counter-rhythms. The range of instrumental color naturally restricts itself to the composer's basic scheme, but within the self-imposed limits color is employed subtly. Moreover, this work has the concision and the inevitableness that stamp a composer as master of his materials and of himself. Played with an indisputable authority by Mr. Ornstein and the orchestra under Mr. Stokowski's lead, it impressed favorably the great audience."

It surprised Olin Downes of the Times that the work could sound "so organic, so powerful, and in many places so beautiful!" He thought it a "very intensive work, stark and stripped to its essentials" although pervaded by "a real artistic sensibility, a real imagination, a composition put on paper because there was a real urge to express something." Mr. Downes added that Mr. Ornstein played with complete mastery ably assisted by the orchestra.

According to Ernest Newman of the Post, the Concerto lacks originality of thought or unity of technical structure. He wrote: "There is no music so hopelessly antiquated as that of the day before yesterday." Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) found the work "rambling, long-winded, tiresome, sometimes sentimental" although he did not doubt that it is "wholly sincere." Deems Taylor wrote in the World that "the new concerto is music to respect, even when it is not altogether comprehensible. One may quarrel occasionally with the composer's methods of self-expression, but one may not for an instant doubt his intellectual honesty and esthetic integrity."

W. J. Henderson of the Sun stated that Mr. Ornstein "has demonstrated the opening of an interesting field for the weird harmonies and rebellious rhythms of the new school. For most of the concerto radiates evidences of an extraordinary talent, of a mind eccentric at times and at others wayward, but possessing the power to make tonal structure of strange and fascinating kind."

The reviewers agreed as to the excellence of the orchestra under Mr. Stokowski, and made special mention of the playing of the scherzo in the Schumann Symphony. It was played with "dazzling virtuosity," to quote Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Newman wrote that "to do justice to the playing of the scherzo one would have to search the dictionary for superlatives."

LEO ORNSTEIN

Made an Unusual Impression With His Concerto for Piano and Orchestra Which He Played With the Philadelphia Orchestra at Home and in New York Recently.

Repeat Tristan and Isolde With Three Newcomers in Cast

The performance of Tristan and Isolde at the Metropolitan on February 14, with Nanny Larsen-Todsen, Karin Branzell, and Michael Bohnen singing in it for the first time this season, was, to quote Deems Taylor of the World, "one of the most thrilling and satisfying" in years. Olin Downes of the Times found it "one of the most eloquent and atmospheric Wagnerian performances" of the season.

Mme. Larsen-Todsen's singing, according to Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) "was marked by conspicuous care in phrasing and nuance; she did not force her voice to shrillness or unsteadiness; she often delivered her part with both searching expressiveness and fine quality of tone." The Sun reviewer thought her Isolde "conceived in the heroic mold and with theatrical force and authority."

Deems Taylor said she played the part "with regal impressiveness, fire, passion, and tenderness, and a blazing sincerity that held her audience spellbound. . . . Her performance was almost as impressive vocally as it was dramatically." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times Mme. Larsen-Todsen "sang with tonal color and authority. . . . There was a greatness of spirit commensurate with that of the music." She was commended by other writers.

Karin Branzell and Michael Bohnen sang the roles of Brangaene and King Mark for the first time this season. Mr. Downes thought Mme. Branzell a little overemphatic, although "very vital and interesting. . . . The quality of her voice is fresh and lovely." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune commented that she has improved since last year. According to the Post, Mme. Branzell sang "delightfully" as well as with "dramatic fervor and discretion." The Sun writer thought her excellent, and Mr. Taylor wrote that she displayed her vocal artistry and technical equipment.

Mr. Bohnen sang "superbly," wrote Mr. Taylor, and "acted the role with a skill and vitality that gave it far more interest" than usual. The Post said his part was marked by fine singing, and the Sun writer thought it one of the best impersonations he has ever given.

The rest of the cast was familiar.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Pagliacci and Coq d'Or — the former with Mme. Mario and Messrs. Johnson, de Luca, Bada, and Picco; Mr. Papi conducting; the latter with Mmes. Sabanieva, Wakefield, Ryan, and Galli; and Messrs. Diaz, Didur, Kosloff, Bartik, and Bonfiglio; Mr. Bamboschek conducting.

THURSDAY

Rheingold (matinee) — revival, with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Mueller, Roeseler, Branzell, and Wells; and Messrs. Taucher, Bohnen, and Rothier; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Falstaff (evening)—with Mmes. Alda, Bori, Telva, and Howard; and Messrs. Scotti, Tibbett, Tokatyan, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

FRIDAY

Die Meistersinger—with Mmes. Rethberg and Wakefield; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Schorr, Rothier, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

SATURDAY

Giovanni Gallurese (matinee) — with Mmes. Mueller and Bonetti; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Gioconda (evening) — with Mmes. Peralta, Gordon, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, de Luca, Mardones, and d'Angelo; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Africana—with Mmes. Rethberg and Mario; and Messrs. Gigli and Danise; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Not to Tax Eastman School

Rochester, Feb. 18.—A decision reversing the lower courts in upholding an assessment of $2,500,000 made by the assessors of the city of Rochester on the property of the Eastman School of Music has been handed down by the Court of Appeals. The buildings of the school, which are part of the University of Rochester, were the gift of George Eastman.

The school had been refused tax exemption on the ground that concerts for which admission was charged were held on the property.

N. Y. Hears Final Gogorza Program

Emilio de Gogorza's third and final New York recital of the season was given on the evening of February 16 in the Henry Miller Theatre. The reviewers agreed that the baritone was in his best voice. "To hear him sing is always one of the major pleasures of our musical year," wrote the commentator of the Telegram-Mail, and the other reports praised him in the highest terms.

Quarter-Tone Music Given N.Y. Premiere

Germaine Tailleferre Makes American Debut as Pianist and Composer.

Music of quarter-tone intervals featured the program of the second referendum concert of the Franco-American Musical Society in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of February 14. Hans Barth and Sigmund Klein played on two especially tuned pianos a Chorale and Allegro of Charles E. Ives and a movement from a sonata of Mr. Barth. The program called the occasion "the world premiere to the public of quarter-tone compositions for two pianos."

The performance of these pieces was prefaced by a few explanatory and historical remarks of E. Robert Schmitz, who drew attention to the experiments of Ferruccio Busoni in the division of the whole tone interval in sixths, and to those of Alois Haba, an apostle of the quarter-tone.

The reviewers for the most part suspended judgment on the novelty, although Olin Downes wrote in the Times his opinion that the music performed on this occasion seemed to have been conceived in the customary idiom and altered to suit the new technique instead of being a type of music whose expressiveness demanded more flexible and subtle differentiation of pitch than the ordinary diatonic scale can afford.

The program included also the first appearance in the United States of Germaine Tailleferre, French composer, and former member of the Paris Group of Six. Together with Robert Imandt, violinist, Mlle. Tailleferre played her First Sonata for violin and piano. W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun the opinion that the work was imperfectly played and that it lacked substance, although it seemed "a pretty piece of musical lace-work."

On the program were songs by Stravinsky, Casella, Aubert, Ravel, Debussy, and Castelnuovo-Tedesco, sung by Raymonde Delaunois; piano pieces by Felix Petyreck, Tansman, and Bela Bartok, played by E. Robert Schmitz; and Deux Mouvements, of Jacques Ibert, played by a woodwind quartet consisting of R. E. Williams and Lamar Stringfield, flutists; Gustave Langenus, clarinetist, and Auguste Mesnard, bassoonist. Mr. Downes congratulated the Society on having the services of Mme. Delaunois, and said that Mr. Schmitz played "with admirable insight and virtuosity."

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 19

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Walter E. Koons, Executive Editor Alexander Fried, Managing Editor

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Bruno Zirato, Business Manager

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

On Getting Together

More and more is there noticeable a spirit which fosters gatherings of musicians. Conventions, some of these gatherings are called; conferences, too. But by whatever name, the main purpose is the same: A group of persons hold a desire to establish and to reestablish acquaintanceships, and to listen to discussions of themes pertinent to the professions in which they are engaged.

There is a growth in this country of such gatherings. Almost every year brings about an increase in their number; and if there isn't that, then the total attendances are swelled.

Musicians appear by nature to have been slow in recognizing the advantages possible by regular meetings designed to promote their welfare. Sensitive natures commonly shrink from any active participation in whatever may propel them too prominently into an activity foreign to them. Your average creative or interpretative artist is somehow shy about voicing his opinions before many persons who sit with their minds focussed upon what he may have to say. Moreover, he is moved to the conclusion, as a rule, that what he knows he knows. He is generally content to exchange whatever views and ideas he may have with his friends and close acquaintances.

Good fellowship is wholesome. It is stimulating. Very often it can be productive of enlightenment; and not infrequently it has been known to supply, at the psychological moment needed, a bit of encouragement that saved a threatening day.

Professional musicians are reputed to be jealous of their abilities, and not over-quick to recognize and approve the abilities of their confreres. While there is a deal of truth in the prevailing belief, it is a fact that a truly broad spirit obtains amongst the foremost musicians: composers, instrumentalists, singers, and educators. Many a city can produce a group, or several groups, of men, occasionally of men and women, who meet informally and emerge therefrom feeling the better for it. Criticism of others engaged in their craft continues, and probably always will; but here and there may be found evidences of attempts to stamp out that practice . . . which wise musicians realize is as harmful as it is petty.

The medical and the legal fraternities have long appreciated the inestimable value of convening—in large units and in small. So have scientifically inclined men; manufacturers, too, bankers, and others devoted to different callings. Aware that this is an age of specialism, the up-and-coming man and woman have embraced whatever reflected qualities of seeming potentialities calculate to affect their mental, moral and material betterment.

Music, having come thoroughly into acceptance as a human necessity, deserves every aid to help in maintaining what has been hard won. The musicians themselves can contribute very largely towards this end. That is one of several excellent reasons for their getting together as frequently as possible and in a constructive and warm-hearted spirit.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

NEW YORK has had the opportunity recently to hear two new piano concertos, with the composer in each case at the keyboard. Last Tuesday evening Leo Ornstein played his work with the Philadelphia Orchestra. A few weeks previously Igor Stravinsky made his last New York appearance in his composition for piano and orchestra, with the Philharmonic in the accompaniment.

The former concerto was originally written as a sonata for two pianos, and was played in public in that form four years ago. Mr. Ornstein has altered the material somewhat in arranging it in its new shape.

His style is not so advanced as it was on his first appearance as a public figure fifteen years ago. To a certain extent the age has caught up with him, and what was obscure, harsh, and incomprehensible in his harmony and rhythm, now sounds out with comparative clarity and pointed significance. Besides Mr. Ornstein some years ago changed his idiom itself. His later compositions are more conservative than those which he wrote when he was still in his teens.

THIS reversal of manner has resulted, to an extent, in Mr. Ornstein's losing cast with the true modernists who early called him brother. One is inclined to think that nevertheless he is writing better music than most of them.

In many pages of his works Leo Ornstein seems a great talent, a composer whom the future will know better than we do now. His Fourth Piano Sonata is music of unusual beauty and interest, and there is close resemblance between it and the concerto which he played the other night.

His rhythms have not the frantic energy and the bite of Stravinsky's, but they are moving and fascinating in their own more refined way. He has a melodic invention which is a step in the direction indicated by Tschaikowsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff, but it has a melancholy of Hebrew modes which is individual with himself. True, Mr. Ornstein's music seems to persist excessively in this melancholy.

Perhaps the most impressive element in the concerto was the harmonic scheme; the least impressive was probably the use of the orchestra. Despite the fact that the chord progressions were not diatonic or simply chromatic, but clearly modernist, they had a poignancy, a color, an inevitability which made the listener feel with the composer as he heard them. The harmony was in no sense indiscriminate or an accident of polyphony. It was a harmony which sounded sensible and careful in its own way.

THE weakness of the orchestral part of the concerto was dismaying (unless further hearings point out its private interest and logic). It was turgid and heavy; the ideas sounded often like piano figures orchestrated; it dragged a heavy bass almost continually without compromising to the other parts of the orchestral body which should have been prominent; it never raised its head to soar, as the music of Wagner can soar.

Nevertheless one has the impression that Mr. Ornstein's best and most individual music is ahead of him. As yet there is plentiful reference to the style of other composers.

IN THE Stravinsky opus the piano was used more as a solo instrument than as one of many. The scoring included that favorite combination of Stravinsky, wind instruments with piano, and this time he included double-basses also.

His music was not beautiful or elegant. The instrumentation was unmellow and careless of the subtle graces of color. The ideas were presented polyphonically, for the most part, with fugati, imitations, and sequences in something resembling the classical manner. The horizontal voices seemed to have pre-occupied the composer's attention. Harmony was secondary, except in such passages as the chorale opening, in which Stravinsky mimicked the diatonic style of the seventeenth century composers, with all the freedom of his own modern harmony. It was odd to hear what sounded rhythmically like old-fashioned appoggiaturas and suspensions resolved deliberately into dissonances as severe as the chords in which they started.

PUTTING this music simply to the test of whether it is stirring to hear, I think that it is going to be estimated more highly than it was at first hearing. It does not pretend too much; it is simply twenty minutes of music. There are at least two passages of slower movement in it which sing beautifully, and whether Stravinsky likes it or not they will be played some day with considerable sentiment and rubato.

Twice also the concerto works up to climaxes in the composer's most ingenious manner, in which the frenetic restlessness and flaming fever of his rhythms become extraordinarily stirring and exciting. These passages are not easy to play. The composer wasted no sweetness of pianistic tone on them, but his rhythm was sharp and sure, and he was admirably supported by the orchestra, which played correctly and precisely, attacking with the accent required and presenting the themes straightforwardly and without the graces of expression and the variations of tone of the bel canto style.

THE composer who last season attracted attention by his new pianistic device called tone-clusters was on hand at one of the recent concerts of modernistic music with another novelty, the thunderstick. Henry Cowell himself valiantly whirled a stick at the end of a cord about his head when his Ensemble for chamber instruments was given by the International Composers' Guild.

The whirr produced by the whirling sticks was much the same as what a group of violas might have produced by persisting in a quiet tremolo, although the thunderstick device really did provide an ostinato of softer and more delicate tone than could have been made with a bow and strings.

Mr. Cowell has a curious interest in details of musical device of rather minor importance which he himself does not use with marked effectiveness. His thundersticks might very well have been scored in Tschaikowsky's Andante Cantabile, and perhaps they would have enhanced its effect. His Ensemble sounded none the better for the use of them, because it seemed very weak music in the first place.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Musical Chicago En Courant

Look Forward to Stravinsky's Appearance With the Orchestra; Busy Recital Week.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Feb. 17.

AN UNWONTED lull in music activities during the past week has given Chicagoans time to take stock of performances past and present. So, with Mrs. Malaprop, letting our "retrospections be all for the future," we report first the avid interest aroused by the forthcoming visit of Igor Stravinsky, who will make his first appearance with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on Friday and Saturday of this week. He will share the conducting with Mr. Stock. His works, occupying the entire second half of the program, will afford contrast to Beethoven's Seventh Symphony in the first half.

The Stravinsky section lists his arrangement of the Song of the Volga Boatman, the Scherzo Fantastique, Le Chant du Rossignol, and a suite from L'Oiseau de Feu, played earlier in the season by Mr. Stock.

Stravinsky's music is in part familiar here. A single exciting performance of the Sacre du Printemps was given earlier in the season by Mr. Stock, and a group of songs, Pribaioutka, appeared on the second program of the Allied Arts, Inc., with Mina Hager as soloist. Aside from that Chicago can remember lovely performances of Petrouchka and L'Oiseau de Feu, by the Diaghileff Ballet some years ago.

ORCHESTRA HALL box office reports an unprecedented demand for tickets in advance for this week's pair of concerts. Apparently dissension in this case speeds ascension.

Stravinsky's stay in Chicago promises to be a busy one, what with two concerts calling for two rehearsals, and interspersed with numerous luncheons, teas, dinners and receptions. Knowing his interest in the American negro and his ways with music, Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, together with Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Bolm, have planned an evening's entertainment with negro talent as the main feature.

STILL looking to the future, invitations have been issued for a dinner in honor of Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler. The dinner will precede her concert the evening of February 25, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of her first public appearance as a pianist. A long list of important names is appended to the invitation and it is assumed that the dinner list will read like a veritable Who's Who in Chicago. The proceeds from the concert will be donated to the United Charities of Chicago fund for incapacitated musicians.

A DISTINCTLY Chicago affair was the Artist Recital of the Musicians' Club of Women, presenting Amy Neill, violinist, assisted by Leo Sowerby, composer-pianist, and Isaac Van Grove in capacity as accompanist to Miss Neill. It was interesting to see these three young Chicagoans on the same program, for each has in one way or another justified the faith and patronage of the Musicians Club.

Miss Neill and Mr. Sowerby joined in a performance of the latter's Sonata in B flat major, for piano and violin. This was the first performance in America, but not its first by Miss Neill and Mr. Sowerby. They played it in London, where it had great success. Later this success was repeated in various places, in Rome, where Sowerby was sojourning as the first American recipient of the Prix de Rome, and again, I believe, in Paris.

MR. STOCK personally conducted a musical tour to Paris and London via the Chicago Symphony Orchestra last week. The audience was happy to spend even a short time with Mr. Delius, in his Paris: a Night Piece (The Song of a Great City), and happier to make a longer stay with Vaughan Williams and his London Symphony. Here one both felt and heard a great city. It wears well—this symphony. Continuing our stay in London, we heard Mr. Lionel Tertis play the viola part in the Romance and Finale, from the Suite for Viola and Orchestra, from the pen of an English Mr. Dale, and the riper writing of the ceremonial Elgar, who was represented by the Cockaigne overture.

The viola playing of Mr. Tertis is always something of an event. Last week it proved almost an adventure, to Mr. Tertis. He explained privately that he was using a new viola, made by the famous makers of Cremona, one of rather larger size than is ordinary. His feeling as he started to play was that the finger board stretched to the balcony, and he wondered if his arm was long enough to reach. Needless to say it was, and the effect was of quite unusual volume and timbre.

PIANISTS filled most of the time and space allotted to Sunday recitalists. Of these, two were new to Chicago: Maria Carreras, who in looks and virtuosity quite reminded one of the great Carreno (whose daughter, now a resident of Chicago, was an interested listener in the audience of Mme. Carreras), and the debutante Dvora Dienstova, of charming name and person, who, the reviewers agreed, made a good start. The Levitski recital drew a throng.

Maria Ivogun, affording the only contrast to piano playing, lifted her voice in sweet and florid song to a delighted audience at the Studebaker. Edward Zathurezky, violinist, made his debut before a large audience.

OWING to the continued illness of Mr. Wild, the Apollo Musical Club's performance of the Bach B Minor Mass was under the direction of Edgar Nelson, an ever present help in time of choral trouble.

Moriz Rosenthal, master pianist, has just completed a brief course for advanced piano pupils at the Glenn Dillard Gunn School. His theory of coaching, he explained, was to "tell them enough,—not too much." In between his teaching and playing, he is very busy making an exhaustive edition of the works of his famous master, Liszt. One looks forward to the time when Mr. Rosenthal will be moved to write his memoirs, enriched by his fund of anecdote and humor. Which calls to mind his epigrammatic reply when asked to define stage fright. "Stage fright," he answered, "is the only lucid interval in the life of an artist."

Chicago Opera on Tour

TODAY

Boris Godunoff (matinee) — in the Auditorium, Chattanooga, Tenn.
Tannhauser (evening)—in the Auditorium, Chattanooga, Tenn.

THURSDAY

Mefistofele—in the Auditorium, Memphis, Tenn.

FRIDAY

Gioconda — in the Auditorium, Memphis, Tenn.

SATURDAY

Thais (matinee)—in the Auditorium, Memphis, Tenn.
Tannhauser (evening)—in the Auditorium, Memphis, Tenn.

MONDAY

Gioconda — in the Majestic Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

Civic Opera Presents Aida in Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Feb. 13.—Aida, produced last night at the Metropolitan Opera House by the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, was the "most successful" performance the organization has given, according to Linton Martin of the North American. The Public Ledger reviewer expressed the general feeling in his assertion that Alexander Smallens "conducted with his usual skill, enthusiasm and knowledge of the details of the score."

The Record reported that Marie Rappold made of Aida "a woman of heart and soul and a great passion" and displayed "not only a voice of rare beauty, but she has also unquestioned ability as an actress." Mr. Martin commended her work and the Ledger writer said that during the opera she constantly improved until the Nile scene "showed her at her best, both in voice and in dramatic interpretation."

Julia Claussen, to further quote this writer, "was superb as Amneris." Linton Martin said she sang the part "with real power" and in the Record her "spirited portrayal" was lauded. According to the Ledger, Ulysses Lappas "was an excellent Radames;" Nelson Eddy's voice "is admirably suited to the part and he acted the role to perfection;" and Fred Patton's "rich and beautiful voice had ample opportunity to show its exquisite qualities and immense range." Other writers agreed.

Others in the cast were Reinhold Schmidt, Sara Murphy, and Nino Mazzeo. To quote Mr. Martin, Florence Cowanova and her ballet "gave great distinction and unusual interest to the ballet work." The work of the chorus and the stage direction and settings received commendation.

Dupre Appears With Cincinnati Symphony

Reiner Conducts Program of Works for Organ and Orchestra; Mme. Landowska Plays.

Cincinnati, Feb. 10.—Before an audience which filled every seat in the auditorium Marcel Dupre, organist, appeared on Sunday afternoon as assisting artist in the popular program of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Fritz Reiner. Each number on the program called for organ and orchestra. The compositions played were Bach's Adagio, Toccata, and Fugue in C; Mr. Dupre's Cortege and Litany; the Allegro from the Sixth Organ Symphony of Widor, and Saint-Saens' C minor Symphony.

Mrs. Plogstedt was most pleased with the "sweeping cadence" and "onward urge" of the work of M. Dupre, and praised the skillful direction of Mr. Reiner and the "perfection of ensemble" which he built about the soloist.

At the last regular subscription pair of concerts Wanda Landowska, pianist and harpsichordist, was soloist with the orchestra. On this occasion, according to Samuel Wilson of the Commercial Tribune, Mr. Reiner secured "superb results" in a program consisting of William Grosz's Prelude to a Comic Opera, the Mozart Piano Concerto in E flat, a group of harpsichord pieces by Bach, Handel and Mozart, and Brahms' Third Symphony.

Mme. Landowska's art "beggars description," was the comment of Mr. Wilson, and he praised Mr. Reiner in equal terms for his conducting of the Brahms. Mrs. Plogstedt found "much interesting subject matter" in the Gross Prelude. She called the harpsichord numbers "a rare joy," but nevertheless expressed a preference for the sonority of the pianoforte.

Mrs. Smith spoke of Mme. Landowska as "the gentle artist" with "an element of old-time grace." Mr. Goldenburg praised the perfection of the soloist's technique, and liked the "feminine delicacy" of the interpretation of the Mozart.

Spiering to Conduct in Portland

Portland, Ore., Feb. 20.—Theodore Spiering, violinist, composer and conductor, has accepted an invitation to conduct the Portland Symphony Orchestra in a special concert March 18.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management
Edna Nicholson Sovitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE New York TRIO

LOUIS EDLIN (Violin) CORNELIUS VAN VLIET ('Cello)
CLARENCE ADLER (Piano)

COMMENTS OF THE REVIEWERS

New York American—"They performed with faultless finish."

Telegram and Mail—"They played the Radnai composition with evident sympathy and much of eloquence and technical proficiency."

Evening World—"All three compositions received expert treatment at the hands of Messrs. Adler, Edlin and Van Vliet, who compose an organization one might single out for its musicianship and smooth ensemble."

Brooklyn Eagle—"The New York Trio is undoubtedly the best organization of its kind to be heard in New York. . . . The performance which they gave the Schumann Trio in G Minor was of rare, emotional warmth, admirably executed from all technical considerations that govern trio playing."

Evening Post—"The Scherzo and Finale were most charmingly played."

Boston Advertiser—"The New York Trio is unexcelled in its particular domain of music."

Toronto Globe—"The performance last night was marked by a sympathetic and symmetrical ensemble, and a revelation of refined shades of tone."

Boston Transcript—"It was hard to remember when the Beethoven Trio has sounded so fresh and new; when vitality has so quickened its lengths; when it has so teemed with delights; when to all and sundry the playing and the hearing have seemed an equal enjoyment. Zest leads the New York Trio and fire spurs it."

Season 1925-1926 now booking

A Few Dates Available in April, 1925

Management of THE NEW YORK TRIO

R. TAGER, Representative, 137 W. 86th St., NEW YORK

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

JUDGING from the communications received from Musical Digest readers there is—as has been remarked before in this publication—a growing interest throughout the country in opera. Los Angeles, I understand, is considering giving opera on its own account; and several other communities want what is more or less their own.

The editorial on Opera Subsidies, published in The Musical Digest in its issue of February 3, appears to have aroused a deal of enthusiastic comment. Giving opera at least a part of the chance offered symphony orchestras seems to many persons as no more than fair. A number of them are vigorous in their expressed belief that a country-wide movement in behalf of opera should be begun.

Well, it appears to have gotten started. It will take time to get the movement in motion; large projects require that, together with much unselfish effort on the part of those who get back of them and push with a will.

IT IS PERTINENT to point out that among the promising opera singers now attracting attention in Europe are Americans. Also that it is the Americans who are heard in Europe's studios who command the deepest respect.

That is encouraging. It is encouraging because for a long time this country has acquired a reputation for sending abroad young men and women who were apparently less concerned with their music studies than with having a good time.

Now there is a sufficient number of Americans singing in opera across the ocean to prove that this country has the talent, and the industry too, for accomplishing enough to invite admiration. Coupled to that, our established American opera singers (who are visiting Europe to sing in opera) are creating impressions helpful to our participation in that form of art.

Unless signs are worth little, the coming five years will witness a splendid forward movement in the quantity of opera given in this country by organizations deserving of support. All that is required is care in developing the various enterprises which are now in their early stages. Conservatism will help; and not attempting to do anything which cannot yield artistically fine results.

The American public seems willing to consider medium-priced opera, if it be good opera. That is a fact to be borne in mind. Half-baked endeavors will not help. What is imperative is to have performances of genuine worth; and when they are forthcoming with reasonable regularity the outcome will not disappoint any of us.

I HAVE reason to know that the Metropolitan Opera Company management will be glad to consider, for production, an opera by an American or Americans which merits such production. This news (as some will doubtless term it) doubtless may arouse some questioning sniffs.

"Does the Metropolitan really want to give American operas a fair chance?"

Why not?—if they be well made and have a reasonable amount of originality.

Our composers are at a disadvantage in having so little opportunity to write in the opera idiom. That everyone who is informed in music matters knows well. A native musician well equipped for turning out other forms of music does a creditable job; but, lacking the experience in the opera field, he finds that inexperience a handicap.

This information concerning the Metropolitan should be interesting to any American composer who has written a creditable score. If it is worthy of attention I am sure it will receive such attention.

DURING my recent Boston visit I chatted with several musically prominent Bostonians, including William Arms Fisher, of Oliver Ditson and Company. In the discussion of the radio, and its prospective future with respect to enlisting the services of distinguished music attractions and arranging broadcast procedure on a proper basis, Mr. Fisher gave some of the views he set forth at the recent convention in St. Louis of the Music Teachers' National Association.

Mr. Fisher stressed the point that the worth of the range of audible communication depends altogether on the use made of it and that "as soon as the novelty of listening to distant music and speech wears off the public will listen, not for the sake of listening, but for what it hears."

"Now, what the public hears," said Mr. Fisher, "is dependent upon the discretion or lack of it of the program managers, and since free broadcasting had its inception solely as a means of advertising and creating 'good will,' the constant aim of the program makers has been to please the public—give it what it wants and plenty of it, in other words, what individual program managers think the public wants. In order to ascertain what kind of music the radio public is seeking and getting I recently sent out a questionnaire to the principal broadcasters in the United States and received fifty replies.

"AS TO how music ranked in popularity as compared with other features, the unanimous reply was that music ranked first, that no other broadcasting feature can be compared with it. Moreover, the majority reported that their listeners were asking for more music, for better music and for a finer type of performance.

"Some people will be pleased to know that twice as many reported jazz as waning as those who saw an increase. Many agreed that the more vulgar type of jazz has had its day, and its predominance was explained as due to the host of hotel and dance hall orchestras clamoring so vigorously to be heard that many broadcasters take the line of least resistance.

"Of systematic broadcasting of regular symphony concerts there has been little, St. Louis being a notable exception.

"To the question, 'Has radio improved public taste so that listeners supposed to be illiterate musically have developed so that they enjoy good music?' came a chorus of very positive affirmatives. Radio certainly stimulates general interest in any form of music provided it is well done, and millions have at last been given a basis of comparison for deciding what they think is good music."

MR. FISHER spoke of the mental nausea the constant broadcasting of cheap and vulgar songs had brought about and quoted one station manager, who wrote: "The radio stations have been guilty of attempting to force down the public throat even more of trash than the public wanted, and the shift in sentiment on 'popular' music is due to a revulsion of public taste rather than to any effort of broadcasting stations in general."

While paying tribute to the more discriminating program managers Mr. Fisher dwelt at length on the fact that the shortcomings in the present conduct of radio are due to the fundamental error of wanting something for nothing.

To begin with, the listeners in this country are tax free and have been trained to expect a startling variety of entertainment for nothing, while the broadcasters have been and still are placing their dependence on volunteer performers and speakers, who give their services without pay in their eagerness for publicity. Thus a vicious circle has been started.

"Until artists worth paying for are regularly engaged, radio concerts, with exceptions, will continue to be merely a source of advertising to immature performers who, instead of helping the public to enjoy good music, often cast opprobrium upon it by their inadequate and inarticulate performances of it," declared Mr. Fisher.

"The constantly increasing cry is for better programs," asserted Mr. Fisher. "The station managers themselves testify to this, for the radio will never become a household necessity until a large and intelligent section of the people are fully assured that their radio sets are going to bring them something more than mere triviality or the higher class music inadequately performed." He begged program managers to have a little more faith in the intelligence of the average American and to at least set apart certain evenings or certain hours for the adequate performance of worthy music, reserving other hours for the jazz-hounds and thus avoid the present indiscriminate confusion.

In concluding Mr. Fisher said that "in spite of all its shortcomings, and no one knows them better than discriminating station managers, radio is certainly helping enormously to break down indifference to music. Radio is an instrument of great public service and its possibilities have only begun to unfold. It is the biggest single agency in America today for the popularizing of music.

"Nothing but great music splendidly performed is worthy of a national audience, and to conceive of stated times set apart when trivial things are put aside and in a hush a hundred million people, including all the shut-ins and far-aways from the Atlantic to the Pacific, listen to the thrilling voice of a single great singer, or to a masterly orchestra or chorus under an inspired conductor is not to dream in vain, but to visualize a possibility close at hand."

I AM MOVED very often to a feeling of pity for the music debutants whom duty compels me to hear. Scarcely a week passes, in any average season, that a dozen or so of them do not pass in review . . . to be reviewed as to their merits and their defects. Of course the latter were better not written or talked about—if these debutants had their way. That is the unfortunate part of their mental attitude: They want to be told nice things, rarely indeed what they are pleased to call "the unpleasant."

But why not the unpleasant? Do these young folk—and others not so young, who nevertheless are essaying for the first time to impress favorably a New York audience—imagine that they are fooling the public? And the managers? Nothing of the sort ever happens. These debutants are catalogued and cross-indexed quicker than scat . . . by everybody whose opinion really counts. The only persons thus deluded are the debutants themselves.

They scan the newspaper reviews, and commonly take issue with the best of them. That is to say, they challenge much of what the competent chroniclers may have written which is not commendatory.

IN NO OTHER calling save music is there to be found so violent a prejudice to the disapproving word. Instead of considering it calmly and judicially, with a view to analyzing an opinion for purposes of turning it to a possible profitable account, the average young musician assumes the injured attitude. He has been unfairly treated; his friends have told him that he sings or plays infinitely better than the newspaper reviewer states he plays or sings. So he goes about with a scowl, insisting that merit never really has a fair chance.

Now and again the newspaper reviewers do fall down on their jobs. They are human, and may as a consequence err. And every so often most of them stumble over their work, as is to be expected. Rarely, however, does the consensus of newspaper critical opinion go very wide of the truth. Intelligent and far-seeing young men and women who are getting launched in their careers usually ponder what is written about them, for therein, quite frequently, lies a way of improving themselves in their art.

NO REMEDY will be taken, apparently, by the ill-equipped pianist, violinist, or singer to save him from the heart-ache which must follow a premature metropolitan debut. In his eagerness to get going as quickly as he can he insists on such a public appearance. Even the restraining counsel of his teacher—where the teacher is wise and courageous—rarely deters the ambitious young person.

If in such circumstances the career-seeker is roughly treated in print, or scantily noticed, who is to blame? No expert would dare predict that one day these youngsters will wake up. The one cure is failure; and hard though that may seem it appears to be the only convincing evidence of their professional mediocrity which they seem willing to notice.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Elman Quartet

Mischa Elman with the other members of his string quartet gave their second concert of chamber music in Town Hall February 18, playing Beethoven's Quartet in C minor, Schumann's A major Quartet, and Mozart's Quintet in G minor. Associated with Mr. Elman are Edward Bachman, second violin, Nicolas Moldovan, viola, and Horace Britt, cello. The assisting violist in the Mozart number was William Schubert.

To quote W. J. Henderson of the Sun, Mr. Elman "has made himself part of one of the most competent and delightful chamber music ensembles that have come before this public in recent years. . . . The four musicians play together with great delicacy, with subtlety of nuance, clarity of balance and admirable neatness of melodic articulation."

Olin Downes (Times) considered that "the greater part of the performances had not only passages of exemplary brilliancy, warmth of tone, and expressiveness of phrase on the part of individual players, but also a spirit of ensemble and a regard for the composer's intention which forbade the thought of individual display."

According to Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, "much of the playing was of a high order of excellence. Mr. Elman not only adapted himself astonishingly to the requirements of chamber music, remaining conscientiously within the frame of the ensemble, but his tone crowned the Andante Espressivo of the Schumann Quartet like a soft halo."

Mme. Sylva Sings Again

The last part of Marguerite Sylva's second recital at Wallack's Theatre on February 15 consisted of "a rehearsal of Carmen in the green room of an imaginary Opera Comique in New York." In these excerpts from Carmen, Mme. Sylva was assisted by Louis Rousseau.

According to the Herald Tribune reviewer, "the part of Carmen suits her remarkably well. Her performance last night brought out the spirit of the role to a degree not usually afforded by regular operatic performances." Mr. Rousseau was commended by this writer for "a voice of agreeable quality within its limits."

Give Dance-Song Recital

A program was presented by Rosalind Fuller, soprano, and Angna Enters, dancer, at the Greenwich Village Theatre, New York, on February 15. To quote the Post, "To the charm of a sweetly toned soprano voice Miss Fuller added picturesque costuming for her groups of old English and Scotch songs" and was "most agreeable in her interpretations." This reviewer commented likewise that "the dancing of Miss Enters provided excellent entertainment. . . . She ran the gamut of emotions."

Miss Doris Doe

In a program of varied mood and seriousness, including songs by Hugo Wolf, Geni Sadero, Frank LaForge, who accompanied, and a group of French composers, Doris Doe, contralto, made her New York debut in Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening. "She wrote her debut in capital letters," reported the Times commentor, "with that excellent thing in woman, a low sweet voice, 'a voice with a smile.'"

This observer summed up his impression: "Her songs combined racy humor—even dizzily near to music hall depth, under a thin ice of laughter—with a serious mood and a true musical discrimination that in turn surprised and delighted her audience." The reviewer of the Herald Tribune likewise found in Miss Doe "a contralto voice of unusual quality, with smooth high notes and full and resonant lower ones."

"She displayed a full, resonant voice of considerable beauty," said the Sun report, "and she sang with taste and a style imbued with strength and confidence. . . . Miss Doe's recital was one of the more enjoyable. She deserves to be heard again." Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail did not like Miss Doe's use of her voice.

Miss Jeannette Vreeland

Jeannette Vreeland in her New York debut in Aeolian Hall on February 16, established herself in the immediate favor of her audience, in the words of the Times reviewer, with "a fine stage presence, youth, good looks, and a soprano voice, clear, musical and limpid."

According to Deems Taylor of the World, Miss Vreeland "made an exceptionally favorable impression" and in some of her songs "revealed a voice of comparatively light texture, but clear and round in quality, handled with great vocal skill and considerable art. . . . Her tone production is easy and natural, her phrasing and sense of line exceptionally good, and her diction in the three languages she sang crystal clear."

The Telegram-Mail reviewer commended Miss Vreeland for "a light soprano voice which has evidently been carefully trained. Especially good are her high notes." In the words of the writer in the Herald Tribune, she has "a good voice of satisfactory volume, and used it yesterday intelligently and judiciously. Barring some top notes, it had a tone of agreeably clear and smooth quality, fluently produced, while the progress of the recital showed expressive capacity." The Sun writer remarked on her "fine appearance" on the stage and added that "she is an interesting singer of gifts and attainments, and one who is evidently bent upon realizing the highest artistic ideals of her chosen field."

Die Walkuere

Three changes in cast marked the third production this season of Die Walkuere by the Metropolitan Opera Company on February 17. Elizabeth Rethberg replaced Mme. Mueller as Sieglinde, Mr. Gustafson replaced Mr. Bender as Hunding, and Mr. Whitehill sang Wotan instead of Mr. Bohnen. Artur Bodanzky conducted.

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail asserted that Mme. Rethberg "possesses one of the loveliest voices ever associated with the role anywhere, and her singing of its music cannot but give keen pleasure." According to Olin Downes in the Times, she sang her music "in a way that recognized its melodic and sensuous character, and with much feeling. She is more of a singer than an actress, but she gave a sympathetic and emotional representation."

As W. J. Henderson expressed it in the Sun, Mme. Rethberg "always sings well," but Sieglinde "is not one of her best parts." The Post found her fully equal to the occasion, and the Herald Tribune writer said she sang "with her usual beauty of tone."

According to the Post, Mr. Whitehill "gave a really fine performance," and Mr. Henderson considered him in good voice. Mr. Downes admired his Wotan "for its breadth, its pathos and nobility of conception, though his singing showed fatigue." His impersonation, to quote Mr. Sanborn, "is refreshingly free from extravagance and eccentricity. It is cast in a big mold and it moves with the ample freedom of authority along the broad path of the great Wagnerian tradition." Mr. Henderson found Mr. Gustafson's familiar Hunding "acceptable."

Miss Irma Woollen

What the New York Times reviewer described as a "favorable debut," was made in Town Hall on Tuesday evening by Irma Woollen, mezzo-soprano. Walter Golde was her accompanist. "To an attractive stage presence," said the Times writer further, "she added a sweet mezzo-soprano of no great range." After her recovery from nervousness, he said, "she sang with delightful freedom and freshness," although not with perfect diction.

"She disclosed a good natural voice with evidence of serious purpose and some valuable schooling," was the opinion of the Sun reviewer. Other newspapers did not carry analytical reports of the concert.

Fifteen Soloists at Metropolitan

Fifteen soloists participated in the Sunday concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on February 15. The roster included Mmes. Peralta, Egener, Mario, Ryan and Alcock, and Messrs. Angelo Bada, Chamlee, Errolle, Tokatyan, Ballester, Tibbett, Didur, Mardones and Rothier. Mr. Bamboschek conducted the orchestra, chorus and stage band in a program of orchestral numbers and excerpts from Boris Godunoff, Mefistofele, Faust and other operas.

Mme. Zabelle Aram

An Armenian soprano, Zabelle Aram, who was heard in New York last season gave a recital at Town Hall on February 15. She was assisted by R. E. Williams, flutist; Vladimir Dubinsky, cellist, and Emil J. Polak, pianist.

In Armenian folk songs, to quote the Herald Tribune reporter, "she showed zest and expressive ability, while what seemed a slightly nasal timbre was not amiss." The Times writer also found her "wholly delightful" in Oriental pieces. The reviewer writing in the Telegram-Mail commented that Mme. Aram's voice "of unusual and penetrating timbre, lent itself less favorably to florid Italian arias than to a number of Armenian folk songs. These however, she delivered with a zest and a native feeling for the fractional intervals of Oriental scales altogether fascinating and unusual."

The Sun chronicler wrote that "her voice was often hard and metallic, with little of the softer aspects of emotional color, but the very peculiarities of her vocal gifts were well adapted to the mood and atmosphere of her native compositions, which she sang with genuine dramatic effect."

Joseph Calleia

Joseph Calleia, a tenor from the Island of Malta, made his New York debut in Town Hall on February 14. According to the Times, "he proved to be the possessor of an agreeable high voice, which he used with much skill in Italian airs." He was accompanied by Ferdinand Greenwald, who also played several solo numbers.

The Sun reviewer commented that "his voice had a great deal of volume and he was effective dramatically, but his tone was often uncertain in pitch and intonation." In the Herald Tribune the writer observed that "his singing gave an impression of no little vocal volume, but a tone of rather uncertain quality." Other newspapers did not carry analytical reports of the recital.

George Morgan Sings

At his second New York recital of the season in Aeolian Hall February 18, George Morgan, baritone, gave songs by Liapounov, Taniev, Erich Wolff, Faure, and Debussy. According to the Sun reviewer, "he showed musical quality in his phrasing and his employment of nuance. His enunciation was clear, though better in French than in German. But on the whole he made a pleasant impression." This writer thought that his voice lacked color and volume.

CLARENCE ADLER
PIANIST
Instruction for Advanced Pupils
137 West 86th St. New York
Telephone Schuyler 3580

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building, Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.; or Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

Carnegie Chamber Music Hall
Saturday Evening, February 28, 1925
The Only Concert This Season
BORIS LEVENSON
Composer
Assisted by Prominent Artists

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1921
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Mme. Laura Littlefield

In the words of Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, the recital by Laura Littlefield, soprano, in Aeolian Hall on February 12 "proved in a quiet way to be one of the most pleasant events of the season." Mr. Peyser thought her voice "of very pretty quality, if somewhat limited in range," and that "intelligence, taste and an engaging simplicity and candor lent charm and an inescapable distinction to everything Mme. Littlefield sang."

According to the Times, "she employed her voice with good control and a fine sense of proportion," was "admirable in the maintenance of melodic line and the welding of tone and text, and was resourceful in differentiating between the styles of the different composers." The World writer spoke of her "finely tempered voice and refreshingly natural diction." In the Herald-Tribune the chronicler wrote that, although her voice is not "particularly large in volume," it had "a smooth, pleasing quality of tone and was used with unusual taste and skill."

To quote the reviewer in the Sun, Mme. Littlefield "possesses a voice of light timbre, but very pleasing color. She sings with a generally good tone production, though there were some variations in the placing, which may have been due to anxiety. Her command of style was such as to excite admiration and her singing had so much taste, charm and sentiment, as well as fluence, flexibility and clear diction, that her debut may be set down as one of the successful ones of a crowded season."

Joint Organ Recital

Contributing to the program of the concert given at the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York, on February 11 were four organists, Marco Enrico Bossi, Charles M. Courboin, Marcel Dupre, and Palmer Christian; and an orchestra consisting of seventy members of the Philharmonic Society, conducted by Henry Hadley.

The program was made up of compositions for organ and orchestra, many of which had not been heard here before. Signor Bossi's rendition of his Concerto in A minor, played here for the first time, received prolonged applause. In the words of the Post writer, it "showed the virtuosity of the performer." Another first performance was that of Eric DeLamarter's Concerto in E major, played by Palmer Christian with the orchestra. The writer in the Herald Tribune called it "a vigorous, tuneful work with themes not unmindful of MacDowell, with a slight touch of Dvořak—not that it did not have individuality of its own."

According to the Post, Marcel Dupre's playing of his arrangement of the Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C major of Bach proved him "a musician of whom much more may be expected." Mr. Courboin concluded the program with Widor's Sixth Symphony in G minor, also a first performance in New York in the orchestral version.

Beethoven Association

The artists appearing at the concert of the Beethoven Association in Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 9 were Percy Grainger, pianist, May Mukle, cellist, Lionel Tertis, violist, and the Letz String Quartet. Faure's Piano Quartet in G minor, Eccles' Sonata in G minor, the Bach-Tertis Komm Susser Tod and Chaconne, and Brahms' Sextet in G major comprised the program.

Most of the reviewers thought the performance of the Faure work the best of the evening. Ernest Newman of the Post wrote that there was "a grace in the performance worthy of the work, but also a too constant softness of tissue." According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, "it was a rare pleasure to hear again the lovely, limpid, fragrant piano quartet of Faure" and "Mr. Percy Grainger, and Messrs. Letz, Schubert and Britt played with gusto and devotion, and, in the exquisite slow movement, with deeply poetic insight." Olin Downes of the Times, the Sun writer and Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) agreed.

According to the Sun, in the Eccles' Sonata Miss Mukle's "firm grasp of the subject, her confidence and elevated style lifted this dignified work to a high level of artistic excellence;" and Mr. Tertis played "with all his usual beauty of tone and refined style." Mr. Downes wrote that Miss Mukle "brought similar substance, musicianship, and mastery of her instrument" and complimented Mr. Tertis on his playing, although he doubted the value of transcribing the Bach chorale for viola. Mr. Gilman felt that Miss Mukle played the Sonata "appreciatively" although he wished that "she had conveyed it with a steadier pulse and greater poise." He and Mr. Newman of the Post found Mr. Tertis in superb form.

Arie Abileah

A pianist from Palestine, Arie Abileah, was heard in recital for the first time in New York at Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of February 17. "His playing was of fine order and furnished genuine enjoyment," wrote the reviewer of the Sun. "He showed, for the most part, that rarest possession among pianists—a beautiful singing tone. . . . An admirable finger technique was always used to serve artistic purpose and without sensational effect." The program included besides works of Chopin, Liszt, Bach, Debussy, and Ravel, two compositions by modern Jewish composers, Rosowsky and Wolfsohn.

"Mr. Abileah's playing was singularly clear and melodious, alert and purposeful," wrote the Times chronicler. "He was applauded heartily." Other newspapers did not publish analytical reviews of the concert.

Mme. Maria-Theresa

To music of Brahms, Gluck, and Moussorgsky played by the American National Orchestra under the direction of Howard Barlow, Maria-Theresa danced in Carnegie Hall on February 13.

Gluck's Alceste, which took up the first half of the program, was, to quote the Sun, "an elaborate undertaking, and the performance, as a whole, certainly added to the dancer's reputation as a serious artist, and brought words of praise to the orchestra for its well shaded playing." The Times reviewer wrote that Maria-Theresa danced with "individual zest and abandon" and Alison Smith (World) found that she brought "much natural grace and rhythmic feeling" to her interpretations. According to the Herald Tribune, "the dancer displayed ability to interpret a considerable range of emotion in her dance and gesture with agility and grace."

Mme. Frieda Hempel

Frieda Hempel, recently returned from England, was heard in New York for the first time this season in Town Hall on February 9, in a benefit concert for the New York Women's League for Animals, Inc. She was assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, pianist, Louis P. Fritze, flutist, and Hans Lange, violinist. In the second part of the concert, which included the Shadow Song from Dinorah, Miss Hempel appeared in her Jenny Lind costume.

The reviewer in the Sun wrote: "It is scarcely necessary to record that the talented soprano was in excellent voice, lacking a little warmth in the early part of her program, perhaps, but soon blossoming forth in all her accustomed style and skill of interpretation." According to the Herald Tribune, "Miss Hempel's singing had, in general, its familiar fluency and clearness of tone and expressive charm, though there seemed to be two brief lapses from pitch in the Shadow Song." Ernest Newman of the Post was rather disappointed in the concert.

Sings Many American Songs

Claire Dux gave her second New York recital of the season before a large audience on the afternoon of February 15, and included in her program besides compositions of Mozart and Strauss a number of songs by Henry Hadley (who assisted at the piano in this group), Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, Richard Hageman, and Leeds Mitchell.

The Sun reviewer found "rare charm of voice and style" in the singing, although he spoke of "some faulty tone production." The Times reviewer, as well as the writers of the Post, World, and Herald Tribune, felt that Mme. Dux was in "capital" voice.

Masters Kramer and Singer

Two youthful violinists gave New York recitals on February 11. Sammy Kramer, fourteen, offered at Aeolian Hall a program of Handel, Joachim, Wieniawski and Vieuxtemps. Jacques Singer, thirteen, played at Town Hall Bach, Paganini, and Sinding.

According to the Herald Tribune, Master Kramer "played with marked confidence and technique of notable brilliance and capacity for high speed, and tone with some points of thinness, and was called on for encores." The Sun reviewer found his tempi "erratic, and his technique was inclined to be fiery rather than clear-cut. But in firmness of tone, good bowing, and the display of indubitable talent young Mr. Kramer acquitted himself most creditably."

This writer considered that Mr. Singer "played smoothly, with a quiet restraint and welcome reserve. He lacked confidence in his technical feats. But he revealed musical feeling of no little depth and emotional resources that were displayed to great advantage in lyric passages and compositions romantic in mood. His range of tone color was extensive and the warmth and refinement of his style should augur well for his future development." The Herald Tribune chronicler thought in the Bach he "showed marked competence with a technique able to meet the mechanical demands of the number and a tone of firm smoothness."

The Times writer commented that "the two events were perhaps designed to give stage experience to young talent" and the World reviewer found the recitals little more than displays of "technical gymnastics."

Ludwig Pleier

A cello recital was given in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Tuesday afternoon by Ludwig Pleier. Emanuel Balaban was at the piano. His program included compositions by himself, Kaum, Volkmann, and Haydn.

"Mr. Pleier played with a sincere and welcome musicianship," reported the Post. "Neither his intonation nor his technique was impeccable, but his tone was good, his bowing vigorous, and his program was presented with plenty of warmth and color. His own compositions, although not strikingly original, were interesting and more than pleasant."

He "proved a player of earnest and intelligent taste," in the opinion of the reviewer of the Times.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

SASCHA FIDELMAN
Russian Violinist
Management H. & A. Culbertson, Aeolian Hall, New York.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Communities

SPRINGFIELD

MASSACHUSETTS

IT IS a thriving city—Springfield, Massachusetts. As the train carries you into its seeming heart there is visible a stretch of commercial activity. Prosperity and progress rise in all directions; and both are there. But other phases of life touch this community, and one of them is the cultural side . . . wherein music plays its part.

Ask any professional concert artist who has appeared in this New England city and the answer will be almost invariably the same: "A keen and discriminating audience usually is to be found."

If you have the time and the inclination you might discover just what part music plays in the lives of Springfield citizens, and how much of a necessity it appears to have become. Since most persons could not very conveniently spend the days requisite to looking into the music fabric of this Massachusetts city The Musical Digest has performed that service . . . in the interest of enlightening its readers.

Not that Springfield is alone in this outstanding respect. Other cities — and towns as well—are forging ahead musically; and their activities will be duly recorded, as opportunity permits, in the columns of this publication. For it is right and proper to let the people of various communities know what is being done elsewhere . . . far-off as well as near.

The Orpheus Club

Springfield is musical; that fact can and will be proven by the array of data to be set forth in this article. It is appreciative of what music means in every-day matters of life; there is scarcely a home which has not in it some musical desire and a certain appreciation of the art, in one form or another.

The Orpheus Club is Springfield's senior music organization. Conductor John J. Bishop is able to do rather more with the one hundred and fifty men singers than was possible for the first leader; he had available only sixteen voices. Ever since there has gone on, it would seem, that inherent desire to participate in the interpretation of good music which signalized the feelings of those "original sixteen."

During the following of year upon year there developed a pride in maintaining Orpheus traditions. And the engaging of distinguished artists to appear as soloists at the club concerts became a regular procedure. Mme. Nordica, Edward Remenyi, Maud Powell, and Evan Williams sang and played for Orpheus Club audiences, and thus was there set a standard to be sustained.

To sing for the love of singing appears to have been the motivating force which has carried this organization forward. One finds that element responsible chiefly for the formation of most of the country's choral bodies: men come together in the spirit of comradeship; they face their music director, and a happy rehearsal attends. Then, with the night of a public performance at hand, there is the thrill of an event . . . and each member seeks to give the best account of himself in the interest of his club.

Mr. Bishop has held the baton over these Orpheus singers for more than a quarter-century. He succeeded the late Horatio Parker—after serving the club as accompanist for six years — and he has taken seriously his responsibilities. The celebration of the Orpheus's fiftieth anniversary will not be soon forgotten. On that occasion, which marked its 146th concert, the Boston Symphony Ensemble, with Mme. Carolina Lazzari, contralto, assisted in the presentation of the program.

Inaugurate Festival

It was perhaps only a natural step to inaugurate a music festival in Springfield. Other communities had begun and carried on successfully; the festival spirit prevailed; so in 1899 the Hampden County Music Association was founded. Carl Zerrahn and Frederick Zuchmann were the first conductors, but their tenure of office was brief. George W. Chadwick responded, after a year or so of his predecessors' endeavors, to the invitation to pilot the fortunes of the Association, and he continued at his post for nearly a decade. There ensued then a two-years cessation of music festival activities in Springfield, but Charles Cornell felt they should not be allowed to die. In 1903 the Springfield Music Festival Association came into existence, with the men of the Orpheus Club and an equal number of feminine singers forming the three hundred members who were destined to go on without further interruption.

Once again did Mr. Bishop respond to the need of the moment. There were difficulties to be experienced (most music festivals know them). The expense of securing adequate solo artists was not slight; stimulating public interest in the measure imperative to adequate financial support was not unvaryingly easy. Yet each month of May found the festivals prepared and performed, and the people benefited thereby.

There were some anxious moments for the two seasons preceding that of a year ago; but in 1924 the Springfield Chamber of Commerce united with the Presidents' Club to restore to its fullest limit the most notable achievements in the music festival's history. Now another undertaking approaches, and festival adherents will wish for Springfield a step forward in a character of music enterprise which merits all-sided popular support.

Other Choral Groups

Supplementing the choral activities of this community are the concerts of the MacDowell Male Choir (having seventy-five voices), which Mr. Turner conducts, and of which F. C. Taplin is president; and the St. Cecilia Choir (numbering seventy-five women), also directed by Mr. Turner . . . the latter serving as an auxiliary to the former organization. Apart from their individual undertakings these choral societies combine on special occasions, as happened recently, when Handel's Messiah was performed.

With the symphony orchestra movements spreading throughout the country it was perhaps to be expected of this progressive community to take its place in the sun. Some three years ago Arthur H. Turner decided that seventy-five instrumentalists could be mustered for the purpose; so he proceeded to that end. Mr. Turner was, and still is, Springfield's municipal organist; his music tastes were of the highest; he was conscious of the influence a serious orchestra would wield in the city.

Only the joining of faith and enthusiasm can make possible a symphony orchestra in a city of moderate size. There is, first of all, the finding of technically proficient musicians to play; then the manouvering for rehearsals; and lastly the obtaining of finances for the necessary support. It presents problems not to be solved out of hand.

The Musical Digest has recorded in its columns the forward march of this orchestra. Particularly its outstanding event of the past season, when an all-American program was played, on which was performed by Mme. Frieda Seimans a new Concertstuck by Frederic Albert Hoschke, director of the Springfield National Institute of Musical Art. Also on that program were compositions by James Dunn and Edward Ballyntine, and the recognition of all the works testified to the worthiness of the project.

Orchestras Active

During the current year the Springfield Symphony Orchestra has been active. Miss Mary Jordan, contralto, and Ernest Davis, tenor, have been the soloists at two of the concerts. Nor is there any slighting of pretentious works — as witness a program which included the Tschaikowsky Fourth Symphony, the Tristan and Isolde Vorspiel and Liebestod, and the overture to Le Roi d'Ys.

A place has been made also for the Springfield Philharmonic Orchestra (numbering fifty musicians), which is presided over by Maurice Freedman. Then there are two junior orchestras: one led by Mr. Turner, who is putting enthusiasm into the forty young players, the other conducted by Mrs. Emil Janser. But the orchestral interest among the youth of Springfield is not confined exclusively to these organizations. Others exist, and they will be commented upon at the proper place in this article.

Difficulties Overcome

Thus has the foundation of musical Springfield been laid: a symphony orchestra, even though the last in the scheme of things; a music festival association, and a men's chorus. And of course much else besides, as will be shown during the course of this article, as it progresses.

Matters did not flow on with uninterrupted smoothness. They rarely do, in any worth while movement . . . no matter what it may be. There must be, and usually there is, a swinging of the pendulum—to and fro. A gain is succeeded by a loss; but always, where the endeavor is justifiable and fine, does the former prevail. For without discouragement there would be no stimulation to overcome it. Thus does what is meritorious push on to its inevitable goal.

Springfield appears to have experienced its music problems with a calmness indicative of confidence in the ultimate outcome. For certainly no faintness of heart has been apparent. Momentary clouds on the music horizon have merely served to prompt a renewal of effort; and where the people failed to support some particular undertaking it was regarded with a philosophical mind. Always has the persevering attitude brought its reward: and it has been one of a kind to demonstrate that Springfield is essentially musical, and that it has no intention ever of becoming otherwise.

From left to right are John J. Bishop, conductor of the Springfield Orpheus Club; Willard M. Clark, music editor of the Springfield Union and founder of the Musicians Club; Mrs. L. E. Triplett, who is in charge of the Junior Extension of the Tuesday Morning Music Club, and Arthur H. Turner, director of the Turner School of Music. (The photographs of the latter two are by the Bachrach Studio.)

It was one year ago—in March, to be exact—that the Musicians Club of Springfield was formed. Willard M. Clark was its founder, and he was elected first president. Mr. Clark had played an important part in the music affairs of the city through his position of music editor of the Springfield Union. He had youth and youth's energy. Likewise a vision of what such an organization might do — even with a starting membership of no more than fifteen persons.

The purpose back of this Musicians Club was to bring together progressive spirits that they might mingle in good fellowship, and interchange ideas. Such at least is the understanding gained by The Musical Digest. Since breadth of view was the belief of its founder the Musicians Club invited women to join as well as men. The meetings were set for once a month, at a dinner where informal chats might take place.

Speakers Invited

Directly the advantage of having a speaker became apparent, and that plan was quickly begun. One of the recent guests who had something important to say was Harold Milligan; and his talk on music conditions in New York was illuminative in many respects.

Consideration of music programs suitable for Springfield is taken up by this club; and it seeks consistently to plan for the welfare of the city's musical progress. A metropolitan procedure, surely, which should radiate enlightenment that must have a constructive effect.

Prominent among the organizations which have been contributing factors to the music life of Springfield is the Tuesday Morning Music Club. With a membership of some 400 women, and in its twenty-third year, it meets fortnightly. Apart from giving programs participated in by its musically talented members, the Tuesday Morning Club gives three concerts by distinguished artists. The Elshuco Trio has appeared before the club during the current year, and Harold Bauer is to play a recital.

Mrs. Katherine Whitefield (who has just taken up her residence in Boston) is president of the Tuesday Morning Music Club; and Miss Susan I. Allen is chairman of the program committee. In addition to having contributed financially to the support of the Springfield orchestra and the Festival, the club has begun a Junior Extension which promises fruitful things.

Mrs. L. E. Triplett is in charge of this work. Each candidate (who must be between the ages of twelve and eighteen) is required to pass an examination; and once a month, on a Saturday afternoon, a meeting is held at which there is a music program, and, when occasion requires, some explanation of a music event which is approaching.

The Junior Club

There are fifty boys and girls in this Junior Club, and George Harvey, an eighteen-year-old baritone, is its president. The initiation fee is one dollar, and a plan has been established that provides for the club to finance its operations. Mrs. Triplett, who has brought a number of distinguished artists to Springfield for concert appearances, sees in the activities of the organization the upbuilding of a real music understanding; the development of some fine musicians, and the providing of future patrons of music endeavors.

The Chromatic Club, of which Mr. Howard King is president—with Mrs. Le Roy Cushman, serving as chairman of the program committee — specializes in the study of music and music programs. Mrs. King, as accompanist for the Festival Association and the Orpheus Club, is regarded as peculiarly fitted for her post; and the Chromatic meetings, and music offerings, enlist a lively interest.

Club Activities

There is a spirit of searching for music knowledge in the ranks of the Cleff Club; and this season Miss Beatrice Osborn, its president, is responsible for the series of papers which are being offered on Nineteenth century music of various countries. One will find monthly meetings taking place in the music department of the Springfield Women's Club, of which Mrs. Helen P. Eddy (a contralto singer) is chairman; but there is usually a musicale of some kind, and now and again the music department's own quartet takes part in these, as well as in other, affairs. The College Club, of which Miss Dorothy Adams is president, also boasts a music section, and one program each year can always be counted on—which is likewise true of the Mercy Warren Chapter of the D. A. R., for which Mrs. Roscoe C. Edlund arranges the programs.

Solidifying the music fabric of Springfield has been brought about—along with the numerous endeavors — by several chamber music ensembles, two of them serving rather more prominently. One is the Janser String Quartet, of which Emil Janser is first violin; the other is the Kimball Hotel Trio — Jans Geerts, violinist, Arnold Janser, 'cellist, Lloyd Stoneman, pianist — which broadcasts on Saturday nights.

Apart from what the local chamber music societies provide, there is opportunity to hear outside organizations. Miss Julia Rogers has been assiduous in this respect, and she has brought to Springfield a number of visiting ensembles, among them the London String Quartet, and the American String Quartet.

Constructive work also must be credited to Edward H. Marsh, who is responsible for concert courses consisting of widely known attractions. And the Steinert Series finds attractive music offerings, as does the Springfield Y. M. C. A. series. Only a few weeks ago a neighborhood manager—Robert Kellogg, of Hartford—sponsored a concert in which Rosa Ponselle was the star.

Music in the Schools

The teaching of music in the public schools, of which John Ahern is director, is yielding gratifying results. Mr. Ahern's enthusiasm seems to be contagious; and his corps of instructors are a unit of efficient workers. The senior orchestras and the junior high school orchestras have attracted attention, and their one important concert each year is much commented upon. Music appreciation has a special place in the schools of Springfield, a procedure begun by Miss Mary Regal which has gone on in ways it should.

Miss Regal also formed the Central High School Music Club, an organization numbering fifty members who learn much of the better sides of music, including many of the whys and wherefores.

Then there is the department of music maintained by the International Y.M.C.A. College. A. W. Jones is the graduate secretary, and the students have an orchestra, a glee club, and an instrumental quartet.

Churches Do Their Share

All the foregoing is indeed a record of achievement, a hallmark of community progress and cultural appreciation. But there is more to be added. The churches are doing their share musically. Trinity Community House has a concert auditorium, recently completed, seating 600. It was made possible by the co-operation of a number of churches which affiliated in this particular enterprise under the name Forest Park Council of Churches.

In the Unity Church one may hear the Philharmonic Male Quartet, which appears professionally in other cities, under the management of Howard I. Smith. Christ Episcopal Church has a boys choir, directed by Lucius Harris; and at St.

(Continued on page 21)

Chamber Music in Philadelphia

Enesco and Schelling Appear Together and Sittig Trio Plays; Many Recitals Given.

Philadelphia, Feb. 16.—Three sonatas were played by Ernest Schelling, pianist, and George Enesco, violinist, at the meeting yesterday afternoon of the Philadelphia Chamber Music Association. These were the Beethoven in E flat, Paderewski's in A minor and the Cesar Franck Sonata. Mr. Schelling substituted for Olga Samaroff who was unable to play because of trouble with her eyes.

In the words of the Public Ledger reviewer, both musicians "showed themselves to be great artists in ensemble playing, in tone, rhythm, balance of the respective parts in solo and accompaniment work and in general artistry." The writer in the North American thought the Franck Sonata played by both with "a reverent appreciation of its beauty."

Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer agreed as to their individual and combined excellence, but the Record chronicler did not think the ensemble playing of these two artists was of the highest order.

The Sittig Trio gave its first concert here before a large and appreciative audience on Friday. The Trio is composed of Margaret Sittig, violin, Edgar H. Sittig, cello, and Frederick V. Sittig, piano. According to the Record, "the balance of the instruments was admirable, the tone sufficiently broad and voluminous to present many beautiful color effects, while the spirit of the work was so spontaneous and delightful that everyone was pleased and entertained."

The Ledger writer found the program played "in excellent style" throughout. . . The balance of parts, continued this commentator, "was generally excellent." Miss Sittig's tone and sense of rhythm were especially commended in this review. In the opinion of the Bulletin, "the playing was characterized by smoothness, unity and balance."

To quote the North American, Mme. Charles Cahier's was "one of the most artistic song recitals of the season." This reviewer continued that Mme. Cahier, who sang in the Academy foyer Thursday evening, "seems equally at home in totally different types of compositions. She combines a fine natural organ of true contralto color, with finish of phrasing and sympathetic insight."

Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer wrote that Mme. Cahier "has a contralto of unusually wide range, and sings with a great variety of expression." According to the Ledger writer, her voice was "rich and vibrating" and her high notes "are accomplished with the utmost ease, and the modulations are well nigh perfect." The Record observer felt that her voice was "full and rich in the lower register, with a lack of resonance in the upper reaches" and was rather disappointed in the concert.

* * *

The Mendelssohn Club gave the first of its two Golden Jubilee concerts on Tuesday and, according to the Ledger, displayed "some of the best choral singing that has been done in this city in a long time." The soloists were Ruth Rodgers, soprano, Ethel Righter Wilson, soprano, and Richard Crooks, tenor, and the Philadelphia Orchestra played.

The Inquirer chronicler commented that the chorus sang well, "with admirable volume and quality of tone, and with the precision its members have attained under the skillful direction of N. Lindsay Norden." The soloists came in for laudatory comment, and the Ledger wrote further of the chorus that "its balance was excellent and the tonal quality left little to be desired, while the dynamics were effectively rendered and the blending with the orchestra also was very beautiful."

* * *

Verdi's Un Ballo in Maschera was revived by the Puccini Grand Opera Company Saturday evening before a large audience. To quote the Ledger, "the cast was excellent, including Alessandro Bonci, still a brilliant artist with a method of voice handling and control which few singers have, as Riccardo; Alfredo Gandolfi, who has become well known in Philadelphia through his appearances with the Civic Opera Company, as Renato; and two very promising young American singers, Margherita Amilla, as Amelia, and Rosalinda Rudko, as the page Oscar."

Mr. Bonci, continued this reviewer, "scored a brilliant success" and both Miss Amilla and Miss Rudko "have beautiful voices." The other members of the cast, who were "also excellent," were Dorothy Pilzer, Ivan Steschenko, Guiseppe la Puma, Luigi Dalle Molle, and Amede Baldi. Antonio dell'Orefice "conducted admirably throughout."

* * *

The other musical events of importance were the recital given by Fritz Kreisler, which received the usual enthusiastic press plaudits attendant upon a Kreisler concert; a song recital by Tito Schipa, who was hailed by the Ledger reviewer as the "possessor of one of the most marvelous tenor voices in the world today and of a method of tone production and control equal to his vocal gifts;" Yolanda Mero's first piano recital here this season, which was lauded for the display of poetic feeling and technical excellence; and the lecture-recital given by Nadia Boulanger on modern music which was well received by an appreciative audience.

* * *

The last of the season's Monday Morning Musicales was marked by the appearance of Sophie Braslau and William Bachaus. The North American chronicler referred to Miss Braslau's "lusciously rich contralto" and called her "an artist who is most successful in creating and holding a dramatic mood."

The Record reviewer said she "proved to be one of the most vital, intense singers heard this season. Her versatility was astonishing in a voice of real contralto quality, while the warmth of her temperament made everything she did impressive and enjoyable." Mr. Muschamp thought her voice "an organ of unusual range and size."

In the North American, the commentator doubted "if there is living today a finer pianist than Bachaus" considering his "technical equipment, musicianship, and that indefinable spark that makes for greatness." According to the writer in the Record, his performance was "piano playing of phenomenal sort . . . his playing left nothing to be desired." Mr. Muschamp commended his technique but thought his rhythm "spasmodic and unelastic."

* * *

Signor Bossi, in his recital in the Wanamaker Auditorium, was assisted by fifty members of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and the Wanamaker-Bossi Chorus of nearly 200 voices. Other artists on the program were Emma Zuern, soprano; Edwin Grant Rorke, baritone; a double quartet composed of Misses Clara Nagel, Elsie Philippbear, Elizabeth Bell, and Veronica Sweigart, and Messrs. Horace Entriken, Gerald Etchells, Charles Fox, and Charles D. Long; and Dr. Mauro-Cottone, organist.

With the exception of a Bach prelude, the program consisted solely of Signor Bossi's works. The concert was commended in the press.

Photo by Mishkin

MISCHA ELMAN

Eminent Violinist, Who Is to Be Under the Direction of S. Hurok.

Two Hundred Cantors Sing

Two hundred members of the Jewish Cantors' Association of America sang to a capacity audience at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, on the evening of February 15.

MME. ETHEL PARKS

Lyric-Coloratura Soprano

MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Fleta

METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

For Their Biennial Convention

The National Federation of Music Clubs

Has Selected and Engaged

Marie Rappold

to create the leading Soprano role in Frank Patterson's Opera "The Echo" at its World Premiere, Portland, June 9, 1925.

Available for Recitals on the Way to and from the Pacific Coast.

Management: M. H. HANSON

437 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK CITY

Frances Alda

Cleveland News:

"The world loves a soprano, particularly if she be such an intelligent and fascinating artist as Madame Alda. She was in splendid voice yesterday and I believe it is not saying too much to say that she sang more beautifully than ever before in this city. Always an 'eyeful' she was up to form in that direction also, and by her group of selections the Vissi d'arte from Tosca, and One Fine Day from Madame Butterfly, she quickly established herself. The audience seemed unable to have enough of her and gave her many recalls.

Cleveland Plaindealer:

"Here is a voice of singular clarity and purity, of most attractive quality and expertly controlled. And here is style of genuine distinction."

"Frances Alda is another in the long line of notable Marguerites. Among them have been Nilsson, Eames, Calve, Sembrich, Farrar, and permit me to add, charming Maggie Teyte. Madame Alda has exquisitely molded features and no one with such lovely eyes and so pretty a mouth could be less than a satisfactory Marguerite. Not the highest range or the greatest emotional exaction could mar the graceful contour of her lips. She sang the 'King of Thule' (one of Patti's greatest numbers) with such brilliance and effect that the audience fain would have it repeated, but was denied. It takes a clever artist and a resourceful voice to give the proper contrast to the folk-ballad style of the 'King of Thule' and to the brilliant colorature 'Jewel Song' which follows it immediately. In the latter number particularly Mme. Alda's voice warmly colored and of flawless tone."

Austin (Texas) Statesman:

"Madame Alda has a sweet soprano voice that rings and echoes in the softer higher notes which she sings clearly and with almost perfect accentuation. The audience last night understood every word that came from the singer's lips, so splendid was her enunciation and unlike the majority of operatic singers that have appeared in Austin, was peculiarly sympathetic in her rendition of American and English song numbers.

"Throughout her program Madame Alda received unstinted applause from her audience which probably reached its climax when she sang the aria 'Mefistofeles,' by Boito. The singer in this aria displayed remarkable control of her voice and she introduced a trill in the number which was sung with surprising ease and with all the purity of tone preserved. To many, however, her encore, 'Un bel di vidremo,' the aria from 'Madame Butterfly,' was her best number and her wondrously sweet notes held the audience enthralled until the concluding note which was the signal for a great ovation to the singer."

Waco (Texas) Times Herald:

"Oh, divine Alda, glorious, resplendent! She sang Thursday night at the Auditorium theatre, she made us to lie down in green pastures, she led us beside the still waters, she restored our souls. Alda has a fine instrument on which to play, but it is the finish, the technical perfection, the command of the instrument, that is paramount—her pianissimo tones, her fine modulations, and a certain sureness of intention both dramatic and vocal."

Dallas (Texas) News:

"Possessed of a charming personality and a ripe and glorious voice, Mme. Alda adds to these a wealth of dramatic interpretation which makes her one of the most pleasing singers to appear in concert here in recent years. If anything her rendition of the famous operatic numbers from 'Mefistophele,' 'La Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly' were the most satisfying things on her program. Yet it was a short number, Kramer's 'Faltering Dusk,' in which Madame Alda made her greatest impression on the musically critical, for it was a regular little gem."

Boston Herald (Philip Hale):

"Is the production of agreeable tones throughout the whole range of a voice an impossibility? Madame Alda yesterday proved the contrary. Because she is content to abide by the voice that God (and her masterly training) gave her, instead of trying to force tones suitable for a dramatic soprano or a cornet-a-piston, she sang yesterday with a voice always good to hear and often of a beauty truly appealing. Exquisite taste she showed and a vocal technique equaled by few, a fine gift, and a fine accomplishment."

Boston Post:

"Mme. Alda's singing gave great pleasure. The voice is more beautiful, the tone rounder, the phrasing more thoughtful than ever."

"An unusually fine program was chosen by Frances Alda. The prima donna possesses an exceptionally fine voice and demonstrated it with the perfection of technique and intellectual breadth with which one always credits her. The exquisite trill was well in evidence, and the effortless breath control that enables such variation of the tone color and capacity of authentic quality in the middle voice."

Atlanta (Georgia) Constitution:

"Perhaps it is a venturesome thing to say that in the fourteen years of Metropolitan Opera in Atlanta no production has given its audience greater pleasure. But that is true. The performance of 'Marta' Monday night was as exquisite as anything the Metropolitan Opera Company has ever achieved.

"It makes you think of young leaves of spring and of fragrant blossoms. It was as beautiful as 'The Last Rose of Summer' when Frances Alda sang that old song in the second act. Her exquisite voice and the tenderness of the ballad went straight to the hearts of her audience. There was no question about it being sung again. The applause would be continuing until now unless the opera had been stopped so that Alda could repeat the dearly loved song.

"When she sang it again she did what her audience had longed for but scarcely expected—she sang it in English. The soft Italian words of the first rendition of the ballad had touched and delighted the hundreds that thronged the auditorium. But they lacked the familiar quality that was added when she sang in English. The old song went to the hearts of all who heard it then. It made their eyes misty. It gave them the delight that is touched with a pleasant sentimental sadness.

"Alda's voice has never seemed clearer, finer, more perfect than it was Monday night, and she never has sung an aria here that gave greater joy to her hearers than the ballad that Flotow picked up as from the roadside and pinned against the breast of his opera 'Marta,' thereby doing much to make the opera beloved through all the years to follow."

"Madame Alda was never in more splendid voice. Her technique is always flawless but last night she sang as a mocking bird sings, blithe, free, singing for the very joy of living."

Post-Standard—Syracuse:

"Seldom has a Syracuse audience had a more delightful evening of grand opera music than that offered by the Alda-Metropolitan Quartet. Mme. Alda possesses a rich lyric voice and she sings with exquisite taste. Her aria from Boito's 'Mefistofeles' was most effective, sufficiently emotional, and replete with color. She is an artist of rare personality and whether appearing in opera with all its embellishments or in recital with solo numbers, duets, trios and quartets, she maintains the same brilliancy."

Syracuse Evening Telegram:

"Madame Alda, who I am inclined to hail as the greatest soprano of her time (certainly the greatest we have heard in Syracuse in the last decade) gave the first number of part two of the evening's program. The golden mellowness of Mme. Alda's voice, and the clarity of her diction, tinkling bell-like coloring of her high notes and the flexibility of range mark this Metropolitan songbird as a peer among sopranos.

"A very polished and perfect art is hers and she left a most agreeable impression.

"Her voice has lost none of its mellowness and she exhibited her old mastery of colorature in the L'Altro Notte from Boito's 'Mefistofeles.' Mme. Alada is as great an artist as ever."

Kansas City Star:

"Frances Alda's art and personality set a departing glow on the last of this season's Fritschy concerts."

"Alda gave herself generously yesterday. Of course she gave her voice. The better fact was that she gave her brain too. She stressed interpretation with really marvelous results and without the silly affectations that pass for interpretation."

"It is the astonishing manner in which she uses her voice that gives her power. Yesterday her mezzo voice was as nearly perfect as human singing ever is, and all the technical virtues were present in a degree very little lower."

"Mme. Alda is first and foremost a great artist. Added to that she has a glorious voice and a charming personality. She distinguished herself yesterday by giving what many thought the most notable voice recital of the season."

Available in Recital and with the Alda-Metropolitan Quartette
Costume program, 2nd Act of Martha

Management: CHARLES L. WAGNER
511 Fifth Avenue, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Steinway Piano Victor Records

GIESEKING

Pianist

Deutsche Zeitung, Berlin:

"When I am looking in my notebook for evenings which I have marked especially, as they have made a deep impression on me and shown me something extraordinary, I find one mark only on three pages covered with the names of people who gave concerts—one mark among almost forty names: Gieseking!

"There are no difficulties for the marvelous technique of this man, a technique which overwhelms occasionally the audience with self-assured exactness, which reminds one of a 'Golem,' a kind of mechanism assuming human form while bending over the key-board. His phenomenal exactitude in hitting the right keys makes him the direct antipode of the divine Rubinstein, who was well known for possessing a European privilege of hitting the wrong ones. However, the somnambule-like technical precision of Gieseking would not amount to anything, did he not possess in the same degree the art of animating the tone, that is the trifold art of touch (including the mastering of the pedals), the phrasing and the sense of style. This fact only, that his inner expression shows the same inexhaustible wealth as his technique, marks Gieseking as an artist. It is his ability of interpreting the work of a master to us, as if it were just created from his innermost soul, it is his mastering of all shades of expression between sweetest sublimity and the raving of temperament, it is the fact that there is still a kind of indefinable control even in his demon-like fury while there is the warm glow of this fury reflected in the sweet tenderness of his most serene chords."

* * * *

Francfort Gazett, Frankfort on the Main:

"Gieseking is the most striking and vital performer among the younger pianists, one might almost say, he is the only one in whose playing the grand art of interpretation may be discovered. His mind is that of a musician to whom nature gave an understanding and mental predisposition for the inner life and spirit of present-day composition. But the matter of his play is not that of a didactic performer or of a too obvious interpreter. Every expression rises from the spontaneous instinct of the pianist rendered through the temperament of a virtuoso.

"Gieseking is undoubtedly a living proof—especially in comparison with most of his pianistic colleagues—that only that performing artist may find the solution of the eternally new mystery of this instrument who knows how to find this solution in the compositions of his own time."

* * * *

Dresdner Anzeiger, Dresden:

"We who were listening to Gieseking enjoyed his concert as a performance of such rare kind that everything that one may hear during an ordinary piano concert evening, even of well-known pianists, retires into the background. It is not saying too much that we felt that we were with a genius. Only through knowledge of the past are we able to explain similar effects of reproducing musicians, for instance, if we think what Liszt or Paganini may have meant to their contemporaries.

"Gieseking's real greatness is not to be found in any one-sided virtuosity but in a comprehensive understanding of modern music which finds its far-sounding revelation in its matter of playing. His greatness is to be found in the intensity of a musical feeling that makes us thrill with its almost demonic power. It is to be found in the depth of sentiment that makes him sense so wonderfully well the spirit of the composers. He always finds the way to the essential message of the composer, may he play modern music—as he prefers—or may he devote himself to the older masters.

"Gieseking lives in his play. His whole personality goes into it. Not in exterior mannerisms but in natural effort. He is convinced of what he is playing. And because he is convinced he can also convince his audience."

* * * *

Fremdenblatt, Hamburg:

"Gieseking is a creative artist while playing the piano. His play is production, expression of the original—expressionism itself. Gieseking is one who justifies this much-abused word because he has been chosen through talent and destiny to this manner of playing, through an inner necessity and not on account of the fads and fashions of the day. He is one of those few who depend in their manner of playing on the development of the pianistic style in general, a style which as we see it now—renews our ideas of form and theme completely, starting from the great inheritance of Liszt.

"His interpretation of Bach contrasted with the many hammering beginnings of other piano programs with Bach compositions one could gauge at its best the great art of Gieseking. Reverence is its law."

* * * *

Zuercher Post, Zurich:

"The most sensational event during the last week of concerts was the young pianist Gieseking, who, though a German, initiated us into the mysteries of modern French piano music as no one else did ever before. Such technique, such talent disarms all criticism and the critic could not do anything better in this case but to enjoy admiringly together with the audience. We know, of course, of other masters of the piano, who interpret a composition with the same devotion and live through it while reproducing it. But no one else seems to have succeeded in reaching such surprising individuality and coloring of tone as Gieseking.

"In one word it was an evening the success of which was simply sensational!"

* * * *

Bere Tidende, Copenhagen:

"We know that it is Gieseking's special art, gifted as he is with a rich imagination, with an exquisite technique, and especially with an almost unique mastery of the tonal possibilities of the piano, to conjure up and render the characteristics and the beauties in the newest and most modernistic piano music. As he plays it, it should on the whole always be played. He makes the improbable reasonable, the impossible fantastic and ecstatically beautiful."

* * * *

Kopenhagener Dagblad:

"The pianist Gieseking is such a prominent and unique pianist that one receives impressions from his playing which one does not forget. His technique is above criticism and one is more or less hypnotized when he breathes forth the most delicate tone-webs from the instrument. His public gave vent, time and again to its enchantment by intensive acclaim."

* * * *

Kopenhavn:

"It is beyond all doubt that Gieseking belongs to the very great names of piano artists. He masters the piano with the sovereignty necessary in order to noticeably live among the host of prominent virtuosos."

* * * *

Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant:

"Worthy of note among the younger pianists is Gieseking. His technique is beyond description: he is at the same time an artist. He does not parade his talent, as being all that he knows, but uses it in the service of art. His Bach-playing was a masterpiece. He showed in masterful manner the management of technical strength and colorature that could not be surpassed."

* * * *

De Maasbode:

"A genius, a phenomenon. Even in Bach the pianist revealed immediately that he was a poet as well as an artist on the piano."

* * * *

Dagblad Van Rotterdam:

"Gieseking is a virtuoso and a poet on the piano. Gieseking aroused a tender and passionate feeling through his poetical tone. He is a wonderful artist."

* * * *

Het Vaderlandy:

"A poet and unsurpassed performer. His technique at the same time was so wonderful that it touched the impossible. His playing revealed constant ecstasy. His beautiful style united with interchangeable and momentary inspiration. A king, an emperor of technique, a pianist who is exceptionally high-strung in harmonic and poetic feeling. He belongs to the greatest.

"The appearance of Gieseking with Bruno Walter was the greatest sensation of the subscription concerts."

* * * *

Il Popolo, Rome:

"Gieseking is without doubt among the very first pianists of our time and possesses what is rarely found, qualities so well balanced: Strength, clarity, sentiment, legato and delicacy."

* * * *

Berliner Zeitung Am Mittag:

"Gieseking the most modern virtuoso of all of them. Full of highest sophistication in coloring and shading! An artist of magnetic attraction. One who discovers new and unsuspected resources in the piano."

* * * *

Leipzig:

"He is today already a competitor for the fame of Busoni, Rosenthal, and Godowski of being called the greatest technician of the piano in our time. Music in his gigantically great technique, which reached the utmost of the possible in polish, splendor, precision, clearance and transparency. The spirit, the heart, the temperament of music."—Ernest Smigleski.

Available January, February, March, 1926

Management: CHARLES L. WAGNER

511 Fifth Avenue, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

BALDWIN PIANO USED

. . . HEAR . . .

Toti dal Monte

and marvel at the Survival of the Flutist

"OLD OPERA RENEWED; NEW SINGER TESTED"

"Rigoletto," and Miss Dal Monte

"Performance That Set Spark to Verdi's Music—The Drama of It Once More—Gilda Plus Voice, Intelligence, Even Imagination."

"By common consent Gilda is a thankless part. Custom ordains it for ornate sopranos. 'Caro Nome' usually bounds it; yet by choice within it, Miss Toti Dal Monte seemed that rarest of operatic beings—a florid singer with intelligence and sensibility for music and a modicum of imagination with operatic character. In itself, through the lower and the middle ranges, her voice is in the bloom of young prime. It is velvet-like and lustrous, suave and sensuous. In semi-subdued and flowing measures, the softness and the brightness of texture caress the ear; while the clear glows stir a gentle emotion. Once and again, comes even that child-like quality which in Mme. Tetrazzini caught many a fancy. Miss Dal Monte turns phrases, curves, melody, shades pace, accent, progress, suggestion, as a perceiving, susceptible, well-schooled singer. Ascending, her tones lose suavity and body, appreciably sharpening. Less by rote and agility than with eager feeling, and delicate aptitude, she gains the ornaments of song. They ripple out of the flowing measures rather than glint upon them."

"Clearly Miss dal Monte is no singer merely displayful. Her voice of song is also the voice of Gilda, dreaming maiden-like in the solitude of Rigoletto's house, stirring to young love come covertly wooing, gentle to the Father whose affection nearly floods her. The pensive note haunts Verdi's music for Rigoletto's daughter. Before he bends 'Caro Nome' to operatic necessity (as it went in the Italy of the fifties) he writes in musing melody. Plaintively Gilda recounts a fate—and regrets a lover—though Rigoletto cry for the vengeance of desolation. Wistfully as well as in grace and glow went Miss dal Monte's tones through Gilda's duets with her father and her lover. Into the music she infused also character. The plaintive notes deepened in the measures of the third act; threaded through Rigoletto's darker song; shone silvery against it. Incident, not peak, was 'Caro Nome' in this wrought and rounded course."

"These are the works of a singer of musical perception, intelligence, not to say imagination. Nor is Miss dal Monte deficient in the outward and visible signs of operatic characterization. The eye soon forgets a presence that too much recalls the diminutive figures within Velasquez's pictures. Her carriage is easy and free; her eyes and countenance never quite expressionless. If she uses the conventional gestures, she finds also a gesture of her own, as when a wandering hand curves to the contours of 'Caro Nome,' recalling out of the air the dear lineaments, upon it retracing them. Gilda, and her music are not exactly operatic revelation; but they do suggest in Miss dal Monte an unusual and an individualized singer."

H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.

"She is a magnificent singer"

Frances Alda.

"You brought me a singer who is a great musician, so it's an honor to conduct 'Lucia.' "

Giorgio Polacco, Musical Director and Conductor, Chicago Opera Company.

"She is that rare phenomenon, an artistically musical colorature."

J. H. Thuman, Cincinnati.

"She was glorious; an artistic triumph; unbounded enthusiams."

Marion deForest, Buffalo.

"Dal Monte combines, with a voice of rare beauty, supreme artistry and perfect skill. Her singing of 'Lucia' was one of those rare occasions when realization surpasses anticipation, which latter, because of the superlative European notices, was quite keen."

Frederick R. Huber, Municipal Director of Music, Baltimore.

"I heard Toti dal Monte in both opera and concert; you have another trump card. With the passing of Melba, Sembrich and Tetrazzini, the slim group of worthwhile coloraturas left can certainly stand this latest winner. Forward contracts."

James E. Furlong, Concert Manager, Eastman Theatre, Rochester.

"Toti Dal Monte perfection of coloratura." — Glen Dillard Gunn, Chicago Herald & Examiner.

"Toti dal Monte is the perfect coloratura of this generation.

"Italy has long since so proclaimed her, and though our taste does not always coincide with that of the Latin music lover, there seems in this instance no cause for disagreement. For the voice has the luscious warmth of the true lyric soprano plus the exhilarating and exciting agility of the coloratura. Mme. Dal Monte has, however, a great deal more than exceptional beauty of voice and phenomenal technical equipment. She is an artist of exquisite taste. She phrases like a great violinist. She can rival either flute or clarinet in liquid or luminous cascades of tone. She has greater capacity to endow the role of Donizetti's heroine with all the attributes of musical intelligence than any Lucia I have encountered in a rather long experience as a professional operagoer. She is, in fact, the most convincing reason for the performance of this opera that has ever been put forward."

AVAILABLE NOVEMBER 15, 1925, TO JUNE 1, 1926

Management: CHARLES L. WAGNER

511 Fifth Avenue, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Stinert Piano Victor Records

The De Reszke Singers

HARDESTY JOHNSON, Tenor — ERWYN MUTCH, Baritone
FLOYD TOWNSLEY, Tenor — SIGURD NELSON, Basso
with
MILDRED DILLING, Harpist

Milwaukee, Wis.

(First Concert in U. S.)

"The DeRESZKE SINGERS SPARKLE IN U. S. PREMIERE."

"It is difficult to write except in superlatives of the work of these four singers, whose program comprised the most difficult and musical of compositions, and which was presented in a fashion so impeccable as not to have been equaled by any Male Quartet within the memory of most of us. What the Flonzaley is to the String section, Mayer and Patteson are to the Piano ensemble, The DeReszke Singers are to the World of Song. Individually their voices are of superior quality and training, and when to these assets were added musical understanding and a training in ensemble singing, it was easy to see why the Quartet at present is without a peer."

Catherine Mead, Milwaukee Sentinel.

* * * *

Albany, N. Y.

"DeRESZKE SINGERS MADE A DECIDED HIT."

"Chancellors Hall, scene of many of the City's most impressive musical events, never before vibrated to such perfect rhythm and such great musicianship as last night when The DeReszke Singers sang in concert. They presented the most beautiful singing by man banded together ever heard here. The terrific climaxes, wonderful singing of half voice, never one voice being heard above the other, proves that these men have worked hard and long, to have perfected a beautiful ensemble."

The Times Union.

* * * *

Buffalo, N. Y.

"DeRESZKE SINGERS OFFER A SELECT PROGRAM."

"The combination of four exceptionally fine male voices, a program as choice as it was novel, and a performance of superb finish, made the concert of The DeReszke Singers one of the outstanding artistic events of the musical season. They sing with a freshness and spontaneity altogether delightful, sing for the very joy of singing, and with a lively devotion to their art. Not in one instance did they fail to communicate their spirit and message to the hearts of their listeners."

The Buffalo News.

* * * *

"Dallas rarely has so delightful an evening of music as The DeReszke Singers gave the large audience at the City Temple. The four young men possess beautiful voices, beautifully trained, but the interesting and unique part of their performance is that they have been willing to, and have succeeded in, subordinating their individual voices so that their ensemble work has taken on an artistic unity that makes their singing something more than four good voices blended for the moment in chorus. They have learned singing which no one of them alone can possess. Hearing them, one naturally turns to the Flonzaley's or the Kneisel's for a comparison. These young singers gave their concert a brilliance which musical evenings too often lack. Without sacrifice or poise or dignity they projected to the audience a feeling of warmth and personality to which it responded heartily."

Dallas Times Herald.

* * * *

New York City, N. Y.

"The DeReszke Singers, Hardesty Johnson and Floyd Townsley, tenors Erwyn Mutch, barytone, and Sigurd Nelson, basso, Americans who have coached with Jean deReszke and use the name with his authorization, divided last night's program with Mildred Dilling, harpist.

"They sang a group mainly of early numbers, Herbert Hughes's clever 'Studies in Imitation,' Negro Spirituals arranged by Harry T. Burleigh, who was present, and modern Songs, plus many encores.

"This male quartet is a strong-voiced, thoroughly unified ensemble, and gave a performance that was both vigorous and artistic, with a pleasing, well-balanced quality of tone and marked expressive ability. Miss Dilling, a skillful harpist, played two groups of solos."

Herald-Tribune.

* * * *

"After two successful seasons in England the DeReszke Singers on their first American tour gave their only New York concert last evening. There are four singers, pupils of Jean deReszke, all Americans—Hardesty Johnson, Floyd Townsley, Erwyn Mutch and Sigurd Nelson—and they make an unusual ensemble.

"The voices taken singly are good, grouped together they command a great variety of tone color, while at the same time effectively blending with each other. Unaccompanied, they sang a French chanson of the Seventeenth Century and an old English Madrigal by John Bennett (1614) which won them an encore. Some humorous and delightful 'Studies' by Herbert Hughes introduced imitations of great composers, set to the words of nursery themes. The Quartet, besides, gave some Negro Spirituals by H. T. Burleigh and several mixed quartets.

"Miss Dilling, a talented young harpist, played two groups with fine technic and was recalled each time."

New York Times.

* * * *

"The DeReszke Singers, four American artists who have sung much on the continent and in London, gave their first New York concert here last night. The choir is composed of Hardesty Johnson and Floyd Townsley, tenors; Erwyn Mutch, barytone, and Sigurd Nelson, basso. The singers were assisted last night by Mildred Dilling, harpist.

"The program was of much interest, and included Old English Madrigals, Negro Spirituals, and Mendelssohn's 'On Wings of Song' with harp, and Cyril Scott's 'The Rat Catcher' with flute. Among the many lyrics either written or arranged for the choir there was a set of songs new here, by Herbert Hughes, entitled 'Studies in Imitation.' These songs included 'There Was an Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe,' after Brahms, and 'Doctor Foster,' after Handel. They contained each, here and there, some phrase or characteristic of style belonging to the special composer as mentioned.

"The Singers gave evidence in their delivery of the fine training of Jean deReszke. Their voices had much color and they sang with fine nuance, clear diction and spirit. As a cappella singers, their pitch was excellent. Miss Dilling's solos included Bach's 'Bourree,' and Debussy's 'Claire de Lune.' The concert was enthusiastically received."

New York Sun.

Management: CHARLES L. WAGNER

511 Fifth Avenue, New York

Koussevitzky Gives French Works

Thomas Is Soloist at Monday Concert; People's Symphony Assisted by Alice Stevens.

Boston, Feb. 16.—A program devoted to modern French composers was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday. Included were Rabaud's La Procession Nocturne, D'Indy's Symphony in B flat major, Roussel's Pour une Fete de Printemps and Dukas' La Peri.

The Roussel work was given its first Boston hearing. According to Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor, "Its composer is a colorist, not particularly as an orchestral writer, but more often as a harmonist." Warren Storey Smith, writing in the Post, spoke of the Frenchman as a highly individualistic composer, and added that "Roussel's forthright, slightly acid music seemed particularly refreshing and invigorating."

H. T. Parker (Transcript) wrote that "the motifs and the reiterated figures hardly engross the ear; but Mr. Roussel leads them into measures that move with rhythmic animation through shadowy harmonies or vigorous progressions. . . . There is mood as well, from a quickening animation to a gentle, introspective musing." The Globe reviewer considered the work "muddled and enfeebled Stravinsky," but found the concert "an illuminating illustration of the extent to which contemporary French music is not French so much as cosmopolitan."

Mr. Mason further wrote that "Mr. Koussevitzky has an evident sympathy for and clear understanding of music of this kind." On the other hand, the Globe writer suggested that a Russian was not too well-suited to interpreting this type of French work.

* * *

At the third Monday concert of the orchestra, Mr. Koussevitzky conducted Glinka's Overture to Russian and Ludmilla, Stravinsky's Fire-bird Suite, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. John Charles Thomas, as soloist, sang Verdi's aria, Eri tu, from The Masked Ball, and Massenet's Vision fugitive, from Herodiade.

The Herald chronicler felt that Mr. Thomas sang the two airs "very well, with fine voice, a smooth legato, and by no means without feeling" albeit his voice lacked a certain "fineness of style" demanded by the songs. The Transcript writer found his style operatic, and added that he "lacks neither ability nor assurance. More, he has a voice that is resonant and well placed; that echoes the virility of the man." In the Monitor mention was made of his "Italianate style."

* * *

Ernest Schelling, conducting an orchestra composed of members of the Boston Symphony, gave the third of his series of children's concerts. He continued his exposition of the wood-wind section of the orchestra with the following soloists illustrating his talk: Mr. Holy, harpist; Mr. Sand, clarinetist, and Mr. Laus as the bassoon player.

* * *

The fourteenth concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Wallace Goodrich, dean of the New England Conservatory. His program included Saint-Saens' Overture to La Princess Jaune; the Prelude to Tristan and Isolde; and Goldmark's Rustic Wedding Symphony. The soloist was Alice Huston Stevens, who took the place of Germaine Schnitzer, who was ill.

Mr. Mason thought Mrs. Stevens sang the Mascagni air "with musical perception and understanding of its dramatic possibilities. Her voice is colorful and of tonal beauty, her musicianship of superior quality." According to the Globe she sang "with marked volume of tone and a keen sense of dramatic values." Mrs. Stevens received commendation in other papers.

In the Herald, Mr. Goodrich was referred to as "an authoritative, yet sensitive conductor." The Globe considered him "a sensitive, finely cultivated musician with no craving to startle or thrill his hearers. . . . He has competent control of the orchestra. The writer in the Transcript had not this year heard the orchestra play with "such attention to important detail, such delicacy and refinement." According to Mr. Mason, Mr. Goodrich's interpretations "are distinguished for their clarity and good taste."

Mme. Rethberg in Third Africana

Elisabeth Rethberg sang the part of Selika in the third Metropolitan Africana on the evening of February 12. "Her voice was at its richest and best and therefore a constant joy to the ears," wrote the reviewer of the World, while the Telegram-Mail report agreed as to the "beauty of her voice."

"She sang with her usual pleasing clarity of tone," it was reported in the Herald Tribune. The Sun reviewer commented that Mme. Rethberg's voice was in excellent condition. The remainder of the cast was familiar. "Beautifully given" was Ernest Newman's summary of the performance in the Post.

Poliakin Heard in Third Program

Miron Poliakin, violinist, was heard in the third of his five scheduled recitals in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall on the afternoon of February 14. He was accompanied by Emanuel Bay in a program of Brahms, Lalo, Beethoven, Mozart, and Sarasate. "Thorough technical competence and a tone of good size and quality" characterized Mr. Poliakin's playing, said the Herald Tribune chronicler.

Photo by Underwood

CLARENCE WHITEHILL

Rejoined the Metropolitan Opera Company Last Week in His Moving Interpretation of Wotan in Die Walkuere.

Cortot Gives Peoria Recital

Peoria, Feb. 13.—Alfred Cortot, under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club, gave a piano recital in Shrine Temple last evening before an enthusiastic audience. According to the Transcript, "Mr. Cortot proved himself to be a player artistic, tasteful and discriminating, whose work possesses power and beauty."

Galli-Curci in Opera Farewell

Although she was indisposed, Amelita Galli-Curci insisted on singing as scheduled in her final appearance of the season at the Metropolitan in a special Tuesday evening performance last week. The opera was Lucia, with a familiar cast and with Mr. Papi conducting.

Sing First Traviata At the Metropolitan

Serafin Conducts, and Mme. Galli-Curci, Lauri-Volpi, and de Luca Take Part.

In the cast of the first La Traviata presented by the Metropolitan Opera Company this season on February 13 were Amelita Galli-Curci, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi, Giuseppe de Luca, Mmes. Egener and Anthony, and Messrs. Bada, Picco, d'Angelo, and Ananian. Tullio Serafin conducted.

According to the Times, "Galli-Curci, golden-hooped, set the time of the action again in the crinoline days, a fashion congenial to her style of quaint charm, as the delicacy and pathos of parts of the music are to her voice." The Herald Tribune writer thought "her performance varied in merit, well sung in places, but taking an excursion from the pitch in others, while her interpretation of the role had its appeal." Neither the World nor Sun chroniclers found her in her best voice, although the latter said "there were pages, however, in which her voice and fluent style were most pleasing."

This writer thought Mr. Lauri-Volpi also occasionally deviated from the pitch. According to the World, his voice "was true and fluent, though veiled in the lassitude which affected the entire performance." To quote the Herald Tribune, Mr. Lauri-Volpi "sang with considerable power, with a little tightness in top notes, but less than before."

Mr. De Luca, in the words of this writer, was a "thoroughly satisfactory" Germont. According to the Sun, he has his "usual success" with the part. The World reviewer spoke of his "masterly interpretation," and he was commended by the Times reviewer also.

FORREST
LAMONT
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

RICHARD HAGEMAN
STUDIOS
257 WEST 86th STREET
NEW YORK CITY

CONDUCTOR
Metropolitan Opera Co. for Thirteen Seasons; Ravinia Park Opera Co.; Chicago Civic Opera Co.; Fairmount Park Symphony Orchestra of Philadelphia.
VOCAL COACH COMPOSER ACCOMPANIST

Among the prominent artists, who are coaching or who have coached or with whom Mr. Hageman has enjoyed the reputation of being associated as accompanist, are: Frances Alda, Lucrezia Bori, Sophie Braslau, Inez Barbour, Anna Case, Julia Claussen, Emmy Destinn, Claire Dux, Olive Fremstad, Anna Fitziu, Geraldine Farrar, Lucy Gates, Alice Gentle, Thelma Given, Jeanne Gordon, Mabel Garrison, Louise Homer, Frieda Hempel, Florence Hinkle, Marie Ivogun, Margaret Matzenauer, Edith Mason, Nellie Melba, Florence Macbeth, Ruth Miller, Greta Masson, Claudia Muzio, Luella Meluis, Marie Moressey, Nina Morgana, Haru Onuki, Margaret Ober, Irene Pavloska, Rosa Raisa, Ann Roselle, Marie Rappold, Leonora Sparkes, Marie Sundelius, Renee Thornton, Marcia VanDresser, Marie Zendt, Paul Althouse, Pasquale Amato, Luca Botta, Alessandro Bonci, Pablo Casals, Guilio Crimi, Rafaelo Diaz, Mischa Elman, William Wade Hinshaw, Orville Harrold, Herman Jadlowker, Jan Kubelik, Fritz Kreisler, Morgan Kingston, Riccardo Martin, Jose Mardones, Giovanni Martinelli, Basil Ruysdael, Joseph Schwarz, Antonio Scotti, Albert Spalding, Johannes Sembach, Carlos Sedano, Reinald Werrenrath, Efrem Zimbalist, Renato Zanelli, etc.

Vocal and Dramatic Preparation for Concert, Opera, Oratorio
Instruction in Orchestral Conducting
A Limited Number of Pupils Accepted in the Art of Accompanying

FOR LESSONS AND APPOINTMENTS ADDRESS
MISS M. MYERS, SEC'Y. TELEPHONE 5627 SCHUYLER

Sensational in Opera Triumphant in Concert
Jeritza
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
Sole management Metropolitan Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall New York City
Knabe Piano
Victor Records

On The Music Highway

MILTON ABORN is about to reorganize the Aborn English Grand Opera Company for a spring season in some of the larger cities. He will give the standard repertoire with new translations in English made by the late St. John Brenon. Carmen, Lucia, Mignon, and Rigoletto, also the Tales of Hoffman with a new text by Charles Henry Meltzer, will be sung. The season will start Easter week.

Amy Ellerman has been re-engaged for her fourth consecutive year as contralto soloist at the First Presbyterian Church, New York. She will be one of the soloists in the rendition of Verdi's Requiem in Brooklyn on March 15, and on April 25 will be soloist of the symphony concert at the Ithaca Festival.

Abby Morrison, soprano, recently left for Palm Beach, where she will be heard in concert.

An organ recital was given recently by Henry F. Seibert at Town Hall, New York. Mr. Seibert is organist of Holy Trinity Lutheran Church.

From January to April, the San Francisco Chamber Music Society is giving fourteen San Francisco concerts, three in Los Angeles, four in Oakland, two in San Rafael, three in Santa Barbara, and two in Palo Alto, besides twenty-one other appearances in Western cities.

At the Organists' Open Meeting in Town Hall, New York, on March 19, Marjorie Meyer, soprano, will sing Haubiel's Requiescat. Miss Meyer will also appear at the MacDowell benefit on April 14. Both of these concerts are under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club.

A farewell New York concert will be given by Myra Hess at Aeolian Hall on April 1. Miss Hess will return from her Western concert tour late in March for her Boston concert on April 4.

Walter Mills, baritone, is giving a song recital tonight in the Rose Room of the Hotel Plaza, New York City.

Starting her Southern tour at Oxford, N. C., on March 4, Dicie Howell will also make appearances in Sumpter, S. C., and Gastonia, N. C.

The Philadelphia offices of Concert Management Arthur Judson are now situated in the Packard Building. Previously Concert Management Arthur Judson had had quarters in the Pennsylvania Building in Philadelphia.

The Stringwood Ensemble, a new chamber music organization making its New York debut at Aeolian Hall on March 2, will play Stravinsky's L'Histoire d'un Soldat.

Mrs. James Sibley Watson of New York City will lend her music room for a recital tonight of violin music by Renee Chemet, who will be assisted by Arthur Loesser, pianist. The event will be in the nature of a benefit for the Gramercy Music School Settlement.

George Perkins Raymond, American tenor, has been engaged to appear at a symphony concert in Plainfield on March 9 and for a recital in Garden City on April 4.

Muri Silba, pianist, has just returned from a tour on the Pacific Coast, where, among other engagements, she played three times the Chopin Concerto in E minor with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. She will give a recital in Town Hall, New York, on Sunday afternoon, March 22.

Ulysses Lappas, Greek tenor, will sing on March 4 at the Commodore Hotel, New York, and will leave immediately thereafter for Havana, where he will appear in two concerts.

Eduard Zathurezky, Czech violinist, will make his first American appearance with orchestra at the special concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Thursday and Friday.

John Charles Thomas will return North in the early part of April. He has a number of concerts booked in and around New York. He will sail for Europe in May to commence rehearsals for appearances as leading baritone at the Theatre de la Monnaie, Brussels, Belgium, beginning August 1.

Martha Phillips, formerly a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be heard in recital at Aeolian Hall tonight, with Giuseppe Bamboschek at the piano. Miss Phillips will sing songs by Brahms, a group of songs in Swedish, a Gretry aria, and a modern French group. The latter will be with harp accompaniment by Marie Miller.

The Little Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Georges Barrere, has been engaged for a series of three concerts at the Scarboro (N. Y.) High School to be given on Friday afternoons, February 27, March 13 and 27.

The eighth and final Biltmore Musicale was held in the ballroom of the Hotel Biltmore, New York, Friday morning with a program provided by Anna Fitziu, soprano, Colin O'More, tenor, and Raoul Vidas, violinist.

Two recent concerts in Marion, Ohio, were those given by Efrem Zimbalist, violinist, and Yolanda Mero, pianist. Mr. Zimbalist's program included works by Handel, Hubay, Zimbalist, Grainger, Kreisler, and Bizet-Sarasate. Emanuel Bay was at the piano. Mme. Mero played Mendelssohn, Brahms, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Debussy, Merkler, and Liszt.

On Saturday evening in Carnegie Hall, Boris Levenson, pianist and composer, will give his only New York concert of the season. Mr. Levenson will be assisted by other prominent artists.

Marguerite Ringo, American soprano, who has appeared with a number of orchestras and at festivals throughout the country, will be in the future under the exclusive management of the Concert Guild, William C. Gassner.

Having completed a series of engagements with the Federated Clubs down the Atlantic Coast, Clarence Gustlin, pianist-lecturer, is at present in Florida.

Helen Stanley, who sang recently the part of Fiora in L'Amore dei Tre Re with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, will be heard with the same company Thursday, when she sings the part of Mme. Butterfly.

On the following day Mme. Stanley is appearing in Norwich, Conn., in the Grand Opera Trio, of which Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton are tenor and bass, respectively.

Edwin Hughes, American pianist, appeared at the Hotel Ambassador in New York on an all-American program under the auspices of the New York Matinee Musicale yesterday.

Florence Easton will sing at the concert to be given by the Haarlem Philharmonic Society at the Waldorf Astoria Grand Ballroom on April 16. This will be the first New York appearance by the soprano since the close of her season at the Metropolitan, February 3.

Arrangements have also just been made for her appearance as soloist at the Westchester Choral Society Music Festival on May 16.

Reinald Werrenrath returned to New York from a tour of the South and Middle West to give his second New York recital yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The American baritone included on his program a group of Danish songs, a group of modern German songs, a group of sea songs and a group of recent English and American songs.

John Barclay will be heard in Cambridge, Mass., tomorrow and in Princeton, N. J., Friday. These appearances are with Arthur Whiting.

His season with the Metropolitan Opera Company having closed yesterday, Mario Chamlee, American tenor, will start his concert tour on March 1. He will be busy with concerts on tour until his appearance at the Evanston Music Festival on May 27.

Maria Ivogun is now touring on the Pacific Coast, but will soon be on her way back to New York for her only New York recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 7. This will be the ninth concert of the Wolfsohn subscription series, the tenth and final concert coming on March 28, when Mr. Josef Hofmann gives his second and last New York recital of the season.

Two early March engagements of Sophie Braslau are in Chicago on the first of the month, and in Des Moines on the fourth.

Concert Direction Annie Friedberg has announced that Josephine Forsyth will hereafter be under that management exclusively. Miss Forsyth is known for her programs called Unique Creations of Song and Poetry, of which she has composed both the music and verses, and which are given in costume accompanied by the harp and piano.

Another announcement from this same office is that Professor Donald Tovey, of Edinburgh University, will make an American tour under Miss Friedberg's management. Professor Tovey, known as composer, pianist, conductor, and lecturer, will make his first concert appearance in New York early next season at Aeolian Hall.

The soloist at the Community Musical Vesper Service of the Glen Ridge Congregational Church on February 1 was Caroline Neidhardt, violoncellist. The program, in which the church quartet and choir participated, was devoted entirely to Mendelssohn's music. Grace Bender was at the piano.

On March 1 there will be a program of ancient spiritual folk songs of many lands, and ancient music written for the harpsichord will be played by Frances Pelton Jones. The concerts are under the direction of Fay Simmons Davis, organist.

Frederick Millar, British basso, who made his debut in the Handel and Haydn Society's presentation of The Messiah in Boston on December 21 and 22, and who was afterward re-engaged for next season, followed this success with another engagement in that city. He sang there with the People's Choral Union in The Stabat Mater on January 25.

For the fifth free concert of the Sunday Symphonic Society, held in the Criterion Theatre, Sunday, February 15, Josiah Zuro, conductor, secured the services of Bernhard Steinberg, baritone and music critic, who sang Thus Saith the Lord from Handel's Messiah.

A feature of the concert was the performance of an orchestral suite by Frederick Stahlberg who composed the Musette of this work especially for Mr. Zuro's American Composers' contest. The three other parts of the suite, Lento, Menuet and Finale, were played by the Philharmonic Society, with Mr. Stahlberg directing his composition. It is his thirty-third opus.

George Copeland, concert pianist, who has not been heard in New York for several years, has recently returned from Europe and has signed a contract with The Actors' Theatre to assist with the production of L'Enfant Prodigue.

At the fourth concert of the Josef Adler Musicales on Friday, in New York, Clarence and Josef Adler will give a program of music for two pianos. The final program of the series will take place on March 24 with Kathryn Meisle, contralto, and Vladimir Dubinsky, cellist.

Mrs. George Lee Bready is giving a lecture-recital at the Ampico Studios, New York, on Wagner's Das Rheingold this evening. Mrs. Bready will play the music of the opera on the piano, and give the details of the story.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

WINIFRED BYRD
America's Pianist
Management: Marie Gouled
25 West 42d St., New York

BONCI
VOCAL STUDIO
For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.
Knabe Piano

Dohnanyi Leads and Plays His Own Works

State Symphony Devotes Whole Program to Hungarian Pianist, Composer and Conductor.

Ernst von Dohnanyi appeared as composer, conductor, and pianist at the concert given by the State Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on February 17. Two of the works on the all-Dohnanyi program, the Festival Overture and Ruralia Hungarica, were heard in America for the first time. The other numbers were the Suite, Op. 19, and his Variations on a Nursery Song, in which he appeared as piano soloist with Ignatz Waghalter leading the orchestra.

Writing of the Overture, Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) stated that it "is a stunning score—engrossing in substance, admirably made, brilliantly effective" and that Mr. Dohnanyi "has achieved a brilliantly sonorous and stirring piece. . . . It is thrilling; it has superb moments." The other novelty Mr. Gilman found "a delightful and ingenious treatment of old Hungarian folktunes."

Olin Downes of the Times found the Overture "sonorous and imposing" and the Suite "always musicianly in the writing, often full of charm and in places reflecting the influence of Hungarian music." The former, according to the Post reviewer, is "a rousing but somewhat bombastic piece for double orchestra with an added brass section;" and the latter, native material used "freely and effectively.'

In the opinion of Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, the Festival Overture is "bright, beautifully written, and effective" and the Ruralia Hungarica has a "poetic fourth movement, but otherwise has much that is noisily trite." All of his work, according to Mr. Peyser, is written with "adroitness, aptitude and facile fluency."

The Sun writer felt that both works contained much beauty and would offer welcome relief on hackneyed orchestral programs. The reviewer in the World found "smooth strands of rich and sweeping melody" in the Overture, and national color, yet "the international character of all art" in the other composition.

Mr. Gilman thought Mr. Dohnanyi more than a good conductor; "he was assured, commanding, magnetic; a crafty builder of climaxes, with a vivid sense of rhythm and dynamics; a sense, too, of nuance and color." According to Mr. Peyser, his direction was "firm, confident and thoroughly resourceful," and his piano playing "a feat of dexterous and legitimate virtuosity." To quote Mr. Downes, he "distinguished himself" as a pianist, and, as conductor, "got more from his orchestra than its previous leaders." The Sun considered that he "achieved much success with the orchestra" and "gave a brilliant performance of the piano part." Both the World and Post commended him in both roles, and the former added that Mr. Waghalter and the orchestra "gave a sympathetic accompaniment." At its Sunday matinee concert, the orchestra, under Mr. Waghalter, played Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, Brahms' C minor Symphony and, with Percy Grainger as soloist, Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations.

Photo by Mishkin

MISS MARJORIE MEYER

Tschaikowsky Operetta Opens

Natja, an operetta in three acts, with music adapted from the compositions of Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky by Karl Hajos, opened at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, on the evening of February 16. The reviewers, among whom was Deems Taylor, music chronicler of the World, were quite unanimous in praising the cleverness of Mr. Hajos in his work of adaptation.

Hutcheson Ends Historic Series

Ernest Hutcheson reached the end of his historical series of seven piano recitals with his concert in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the afternoon of February 14. The program was composed of works of recent composers, Ravel, Faure, Goossens, Medtner, Debussy, Ganz, Grainger, Ireland, Scott, Alkan, Franck, and Scriabine being included.

Three Violinists in One Concert

Three young violinists, Lilly Kass, Murray Feldman, and Ben Levitsky, appeared in a joint recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of February 15. They were accompanied by Rex Tillson.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

TO the ranks of able and successful young American artists who have received their entire musical education in this country was added another recruit when Marjorie Meyer, soprano, made her concert debut last spring in Aeolian Hall.

Miss Meyer is not only an earnest and capable young singer, but a well trained musician as well. When she was only seven years old, she commenced taking piano lessons with Paolo Gallico, with whom she studied for six years. Under the tutelage of Marie Miller, she also learned to play the harp. With this solid musical foundation, Miss Meyer started her vocal studies with Joseph Pizzarello, at the same time coaching with Elizabeth Schaup. More recently she has studied with Nicola Zan and coached with Frederic Persson, who now serves as her accompanist at public recitals.

In speaking with Miss Meyer, one is particularly impressed with her intense, withal modest, absorption in her work. Her sincerity was apparent as she spoke of the inadvisability of a young artist, starting out on her career, to think of nothing else but material success.

"Success is fickle," she observed. "It can overtake you or you can overtake it—or you can both miss one another. In the business world, the pursuit of success seems to be the most usual and logical course, and it is by no means inapplicable in the world of art. But, it seems to me that an artist who chases success just for its own sake, may find herself never attaining it. She is apt to become too intent on this one phase of her work, and thus lose her sense of proportion."

Miss Meyer is especially interested in the making of programs for her concerts. She told of the care with which she attempts to make selections that will balance artistically.

"I have tried to maintain in my programs a balance between the moderns and the older composers," continued Miss Meyer. "Beauty properly understood is not a thing merely of time or period. The composers of the last century were not necessarily better than those of today, and many were not so good." Her dark eyes were smiling.

"It seems to me very natural that modern audiences respond more readily to contemporary composers who write of things they understand in the modern idiom. When I started giving recitals, I didn't know how such composers as Goossens, Berg, Schoenberg, Bliss, and Milhaud would appeal to my audiences. They like them, and they seem to realize that it is not wise to disregard the man at our elbow and to look for beauty only in the graveyard!" K. K.

American Orchestra Heard

Under the auspices of the People's Institute at Cooper Union, New York, the American Orchestral Society gave its second concert of the season on February 15. Chalmers Clifton conducted a program consisting of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, with Ruth Kemper as soloist, and Borodine's Dances from Prince Igor.

FRANCES NASH

"A splendid pianist * * * recalled many times. Understands the true meaning of Chopin."
—New York Telegraph, Feb. 2nd, '25

"Showing the increased temperament and expressive capacity displayed in her November recital * * * audience of ample size."
—New York Tribune, Feb. 2nd, '25

"A well-conditioned, thinking pianist, to whom her task always seems a lovely art mission. Sonorously fine * * * tremendously earnest."
—New York American, Feb. 2nd, '25

"Plenty of mastery of the instrument's lights and shades and an abiding enthusiasm for the composer. * * * came off victorious."
—Christian Science Monitor, Feb. 4th, '25

Direction of
EVELYN HOPPER
Aeolian Hall, New York

CHICKERING PIANO AMPICO RECORDS

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer—Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

Pianists Praised in Chicago

Maria Carreras and Levitzki Among Recitalists; Zathurezky Makes Debut; Mme. Ivogun Heard.

Chicago, Feb. 16.—Mischa Levitzki, Maria Carreras and Dvora Dienstova gave piano recitals here during the week. Writing of Mr. Levitzki's concert, Mr. Rosenfeld asserted that "he has the greatest amount of refinement and the keenest sense of musical taste of any of the many great players that are now giving concerts."

According to Mr. Gunn, "for him the piano sang with a tone of unearthly beauty," and the Beethoven Sonata was a masterpiece played by a master. Mr. Hackett found him "one of those intended by nature to play the piano," and Edward Moore thought him "wholly admirable. Everything that he plays overflows with vitality."

Maria Carreras' program included old Italian dances transcribed by Respighi. In Mr. Hackett's words, Mme. Carreras "is an excellent pianist . . . She plays with appreciation for the music, brings good tone from the piano, and has a clean technique." Mr. Gunn referred to her as "a virtuoso and a personality" with a "facile technique" and "ample and beautiful" tone. She displayed a tone, wrote Mr. Rosenfeld, "which had volume and power, a digital dexterity that reproduced all the pianistic figures that Beethoven put into his pianistic work and an understanding of its musical message." Mr. Moore wrote that she "is evidently a personality," and possesses "skillfully developed powers and the magnetism to make them worth while."

Miss Dienstova's debut "displayed gifts that promise much in technique and music appreciation for her pianistic future," to quote Mr. Rosenfeld. According to Mr. Gunn, she played "with decision, with fairly accurate technique, with sturdy yet expressively varied tone." Edward Moore was impressed with her "sympathy and good taste," and Mr. Hackett wrote that Miss Dienstova "is a talented pianist with a sincere way of going about her work that is attractive."

* * *

Two violinists, Eduard Zathurezky and Leo Braverman, gave concerts here during the week. Mr. Gunn found the former, a young Czecho-Slovakian touring the United States for the first time, "a brilliant, virile player, with splendid tone, fine spirit, strong and vital rhythm and a music sense that adds to well proportioned interpretations the saving grace of poetic feeling."

As Mr. Hackett expressed it, "he is a good violinist. His playing is musicianly, with appreciation for the spirit of the music and firm grasp on its structural form." Mr. Moore, however, was disappointed in the concert, and mentioned the violinist's lapses of intonation.

Leo Braverman was assisted by Gordon Campbell at the piano at his recital. The violinist displayed "appreciation for the music and interpretative force," wrote Mr. Hackett, and "there was a variety of tone color and shading. He brought a tone of rich quality from his violin and his intonation was good."

* * *

The vocal artists of the week were Maria Ivogun, soprano; Mitchell Kushelevisky, Russian baritone, and Thomas Moore, Irish tenor. Mme. Ivogun who, to quote Mr. Moore, "does so many things in such an exquisite fashion," sang German Lieder with "a keen insight into their texts and styles, a comprehension of their moods that made every one of them a gem," according to Mr. Rosenfeld. This writer added that she sang "with vocal facility, a purity of tone, and a silvery, smooth quality." Mr. Hackett felt that her voice had "unexpected warmth of color in the middle register" in spite of her coloratura range at times, although at other times the tone was hard. Mr. Gunn joined in the general commendation.

Theodore Katz, violinist, appeared with Mr. Kushelevisky on Thursday. Leon Benditzky was the accompanist. Maurice Rosenfeld wrote that Mr. Katz showed "a rich, warm and expressive" tone as well as "ample technical facility and a style that is serious and well poised." The baritone, to his mind, "presented a vocal equipment which comprised a comprehensive range, both in the lower and higher register, a tone which has substance and quality, though it lacks resonance." The Tribune spoke of his fine voice, and commended Mr. Katz for taste and discretion.

Mr. Moore was assisted in his recital by Clemens A. Hutter, accompanist, and George Edward Sauve, violoncellist. According to Maurice Rosenfeld, "he displayed a very pleasing, high lyric tenor voice which he handled with musical intuition and intelligence, a clear diction, and a stage manner that is ingratiating."

EFREM ZIMBALIST
Is Making His First American Tour Since His Recent Trip to the Orient.

Opera Ends Boston Stay

Boston, Feb. 14.—The Chicago Civic Opera Company closed its two weeks' season Saturday night with a performance of The Jewels of the Madonna, sung by Rosa Raisa and Messrs. Lamont and Rimini. To quote Philip Hale of the Herald, "the specious brilliance of the music, the dramatic interest of the story, and the spectacle greatly pleased the audience."

The matinee performance was Pelleas et Melisande. Mary Garden, Maria Claessens, Helen Freund, Jose Mojica, Georges Baklanoff, Alexander Kipnis, and Antonio Nicolich made up the cast, and Giorgio Polacco conducted.

Philip Hale wrote that Mary Garden was the only real interpreter of the role of Melisande, "a strange, arresting, indescribably pathetic figure in life, in love, in death." Of Mr. Mojica as Pelleas, he wrote that "his youthful appearance, grace, personal charm" added to his "artistic sensitiveness" and "his reserve in bearing and gesture" fitted him particularly well for the role. Mr. Hale also commented that "Mr. Polacco and the excellent orchestra gave an inspired interpretation of the score."

Violist Plays With Chicago Orchestra

Lionel Tertis Is Soloist in Dale Suite; Stock Offers London Symphony.

Chicago, Feb. 16.—Frederick Stock's program at the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon was referred to by Edward Moore of the Tribune as "a melodic travelogue of Paris and London." It consisted of Vaughan Williams' London Symphony, Elgar's Cockaigne, Delius' Paris: A Night Scene, and part of a Suite for viola and orchestra played by Lionel Tertis, soloist.

According to Mr. Moore, the Dale Suite "is both pleasant to hear and difficult to play . . . but it is no work of genius." Karleton Hackett of the Post thought the music "melodic in conception, yet with a harmonic setting and rhythmic freedom in keeping with the modern spirit" and played by Mr. Tertis with a tone "rich and deep, but not veiled. There was clarity in every phrase because the image was clear in his own mind and his fingers responsive to his will. The melody was sustained with beautiful tone, and the bravura passages sent out with brilliance."

Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that Mr. Tertis "displayed consummate mastery of the instrument and fine musical taste . . . he produced a rarely beautiful tone, which in the middle high registers of his instrument had a ravishing, exquisite quality, while in the middle lower ranges it poured forth a liquid tone that resembled the human voice." In the opinion of Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald-Examiner, although Mr. Tertis was "hampered by Dale's saccharine melodies," he "achieved miracles of technical display."

As Mr. Rosenfeld put it, Elgar's Cockaigne, "a most graphic tone picture," was played "with unusual verve by the orchestra." Mr. Gunn said that the London Symphony sounded "in Stock's illuminating reading, the masterpiece it almost is." The Delius work, according to Mr. Rosenfeld "has a vivid and rich orchestral coloring."

At the popular concert of the orchestra given under Mr. Stock's direction, Lincoln's Birthday was celebrated by starting the concert with America and closing with the Star Spangled Banner.

Rosa Ponselle

Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City

Victor Records Knabe Piano

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

RE JOHN McCORMACK

"Now at the Zenith"

"McCormack's voice is as beautiful and as resonant as of yore. Indeed, if anything, it should be said that he is now at the very height of his artistic powers. Luscious tones are heard and there are wondrous shadings that linger caressingly on the ear."
—The Philadelphia Record.

Philadelphia Hears Two New Concertos

Stravinsky and Ornstein Are Soloists With Orchestra; Reiner Is Guest Leader.

Philadelphia, Feb. 16.—Two composers gave first performances of their piano concertos here this week. Last evening Igor Stravinsky appeared as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Fritz Reiner as guest conductor, in his new Piano Concerto; and Leo Ornstein's Second Piano Concerto was played by the composer with the orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, on Friday.

According to the Record, it was as interesting to watch Mr. Stravinsky play "as it was to hear his vital revolutionary music." The Public Ledger writer found the general style of the work that of a Bach concerto grosso, "brought extremely up to date." He added that "it is full of personality and has the merit of not being too long" and, as in other Stravinsky works, rhythm is emphasized over tonal beauty or dynamics. Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) found the effect "of sounds that are dry and hyperrhythmical. At times there is a kind of brusque attraction to it."

The other novelty introduced by Mr. Reiner was Bela Bartok's Hungarian Suite, which, according to the Ledger, "is full of Strauss, harmonically, melodically and in orchestral effects, however, with a personal touch . . . the suite is an interesting and enjoyable work." The North American thought it "distinctly worth while."

The writer in the Record lauded Mr. Reiner for his "able conducting, which was especially skilful in the bewildering mazes of the Stravinsky Concerto." Mr. Muschamp commented that his directions would bring stronger climaxes "were the orchestra under his continual discipline." The writer in the North American hesitated to "form any real opinion" of the guest conductor on such short acquaintance, and the Ledger reviewer wrote that he was "a splendid conductor."

* * *

According to the Ledger, Mr. Ornstein's Concerto "is as free in form as it is radical in harmony, generally undetermined in tonality and by reason of the constant changes of meter virtually devoid of consecutive rhythm." This reviewer did not think the work "strikingly original," although, in places, the orchestration "is original and skillful." Mr. Ornstein, in his opinion, showed himself to be an excellent pianist in the course of the difficult composition and in the solo passages his tone was agreeable and his technique abundant."

To Linton Martin (North American) the composition seemed "a conglomeration of noise that seemed to have nothing to say, and said it as lengthily and loudly as possible." Mr. Martin thought Mr. Ornstein "a pianist of ability."

Stanley Muschamp wondered as he listened to the Concerto "what it is that has prompted such utterance." He said that this did not alone apply to Mr. Ornstein's work but to most of the music produced by the modernists.

Mme. Jeritza in Opera Farewell

Maria Jeritza made her last appearance of the season with the Metropolitan Opera Company in Tannhauser on February 18 before an audience of unusual size and enthusiasm, which demanded repeated curtain calls.

The only change in the cast was the appearance of Michael Bohnen as Landgraf for the first time. According to the Herald Tribune report, "like all of Mr. Bohnen's impersonations, this was an elaborately detailed and finished performance, dramatically vivid and imposingly sung."

Music in Springfield

(Continued from page 11)

Michael's Cathedral, a male choir of fifty, in which Terrence E. Sheehan is tenor soloist, is directed by the Rev. George Murphy.

For those who wish to pursue the study of music there are painstaking teachers who maintain private studios; and conservatories—the Springfield Conservatory of Music, of which Charles Mackay is director; the Turner School of Music, conducted by Arthur H. Turner; and the Springfield National Institute of Musical Art, headed by Frederic A. Hoschke.

Such, in the main, is the substance of Springfield's music fabric. It is preserved in part, and otherwise aided, by Springfield's newspapers—the Union, and the Republican. Willard M. Clark is music editor of the former, while Francis Regal, of the Republican, has long been identified with this branch of music work.

With a creditable array of music of many forms available in Springfield's City Public Library—through the beneficence of the late James A. Rumrill—and an abundance of books on music subjects, there is much accessible to the seeker after music knowledge.

The City of Springfield is not unaware of the value of contributing to music's development. Apart from the free organ concerts held in the new Municipal Auditorium, there is a disposition on the part of the governing body to aid in the cause. As Mayor Parker said to the representative for The Musical Digest who made this survey:

"Good music is essential to the welfare of the people."

Schola Hears Ernest Newman

A lecture on Musical Mannerisms of Favorite Composers was given by Ernest Newman, guest music critic of the New York Evening Post, last Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Marshall Field. Mr. Newman illustrated his remarks at the piano. This was the last of the series of lecture-recitals given by the Schola Cantorum.

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

JOSEF HOFMANN AT HIS STEINWAY

STEINWAY
THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

From under those miraculous hands a Chopin Nocturne ripples in delicate, lacy perfection. A Liszt Rhapsody becomes a thing of glamour and passion. A shadowy theme from Debussy assumes delectable contours, gleams with cool, floating light. Here speaks the immortal genius of great composers. And here, also, under the touch of a master pianist, speaks the glorious voice of a great instrument—the Steinway. Long ago Hofmann chose the Steinway as the one perfect medium for his art. Rachmaninoff knows how exquisitely it interprets a subtle nuance or a profound emotion. Paderewski knows how magnificently it responds to his imperious demands. Levitzki, Cortot, Grainger, Nikisch,—these are but a few of the celebrated pianists who, if only sincerely artistic motives are involved, invariably choose the Steinway.

To meet the requirements and acoustic conditions of every home, the Steinway is made in numerous styles and sizes. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and ideals. And each returns to those who buy it, not only unending pleasure and delight, but the definite gift of permanence. You need never buy another piano.

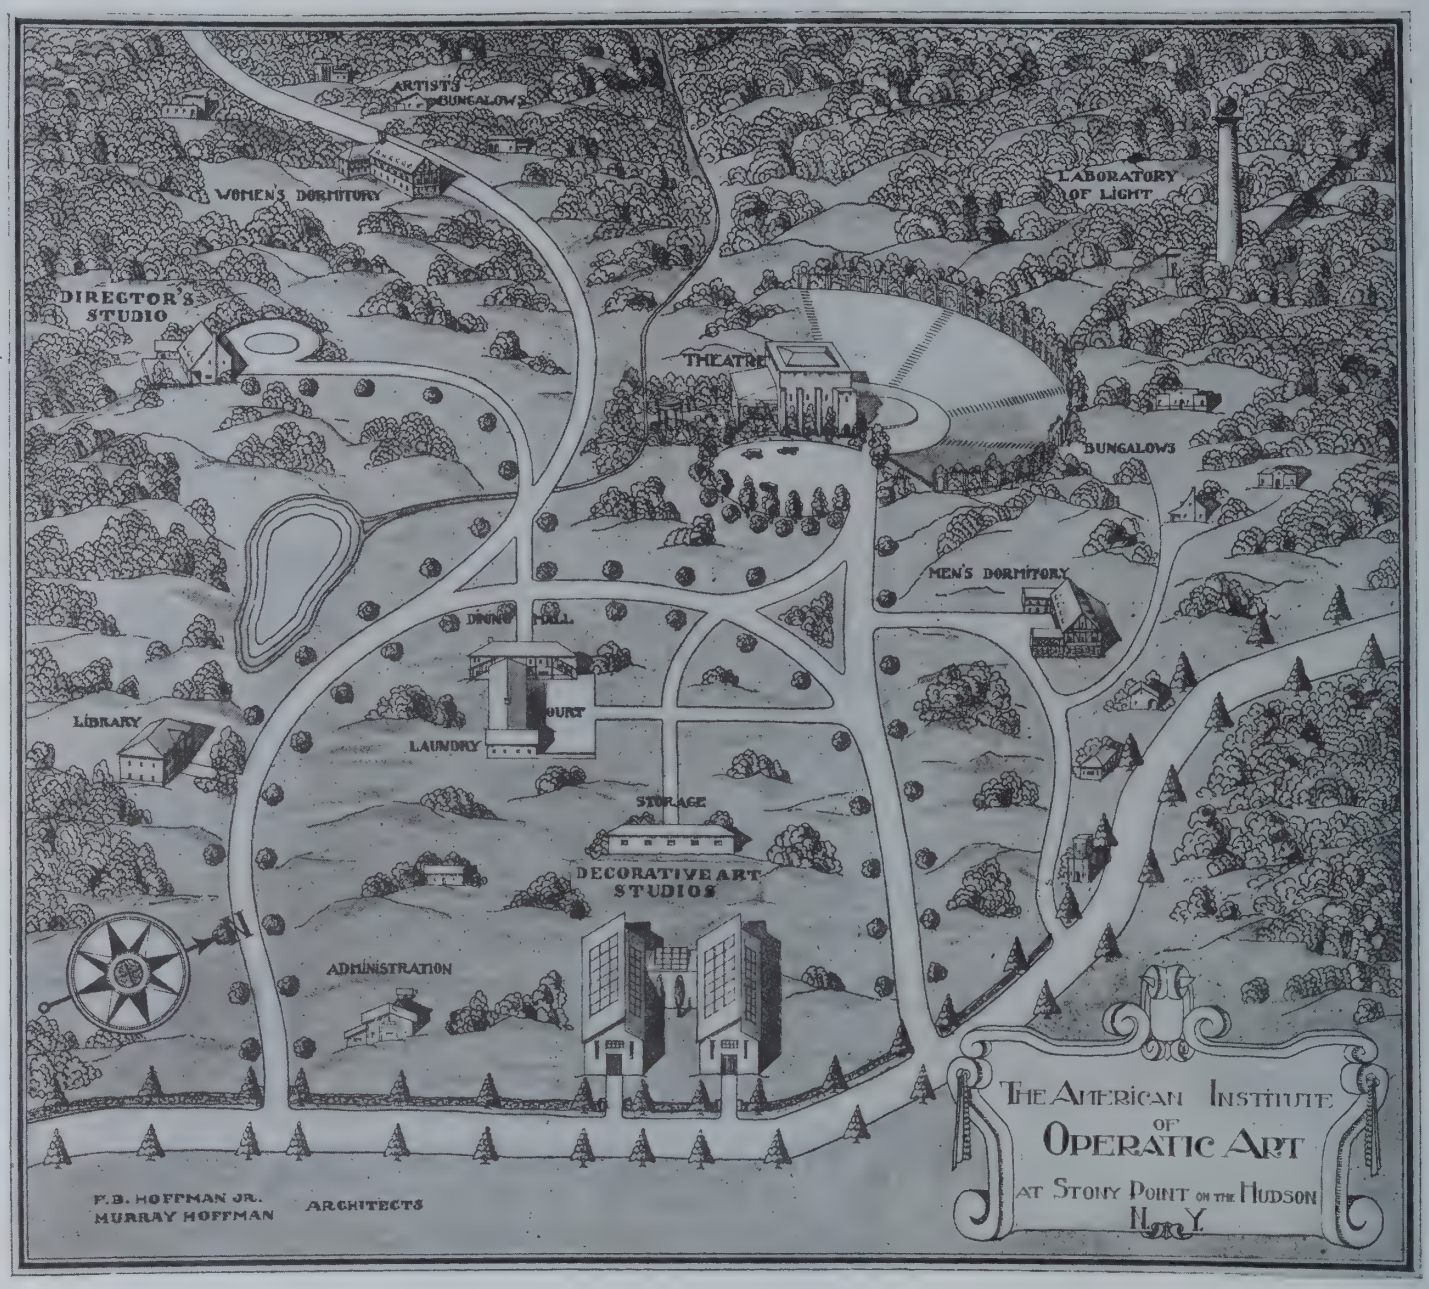
*There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up
plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

THE FIRST SERIOUS DEVELOPMENT OF

National Grand Opera for America



ARCHITECT'S landscape drawing showing arrangement of grounds and grouping of buildings at Stony Point-on-Hudson, the American Institute of Operatic Art, of which Max Rabinoff is Director General. This project, which has been quietly developed during the last eighteen months is now ready to begin active operations. Buildings are being pushed to completion and, under present plans, will be ready for occupancy in June. At that time the Institute's initial undertaking, the assembly and training of the first American National Grand Opera Company, with a cast of Americans, will be begun under recognized masters of the divers branches of Operatic Art. It is the purpose, in the late Fall, to have the first company make an extended American tour with a repertoire of American and foreign operas. The premiere of the American National Grand Opera Company is being planned for the One Hundredth Anniversary of the first appearance of foreign Grand Opera in America.

Honorary Advisory Committee for New York

Otto H. Kahn, Chairman

Mrs. Vincent Astor
Edward F. Albee
Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies
David Belasco
William C. Breed
Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler
Frederick H. Ecker
Mrs. Newbold Leroy Edgar
Col. Michael Friedsam
Mrs. John Henry Hammond
Charles Hayden
Paul M. Herzog
Mrs. Christian R. Holmes
Louis Horowitz
Ralph Jonas
Louis G. Kaufman
Jesse L. Lasky
Ivy L. Lee
Miss Sophie Irene Loeb
Frederick MacMonnies
Miss Neysa Moran McMein
Frank A. Munsey
Conde Nast
Mrs. Adolph S. Ochs
Mrs. H. Fairfield Osborn
Prof. Michael Pupin
Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray
Dr. Karl Reiland
Duchess de Richelieu
E. Moore Robinson
Arthur S. Somers
D. Everitt Waid
Col. Creighton Webb
Henry Rogers Winthrop

Board of Directors

Willard V. King, Chairman

Templeton Crocker
Francis E. Drury
Havrah Hubbard
Huger W. Jervey
Thomas L. Leeming
William H. McIntyre
James G. McNary
Philip Miner
Arthur J. Morris
Kenneth O'Brien
Benjamin Prince
Max Rabinoff
Joseph Riter
Charles H. Sabin
W. Rhinelander Stewart, Jr.
Henry W. Taft
L. I. Thomas
Allen Wardwell
George E. Warren
Archibald R. Watson

Executive Committee

Wm. H. McIntyre
Chairman
Havrah Hubbard
Philip Miner
Max Rabinoff
W. Rhinelander Stewart, Jr.
L. I. Thomas
Archibald R. Watson

John Brown
Executive Secretary

Director General: Max Rabinoff

Address communications to National Headquarters

American Operatic and Allied Arts Foundation, Inc.
Fisk Building - - - New York, N. Y.

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

The Musical Digest Foreign Correspondents:
J. B. BAUER, Damenstiftstrasse, 16-3 MUNICH, Germany.
VICTOR BELAIEV, Novinsky Boulevard 117, lodg 4, MOSCOW, Russia.
FEDERICO CANDIDA, 12 via Palermo, MILANO, Italy.
ARTHUR KURSCHNER, 48 Hauptstrasse, BERLIN, Germany.
PAUL LEWINSON, 21 Maresfield Gardens, LONDON, N. W. 3, England.
PAUL STEFAN, Hamerlingplatz, VIENNA 8, Austria.
K. H. STOTTNER, 18 Rue de Cirque, PARIS, France.

Elena Gerhardt Sings in London

Notable Recitals Few; Arthur Rubinstein Plays With Queen's Hall Orchestra.

London.

The first week of February brought only one recital of note to the London concert halls—the first appearance for the season of Elena Gerhardt.

Mme. Gerhardt is one of the few recitalists who can safely go outside the small Wigmore or Aeolian halls to give her London concerts. On this occasion she chose the Queen's Hall for her reentry to the metropolis, and was rewarded by the presence of a large audience.

The usual encomiums followed the event. Her "Lieder singing" is "all but matchless of its kind," wrote Robin Legge in the Telegraph. "The program itself was a work of art. More than once was the great singer obliged to repeat a song or to sing some other, for it was clear that she was at the top of her own most glorious form, technically superb, achieving everything with the utmost ease."

Percy Scholes in the Observer held that Mme. Gerhardt "excels" in the compromises involved in great Lieder singing. He said: "She exhibits the musical 'grand style', the art of the long phrase, yet she has a care for the minutiae of the poet's thought. She is neither a dramatic reciter nor a vocal instrument, but enough of each to satisfy both poet and composer. A purist might say that the art of a Gerhardt is the art of making the best of a bad job. At any rate, she makes of the job a very beautiful best."

Similarly the Sunday Times: "In point of style, the singing of Mme. Gerhardt conveys all it ever did; possibly even more than ever."

With the mention of two symphonic events, an account of this week's important concerts comes to an end: the Queen's Hall Orchestra proceeded with its Saturday afternoon series, Arthur Rubinstein the soloist, and the British Women's Symphony Orchestra gave its second performance, showing a marked improvement in ensemble over its previous affairs. The cellist Guilhermina Suggia was the soloist here.

Deems Taylor's Through the Looking Glass suite is down for its first performance at the next Leeds Festival, it is announced—unless some one puts it on before October next.

John Coates, whose programs of Shakespeare songs have often been the subject of comment in this column, is to give a series of recitals in the United States beginning on April 23.

The Covent Garden museum of London musical relics has finally been made ready by Richard Northcott, librarian of that ancient institution, and will be open to public inspection on the occasion of the next reopening of the opera house. This is due on Thursday evening of this week, when the British Broadcasting Company will resume its series of radio symphony concerts with a Wagner-Berlioz program, under the direction of Bruno Walter.

P. L.

Paderewski Plays in London

London, Feb. 17.—Ignace Paderewski gave a piano recital last night to a capacity audience in Albert Hall. Nearly 10,000 persons were in the audience, which shouted its applause.

GILDA DALLA RIZZA
Was Protagonist in the Presentation of Louise at La Scala at the End of January.

Find Beethoven Song MSS.

Leipsig.—The original manuscript of a wedding song by Beethoven was found recently in the possession of Breitkopf & Haertel, his publishers. The manuscript, which was attached to another composition, was composed on the occasion of the marriage in 1819 of the daughter of Giannatanasio del Rie, head of the school attended by Beethoven's nephew.

All trace of the song had been lost until an employee of the firm happened to be looking over some of Beethoven's piano concerto manuscripts. The song was clipped to one of these concertos.

Dalla Rizza Sings in Louise at La Scala

Milan.

Louise was put on for the first time this season at La Scala on January 31. The opera of Charpentier enjoys a measure of popularity here, although many of the regular La Scala subscribers find it tiresome.

According to the reviewers of Il Corriere della Sera and Il Secolo, the performance found favor with the audience that was present to hear it. Gilda dalla Rizza, who had the title role, sang "beautifully," according to the Corriere, and created convincing moods as required by the story and the music, from the pathetic to the most dramatic or violent.

In Il Secolo it was reported that she disclosed histrionic talents which many actresses of the legitimate stage would be glad to display, and she rose to the heights necessary when the thickness of the orchestration in the score put her voice to the hardest tests.

The tenor Menescaldi phrased well and had especially clear diction, according to Il Secolo, and Il Corriere praised him in moderate terms for his singing. Signor Journet and Signora Casazza deserved the honors of the evening, was the opinion of the chronicler of the Secolo. They were well cast as the father and mother.

Arturo Toscanini was praised in the reviews for the clarity and perfection of detail with which he revealed Charpentier's score. F. C.

GRAVEURE

"The vibrant tones of Graveure's full voice, his exquisite 'mezza voce,' his breath-control and diction, make him a model for singers of worthy ambitions." W. J. Henderson, New York Sun.

IN LEADING MUSIC CENTERS

Management:
Metropolitan
Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

One of the season's pianistic successes was made by

LEFF POUISHNOFF

Mr. Pouishnoff will return for a brief tour to cover January, February, March, 1926

The Dean of New York critics, Mr. W. J. Henderson (Sun) said in part:

"* * * this player effected his entry into New York "in a quiet and unheralded manner, but by his performance "he at once made it clear that he is one of the finest new "pianists heard in this city in a long time." * * * "No "finer piece of pianistic management of dynamics and tone "coloring has been heard in Aeolian Hall in many a day "than Mr. Pouishnoff displayed in the opening passage of "the concerts." * * * "As for his playing of the colos- "sal work throughout, it was, in short, a widely varied and "fine demonstration of rare musical talent admirably devel- "oped."

Mr. H. T. Parker (Boston Transcript) in the course of his observations said:

"Like to Mr. Kreisler or Mr. Paderewski seems Mr. "Pouishnoff—the virtuoso and musician who is also a culti- "vated man of the world."

For reprints of the American criticisms, programs, terms, etc., address

M. H. HANSON
437 Fifth Avenue, New York
Baldwin Piano

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Celebrate Birthday of Concerts

Thirtieth Anniversary of Santa Cecilia Series Is Feted With Program of Palestrina Music.

Rome.

The thirtieth anniversary of the public concerts of the Accademia di Santa Cecilia was celebrated on February 2. The date when these concerts commenced, February 2, 1895, marks the beginning of the career of symphonic music in Italy, it is generally considered, for the Augusteum concerts are a direct offspring of those early ones of the Academy. The gala concert was attended by leading musicians and social personages of Rome.

The program of the anniversary was exactly that of the first Santa Cecilia concert. It was made up almost entirely of a cappella compositions of Palestrina, including a Benedictus, two Madrigals, and two Motets. Thirty years ago Raffaele Terziani was the conductor; this time the leader was Ernesto Boezi. As thirty years ago a few organ pieces were interpolated, and the soloist on both occasions was Remigio Renzi.

President Speaks

Before the concert the president of the Accademia, the Count of San Martino, made a speech, discussing the various phases, many of them discouraging and difficult, through which the concerts passed from the time of their institution. At that time there was only one orchestral organization in Rome, that of the Sala Dante, which gave a number of concerts directed by Ettore Pinelli, and heard by a limited number of subscribers.

The president spoke also of the influence on the Santa Cecilia concerts of Nicola d'Atri and Alessandro Vessella, the latter the first conductor of the concerts of broader popularity, at the time when they were moved successfully from the Sala di Santa Cecilia to the larger quarters of the Teatro Argentina, then to the Costanzi, and finally to the Augusteum.

The Roman press devoted considerable space to praise of the Santa Cecilia concerts on this occasion, recording some of the high lights of their history, the performances of Mendelssohn's Walpurgisnacht, Verdi's Requiem, the Brahms Requiem, Gounod's Gallia, Saint-Saens' Deluge, the appearances of such conductors as Toscanini, Mancinelli, Mascagni, Mengelberg, and Nikisch, and of such soloists as Paderewski, Sarasate, and Kubelick. Incidentally it was reported with considerable approval that Paderewski, who last month played in recital in Rome, will return two seasons from now for another appearance at the Augusteum.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Stokowski to Lead for Guild

At the New York concert, March 1, of the International Composers' Guild members of the Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, will play Edgar Varèse's latest orchestral work, Integrales, which requires seventeen different percussion instruments. It will take four men to manipulate these instruments, which include suspended cymbal, side drum, tenor drum, string drum, castanets, cymbal, Chinese block, sleighbells, chains, tambourin, gong, tam-tam, triangle, crash cymbal, verges, bass drum and slap stick.

Other novelties at the concert will be Eric Satie's Le Piege de Meduse, Schoenberg's new Serenade for small orchestra and baritone voice, and Eichheim's Malay Mosaic.

Siegfried Wagner Leads in Dresden

Dresden.—The Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra was heard last month in Bayreuth, where Siegfried Wagner conducted a program of works by his father, grandfather and himself. His Die Heilige Linde was given its first performance.

Auction Composers' Manuscripts

Berlin.—At a recent auction here an autographed manuscript of Schubert's Einsamkeit was sold for 5,400 marks; two letters of Mozart to his father for 1,450 and 1,300 respectively; a Gluck letter for 3,700; and one from Beethoven for 2,450.

Melba's Memoirs in Preparation

London.—A book of reminiscences by Nellie Melba will be published in the early autumn.

Liverpool Sees Dress of Singer Aflame in Tristan

A SHOCK was given the audience at the British National Opera Company's performance of Wagner's Tristan and Isolde in Liverpool on the evening of February 17, according to a dispatch to the New York Evening Post, when Isolde's white robe took fire in the second act. Rosina Buckman was singing the role.

In the midst of the love scene she stepped too near a burning torch, and her fluffy dress burst into flames. The singer stepped into the wings, where her maid wrapped her in an overcoat, extinguishing the flames. She reappeared almost instantly and sang the act through with dress and stockings scorched.

John Lund Passes Away

Buffalo, Feb. 7.—John Lund, who came to America to be assistant conductor to Leopold Damrosch in his season of German opera at the New York Metropolitan in 1884, died here last Sunday. In 1886 he became conductor of the Buffalo Orchestra, and later was leader of the Orpheus chorus. In 1903 he left Buffalo to tour as leader of Victor Herbert operas, but returned eleven years later to continue his work as symphonic and choral conductor and composer. He is survived by his second wife and a son, Victor Herbert Lund.

Strauss Invited to Munich

Munich.—Richard Strauss has been invited as guest-conductor for the summer music-fest here. He will direct Mozart's operas at the Residenz Theatre and Wagner's at the Prince Regent's Theatre.

Messaline Sung in Bordeaux

Bordeaux.—A new opera by Isidore de Lara, Messaline, was well received at its recent presentation here at the Opera. The title role was sung by Nyza Bladel.

Play Zemlinsky Novelty

Prague.—A new chamber quartet by Zemlinsky, director of the German National Opera here, was given its first performance by the Buxbaum Quartet in Vienna recently.

Riots Interrupt Music At Two Vienna Concerts

The climax of the bitterness produced in Vienna music circles by the withdrawal of Richard Strauss from his post as director of the State Opera was reached on the evening of February 14, a special dispatch to the New York Evening Post reported. When Erich Wolfgang Korngold, young Viennese composer, stepped into the conductor's box to direct the performance of his one-act opera, Vimlanthe, a tumult broke out in the gallery. Cries and shouts against Korngold prevented him from commencing his music.

Deathly pale, Korngold was unable to continue with the overture and stood looking up at the gallery until part of the audience came to his assistance and with deafening applause drowned out the demonstration. Police arrested five ringleaders and restored order.

The demonstration against the young composer arose from the fact that his father, Julius Korngold, one of the most prominent Vienna critics, long has been the leader of the criticism directed against Strauss.

Young Strauss enthusiasts insist on interpreting Korngold's criticism of Strauss as due to a desire to make a place for his son.

Another riot of considerable proportions took place in a Vienna music hall the next day when Franz Schalk conducted Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps with the Philharmonic Orchestra. His conducting also was interrupted several times by shouts and hisses from the audience.

At the close one man in the gallery cried, "Thank God it is over!" and numerous bravos greeted the remark.

Saturday at a general rehearshal of the same orchestra to which the public was invited, a veritable bedlam broke loose and it was impossible to hear the last part of the work. The incident recalled the first performance of a Schoenberg work in Vienna twenty years ago.

Mascagni Conducts in Prague

Prague.—Pietro Mascagni during a visit here in January conducted Verdi's Aida, his own Cavalleria Rusticana, and Leoncavallo's I Pagliacci at the German theatre. The composer also conducted the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra on January 21.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND

AMERICAN TENOR

A Few Critical Comments From Which It Seems Evident That This Young Artist Is One of the Most Satisfying Tenors Among the New-Comers This Season

Erie, Pa., Times:

"To make the afternoon one of complete enjoyment, we had a soloist who fit into the picture as if he had been intended for the occasion. George Perkins Raymond, by name, a lyric tenor of fine voice, excellent stage presence and the finest kind of taste in program making.

"'Du Bist Wie Eine Blume' was sung with rare taste and great beauty of tone. . . . Mr. Raymond registered the biggest hit of any soloist we have yet had with the orchestra. . . . He has much to commend him—and not the least is his fine stage manner, coupled with a serious regard for the music he interprets."

Providence Evening Tribune:

"Mr. Raymond has a beautiful voice, unusually strong and virile for a tenor, and with a technique developed especially along the lines of tone shading. His diminuendos were excellent."

Providence Evening Bulletin:

"Mr. Raymond, who possesses a clear tenor voice of lyric quality, pleased his audience. He sang with ease, a splendid diction and artistic interpretation. Particularly pleasing were his delicate shadings and diminuendos, wherein his voice showed its sweetest qualities."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Mr. Raymond will be available all Season 1925-26

Exclusive Management ANNIE FRIEDBERG, Metropolitan Opera House Bldg., New York City

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

Opera Refuses to Disband

Klemperer Succeeds Furtwaengler in the Latter's Absence in the U. S.; Lener Quartet Appears.

Berlin.

The Volksoper apparently does not believe in its own death. Already in October it was evident that this institution would be wrecked commercially. The crisis became acute in November. In December followed the declaration of insolvency. At last, at the end of January, the building had to be vacated. Now one can hear the sounds of the productions of a musical comedy company, where a short time ago Beethoven, Wagner and Verdi reigned. But the orchestra and the ensemble of the Volksoper declare that they will stick together even without money, without a building, and without leadership. Why, they did not say. How they will succeed in this attempt and how these artists will support themselves are also not mentioned. They can hardly expect that fried pigeons (about four hundred of them daily) will fly into their hungry mouths. They will not see that even the best of art has two unyielding enemies: want of judgment and over production. About want of judgment the Volksoper could not complain, and against overproduction there is only one remedy: less production.

Klemperer Substitutes

Through Furtwaengler's voyage to America the most important conductor's desk which Germany has to bestow, that of the Philharmonic Orchestra, became free for a few weeks. It was quite a matter of course that this place of honor was taken up for the time being by Klemperer. His talent had a splendid opportunity to display itself when he conducted the Pulcinella Suite of Stravinsky. What is this Pulcinella Suite? Mr. Pisling gives the answer: "Multiply the genius of Pergolesi by that of Stravinsky and the result is Pulcinella. The introductory Sinfonia has been taken from the G major Sonata for two violins and counterbass. A Siciliano, Scherzino, Tarantella, Toccata, Gavotte with variations, Menuett, and Finale are the rest of the jewels set by the goldsmith Stravinsky. The rhythms and melodies of the old master have been enriched at the hands of the modern Russian. The simple harmony remains largely untouched. If Stravinsky's weakness is melodic invention, in this composition it is bolstered by the genius of Pergolesi. Both the Russian and the Italian are one in the elegance of their manner of writing.

Lener Quartet Praised

In judging another event all the reviewers agree. That is, they all said that the Lener Quartet displayed itself a chamber music organization of the first class. Prof. Weissmann occupied himself at the beginning of his review with a discussion of a number of leading quartets. But the Lener Quartet he called incomparable.

"As high as one may place any of them the Lener Quartet is still up with the leader for the finish and perfection of its ensemble, for its brilliance, and for its capacity in the expression of the chamber music art. The group is governed by the wonderful tone of its leader, Lener, the first violin, and the other members reflect his excellence."

The three Lener recitals were enjoyed by audiences of especial distinction and style. The second program was especially interesting, for it included a concert of composition of Respighi which the Italian musician wrote especially for this string quartet. The consensus of the reviewers was that Respighi remains an excellent workman even if his ideas are not of the utmost originality.

Pianist Demands Fee

Sergei Prokofieff, Russian pianist and composer, was scheduled to appear in recital at Beethoven Hall last week. A considerable audience waited for him for an hour past the starting time of the concert, but he did not appear.

Meantime the pianist was sitting outside the hall in an automobile waiting for the management to give him his full fee before he would consent to play. Finally the managers gave in, and Prokofieff entered the hall to play before an audience whose ranks had been thinned out by impatience. The reason for his lateness filtered out, and was received not very pleasantly among music lovers in Berlin.

At any rate his recital was a marked music event. Prokofieff is a master of interpretation, especially in his own music. Dr. Schmidt wrote of his recital, "His playing is like his music: masterly, interesting, excellent in technique, but cold and unemotional. In his Sonata, Op. 14, he stirred his listeners with the Scherzo. Much less moving were his questionable Twelve Visions, Op. 32. It is a mistake for anyone, even Prokofieff himself, to play too much of his music consecutively, for the individuality of his style becomes too evident and too monotonous, and the lack of emotional color is distressing."

The piano recital of Katharine Goodson was presented under unfortunate circumstances. She was indisposed, and her playing was below her best standard.

Keussler Symphony Premiere

Gerhard von Keussler conducted the first performance in this world of his D minor Symphony a short time ago in Breslau. The newspaper reviewers did not gain the impression that the work was very original in style. Keussler is as much poet and philosopher as he is musician, but this versatility becomes a weakness when he confines his manner of expression simply to pure music. Always in his absolute music there seems to be something lacking, a thesis, a program, an explanation. There is much of a kind of spirit and considerable technique, but not much effective music.

The Berlin Philharmonic under Dr. Unger presented a novelty in the way of group of songs for orchestra by Curt Weil. They had little success with the reviewers.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Otto Kahn Sails for Europe

Otto H. Kahn, banker and chairman of the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sailed last week on the S. S. Duilio for a tour of Italy, Spain, France, and England. Mr. Kahn, who does not plan to return until the middle of May, said that his trip is partly for pleasure and partly for business.

Posthumous Work to Be Heard

Paris, Feb. 8.—The string quartet which Gabriel Faure finished a few weeks before his death will be given its first hearing during May by the Conservatoire.

Nice Hears New Hue Opera Founded on Ibanez Novel

Nice.

The second novelty of the current season at the Nice Opera was Dans l'Ombre de la Cathedrale, by Georges Hue. The book of the opera is by MM. Maurice Lena and Henry Farrare, and is adapted from the novel of Blasco Ibanez. The first two acts are a representation of the famous Claverias of the Cathedral of Toledo, and the scene of the third act is laid in the chapel of the Madonna in the Cathedral.

Charles Friant, tenor, appeared as the principal character, Manuel, a role which he created in the Paris Opera-Comique. Mlle. Viard sang the part of Sagrario, and Mlle. Tessandra was Tomasa. M. Velier as Mariana was as well received as the other members of the cast. M. S. Bovy was the conductor, and M. Cefail arranged the colorful Spanish settings.

Despite the conflicting reports that were circulated outside of Nice regarding the appearance of Ganna Walska in Butterfly, there was no doubt as to the impression which she made on the newspaper reviewers of the city. The commentators of Le Petit Nicois and L'Eclaireur were quite favorable, in regard to Mme. Walska's singing as well as her acting and general stage bearing.

R. S.

Aid French Music in Strassburg

Strassburg.—Through the efforts of the Groupe de Mai, founded by M. and Mme. Chevalier of the Conservatoire, Strassburg has been given the opportunity to hear concerts of French music. During the German occupation Strassburg heard nothing but German music.

Under the auspices of the Groupe de Mai, Maurice Ravel paid his first visit to this city during December, and his comic opera, L'Enfant et les Sortileges, will be given here in March.

City Takes Over Opera House

Berlin.—It has been announced that the city is to take over the Deutsches Opernhaus in Charlottenburg, which is bankrupt. The city government seized the stage properties in payment of its half million mark claim on the theatre's chief creditor. It will be known in the future as the Municipal Opera.

London Orchestra Coming of Age

London.—The London Symphony Orchestra will celebrate its twenty-first birthday on June 9. The organization, which is run on a co-operative basis, has established a trust fund to defray the expenses of its concerts.

Suk at Work on Symphony

Prague.—Josef Suk is working on the last movement of a new symphony, which he has named Von der Liebe.

Handel Festival for Leipsig

Leipsig.—It has been announced that a Handel festival will be given here June 6-8.

Samaroff

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York, N. Y. — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia, Penn.
VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS — STEINWAY PIANO

MARJORIE MEYER
SOPRANO
Management: Standard Booking Office, 17 East 42d St., New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON — 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO — BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER, D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York — STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

LECTURE-RECITALS will be given by Herbert Witherspoon for the Ohio Music Teachers' Association on April 24, and for the Minnesota Music Teachers' Association on June 25.

Frederick Schlieder completed last Saturday a five day intensive course of lectures in Boston designed to illustrate the practical application of his principles for the teaching of harmony and composition.

Ernest Bloch's new Quintet for piano and strings was recently given its first presentation in Cleveland. It was played by artists of the Cleveland Institute of Music who are closely associated with Mr. Bloch. These were Beryl Rubinstein, pianist, and the Institute String Quartet, made up of Andre de Ribaupierre, first violin, Charlotte DeMuth Williams, second violin, William Quincy Porter, viola, and Rebecca Haight, cello.

Mary Williams, soprano, a pupil of Francis Rogers, has been engaged as soloist by the choir of the Parmly Memorial Baptist Church of Jersey City for the coming year. Lillian Schneider, soprano, another pupil, has been engaged as soloist by the Third Church of Christian Scientist of Flushing.

A musical and informal reception was given on February 13 at the Anna Tomlinson School of Music, Berwin, Illinois. Those appearing on the program were Helen Goulding, Isabel Wood, Robert Teeter, Marjorie Skinner, Mary Floyd, Katherine Becker, Madeline Whitbeck, and Frances Noland.

Early this month at the De Witt Clinton High School, New York City, three pupils of Buzzi-Peccia gave a song recital. They were Mary Boyle, lyric soprano, Margarete Bergen, contralto, and Lillian Rosen, coloratura soprano. Several songs by Buzzi-Peccia were on the program.

These same three artists, together with Leonora Oppenheim, broadcasted from Station WOR recently. Mr. Buzzi-Peccia received many letters of congratulation from the radio audience.

Frederic Lamond has been engaged for the faculty of the Bush Conservatory by President Kenneth M. Bradley. Mr. Lamond will start in his duties with the school on June 29 and, in addition to his private lessons, will give five interpretation classes during the summer school at the conservatory.

Howard Hanson (left), Director of the Eastman School of Music, and Albert Coates, Conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, Find the Musical Digest So Interesting That Neither Can Wait for the Other to Finish It, and So They Read It Together.

On the evening of February 26 a piano recital will be given in the auditorium of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, by George Boyle, member of the faculty. The program will consist of works by Bach-Liszt, Bach-Busoni, Chopin, Debussy, and several works by Mr. Boyle, including his piano sonata. On the evening of February 28 Mr. Boyle will repeat this program in the concert hall of the Institute of Musical Art, New York, of whose faculty he is also a member.

At the Curtis Institute Mr. Boyle is teaching advanced students of the piano, while Mrs. Boyle is a member of the piano faculty also, and is in charge of students in the preparatory department. Mrs. Boyle teaches privately in Philadelphia as well.

Two series of faculty recitals have been inaugurated by the Institute, one series being held in the foyer of the Academy of Music and the other in the concert room of the Conservatory Department Building, Rittenhouse Square.

Mme. Charles Cahier, contralto, who is associated with Mme. Marcella Sembrich, Perley Dunn Aldrich, Horatio Connell and Mrs. Wood Stewart on the voice faculty of the Institute, opened the first series with her recital on Thursday, February 12.

Josef Hofmann, who is teaching piano at the Institute, and Carl Flesch, teaching violin, will give the second recital in this series, which will be held on March 5, and Horace Britt and Carlos Salzedo, teaching cello and harp respectively, will conclude the series with a recital on April 16.

The series of faculty recitals to be held in the concert room of the Conservatory Department were inaugurated Thursday evening, February 5, when Emanuel Zetlin gave a violin program.

Muriel Wilson, soprano, a pupil of William H. Rieger, has been engaged to sing in the Maine Festival.

The Delphian Society presented Robert Braun in an all Chopin program in the auditorium of the Braun School of Music, Pottsville, Pa., on February 16.

The latest development in preparation for the Music Week Association Contests for the present season is the organization in each district of a Contestants' Auxiliary. This Auxiliary will be made up of the 3,000 entries in the contests of last season, who will serve under the local District Chairman as an auxiliary to her present committee of prominent residents of the city.

The purpose of the Contestants' Auxiliary is to assist the District Chairman in distributing literature, in encouraging others in the district to enter the contests, and particularly to work for the development of better music and higher standards of musicianship in the home district.

The idea of forming this committee came from the contestants themselves as the result of their appreciation of the encouragement given them by the association last season when judges chosen from among the city's finest professional musicians journeyed to each of the forty-eight districts to hear the entries and give them constructive criticism.

Each contestant joining the Auxiliary in his district will be presented with a membership card and will then be an authorized representative of the Association working under the direction of his District Chairman.

In the case of orchestras and choruses the invitation is being sent by the District Chairman to the Director, who is to lay the matter before the members of his organization in the hope that each one of them individually will become a member of the Auxiliary.

The Director of the Association, Miss Isabel Lowden, in co-operation with the District Chairman, is now working out a definite program for the District Auxiliaries.

The present season's district contest opens in the Bronx, Queens and Richmond during the week of February 23, which week, with the week of March 2, will see the completion of the District contests in these three boroughs. The Borough Contest in each of these three boroughs will take place during the week of March 30. The weeks of March 9, 16, 23 and 30 will be given over to the District Contests in Manhattan and Brooklyn, their Borough Contests occurring during the week of April 27. The Interborough Contest for the final awards will occur in Music Week, May 3 to 9.

A violin recital by Frederick Brancher, director of the violin department of the Preiser School of Music of Chicago, was given recently at the school. Mrs. Preiser-Reasner accompanied Mr. Brancher.

Two pupils of Alexander Lambert, Vera Brodsky and Hannah Lefkowitz, made their debuts in a joint piano recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 6. In concertos by Moskowski and Grieg Mr. Lambert represented the orchestral accompaniments.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

PIETRO CIMINI
CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

The Story of Wagner

The Autobiography of the Great Richard Describes the Composer's Human Career.

THERE may be more accurate, more detailed, more critical, more searching biographies of Richard Wagner than the one which he wrote himself (My Life, by Richard Wagner: the authorized translation reissued in a single volume edition by Dodd, Mead & Company, New York), and then again there may not be. Certainly there can be none which is more interesting, more crammed with fascinating anecdotes.

The idea has become more or less accepted that Wagner disguised himself in his autobiography, which is, of course, not a complete story of his life (it carries only as far as his fiftieth year approximately). That will always be matter for controversy, but it can never be controverted that My Life is not at least as absorbing a chronicle, especially for a lover of Wagner's music, as the life of any musician who has ever lived or been imagined.

The Richard Wagner of My Life is the Richard Wagner full of the passions and the energy which are reflected in his operas. His mind had endless capacity for enthusiasms, some of them of the most ingenuous sort. Now he was fascinated with a certain type of water-cure, now he was a passionate teetotaller, now he was seized with a zeal for social reform, now he became terrorized by the musical influence of the Jews, and so on and on. And always he was not content to keep his ideas within himself. He was the incessant propagandist, writing poems and papers, declaiming and arguing in favor of his many principles.

One wonders often when he had time to write his great music dramas, each with its thousand pages of complex musical score. The answer is that his enthusiasm for each of his works in turn was greater than any other zeal with which he could be seized, and his capacity for work was even equal to that. He wrote the libretto of the Meistersinger in thirty days, and the tremendous overture to that opera he sketched out quite completely within a day.

Wagner's life was a strange one. He was continually ill, always moving from place to place, almost never happy in his family life until his later years. These were all manifestations, without a doubt, of his incessant restlessness. He had the energy of a youth until late in his career. He tells a delicious story of one night during his stay in Zurich when he was well into his thirties:

"Once when Professor Ettmuller, the Germanist and Edda scholar, had been invited to listen to a reading of my libretto of Siegfried and had been led home in a state of melancholy enthusiam, there was a regular outburst of wanton spirits among those who had remained behind. I conceived the absurd idea of lifting all the doors of the state official's house off their hinges. Herr Hagenbuch, another servant of the state, seeing what exertion this cost me, offered me the help of his gigantic physique, and with comparative ease we succeeded in removing every single door, and laying it aside, a proceeding at which Sulzer merely smiled good-naturedly."

These ebullitions of sheer spirit were frequent. At the time of the revolution in Vienna Wagner was tremendously moved to see the youthful idealists of the educated classes working side by side with the laborers. Immediately he inscribed a poem on the subject. He adds, "This I sent to the Oesterreischen Zeitung, where it was printed in their columns with my full signature."

As a man of thirty-seven he was riding to Venice with a friend. "As we were looking from the railway dike at Venice rising before us from the mirror of the water, Karl lost his hat out of the carriage owing to an enthusiastic movement of delight; I thought that I must follow suit, so I threw my hat out; consequently we arrived in Venice bareheaded."

Incidents of the kind are characteristic of the impulsive disposition of the man. His versatility of temper at times reached tragi-comic heights. At the time when he was immersed in the writing of the music of the Rheingold and the beginning of the Walkuere he was suffering continually from erysipelas and headaches; he was at the moment enthusiastic about the philosophy of Schopenhauer, which he propounded and read with gusto; he was reading the novels of Walter Scott with great enjoyment for recreation; he was cast into an agony of anxiety by the fatal sickness of his pet dog, and cared for him and finally buried him with genuine love and grief.

Such was the life of Wagner. He was continually annoyed by petty disturbances which seem ludicrous now, but which make it plain why he several times in his career was on the verge of seeking solitude and inactive quiet in South America, in the Swiss mountains, in Asia Minor—anywhere. When he was in Paris once the engineers and workmen of Louis Napoleon who were beautifying the city by straightening its streets cut a great excavation right before his doorstep while he was away from home. He returned and found himself exiled. Wherever he went he was annoyed by amateur musicians who interfered with his composition. In one residence he was fighting to overcome the annoyance of several pianists, when suddenly a flute-player commenced his practice. Wagner moved in disgust.

There are many touching incidents related in his story. Perhaps the most thrilling was the occasion of the first performance of Lohengrin grin in Weimar, an occasion from which he was absent. He writes, "We (his wife Minna, who had just begun to show symptoms of heart disease, and himself) spent the evening, while the first performance of Lohengrin was taking place in Weimar, in Lucerne at the Schwan inn, watching the clock as the hands went around, and marking the various times at which the performance presumably began, developed, and came to a close."

Wagner's career was hard. His recital of the Paris struggles and the difficulties which he encountered in getting Tristan produced for the first time leaves no doubt as to that. Gradually and relentlessly he began to get his due. He could hear his music played in public places in all the far cities which he happened to visit. His name became known, his opponents began to be more and more discredited. It is at that time that his fascinating story, My Life, comes to an end.

Photo by Elzin

MME. MARIE RAPPOLD

Has Been Selected for the Cast of Frank Patterson's Opera, The Echo, When It Will Be Given for the First Time Next June in Portland, Oregon.

A SONG OF DEVOTION, for chorus and soli, is an arrangement by Melchiorre Mauro-Cottone of Mendelssohn's First Organ Sonata. It is published by the H. W. Gray Company, New York. The arrangement consists of doubling with musical discrimination the voices of the organ composition with a chorus of four parts and a group of four soli. The text of the organ sonata is retained as accompaniment.

Also published by H. W. Gray is a Lenten Cantata by Leroy M. Rile, Golgotha. It is a meditation on the Seven Last Words, and is scored for four part chorus with soloists, accompanied by organ.

Concerning the mention of Edgar Stillman Kelley's Alice in Wonderland choruses (Oliver Ditson) last week in the New Music section of The Musical Digest, the composer writes, "Permit me to say that these choruses were written (at the suggestion of friends) to introduce various numbers of my orchestral suite, Alice in Wonderland. This series of pantomiming pictures was composed for the Norfolk Festival in June, 1919, and has been played by some of our leading orchestras. While the choruses are supposed to be explanatory of the suite, they are intended also to be used separately. This explains what and why they are, and will also serve to show that my work antedated by some years the similar suite of Mr. Deems Taylor, instead of following it, as your article implied."

Humpty Dumpty Vocal Exercises by W. Warren Shaw are a new issue in the Scholastic Series of G. Schirmer. Mr. Shaw has set to music with pedagogical purpose forty-five familiar jingles. Mr. Shaw intends these to be exercises for vocal students and to be songs for children in the nursery too. The melodies are planned in a manner which will give fundamental and varied exercise to the young singer. For the vocal student of comparatively mature years there is included the benefit of the practice in the articulation of the various sounds in the texts of the songs.

Mr. Shaw's introduction considers in sane and straightforward fashion some of the fundamental facts concerning voice placing, breath control, and singing in general.

Peasant Orchestra Arrives

On the S. S. Aquitania, which arrived in New York from England on Tuesday was the Polish Peasant Symphony Orchestra, consisting of forty-five musicians of peasant origin in Poland. They will go on a concert tour here.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

EVERY READER OF "THE MUSICAL DIGEST"
SHOULD READ
"Music & Letters"
The British Musical Quarterly
"By far the most interesting Musical Quarterly in the English Language."
—Daily Telegraph, October 11th, 1924.
"The most authoritative voice at present speaking on music."—Liverpool Post, September 25th, 1924.
100 pages; 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
LONDON: 22 ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2.

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

Giovanni Gallurese Has Its U. S. Premiere

Italo Montemezzi, Composer, Present at the Metropolitan Performance.

Italo Montemezzi's Giovanni Gallurese was given its first production outside of Italy by the Metropolitan Opera Company on Thursday evening. The first opera composed by Montemezzi, it was first presented in Turin in 1905 where Tullio Serafin conducted it, as he did last night. The composer himself was present and was called before the curtain.

According to Olin Downes of the Times, "it is an early and relatively unformed opera, frank in style, but usually undistinguished and weak in invention. Its interest is not inherent, but is due to the beautiful masterpiece which it preceded." Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) found it a "tedious and commonplace" work, with an "undistinguished" harmonic and melodic texture.

W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that, "in spite of a banal libretto it contains much good and some beautiful music," and the work as a whole "is of a creation admirable in general construction, but as yet unformed in style, brilliant in spots, seldom weak or tremulous, and luxuriously vocal."

Deems Taylor of the World agreed that it had a commonplace libretto and added that "the music does not fit the libretto in the only sense that would make it effective." In the opinion of Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail), the first act is the strongest; "the composer's driving force, his skillful handling of the orchestra for the heightening of dramatic effect, and more than a hint of the fine harmonic feeling that distinguishes his later scores support strongly the swelling lyric phrases of the voice parts." Ernest Newman of the Post wrote "It is simply negative music."

In the words of Mr. Taylor, Mr. Serafin "gave a splendidly vitalized reading of the score" and Mr. Gilman hailed him as "the true star of the performance . . . whose conducting was electrifying in its power, its rhythmic and dynamic flexibility, its pervasive mastery and verve and authority." Pitts Sanborn commented that the opera has the benefit of Mr. Serafin's "cherishing care and vitalizing energy," and Ernest Newman said he steered it "safely over the thin places in the ice."

To quote Mr. Downes, "the performance was principally conspicuous for the vivid and emotional portrayal" of Maria by Maria Mueller, who was "a dramatic reality." He also wrote that Lauri-Volpi "sang at the top of his voice music that often deserved no better treatment;" that Giuseppe Danise was in keeping with the character; and that Angelo Bada "provided one of the few effective moments by his taunting of the Rivegas."

The features of the evening, according to Mr. Gilman, were "the singing and acting of that admirable artist, Angelo Bada, in the small part of Bastiano; the ingratiating beauty and charm of Miss Mueller as Maria (though why, oh why, will she never stop smiling in her love scenes?); and the unaffected and manly Mr. Lauri-Volpi."

Mr. Taylor reported that Mr. Danise "was vocally good" and that Miss Mueller "sang with skill and sincerity but without much forcefulness;" and that Mr. Bada "as usual, turned a 'bit' into an achievement."

Miss Mueller was commended by Mr. Newman, and by Mr. Henderson for her work. Mr. Sanborn said that she had "the charm of youth and a fresh voice." Mr. Henderson was another to laud Mr. Bada for his excellent work. In the cast were also Giovanni Martino, who was commended by Mr. Henderson, Millo Picco, Adamo Didur, Vincenzo Reschiglian, Pompilio Malatesta, and Merle Alcock.

The ballet, led by Rosina Galli, the chorus, and the ensembles all came in for laudatory comment.

ITALO MONTEMEZZI
Was Present at the Metropolitan Opera Premiere of His Giovanni Gallurese on Thursday Evening.

Second Recital by Girl Violinist

Florence Stern, sixteen-year-old violinist, gave her second New York recital at Town Hall on February 12. To quote the Sun, Miss Stern had the "able assistance" of Joseph Adler at the piano. This reviewer found that Miss Stern again proved herself "a player of natural gifts, not yet fully developed." The World chronicler thought she played with "poise and technical security that justifies even earlier promises."

Lea Luboschutz Plays Again

In her second New York recital this season at Town Hall on February 6, Lea Luboschutz, violinist, "repeated and emphasized" the impression "of marked talent and power" (according to the Herald Tribune reviewer) made at her first American recital. Other writers agreed that she confirmed the excellent impression she had first made.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
BETTY COMPSON in
"NEW LIVES FOR OLD"
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
'SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS'
With JETTA GOUDAL
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

CAPITOL
Broadway at 51st Street
Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
"DADDY'S GONE A HUNTING"
Metro-Goldwyn Picture
With ALICE JOYCE and PERCY MARMONT
Presented by Louis B. Mayer
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

American composers with creditable opera scores may assemble outside New York's Metropolitan Opera House. The line forms where such lines usually form.

* * *

Even the robust Charlie Hackett could not resist successfully an attack of influenza. But the tenor is up and about again, after a week in bed, and will rejoin the Chicago Opera forces.

* * *

Max Rabinoff, of the American Institute for Operatic Art, expects to sail soon for Europe.

* * *

St. Louis Symphony patrons witnessed the conducting abilities, last week, of Howard Hanson, when he presided over the first performance in the Missouri city of his symphony.

* * *

Out in Portland, where a symphony society is growing—ambitiously and otherwise—they are in search of a fine conductor. Theodore Spiering has been invited to appear there as a guest leader.

* * *

Chattanooga is preparing for the second visit of the Chicago Opera Company. That progressive Tennessee city is becoming musically alert.

* * *

Mme. Amelita Galli-Curci has gone with her husband, Homer Samuels, to her home in the Catskills for a few days rest prior to starting on a tour which will take her to the Far East. The prima donna was ill during the final two weeks of her Metropolitan Opera engagement.

* * *

That Round-Table at Keen's Chop House is a lively affair. Some of the best known musical folk in New York gather there every Monday noon—and there are always some interesting discussions.

* * *

It was astonishing—during the reception and dance given a few evenings ago by Alma Gluck Zimbalist for her niece, Miss Joseffa Hofmann—to see how many musicians will insist on dancing out of time.

* * *

Are you entered in the Brunswick's music memory radio broadcast contest! Blanks at your nearest dealer; broadcasting every Tuesday night—until further notice.

* * *

The Victor, it is understood, is about through with its experimental broadcastings. Mme. Toti dal Monte and Giuseppe de Luca are the artists announced for the next Victor affair.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser extends congratulations to Mme. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, on the eve of her golden anniversary as a professional pianiste.

* * *

Will Clark Shaw, Forrest Lamont, and Harry Beattie (of the Chicago Opera Company) kindly report on the progress of their California oil-well? If it pans out, Sam Insull need not go outside his organization to find the wherewithal to meet the annual deficits. A thosuand barrels a day will keep the creditors away.

* * *

Leo Ornstein is no longer the "wild man" of composers. He seems to have become the "big man," judging by the notices his piano concerto got at its first presentation in New York . . . with the composer playing it at a Philadelphia Orchestra concert.

By the way, does Leo attend, we wonder, any of those affairs which are taking place so regularly in New York's concert auditoriums? We mean the programs offered by ultra-modernists who have a fondness for milk-bottle music and such.

* * *

Twenty dollars a ticket was gotten by some speculators for seats to the farewell appearance, this season, of Mme. Jeritza at the Metropolitan.

* * *

That very day Manager Francis Coppicus received a newspaper clipping from one of his local manager clients, with a note pointing out the fine publicity he had secured for the soprano for her approaching appearance in that city in concert. It showed a photographic reproduction of Mme. Jeritza, beneath which was printed an Associated Press dispatch touching on the little difference between the diva and Beniamino Gigli in that now memorable representation of Tosca.

* * *

Back to the Hurok managerial fold will go Max Endicoff. He has been active as personal representative for the past two seasons—having left Mr. Hurok for that purpose.

* * *

Incidentally, the Hurok offices are to be moved from New York's Aeolian Hall to the Manhattan Opera House, which is having its attractions booked by this management.

* * *

Dusolina Giannini will depart shortly for Havana to fill concert engagements. This young soprano is doing a bit of traveling.

* * *

So, too, is John Charles Thomas, whose engagements will keep him away from New York town until early April.

* * *

After hearing Giovanni Gallurese, at its American premiere, we must confess to a preference for the composer's L'Amore dei Tre Re.

* * *

Yes, and we are also of the opinion that there are an even dozen of American operas better deserving of a chance at the Metropolitan.

* * *

An heir—or an heiress—is expected shortly by Maestro and Mrs. Giorgio Polacco.

* * *

Another few weeks music cricketing for Ernest Newman, then the distinguished English writer will depart his New York Evening Post desk and sail homewards.

* * *

Across the river Herbert J. Braham has been accomplishing such fine things with the Brooklyn Orchestral Society that two hundred of his admirers brought him over to Sherry's Wednesday night where much finc food was served . . . and after the feasting Giuseppe Bamboscheck, Judge Frank E. Crane and Thomas L. Leeming made congratulatory speeches.

* * *

Anna Marie Tennant, who writes about things musical for the Springfield (Ohio) News, sings and plays the piano. She is the originator of a "pianologue cycle" which she has been giving on several programs out in the Buckeye State.

* * *

Mrs. C. B. Klingensmith and Mrs. Austin Gillen, of the Youngstown Monday Musical Club, are in town listening things over.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Lully and
the Paris Opera
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 20 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Edward Johnson, American tenor, has begun his season with the Metropolitan Opera Company. The high point of his appearances there this year will be reached in the coming revival of Debussy's Pelleas and Melisande, in which he will sing the role of Pelleas.

Bulletins of News

The Chicago Civic Opera Company, which is on tour at present, is presenting Boris Godunoff this afternoon and Tannhaeuser tonight in Dallas, Tex. Tulsa, Okla., will hear La Gioconda tomorrow and Boris Godunoff the day after, and St. Louis will hear Gioconda Friday and Mefistofele and Tannhaeuser on Saturday. On Monday, Mefistofele will be produced in Cincinnati.

Washington, Feb. 26.—As a part of the inauguration festivities in Washington, D. C., Aida will be presented (in Italian) at the New Auditorium Tuesday evening by an American cast which includes Frances Peralta, Jeanne Gordon, Hunter Kimball, and John Charles Thomas. Jacques Samossoud will conduct.

The Musical Digest is informed that the Chicago Civic Opera Company's prospectus for next season will include the announcement of revivals of Xavier Leroux's Le Chemineau and Maurice Ravel's L'Heure Espagnole, and the premiere of a new American opera by a Boston composer whose identity will be disclosed shortly.

Chicago, March 1.—Mrs. Herbert Johnson, wife of the business manager of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, who has not been in good health for some time, is undergoing treatment in the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. It is expected that Mrs. Johnson will remain in the hospital for several weeks.

Chicago, February 28.—A contract has been signed whereby the ninety-two members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra will receive salary increases of $5 a week with a minimum of $80 and a maximum of close to $200. Extra men who play two or three concerts a week with the orchestra were given increases from $50 to $55.

Walter Henry Rothwell, director of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, has been engaged to conduct the performance of Frank Patterson's The Echo which will be produced at the biennial of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Port'and, Ore., in June, with a cast including Marie Rappold, Forrest Lamont, and Lawrence Tibbett.

Stravinsky's Petrouchka will be revived at the Metropolitan Opera on March 13. Tullio Serafin will conduct, and the cast will include Mme. Galli and Messrs. Bonfiglio, Bolm, and Bartik.

Lawrence Tibbett, American baritone, will give his first New York recital since he has been appearing with the Metropolitan Opera Company, at Carnegie Hall on Monday evening, March 16.

Smallens Re-engaged for Philadelphia Civic Opera

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 27.—Alexander Smallens has been re-engaged as musical director of the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company for two more seasons, according to an announcement made by Mrs. Henry M. Tracy, president of the organization. Ten performances will be given under Mr. Smallens' direction next season from November to April—Aida, Jewels of the Madonna, Faust, Cavalleria Rusticana with Pagliacci, La Navarraise with Gianni Schicchi, Carmen, Rigoletto, Samson and Delilah, Tosca and Tannhaeuser.

Hageman May Lead Los Angeles Opera

Invitation Is Extended and Contract Ready to Sign.

Negotiations are pending between the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, of which Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe is president, and Richard Hageman of New York, looking towards the engagement of the latter to be the first conductor of the fortnight of performances to be given in the southern California City. The contract is now ready to be signed. and was sent by Mr. Hageman last week to Business Manager Merle Armitage, who is in Los Angeles.

"The execution of the document may be expected shortly," said John T. Adams of the Wolfsohn Bureau (which has been commissioned to book artists for the Los Angeles Association). This will insure to the Western organization an opera conductor who has served both the New York Metropolitan and the Chicago companies. Following is a list of Los Angeles citizens who thus far have enrolled as founders of the association:

Lewis W. Andrews, Franklin E. Rising, J. C. Stubbs, Louis Nordlinger, E. Avery McCarthy, Jacob Steinberg, Mina Hershey, Wetherby-Kayser Company, Dr. Granville MacGowan, Mrs. F. W. Davey, Mrs. W. H. Russell, Mrs. W. L. Honnold, Mrs. Hugh Livingstone Macneil, W. H. Anderson, J. Marcel Annechini, A. N. Kemp, Samuel M. Newmark, John E. Marble, Lowell Frost, Walter T. McGinley, Clara Baldwin Stocker, C. C. Mangenheimer, Myron Hunt, Mrs. William Lee Wollett, Mrs. Norman Bridge, Mrs. Arthur Wright, Mrs. Walter P. Story, Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton, Judge B. F. Bledsoe, O. A. Vickrey, Harry Halderman, W. F. Peterson, Mrs. C. R. Stephens, Harold V. Spencer, Joseph B. Dabney, Louis M. Cole, Fletcher Ford, A. S. Bridges, Queen N. Boardman, Mrs. J. H. Norton, C. E. Doheney, Lois Allen Wrenn, Roland P. Bishop, Clair Woolwine, Mrs. James W. John, P. H. Booth, P. A. English, C. F. Rosecranz, J. M. Hixon, S. M. Haskins, R. T. Burge, Charles F. Stern, Mrs. R. D. Shepherd, George Leslie Smith, Mrs. E. A. Bryant, E. H. Furman, Anna F. Doolittle, Mrs. Enoch Pepper, Edward H. Uhl, W. A. Clark, Jr., Bishop Cantwell, Mrs. C. H. Crawford, A. S. Gibbs. Mrs. Oscar Trippett, Arnold Faerber, Harvey S. Mudd, Secondo Guasti, Dr. F. M. Pottinger, M. H. Whittier, F. E. Woodley, Harry Culver, William G. Kerckhoff, W. I. Hollingsworth, John S. Cravens, Guerney Newlin, S. W. Mudd. J. E. Coon, Judge E. M. Ross, Harry R. Callender, Mrs. Emily Benedict, G. Allen Hancock, Salvatore Monaco, Walter R. Simon, Mrs. W. C. Brown, Fred E. Keeler, Sherman Clay & Co., James T. Fitzgerald. L. D. Stale, Paul G. Hoffman, Robert I. Rogers, Dr. Kendall P. Frost, West Hughes, Mrs. E. J. Fleming, J. Dabney Day, Irving H. Hellman, Mrs. Lillie N. McCuster, William M. Garland, Mrs. Fred H. Bixby, Edward C. Harwood, Llewellyn Bixby and Mrs. Nettie Case.

Louisiana Educators Prepare Constructive Plan for Convention

Sessions to Cover Two Days Will Begin March 20 in Baton Rouge.

DRIVE FOR MEMBERS

Baton Rouge, La.—Preparations are being made here for the annual convention of the Louisiana Music Teachers' Association, which will open its session of two days on March 20 next.

Officers of the association realize the need to carry forward its purposes, and to that end there will be efforts made to increase the membership. Interest in the future of this body has been shown in the care devoted to the program. It is representative of music education needs of today, and there are papers to be read which disclose wisdom in the choice of the subjects—one of which is "The Music Newspaper and Magazine," which the association believes is being staunchly sustained by The Musical Digest. Following is the program complete:

Friday, March 20, 9:00 A. M.

Registration — Department of Music — Louisiana State University.

9:30 A. M.

Address of Welcome—Colonel Thomas D. Boyd, President of L. S. U.

Response—Mrs. J. H. Pumphrey of Gibsland, First Vice President of the L. M. T. A.

Vocal Solos — Miss Julia Morse, Department of Music, L. S. U.

10:30 A. M.

PIANO CONFERENCE

Mrs. W. A. Poche of Donaldsonville, Presiding.

Bach, the Master Musician — Miss Elma Werner, Department of Music of the State Normal College, Natchitoches. Miss Werner will illustrate her talk at the piano.

Playing in Public—Mr. Walter Goldstein, Department of Music, Newcomb College, New Orleans.

12:00 NOON

Chamber Music by the Louisiana State University String Quartet.

Afternoon Session, 2:00 P. M.

VOICE CONFERENCE

Miss Julia Morse, L. S. U., Presiding.

Some Vocal Problems — A Round Table Discussion open to all musicians present. Mr. Leon Ryder Maxwell of Newcomb College, President of the Music Teachers' National Association, will lead the discussions.

2:15 P. M.

National Music Week—

The Musical Newspaper and Magazine—

4:00 P. M.

The Louisiana State University Semi-Chorus—H. W. Stopher, Director.

8:00 P. M.

Concert by the Louisiana State University Orchestra—H. W. Stopher, Conductor.

Saturday, March 21, 9:00 A. M.

CREDITS CONFERENCE

The Louisiana Music Teachers' Association and School Credits for the Outside Study of Music by High School Pupils.

The Mississippi Plan for Accrediting the Study of Music Outside the School Room—Miss Minnie B. Austin, President of the Mississippi Music Teachers' Association, and Chairman of the Mississippi Accrediting Commission.

The State of Louisiana and the Music Teacher.

10:00 A. M.

BUSINESS MEETING

2:00 P. M.

Music in the Louisiana State School for the Blind—Professor W. B. Clarke, Director of Music.

Music in the State Rallies—Professor H. W. Stopher, Director of Music, Louisiana State University.

Songs by the University Quartets.

Music in the State University—Miss Carrie R. Wallace, Department of Music, L. S. U.

Singing by the L. S. U. Glee Club—Prof. H. W. Stopher, Director.

4:00 P. M.

Meeting of the newly-elected officers and parish representatives.

Beethoven's Ninth Is Given in Philadelphia

Damrosch Is Conductor; Stokowski Leads Novelty and Casals Is Heard.

Philadelphia, Feb. 24.—Two symphony concerts, a cello recital by Pablo Casals, and entertainments by the Philadelphia Music Club, the Matinee Musical Club, and the Women's Symphony, contributed to the musical activities of the past week here.

The New York Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Walter Damrosch in his last appearance here of the season. There was but one number on the program, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the choral parts sung by a local chorus made up of members of the Matinee Musical Club and the Glee Club of the University of Pennsylvania. It was, to quote the Record, a "memorable performance."

The soloists were Ruth Rodgers, Helena Marsh, Charles Stratton, and Fraser Gange. According to the writer in the Public Ledger, "the symphony was beautifully played and interpreted most interestingly by Dr. Damrosch. The chorus was magnificent in the fresh youthful quality of the voices, the enthusiasm of the singers and the perfect manner in which they had been trained by Mrs. Helen Pulaski Innes." Other writers joined in praising the concert. Mr. Damrosch was presented with a wreath by Dr. Herbert J. Tily in commemoration of his fortieth anniversary as director of the orchestra.

The novelty offered by Leopold Stokowski on the all-Russian program at the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra on Saturday was Prokofieff's Scythian Suite. Linton Martin of the North American wrote that "the music, while entirely unconventional, is always intelligible" and spoke of the "bizarre orchestral coloring in which the dissonances have both rhyme and reason, and much dramatic contrast of mood and idea."

Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) commented that, as the Suite harks back to a race of people who were all that was rough and crude, the composer "has made music singularly appropriate." The Ledger writer admired some of its "remarkable tonal coloring," but found the composer still under the influence of Debussy and Moussorgsky in spite of the originality of orchestration.

Pablo Casals' recital on Saturday was received by the reviewers with the customary enthusiasm following a concert by this cellist.

According to the North American, it was "the most perfect demonstration of the ideal balancing of the intellectual and emotional in music." The Inquirer reviewer joined in the praise of this "sincere artist" and the writer in the Ledger remarked on the "exquisite taste" with which he performs each piece. The Record chronicler wrote that "he held his audience entranced by the beauty of his interpretations and the rare power of expression he possesses." The writer also congratulated Edouard Gendron, assisting pianist, for his "exceptional skill in accompanying."

Johnson Applauded In Romeo and Juliet

Queena Mario Well Received in Philadelphia; Maria Mueller Makes Debut.

Philadelphia, Feb. 26. — The two most recent productions here by the Metropolitan Opera Company were Romeo and Juliet last week and La Boheme on Tuesday evening. In the former Edward Johnson was heard for the first time this season in Philadelphia, and in the latter Maria Mueller made her debut.

The cast of Romeo and Juliet included, besides Mr. Johnson, Queena Mario, Leon Rothier, Henriette Wakefield, Raymonde Delaunois, George Meader, Giuseppe de Luca, Millo Picco and William Gustafson. Louis Hasselmans conducted and "made the score glow with beauty through his sympathetic conducting" (Linton Martin).

In the opinion of the Record reviewer "there is probably no better lyric tenor before the operatic public" than Mr. Johnson, who "measures up to the highest standards." Mr. Muschamp said he was romantic in bearing and sang the music fluently, and Mr. Martin praised him for singing "with artistry and ardor." The Ledger writer also commended him, and the audience called him to the curtain often with insistent applause.

The Record writer found Miss Mario "slender of figure, with a rare gracefulness and with a voice of utmost loveliness. . . . Her middle register is quite as beautiful as her fine higher voice and her coloratura work was charming." Mr. Muschamp thought her a "good looking Juliet," who sang the music acceptably. According to the Ledger, "her vocal work grew better as the opera progressed." Mr. Martin said she brought sincerity to her acting and that her singing was better in the lyric passages than in the coloratura Waltz Song. She, too, was well received.

Of others in the cast Mr. Rothier received particularly good comment. As Mr. Muschamp put it, he was "traditionally effective."

* * *

In Boheme, according to the Public Ledger reviewer, Mme. Mueller "fairly swept the audience off its feet by the superb quality of her voice, which is one of the really great vocal instruments of the operatic stage."

This writer also praised her technique and her "tonal expression of any shade of emotion." Linton Martin of the North American asserted that "seldom has Mimi been sung with more compelling loveliness, for Mueller combines exceptional volume with caressing color of tone and admirable phrasing . . . she acts with sincerity and charm." According to Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer), Mme. Mueller has a voice "of beautiful quality and sings most agreeably" and is "an artist of fine talent." The Record commended not only her "agreeable presence and acting ability," but her "voice of great power and beauty," which she uses "with the surety of a trained artist."

In the opinion of the chronicler, Beniamino Gigli had never before sung better, and the writer in the Ledger wrote that "it is unnecessary to speak of the consummate vocal art of Mr. Gigli. . . . He was in superb voice." Mr. Martin referred to him as "golden voiced" and said his "beautiful tones found abundant scope" in his music, and he "seemed more spontaneous histrionically." Mr. Gigli's efforts were also praised by Mr. Muschamp.

Linton Martin noted that Louise Hunter as Musetta acted vivaciously and sang "adequately," while Mr. Muschamp commented that she "showed quite the right spirit in her playing and singing." The Ledger enthused over her as "the best Musetta the Metropolitan has presented here in a long time. She has a voice of exceptional register, evenness and flexibility, is charming in stage appearance and is apparently a natural actress." The reviewer in the Record agreed that Miss Hunter was excellent in the role.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

WEDNESDAY

Romeo and Juliet—with Mme. Bori and Messrs. Johnson, de Luca, Rothier, and Didur; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

THURSDAY

Die Walkuere (matinee)—with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen, Rethberg, and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, and Gustafson; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Pagliacci and Coq d'Or (evening)—the former with Mme. Mario and Messrs. Martinelli and Danise, and with Mr. Papi conducting; the latter with Mmes. Sabanieva, Ryan, Alcock, Galli, and Rudolph; and Messrs. Didur, Bloch, Kosloff, Bartik, and Bonfiglio; Mr. Bamboschek conducting.

FRIDAY

Rigoletto—with Mmes. de Hidalgo and Gordon; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Lohengrin (matinee) — with Mmes. Mueller and Branzell; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Falstaff (evening)—with Mmes. Bori, Telva, Mario, and Howard; and Messrs. Scotti, Tokatyan, and Tibbett; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Giovanni Gallurese — with Mme. Mueller and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, and Martino; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Maier and Pattison Appear in Detroit

Detroit, Feb. 24.—Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, ensemble pianists, were the soloists at the concert last Thursday of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ossip Gabrilowitsch, in C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in E flat major and the Concerto Pathetique by Liszt. Two other features of the program were the first performance in America of Herman Hans Wetzler's Visions, conducted by the composer, and Victor Kolar's In Memory of a Friend, composed after the death of Victor Herbert.

According to Charlotte M. Tarsney of the Free Press, the Messrs. Maier and Pattison "added immeasurably to the magnificent impression they have already created here," and W. K. Kelsey (News) wrote that "again they displayed that remarkable union of soul and technique." Ralph Holmes of the Times commented on their display of "double keyboard virtuosity" and said the Bach received a performance in which the soloists and orchestra "were in happy accord."

Mr. Holmes found Visions a work of "gigantic proportions," proving the sincerity of the composer as well as his "facility of expression." He added that Mr. Wetzler "wielded the baton with authority." It was a "bewildering" work to Mr. Kelsey, "rich and rare in the matter of noise, and considerably less in the way of music." Miss Tarsney found that the composer showed "a fine sense of structure, broad knowledge of orchestral timbres and excellent ability to create the mood desired. The work is highly complicated, too much so to be completely grasped at one performance."

This writer found "fervor and genuine feeling" in Mr. Kolar's work. It "adds further laurels to the repute of our orchestra's assistant conductor," wrote Mr. Holmes, and Mr. Kelsey thought it an "impressive" composition.

Washington Heights Club Concert

Michael Anselmo gave a violin recital under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club in Aeolian Hall, New York, on the evening of February 22. "His playing showed a notable advance from earlier in the season," reported the reviewer of the Herald Tribune, "with a full round tone preserving its quality in rapid passages, and thorough technical competence."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

JOSEF ADLER
Teacher of Piano
ACCOMPANIST
137 West 86th St. New York
Phone Schuyler 3580

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

Howard Hanson Leads Symphony in St. Louis

Rudolph Ganz Returns to Post; Percy Grainger Plays Grieg Concerto.

St. Louis, Feb. 25.—A guest conductor, a "first performance," and a soloist featured the twelfth concert of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, Rudolph Ganz conductor. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, led the orchestra through his own Nordic Symphony, and Percy Grainger was soloist in Grieg's A minor Concerto.

Richard Spamer, of the Globe-Democrat, asserted that Mr. Grainger again proved himself a "true poet of the keyboard, a pianist by the grace of inspiration and musicianship." According to Richard L. Stokes of the Post-Dispatch, he has developed the "brilliance and poetry" of this Concerto until his is "the ablest and most authoritative exposition" in the world. The rule against encores was broken following insistent recalls from the audience.

Mr. Hanson's Symphony, to quote Mr. Stokes, "a work of spacious dimensions, proved a rugged, virile and eloquent outpouring of tone, though lack of contrast" gave the impression of a single mood. "His dynamic, full-bodied and rich-hued music excited the large audience," continued this reviewer, who added that the young conductor and composer "has the personal impact, the oratorical nervous force and at least the technical beginning of a distinguished orchestral leader. Vitality and conviction radiated from his presence, and the orchestra . . . responded with inspiration."

In the opinion of Blanche Furth Ullman of the Star, "both as a composer and conductor, Hanson scored a remarkable success. . . . As conductor, Hanson is dynamic, magnetic and compelling." Mr. Spamer wrote that the Symphony "created a genuine sensation yesterday, first by its intrinsic worth, then by the high pitch of nervosity with which the composer conducted, and lastly by the splendid subjection of the orchestra to his direction." Mr. Hanson was recalled four times by the audience, and, to again quote Mr. Spamer, "by this presentation of his Nordic Symphony, he laid a local foundation of expectation of better and yet better things from this new American composer."

Mr. Ganz conducted Saint-Saens' The Deluge in which Concertmaster Gusikoff appeared as violin soloist. According to Mr. Stokes, he played "with sparkling zest and succulent beauty of tone." He was commended by other chroniclers.

Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist, was the soloist with this orchestra on February 13, and the week previous Carl Flesch, violinist, appeared. At this latter pair of concerts Frederick Fischer conducted in place of Mr. Ganz, who had a slight attack of influenza. At the Sunday popular concert, John Corigliano, violinist, was soloist and received commendatory press notices.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

Mlle. Boulanger Makes Her Debut in Boston

Plays Copland Composition With Orchestra; People's Symphony Appears.

Boston, Feb. 25.—Nadia Boulanger, French organist, made her first appearance here Friday as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The two novelties played by Mlle. Boulanger were Aaron Copland's Symphony for organ and orchestra and For the Funeral of a Soldier by her sister, the late Lili Boulanger. Other numbers played were Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, a Concerto for organ and orchestra by Handel, and Liszt's tone poem, Tasso.

Philip Hale of the Herald said Mlle. Boulanger played "with technical skill and as an accomplished musician." According to Warren Storey Smith, there were in her performance "the workings of a forceful personality and the skill of the virtuoso." The Globe reviewer commented that the soloist proved herself "an admirable organist and a superb musician." In the Transcript, she was lauded as "an organist of distinction" and "a musician of rare attainment."

The Copland Symphony was received with applause and some hissing. In the Globe it was referred to as "original and powerful music" and the composer praised for "a great gift, which may turn out to be real genius, and is certainly talent of a rare and high order." Mr. Hale wrote that the music "is definitely planned and gives proof of the composer s talent. It is an honest work, this symphony. . . ." In Mr. Smith's opinion, there was "a dearth of salient musical ideas" in the work, although he found "striking measures . . . dynamically brutal." The Transcript writer considered it a "masterpiece of logical formal construction, of adroit juxtaposition and successive evolution of moods" but questioned the value of writing it the language that he uses.

According to Mr. Hale, the composition by Lili Boulanger (which was composed when she was seventeen) "is a majestic lamentation, epic in its grief." The Globe writer considered it "pathetically and simply eloquent." Effective and eloquent were the adjectives applied to the work by the writer in the Transcript. In spite of the youth of the composer, Mr. Smith felt the piece was "relatively characterless."

At the fifteenth concert given by the People's Symphony, conducted by Emil Mollenhauer, the soloist was Ethel Woodman, contralto. The program included Beethoven's First Symphony, Saint-Saens' Night in Lisbon, and Strauss' Don Juan. Both soloist and orchestra received commendation from the newspaper reviewers.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

MISS ANNA FITZIU
Soprano, Sang at the Last Concert of the Biltmore Hotel Series in New York.

Elsa Alsen Appears in Fourth Settlement Concert

The fourth of the series of artists' concerts under the auspices of the Music School Settlement Association was given by the State Symphony Orchestra, Ignatz Waghalter conducting, with Elsa Alsen as soloist.

Mme. Alsen sang Elsa's Dream and the Liebestod, and the orchestral numbers were the Rienzi Overture and excerpts from Lohengrin, Tannhauser and Die Meistersinger. The World reviewer spoke of the limitations of the concert stage with which "the lustrous, warm and compassionate quality of this voice" had to cope, but added that "even under these handicaps, however, her singing has an ample resonance and a noble moulding of phrases which is a joy to the ear."

The writer in the Sun did not find Mme. Alsen in her best form in Elsa's Dream, but thought that she was more herself in the later song. According to the Herald Tribune writer, she sang "an amply dramatic Liebestod last night, her clear, sustained notes having ample power in its climax." To quote the Telegram-Mail, "the great golden voice of Mme. Alsen" improved as the evening advanced. The Times reviewer said that "her voice, which is on the operatic scale, rang through space with dramatic power and effect."

Arthur Bliss Guest Leader in Los Angeles

Conducts His Compositions; Helena Marsh Assists at Popular Concert.

Los Angeles, Feb. 20.—Arthur Bliss, English composer, appeared as guest conductor with the Philharmonic Orchestra Friday in his Melee Fantasque and in a group of melodies by Purcell, orchestrated by Mr. Bliss.

According to Bruno David Ussher of the Express, Mr. Bliss' Melee is "modern in melody, harmony, quick changes of time, uneven phrases, but strikingly uniform in the spirit of the title . . . it is a compelling opus." The Daily News found his composition "ultra-modern, throbbing with a wild, unusual rhythm. The idea for this is happily conceived and brilliantly expressed. Mr. Bliss is a masterful conductor and a master of orchestrion."

The writer in the Examiner considered the Melee "a vividly colored, sophisticated, ultra-modern fantasy . . . Mr. Bliss showed skill as a conductor." Bertha McCord Knisely wrote in the Record that Mr. Bliss "is one of those wholesome poets apparently imbued with the rhythmic urge of the great natural world" and that his arrangement of the Purcell pieces is "pleasant enough surcease from modern bedlam."

In the opinion of Carl Bronson of the Herald, the guest proved to be "a fervent and graceful conductor and knows how to point his own scores," and his work is "a very intricate piece of scoring, and one in which he chose his colors at random and yet with great skill."

Helena Marsh, contralto, was the soloist of the eighth popular concert played this season by the Orchestra, under Walter Henry Rothwell's baton, last week. Carl Bronson reported that Miss Marsh "made a very warm impression with her excellent singing and rather unusual voice" and commended the "satisfying depth and beautiful poise" with which she delivered the aria from Gluck's Orieo.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

Elena GERHARDT
Management: GEORGE ENGLES—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 20

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Walter E. Koons, Executive Editor Alexander Fried, Managing Editor

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary.

Bruno Zirato, Business Manager

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Modern Meowings

With every desire to grant reasonable freedom to the modern composer, The Musical Digest views with occasional wonderment the music of various character that is being written by members of those societies which, in their New York concerts, present that music for public hearing.

Tolerance is a worthy attribute; but at times, during the current music season, it has been twisted and bent by some of the sounds put forward as worthy of serious consideration. There have been moments when the most benignant listener must have wondered whether the composer was really in earnest, or whether he was testing the gullibleness of those auditors who, for the sake of art progress, attend performances of music which it is known will be of an iconoclastic nature.

After the most recent bizarre program of the League of Composers the conclusion was doubtless reached by some folk that our futuristic-composers are a few hundred years ahead of their time. There may possibly be something in these works which the average mortal of today fails to appreciate. Perhaps their melodic invention, and their dissonance which forms the harmonic (?) portion of the fabric, is too good for the majority who have been brought up on Bach, Beethoven and Brahms. In that case, it is a pity that those who have long loved Schubert and Schumann, and who turn approvingly upon the music of Mozart and Haydn and Weber, fail to discover in those musicians so much that is trifling (judged by the disregard for their form and style which these futuristic idol-smashers exhibit).

It may be that milk bottles can be employed to some fitting music purpose. It is possible that clanking chains, and the rattling of tin pans have places in a piece of music designed to be descriptive. But The Musical Digest doubts it. After patient waiting, and careful analysis, the conclusion has been reached that many of the weird-sounding compositions which have been thrust upon the New York public during the past year or two are the products of a false estimate of musical sounds.

If these fantastically inclined composers imagine that they are contributing anything of permanent value to music literature they are deceiving themselves.

If they believe that they are aiding in creating a new idiom, they have missed their calling.

If they nurse the idea that their wild-and-woolly sounds (ineptly classified as music) disclose a scrap of originality then they have passed from music normality into the realm which leads to music chaos.

The world has been passing through a disordered stage during the past ten years. It has not yet emerged completely from that stage. But it soon will, and when it does the greater portion will have no time and no desire for idiotic sounds which are mislabeled "music."

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

NEW YORK is learning to hiss music which it does not like. More than one of the novelties offered this season at symphony concerts have been audibly disapproved, in at least two cases in the presence of the composers themselves. Abroad the tradition of the concert hall is different. Near-riots are not infrequent in Paris auditoriums when moot music is played. This has always been so. The early performances of Tannhaeuser in that city were greeted with such noise that at times the music could not be heard at all!

THERE is a good story told about Verdi in this connection (I am indebted for the details to Mr. Fritz Reiner, versatile leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra). One day during the time when enthusiasm in Italy for his new opera, Aida, was at its height, the Italian composer received a letter from a stranger. "Some days ago," the man wrote, "I went to Parma to hear this much-touted opera of yours. One-half hour before the rise of the curtain I was in my seat, N. 120. I had great expectations regarding Aida. During the performance I admired the mise-en-scene, heard the singing of the various fine artists with much pleasure, and paid careful attention from the beginning to the end in order to miss nothing.

"After the opera was over I asked myself whether it had satisfied me. In all honesty I had to reply in the negative. I returned to my home in Regio. On the way I kept my ears open to hear what others had to say. The consensus, without a doubt, was that here was indeed a great masterpiece. Thought I, I must be wrong.

"I decided therefore that I must hear the opera again."

VERDI'S frank correspondent went on to describe his difficulties in getting in to hear the second performance. And his verdict: "There is nothing in this opera which is capable of arousing any sort of enthusiasm. When it has been played two or three times more, it will be put aside and remain forever forgotten in the dusty archives of some busy theatre.

"Now then, dear Verdi, you can hardly have any idea how discontented I am to have spent this much money, especially since I am the member of a large family which is much in need of funds. Sometimes the sum appears to me in my dreams and troubles me frightfully. I demand therefore that you return to me the sum of thirty-one lire eighty expended as follows:

"Fare to the theatre	L.	2.60
Fare on return	L.	3.30
Theatre tickets	L.	8.00
Very bad supper at the station	L.	2.00
Total	L.	15.90
Second performance	L.	15.90
Grand Total	L.	31.80

"I think that you will relieve me of my regrets, and in expectation thereof I thank you from the bottom of my heart,

"PROSPERO BERTANI."

WHEREUPON Verdi wrote to his agent, Ricordi, "To spare this poor fellow his horrible dreams, please see that he is paid this bill. However . . . pay for his supper? Certainly not! He should have had his supper at home."

When the bill had been paid Verdi received from Signor Bertani a receipt: "The undersigned has received from Maestro G. Verdi the sum of twenty-seven lire eighty in Italian money in return for expenses undertaken in hearing two performances of the latter's opera Aida, the composer finding it just that I should be reimbursed since the opera was not to my liking. At the same time I promise faithfully not to go to hear any of the new operas of Maestro Verdi unless I am prepared to undergo the expense entirely myself, regardless of what my judgment may be concerning the merits of the same. In good faith,

"PROSPERO BERTANI."

I WAS in Carnegie Hall last Wednesday evening when a certain piece of music was being played. During the fourth movement of the symphony in question I said to myself, "That is pure Strauss. It is Till Eulenspiegel being hung."

A few minutes later I said again, "This is pure Wagner. It is the fire music from Die Walkuere."

Two dead steals, one might imagine. The music which was being played was Hector Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony. It had its first performance in 1830 when Richard Wagner was a rather wayward youth of seventeen, and when Richard Strauss was thirty-four years short of being born.

Finding the forebears of musical styles and ideas is fascinating until it gets to be an obsession. Then it is a nuisance. Often it is disillusioning, one must admit. Incidentally when I heard the cadenza on a G string which commences Ravel's new violin piece, Tzigane, I thought of this as an original and fascinating musical idea. Alas, it too has a musical father (not to say twin brother). One need search no farther than Strauss' Don Quixote (the cello solo in the fifth variation) to find the next of kin.

IN reporting the progress of music a great deal is said about refreshed technique in composition and about new devices in orchestration. Very little is said about new ways of building halls.

In the auditorium of the future I think that the cheap seats will no longer be up in the air. It is going to be discovered shortly that the best place from which to hear symphonic music is the gallery. Especially does this seem to be true of modern music, most of which is built on a large scale for great combinations of instruments. The blending and balance of parts are not likely to be nearly so good down below as they are up high.

Of course it may be necessary to build the hall of the future into the ground instead of on top of it. In that way the higher priced seats will be kept near to the street, and those who pay less will still have the pleasure of climbing some flights of stairs, this time after the concert, not before.

THE hall of the future will be improved in another way. It will be built in such a manner that the voices of the managers will not boom through the house as they stand in the corridors outside the doors and discuss res publicas during their concerts. That, of course, is looking a long way ahead.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Lully and the Paris Opera

He Did Not Found the Famous French Institution Although His Work Was Important in Its History.

By IRVING SCHWERKE

THE fiftieth anniversary of the present Paris Opera was elaborately celebrated at the beginning of this year, the actual date of the anniversary falling on January 5. The occasion naturally turned the attention of music lovers to considerations of the history of the Paris Opera and of the importance of the work of the composer Lully, who is generally believed to be the founder of that opera. In practically all treatments of the subject Lully is over and mis-rated, both as to his effect upon the art-form known as opera, or lyrical tragedy, and the part he played in the establishing of the famous home of music whose half century in the edifice it now occupies has just been feted.

Some writers even assert that Lully invented opera, but assertions of that nature do not merit passing attention, since opera existed long before Lully did. Opera, or at least the product that has evolved and come down to us, originated in Florence about 1589. Every evening the house of Jean Bardi, Count of Vernio, was the meeting place of a group of poets, musicians and other intellectuals, among whom were Jacques Corsi, Octave Rinuccini, Jacques Peri, Jules Caccini and Vincent Galileo, one of whose objects was to reproduce "the musical declamation which they believed to have been characteristic of the representation of Greek tragedy." The first "score" that was produced as a result of the researches and theorizings of this band was "the episode of the death of Ugolin, the music of which was composed by Vincent Galileo, father of the immortal philosopher." The composer sang the vocal part, accompanying himself on the viola.

This work, as well might be suspected, created a sensation, for in those days as in these, whatever was distinctly new had a strange power. It was followed by two compositions of Emilio del Cavaliere, Il Satiro and La Disperazione di Fileno, which were given in 1590 before the Duke of Tuscany. What usually is classed as the first opera, Jacopo Peri's Dafne, was privately performed in the Palazzo Corsi, Florence, in 1597, while Peri's Euridice (1600), written for the marriage of Henry IV. of France with Maria de Medici, is said to have been the first opera ever produced in public.

With the coming of Monteverde opera was put on an enduring basis. This composer's Orfeo showed marked advances in dramatic expression, in instrumentation and in rhythm and was larger and freer in melodic line than the restrained recitative of his predecessors. Monteverde also caused each personage to be accompanied by certain instruments which seemed to be identical with the nature of his character and with the sentiment or feeling he had to express, an art form that is, by the way, supposed to be essentially modern. Monteverde is the real founder of the musical tragedy, "mythological in form, purely human in substance"—the musical tragedy that Gluck, many years later, desired to restore without knowing that he had had such a forerunner. Orfeo was produced in 1607, and opera had therefore been established twenty-six years before the birth of Lully.

Reproduced from La Revue Musicale

JEAN-BAPTISTE LULLY

Going more deeply into the history of opera, the first form of the modern music-drama is traceable back to the high mass, in which are already found recitatives, dialogues, choruses and even a sort of hieratic chorography. Later came the liturgical drama and the mysteries, the latter being given in special theatres outside of and often removed from the churches and performed by the laity. In the mysteries, however, music played only an intermediate role, and whatever there was of music was in most cases reproductions of the songs of the common people.

It should be definitely stated that the Paris Opera, and hence French opera, was not founded by an Italian, but by Frenchmen. Lully, who rejoices in a glory that does not belong to him, placed French opera on a firm footing and did much towards assuring it of a future, but he did not institute it, that work having been done by others.

Many decades before Italian opera crossed the French frontier the taste for brilliant spectacles, luxurious representations, princely fetes, ballets and masquerades was highly developed in France, an illustrative example of which is the famous farcical show of savage men, given in 1392 in the Hotel de la Reine Blanche, in which performance "the dancers wore costumes of flaxen material soaked in rosin, which caught fire and provoked the terrible conflagration in which Charles VI. lost his reason."

Towards the end of the Sixteenth Century the French court ballets were in lively bloom, and it is the traditions of these dances, "noble or comic, their scenic splendor and marvelous stage machinery," that Lully for the most part continued. Parallel to the flourishing of the court ballets there was a movement (called humanist) to more closely unite music and poetry. This movement culminated in the privilege granted to Jean Antoine de Baif and Joachim Thibaut de Courville in 1570 "to establish an Academy of Poetry and Music." The Academy was created, but its life was of short duration, for it ceased to exist about 1584. It was not without importance, however, for in spite of the fact that it never gave a thought to music-drama Baif participated in the effort of the artists who were preparing the way for opera. The chief merit of Baif is that he directed attention to the poetry of song and towards the enhancement of the value of the word.

At the beginning of the Seventeenth Century France possessed all the materials necessary to constitute an opera, but the prevailing love for ballets kept out of France all other species of musical theatricals. This period was the apotheosis of the poetic dance, and principal among those who produced these dances during the first half of the seventeen hundreds were Pierre Gudron (1565-?), composer of more than fifteen ballets; Antoine Boesset (1585?-1643), author of twenty-four ballets; Bataille (?-?), co-composer of Le Serieux et le Grotesque and Le Ballet de la Bouairiere Billebahault; Boyer, Vincent, Moulinie, Cambefort, Chancy, etc. Under the influence of the poet Isaac de Benserate (1612-1691) the ballet was transformed and elevated to a higher artistic plane, for through him it assumed an almost purely literary character.

Mazarino (1620-1661), Italian cardinal and prime minister after Richelieu, introduced opera into France. As early as 1647 he had Rossi's Orfeo presented in Paris. It was successful, but this new style of composition failed to take root, due to the popularity of the court ballets. With the ten or twelve presentations (1659) at Issy of the Pastorale of the Abbe Perrin and M. Cambert Paris seemed to be on the eve of the creation of an opera, but Mazarin died and, deprived of his protection, Cambert and Perrin were soon overlooked and neglected.

In 1660 another operatic tentative took place. Cavalli, an Italian composer, had his Serse given before the court at the Louvre. It must have been a strange spectacle—the taste of the French was not yet ready for opera, and to effect a compromise in favor of that liking danses (music by Lully) were performed between the acts. Regardless of the unflattering success of Serse, its composer tried again. This time it was upon the occasion of the inauguration of the concert room of the Tuileries, February 7, 1662, when Cavalli's Ercole amante was presented, a ballet by Lully between the acts, and Louis XIV. appearing "en Soleil" in the grand finale.

Naturally Cavalli and the other composers of the epoch who had the well-being of opera at heart were prone to be discouraged and greatly discounted the ability and willingness of the French to recognize the merit of foreign artists and art. But the unhappy experiences of such workers as Cavalli were instrumental in preparing the way for the creation of a French public opera, and on the 28th

(Continued on page 23)

MARION TELVA

Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company

Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

Elisabeth Rothberg

SOPRANO

METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

FISK BLDG. NEW YORK

PACKARD BLDG PHILA., PA.

BRUNSWICK RECORDS

HARDMAN PIANO

A Rare Opportunity for American Singers that in a short while may never again present itself!

"Whoever has an ear for song must in truth call Graveure the ideal singer."
—(Tageblatt. Berlin. Germany)

"A model for singers of worthy ambitions."
—(Henderson. New York Sun.)

LOUIS GRAVEURE is internationally acclaimed as one of the few great artists of our day, and of so startling an ease is his vocalism, of so universally moving and so direct a message is his renditional art, that by the natural gravity of public interest he has been drawn into pedagogical work. Hence he holds a position so far unique, in that he is the only singer of world-fame who, at the height of that fame, teaches what he is daily putting into practice to such effect that he holds a zenith-position among artists in the matter of engagements and remuneration.

Within the next two or three years, in response to widespread demand, Graveure is due to open in Europe an Institute solely for the dissemination of his methods and principles.

He has already been invited to do this in a half-dozen of the European capitals, among them, Berlin, whence he has received recently a request to lecture on his vocal method at the Hochschule fuer Musik (the Conservatory of greatest musical importance in Europe).

This means that ere long it will be necessary for American students desirous of studying with Graveure to make a long and necessarily expensive trip over seas. Scores have obviated and are obviating this by studying with this master on the occasions of his yearly visits to California.

By studying with Graveure in this country one is enabled to achieve a complete European singing education in America, for he has proved by his recent European triumphs that his methods are of international acceptation.

MASTER-CLASSES and PRIVATE LESSONS

Los Angeles and San Francisco, June 1st to Sept. 1st, 1925

Address all communications to

SELBY C. OPPENHEIMER

FOXCROFT BUILDING, POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

IT MUST have impressed the alert-minded music folk of our country—the tension and unceasing urge of this present day, which has a whirlpool-like effect upon the majority of the professional musicians who cannot, in their activities, escape being drawn into its midst. They may keep clear for a time of the most violent part of this "whirlpool" (which is no more and no less than the drive of competition), but sooner or later these souls are sucked from the whirpool's edges towards the center of the churning. Almost unconsciously they partake of the nature of the Thing itself: becoming one of numerous others who are compelled, for self-preservation's sake, to key themselves to a high nervous pitch.

You will discover, if you are at all observing, the taut bodies of these music folk as they come and go in the music arteries of this country. The oft-strained faces also. And all this is revealed too by those persons who do not themselves actually make music for a livelihood but who contribute in some fashion towards keeping it alive: the managers, if you please, and the rest of the fabric which seems essential to the art of today.

That tension has gripped us all . . . those of us even who contemplate in the privacy of home or office that it is the others who are most affected. We go smashing onwards, with little of that relaxation which helps a somewhat accurate estimate of each situation which passes in the long review of any music season.

WHAT IS IT that has wrought such a change in the music world? Such a change in the conditions that prevailed two decades since? For there has been a change; a sweeping, drastic alteration in the scheme of the profession and in the attitude of most of those identified with it.

A thoughtful musician analyzed the matter for me the other day. He has a philosophical turn of mind in which there is just the right proportion of a sense of humor. It was late of a Saturday afternoon, and we were seated comfortably in a New York apartment sufficiently removed from the overwrought thoroughfares to permit a somewhat calm survey.

"We cannot stop, it seems," remarked this musician. "We have enough ability to send us forth upon our music pilgrimages; and thereafter it develops that to survive we must do, to an extent at least, what the others do.

"The commercial spirit is largely responsible. We may recoil from it, but eventually there is no escape from absorbing a certain amount of that quality—a quality which isn't helping overmuch to make our art or the public's discernment of art what it should be.

"There is a phrase which once could be heard rather frequently: Art for art's sake. Nowadays it often is art for the dollar's sake. Not invariably, of course. Exceptions are to be found, as in everything. Ideals do prevail. And conscientiousness in the degree which leads to outstanding achievements. Yet the majority of our musicians and those linked with them in advancing their interests seem to be governed very largely by the eminently practical. I do not blame them. It is no more than the times compel, which is such a pity."

"OUR MODERN LIFE is chiefly responsible. The world has progressed in the last twenty years . . . and very rapidly during the past ten. Science and invention have done their part; and then there was the world war, and its aftermath.

"Abnormalcy seems to have become normalcy. It costs so much more to live that we appear to have lost sight of the value of the dollar. Prices climb, then hold momentarily and climb again. Social conditions are constantly at work, and we are influenced by their ebb and flow. And all the while there goes on the struggle for existence, and the imperative consideration for the future.

"It is impossible to foretell whither it is all to lead. The press is filled with records of nations struggling with one another . . . for their individual preservation. Labor makes demands; capital contests those demands. One class insists that it is not receiving its rights; and so it goes.

"Vast sums of money are being accumulated by certain fortunate individuals; and vast sums, too, are being expended for the betterment of the people.

"I will not say that the masses are no better off than they were prior to 1914. A considerable percentage undoubtedly enjoys more than it once did. We have our humanitarians; our great men and women. Hearts continue to beat for others, and organization is providing help for many who never before now experienced such help.

"WHAT IMPRESSES me most," said my informant in that deliberately measured speech of his, "is the seeming inability of the world to settle down to a less strenuous pace in the conduct of life. The people appear to be driving onwards with feverish haste, and with too little thought for what that haste must ultimately demand in human payment.

"I know I shall have pointed out to me that labor has shorter hours and better working conditions; that we in this country are richer materially than we ever have been; that more leisure prevails. But that doesn't appear to have lessened the nerve-strain which one finds at every hand. The tense bodies, the anxious faces, the uncertainty of the many in their security of their future.

"Take music. We have more of it, probably, than ever. More interest is being shown in it, more money being put into music. Still, the number of professional musicians who can contemplate the approaching season with no concern for the outcome is not large. In this country one may find hundreds who are wondering when, for them, the tide will turn.

"I do not mean to paint a black picture. Rather is my purpose to consider what is. For consideration of facts, though some of them be unpleasant, is generally best in the end. It enables us to proceed for our best good.

"EVENTUALLY the pendulum will swing back as it should. Before a great while, I firmly believe, this tension will gradually relax. There will come a clarification of what is now a trifle muddled. Then matters will go forward as never before.

"One way to help will be for all of us who can to go more slowly. We have been intent upon gaining objectives in a space of time far too short for those achievements. One crying need of the moment is greater patience. Art cannot be acquired without the taking of pains and the devotion to it of much time.

"I am of the opinion that we are on the threshold of a forward movement in the world of music. We have been going through a period of evolution which was doubtless necessary to the reaching of ends which will benefit the deserving. That period, if my estimate be not at fault, is nearly concluded.

"Merit must finally be recognized. And fineness usually manages to stand out from the alloy. So there need be no feeling of permanent discouragement. We may discover procedure as different than it formerly was; but one needs only to analyze it and be governed by it.

"For there is a bright ray in the music sky: It is that ability and sincerity and integrity are finding their places. And we are to have more of each, as the years come and a deeper recognition by the people of their worth.

"The next few years are likely to be fruitful ones for those in the profession who have striven for right standards. The world is acquiring a keener sense of discrimination; and presently it may begin to tire of the too-sensational, and of what is not real. Optimism and faith are two qualities that we all need to exercise. And the more we do so, and the greater the number of those who stand thus with us, the quicker will come results.

"Tomorrow is not so far off. It will have arrived almost before we know it; and I am convinced it will be a radiant tomorrow."

FROM Monte Carlo comes news of the reported success there of the opera Fay-yen-fah, the music by Joseph Redding set to a libretto written by Templeton Crocker. Both men are Americans, and residents of San Francisco, California.

If the cabled accounts reflect accurately the consensus of competent opinion there is cause to congratulate these gentlemen, and to shout a bit for the recognition of our creative talent. The work is in a prologue and two acts, and was first presented in California, in private.

The story runs thus:

With a background of Oriental color and folklore Fay-yen-fah passes in a prologue and two acts. It tells of the coming to grief of the Foxgod, symbol of unhappiness, and of the youth Shiunin, who violates the law, "There shall be no unhappiness here on catching sight of boyhood love, Fay-yen-fah." Immediately the Foxgod, who has been imprisoned in the earth a hundred years for offending the supreme being, bursts forth into one day's liberty promised him if ever anyone defied his sombre reign. Later Shiunin tries to abduct Fay-yen-fah, is condemned to death, but saved by his sweetheart.

At the height of the festival a stranger appears, claiming he is the envoy of the Emperor and wishes Fay-yen-fah in marriage. He kisses her, she falls dead—he is the Foxgod. China prays for release from the dreadful spell and the curtain goes down on the forms of Shiunin and Fay-yen-fah embracing in the other world.

IT IS to be hoped that Fay-yen-fah is musically and textually fine enough to help in the forward movement now going on in behalf of Americans engaged in writing opera. What is needed is a substantial success . . . from the standpoint of strict merit no less than in relation to popular appeal.

Mr. Redding's gifts are well known. Less well known is the writing ability of Mr. Crocker, though he has friends and acquaintances who have put themselves on record regarding his creative resources. He is one of the officers of the recently-formed American Institute for Operatic Art, and has long been a patron of what is deserving in all the arts.

Perhaps Mr. Gatti-Casazza, of the New York Metropolitan, will interest himself in examining a score of Fay-yen-fah; and should it impress him he will now have an opportunity to produce an American opera—which the Metropolitan has not undertaken in several years.

WITH its current season approaching a close, the New York State Symphony Orchestra appears to have relaxed somewhat in both vigilance and effectiveness. I refer to the members of that organization. They are paid, as most people know, by the performance. Likewise the extent of their permanent employment with the State Symphony is not as certain as that found in those established symphony bodies which are backed by substantial monetary guarantees.

But if the State Symphony expects to continue, its playing members should guard carefully such prestige as they have won. There is no excuse for any display of lack of interest. Such spirit, if indeed it does prevail (and such was the opinion of one or two New York music reviewers for the daily press in their comments on last Wednesday's concert) surely will not help patronage for the season to come.

The future of the State Symphony is dependent largely upon support other than comes from the public, since the attendance is not yet sufficient to cover expenses. Smaller numerically in personnel than those distinguished orchestras which supply most of the symphonic music for New York, this newer one should strive to the uttermost to make the most of its opportunities. Unless devotion and enthusiasm are plainly apparent during the concerts given the State Symphony may discover how essential both are in gaining a loyal following.

MME. GANNA WALSKA appeared as Cio-Cio-San in a Berlin Volksoper performance of Madama Butterfly the other evening, and the United States newspapers carried brief accounts of the affair which had to do mostly with the singer's costumes.

"Her acting was more favorably received than her singing," was one phrase appearing in the New York Times story. A little farther along one read: "Her marvelous costumes and genuine Japanese style created a great sensation."

It is understood that Mme. Walska purposes appearing in the same role in Nice. Her persistent quest for operatic recognition does not abate; and she manages to get into the columns of the press whenever she participates in a performance. What progress Mme. Walska has made vocally during the past year and a half is not known to the writer, and none of the commentators reviewing her efforts for the American reading public touches upon that subject.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Munz With State Symphony

The program at the concert of the State Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ignatz Waghalter, in Carnegie Hall, New York, Wednesday, consisted of Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Dukas' L'Apprenti Sorcier, and Liszt's A major Concerto, with Mieczyslaw Munz as soloist.

Olin Downes of the Times wrote that Mr. Munz played the Concerto as well as he could under the circumstances; "as he progressed he displayed increasing authority and mastery of his idiom. . . . The interpretation on the part of the pianist was one which held strongly together a free and highly individual musical structure, which duly observed contrast and climax and distinguished itself when occasion offered by a fine tonal quality and the dash and fire that the scintillating Concerto demands."

According to Ernest Newman (Post), the soloist played with "commendable fluency" in spite of the "ragged and halting" orchestral accompaniment. Alison Smith of the World thought he played "with great earnestness and vigor" and he was commended by the Herald Tribune for "the enthusiasm and conviction" he evinced.

The reviewers found the orchestra's playing inadequate.

Toti dal Monte as Gilda

Toti dal Monte made her first appearance in New York in the role of Gilda in the repetition of Rigoletto at the Metropolitan on February 23. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail wrote that her "true musicianly feeling and particularly fine sense of the lyric possibilities of the music, as well as considerable skill in florid vocalization and a touching fidelity to pitch" were again disclosed by Mme. dal Monte.

According to the Herald Tribune writer, "her voice showed an agreeable, fluent quality, clearness of tone, barring one or two touches of hardness and some intervals of a slight vibrato, and a notable range, soaring without apparent difficulty to the highest reaches of Caro Nome." The Sun writer found Mme. dal Monte in her best form in this role. Tullio Serafin conducted, and the remainder of the cast was unchanged.

New Singers in Boris

In the repetition of Boris Godunoff at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on February 22, Adamo Didur sang Boris, Ina Bourskaya was Marina, and Edward Johnson sang the role of Dmitri. Otherwise the cast was unchanged, and Mr. Papi conducted.

To quote the Post reviewer, Mr. Didur "was effective at all times, playing the part with due dignity"; Mme. Bourskaya "sang and acted well"; and Mr. Johnson's "superb acting and glorious voice were a delight." The Herald Tribune found Mr. Johnson "excellent" and asserted that the role of Boris "gives a full opportunity to Mr. Didur's dramatic ability."

Schola Cantorum

The second concert of the Schola Cantorum, conducted by Kurt Schindler, took place at Carnegie Hall, New York, last Tuesday. The soloists were Lillian Gustafson, Alma Kitchell, and Frederic Baer.

On the program, all of which was sung a cappella, were numbers by Henry Purcell, John Dowland, John Wilbye, Gustav Holst, Basque and Catalonian songs, Luis Millet, Siegfried Ochs, Gustave Doret, Wilhelm Stenhammar, and two Kentucky mountain songs.

According to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune, "the chorus sang unusually well. . . . Its tone was flexible and full, of a clear, mellow quality, its precision almost impeccable, its response to Mr. Schindler's direction quick and sympathetic."

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail thought the program "steadily interesting" and gave "a tribute of praise to the chorus for its fresh-toned and spirited singing." W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that "the tone was unusually agreeable, the intonation commendable and the treatment of the text excellent."

Ernest Newman remarked in the Post that the choir "showed considerable versatility" and, in the World, Deems Taylor said that the chorus "was a bit sketchy, occasionally, regarding attack and nuances, but sang with good tone and enviable enthusiasm." According to Olin Downes of the Times, "the performances were not all that could be wished as regards quality of tone and fineness and variety of effect. This can hardly be blamed upon Mr. Schindler. His difficulties in assembling and systematically drilling his chorus are great."

Mr. Downes found the soloists competent. Mr. Perkins wrote that Miss Gustafson sang "fluently, with a touch or two of hardness, in an otherwise clear and pure tone." Of the others, he wrote: "Miss Kitchell had considerable vocal power with some departure from smoothness while Mr. Baer sang with a notable combination of strength and polish." Mr. Henderson liked Miss Gustafson's "mellow and smooth voice and fluent style."

Mme. Bori as Violetta

Verdi's Traviata was sung for the second time this season in New York by the Metropolitan Opera Company on February 21, with Lucrezia Bori as Violetta. Others in the cast were the same as previously, and Mr. Serafin conducted. Miss Bori, to quote the World, "gave a vivid and spirited performance which lent fresh color and significance to the languishing Violetta . . . the vigor and spirit of the Bori attack is as satisfying dramatically as it is vocally." According to the Herald Tribune, she was "entrancing to the eye" and "very pleasing to the ear."

Edward Johnson as Canio

Edward Johnson sang the role of Canio in the production of Pagliacci at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Wednesday evening. The Telegram-Mail writer referred to his "magnificently emotional singing," and the Sun reviewer wrote that his "keen intelligence, his judicious and timely use of restraint to illustrate his points, his fine appreciation of obscure but important details, all culminated in a dramatic portrait of conviction and masterly skill."

This writer added that Mr. Johnson's voice "has revealed more freshness and volume than it did last evening, but dramatically his portrayal . . . was a masterpiece in miniature. Mr. Johnson used his voice discreetly. It lacked strength and color, but it was otherwise adequate, expressive and often vibrant."

Deems Taylor wrote in the World that "the outstanding virtue" of the presentation was Mr. Johnson's performance." Although his voice sounded tired, Mr. Taylor wrote that he had never before seen any one act Canio as he did. "He gave a performance that only an actor with the most consummate command of mood and sense of climax could have given." The Post chronicler considered him "a remarkable Canio" both in "song and acting."

Le Coq d'Or was part of the evening's program. The single change in the cast was the substitution of Thalia Sabanieva for Mme. Galli-Curci. According to the Telegram-Mail, "she felt her way cautiously through certain trying passages and altered some high notes, but at least she had the cardinal merit of singing in tune." The Sun did not find her in her best form, but the Herald Tribune reported that Mme. Sabanieva "sang her difficult part remarkably well," with "pleasing accuracy" of pitch.

League of Composers

Two of the three numbers offered by the League of Composers in the Times Square Theatre, New York, on February 22, were first performances. They were Louis Gruenberg's Daniel Jazz, after the poem of Vachel Lindsay, and Gagliarda of a Merry Plague, an opera in one act by Lazare Saminsky. The other number was Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire, which received its second performance in America.

The assisting artists were Greta Torpadie and Patricia O'Connell, sopranos; Colin O'More, tenor; Richard Hale, baritone; and Paul Oscard, dancer. Howard Barlow conducted. Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote that the League and Mr. Saminsky "are entitled to a generous meed of praise for their enterprise and enthusiasm in showing what may be done in the field of chamber-opera."

Olin Downes of the Times thought the Saminsky music "fragmentary and ineffective" and written "with nervousness and humor." He praised Miss Torpadie for singing the last number "with the most exceptional insight, expressiveness and wealth of color in tones"; Miss O'Connell for taking a thankless part "intelligently and with devotion to her task"; and Mr. O'More for his excellent performance. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail lauded Mr. Hale, as did Ernest Newman of the Post. Other writers commended the soloists and the conductor.

Walter Makes Season Bow

Bruno Walter made his first appearance of the season as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra Thursday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, New York. A digest of the reviews of the concert will appear in the next issue of The Musical Digest.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

GRAVEURE
IN LEADING MUSIC CENTERS
"Graveure, the King of all Baritones!" (San Francisco, Calif., Examiner.)
"Wondrous-voiced Graveure!" (St. Louis, Mo., Globe Democrat.)
"Graveure is an enchanter, the effect of his singing is almost hypnotic." (Toledo, Ohio, Blade.)
Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau Aeolian Hall New York City

FLORENCE MACBETH
Leading Coloratura Soprano
Chicago Civic Opera Company

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Miss Muri Silba

After a five year absence from New York Muri Silba gave a recital at Town Hall on February 22. To quote the Times: "She chose for the display of a brilliant and varied technique Mendelssohn, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt and other composers. Seldom have there been heard runs, arpeggi, more liquid, accurate or light. They formed an arabesque of sound against which the themes were placed with unusual eloquence and emotion."

According to the writer in the Sun, Miss Silba "played with a great deal of confidence and considerable ability. Her technique was impressive, and she played with clarity and plenty of vigor. . . . It was all decisive, commendably clear, confident and often colorless." This reviewer thought, however, that her left hand occasionally obscured the melodic structure outlined by the right, and that there was little poetry in her playing. He also lauded Miss Silba for "an individual style of much strength and some authority."

The Herald Tribune writer considered that she displayed the assets for development into an outstanding pianist—"a polished technique of marked brilliance, a firm, crisp, but not weighty touch, and ample expressive ability, with interpretations of color and nuance."

John Carroll

A young ex-soldier, John Carroll, who has devoted most of his time since the war to singing in hospitals, gave his first New York recital at Town Hall on February 24.

Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) found Mr. Carroll's "a voice of excellent quality and adequate size," which he managed "without any flagrant technical indiscretions." The World said he displayed a baritone "of unusually moving and tranquil beauty," while his music was characterized by a "serene and eloquent simplicity."

In the Times he was accredited with a "deeply moving, naturally rich, melodious voice. In the finer attributes of intonation, phrasing and enunciation he justified fully his years of study since the war." The Sun reviewer thought his voice "warm, occasionally rich in color, and well endowed with the natural qualities of sound musicianship." The writer in the Herald Tribune commended his "notable" voice, with its "ample volume and smooth, full, most ingratiating tone, and his interpretations, which proved his comprehension of the songs."

W. J. Henderson Lectures

William J. Henderson, music reviewer of the New York Sun and an authority on singing, lectured on that subject at Town Hall, New York, for a large contingent of members of the City (now the National) Music League. To illustrate the different types of voices nine soloists took part with Alice Nicols at the piano; Helen Bloom, Mme. Covert, Alice Codilet, Wilfred Glenn, Frances Newson, Amiee Olsen, Elizabeth Wood, Franklyn Baur and Charles Widor.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Sigismund Stojowski

A program consisting for the most part of German and Polish music was offered by Sigismund Stojowski at his Aeolian Hall recital, New York, on February 22. The Post reviewer found the pianist "in fine spirits and form."

The Sun writer found Mr. Stojowski's tone "was at all times full and sonorous and his legato always sang commendably." He also wrote that the artist "published his offerings with a great deal of vigor. But it was an elastic vigor, not out of place considering the program. The Schumann Sonata revealed the fire rather than the sensuousness of romanticism and there was plenty of delicacy and a fine decisive touch which perfectly delineated thematic structure and phrasing."

According to the Herald Tribune, Mr. Stojowski, "whose notable qualities as a pianist are well known, was in fine form. . . . A crisp, decisive touch and ample color marked his playing."

Lenox String Quartet

The Lenox String Quartet, with the assistance of Harold Bauer, gave a concert for the benefit of the Loomis Sanatorium for Tuberculosis at Town Hall on February 19.

To quote the Times, they offered a program of chamber music "of high artistic beauty." The Herald Tribune writer found it "a most meritorious quality and the unity that marks a performance with a tone of good seasoned organization in the playing of Messrs. Harmati, Wolfinsohn, Moldavan and Stoeber, while Mr. Bauer's performance had its usual limpid clearness, polish and expressiveness, and was a thoroughly fused part of the ensemble."

The Sun writer said that Mr. Bauer "displayed his masterly qualifications for ensemble work," and the Post considered that the playing of the Quartet was in "perfect tempo and with the wealth of tone expression acquired by length of association."

National Polish Orchestra

The National Polish Orchestra, conducted by Stanislaw Namyslawski, gave its first American concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on February 22 in a program of Polish music.

The Times writer commented that the performances "were of a sincere and enthusiastic but provincial character," and the Sun commented that the "brilliant appearance" of the orchestra (which appeared in native costume) and the "concert were manifestly enjoyed greatly by an audience which crowded the house."

The Herald Tribune reviewer said "the orchestra gave a vigorous spirited performance, though its smoothness of tone was not such as to suggest a serious challenge to the laurels of our local orchestras." The works it played were music "with a flavor of folk-song, unsophisticated." Deems Taylor (World) considered it "a very ordinary provincial symphony orchestra, with an insufficient number of strings and wind sections that play neither well nor wholly in tune." According to the Post, "the tone quality seemed very poor" by comparison with our own orchestras. The Telegram-Mail found little to commend in the concert.

Mrs. Kathleen Hart Bibb

"An attractive stage presence, a charming delivery and a fresh, tuneful soprano assured the success" of the recital given by Kathleen Hart Bibb at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 24, according to the Times. The World reviewer liked her "pleasing and flexible" voice, which she used "with intelligence and good taste."

The writer in the Sun found her tones "fresh, clear, well controlled and used with effect in her lyrics," although her voice, while pleasant, was not skillfully used, "seldom displaying impressive dimensions." In the Herald Tribune the chronicler wrote: "Mrs. Bibb's voice was of considerable volume and very satisfactory quality, generally fluent and clear in tone, though there were a few periods with a slight hardness in the first half. Mrs. Bibb showed interpretative skill in her singing, bringing out a varied range of feeling." Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail considered the singer "hardly in her best form."

Dorsey Whittington

A large audience heard the "agreeably unconventional" program (F. D. Perkins in the Herald Tribune) played by Dorsey Whittington, pianist, at Aeolian Hall on February 23. The two "first performances" were an Intermezzo in E major by Felix Deyo, music reviewer of the Brooklyn Standard Union, and three pieces from Reminiscences of Childhood by Reuven Kosakoff, young Russian-American composer.

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail wrote that "his performance was marked throughout by sensitive appreciation and poetic feeling, as well as by technical skill." According to Deems Taylor of the World, "his deft technique and individual rhythmic sense were effective." The Sun writer commented that Mr. Whittington played "with a fine, fluent legato, a crisp technique and a style of surprising confidence and authority. For the most part his tone coloring was excellent, particularly in Debussy and Chopin." Mr. Perkins thought that the pianist "displayed unusual technical and temperamental assets" to a "notable degree" as well as "a distinct advance over last year in poise, confidence and accuracy."

Mr. Deyo's Intermezzo, to quote the Sun, "was a very dainty musical hors d'oeuvre, a composition of soft colors and considerable charm." Mr. Perkins thought the work "pleasing."

Miss Marguerite Valentine

The debut of Marguerite Valentine, pianist, at Aeolian Hall on February 19 was well received by her audience and by the newspaper reviewers alike. Alison Smith wrote in the World that the recitalist "exhibited an admirable and fluent technique."

The Times reported that she made a debut "with a difference" and that Miss Valentine "played as a cultured human being to whom good music was a part of life." According to the Herald Tribune, she displayed talent and her playing "was amply, but not injudiciously, vigorous, with competent technical skill and fluency. While there were passages which seemed somewhat unvaried in hue, as in the slow movement of the sonata, the fervor in Miss Valentine's performance of the finale indicated no lack of expressive ability."

Walter Ferner Louis Persinger Elias Hecht
Louis Ford Nathan Firestone

CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY
OF SAN FRANCISCO
(FOUNDED 1916, BY ELIAS HECHT)
MUSICAL DIRECTION: LOUIS PERSINGER

Musical Courier, New York:
"The San Francisco organization must be ranked with the very finest organizations in the world."
Musical America, New York:
"The audience cheered them. They deserved to be cheered."
New York Evening Telegram:
"There are very few organizations in this country which play with so fine an ensemble, with such a full and beautiful tone, and with such authoritative musicianship."
New York American:
"Took a place easily, in the opinion of connoisseurs, as an organization of the first rank."
New York Evening Mail:
"The musicians from California have warmth and spirit, with a breadth and fullness of tone that is almost exuberant."
New York Telegraph:
"The Beethoven F major quartet. This jewel of Kammer musik has seldom, if ever, been better displayed in New York."
Philadelphia Evening Ledger:
"The playing was brilliant, exceptionally accurate as to intonation and ensemble, and sincere to the last degree."
Boston Telegram:
"The playing throughout was of the most exquisite variety. Never has anything more beautiful been heard. We hope to see them often in Boston."
Boston Transcript:
"At the end a cheering audience was on its feet, since clapping would not suffice it."
Chicago Musical Leader:
"Their playing revealed poetic interpretation, beauty of tone and precision, a wide scale of nuances and, at the same time, a youthful vigor and enthusiasm."
Los Angeles Express:
"They played with a warmth of human appeal and a wealth of artistic elegance seldom found. San Francisco may well be proud of their Chamber Music Society. In fact, America may be, for we have seldom heard such playing here."
San Francisco Examiner:
"Last night's concert was a delightful affair. There was a Beethoven Quartet, the one in G from Op. 18. I never heard that dainty Scherzo more beautifully played."
Honolulu Star-Bulletin:
"It would be difficult to find a group of artists who could surpass these men in precision of technique, subtlety of interpretation and blending of tone color."

FOR TERMS AND DATES APPLY TO
MANAGEMENT
CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY
708 Kohl Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.
or
MAUD W. GIBBON
New York Representative
129 West 48th Street, New York

Stravinsky Conducts Novelties in Chicago

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony Led by Stock; De Lamarter With Civic Orchestra.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—The last half of the program of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert Friday consisted of Stravinsky's Song of the Volga Boatmen, Le Chant du Rossignol, Scherzo Fantastique, and the Fire Bird Suite conducted by the composer. The first two were heard here for the first time.

Maurice Rosenfeld of the News wrote that Mr. Stravinsky "knew how to get effects from the orchestra under him." According to Karleton Hackett (Post) he is "not a graceful conductor, nor with any intention so to be, but his every faculty is seemingly concentrated on the music and his sole purpose is to make its meaning clear." In the opinion of Edward Moore of the Tribune, "his conducting would seem to be a constant effort to accentuate and contrast dramatic happenings."

Of the novelties, Mr. Moore found Mr. Stravinsky's arrangement of the Volga Boatmen song "a brief, blaring statement of the theme of empty intervals and uncivilized turbulence," and the Scherzo "an uncommonly winsome, persuasive piece." On the other hand, Mr. Rosenfeld thought he had given the first number "a unique harmonic setting." The Scherzo in this reviewer's opinion "is a symphonic piece inspired by the life of a bee, and is a fine descriptive piece."

Karleton Hackett thought the arrangement of the song marked by "a rhythmic force that gave it an elemental power" and considered the other new number "a graceful little tone-picture . . . busily bustling, melodically pleasing and suggestive." According to Mr. Hackett, "for his own music, he knew exactly what he desired and the response of the men was extraordinarily elastic. His beat, though angular and unexpected, was very definite."

To quote Mr. Rosenfeld, Frederick Stock "introduced the afternoon's music with a magnificent reading" of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

The Civic Orchestra of Chicago, under the direction of Eric DeLamarter, assistant conductor, gave a concert Sunday. Margaret Farr, pianist, was the soloist in Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy.

According to Maurice Rosenfeld, the Rienzi Overture was performed "with admirable precision, with commendable tone shading and with brilliant orchestral coloring." Mr. Moore said the orchestra played "with orchestral precision and spirit" and that the rendition of Henry Hadley's In Bohemia Overture "was a striking example of how training can combine with talent and produce striking results." Mr. Hackett commended Mr. DeLamarter's conducting.

Miss Farr, according to Mr. Rosenfeld, "played with clean technique and in musicianly style." Mr. Moore found her an artist of talent and good training.

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH
Was Heard at His Best in His Chicago Piano Recital a Short Time Ago.

English Traviata Heard

Chicago, Feb. 25.—The production of Verdi's La Traviata in English in concert form, conducted by Nathaniel Finston, was applauded by a large audience at the Chicago Theatre Sunday afternoon. The soloists, Marie Herron, Arvesta Parrish, Themy Georgi, Benjamin Landsman and Carl Bitterl, were assisted by a chorus of fifty members of the Apollo Club, and by the Chicago Theatre Symphonic Orchestra.

These singers were lauded by Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, Karleton Hackett of the Post, and Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald-Examiner. Mr. Hackett likewise commended Miss Parrish and Mr. Bitterl. According to Mr. Rosenfeld, Mr. Finston "again disclosed his talents for operatic interpretation." Other writers joined in praising him, and Mr. Hackett wrote that "the orchestra responded admirably to Mr. Finston, and the whole thing went along with spirit."

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Solllit
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

GRADOVA
"One by one the young pianists smoke and smoulder past. Then, at last — say in Gradova—DARTS THE FLAME."—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Bldg., New York
Steinway Piano Duo-Art Rolls

M U Z I O
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FORREST
L A M O N T
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

Musical Chicago En Courant

Russian Modernist Conducts the Orchestra; New Organ Dedicated; Some Male Choirs.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Feb. 24.

PRINCE IGOR, that most modern musical colossus called Stravinsky, has visited Chicago and indelibly left his mark. Some of us will never be the same again. All who were present at the Symphony Orchestra's pair of concerts last week, when Stravinsky conducted a variety of his own works, got a reaction of one sort or another; probably several conflicting ones. For those who voiced a preference for the Chaliapin version of the Song of the Volga Bargemen, and found their ears too sensitive for the dissonant nightingales in Le Chant du Rossignol, there was the Scherzo Fantastique, of charming classicism, and the lovely and familiar suite from L'Oiseau de Feu.

Personal impressions of the much discussed Russian, gleaned from an orchestral rehearsal, two public performances and several sketchy conversations were of a slightly built man of tremendous nervous energy, sure mental grasp, and physical agility. The latter was explained by his avowed fondness for sports, boxing and tennis in particular, which, perhaps, also explains his fondness for bright colors. The vivid orange sweater worn in rehearsal was a picturesque touch not vouchsafed the regular symphony patrons.

IF THERE remains any doubt that Stravinsky is a conductor of force with very definite ideas as to the effects he wishes, ask the men of the orchestra. The strongest answer would undoubtedly come from a certain tuba player.

In a graceful speech at a dinner given in his honor by the Cordon Club, the visiting composer congratulated Chicago on its splendid orchestra and its conductor, Frederick Stock, whom he thanked for the opportunity of presenting his works to Chicago. Mr. Stock interpreted this speech with his accustomed modesty and wit, and wished Mr. Stravinsky a speedy return engagement. "In the meantime," he added, "I shall give you—more Stravinsky."

Members of the Arts Club will have further opportunity to hear the modernisms of the Russian on Tuesday evening, when a number of his works will be presented with the composer at the piano. Greta Torpadie will sing a number of his songs. A part of L'Histoire du Soldat is promised.

THE NEW Kimball organ was dedicated last Tuesday night by Charles M. Courboin, formerly of the Antwerp Cathedral, now guest organist for Wanamaker's in Philadelphia and New York in a recital artfully arranged to reveal the possibilities of the modern organ. The new organ is a superb instrument. Mr. Gunn remarked on its "marvelous tone color," and Mr. Moore particularly commented on its clarity in rapid passages. Both found Mr. Courboin's playing that of a great modern organist.

ALEXANDER SEBALD is one of the few living violinists with the courage to present all twenty-four of the Paganini Caprices in one recital. This he did on Wednesday evening to an audience largely of violinists, bearing scores galore, and using them diligently. Mr. Sebald used for the first time publicly his own manuscript piano accompaniments, which proved logical and effective.

AFTER two years of experience Messrs. Balaban and Katz of the Chicago Theatre announce that opera in English is an overwhelming financial success. These Sunday noon tabloid performances have become very popular. Nathaniel Finston, orchestra conductor and operatic director, is adept with the blue pencil. Opera as presented at the Chicago Theatre manages to retain all the high spots of the score, at the same time reducing the time limit to little more than one hour. Traviata on Sunday consumed only one and one-quarter hours, and none of the popular features of the old score was missed.

Mr. Chaliapin was an interested listener at the rehearsal of Traviata last week, and made a few pertinent remarks of approval to Mr. Finston for his work in popularizing (in the true sense of the word) good music.

AMONG the many prominent musicians in the audience Saturday night to hear Stravinsky were Leopold Godowsky and Ossip Gabrilowitsch. The latter yields the baton of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra to Stravinsky this week.

Gabrilowitsch chose to make his Chicago recital "all-Chopin." His following here is compact and loyal. The Playhouse on Sunday was filled to the last seat and last encore.

As the proceeds of the Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler Golden Jubilee concert tomorrow are to go towards the establishment of a fund for the relief of incapacitated musicians, Mrs. Zeisler has requested that friends wishing to send flowers, instead send checks to be added to the fund. It is recalled by those present that at her twenty-fifth anniversary concert the stage of the old Chicago Music Hall was buried in floral tributes.

OWING to the continued illness of Harrison Wild, Calvin Lampert, accompanist for the Mendelssohn Club, yielded his place at the piano to Frederick Schauwecker, and himself took up the baton for the club in its annual concert on Tuesday night. One of the few male choruses of the city, the Mendelssohn Club is always assured a large audience.

Another male chorus of particular interest to Chicagoans at this time is the Hamilton Club Chorus, which gave its "Last Inaugural Concert" in the clubrooms last Tuesday. On March 1 it plans to leave for Washington, where it will sing at the inauguration of President Coolidge and Vice President Dawes, both of whom are members of the club. Four years ago it made a similar trip to the Harding inauguration.

THE University of Wisconsin Glee Club won out in the annual Glee Club contest at Orchestra Hall Monday night. Michigan was second and Grinnell third. Each club sang a stated prize song and one of their own choice. This year the prize composition was Come Again Sweet Love, by John Dowland. The choice songs showed much better grade than those of last year. Fourteen colleges and universities of the middle west were entered.

Recitals Feature Chicago Week

Gabrilowitsch, Amy Neill, and Courboin Play; Three Choruses Sing.

Chicago, Feb. 23.—The past week has been one of unusual musical activity with many recitalists and three choral concerts.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch gave a Chopin recital at the Playhouse Sunday. According to Karleton Hackett, "his playing was poetic, with a breadth of conception, yet delicacy of nuance, that brought out the spirit of the music. There was the pianistic sense underlying the expression of every phrase."

Although he admired his "musical intelligence," Mr. Moore thought his program "a trifle too studied." Mr. Rosenfed wrote that "while the playing of the Ballade and Etudes was a brilliant technical performance, the Funeral March in the Sonata was given with such emotional stress that not a few in the audience were visibly affected by its dramatic reading." Mr. Gunn thought he made the B minor Mazurka "a thing of lovely tone and compelling rhythm."

* * *

At Amy Neill's violin recital under the auspices of the Musicians' Club of Women last Monday, Leo Sowerby's Sonata for violin and piano was given its first American performance with the composer at the piano.

Mr. Hackett found "melodic vigor and rhythmic force all through the music," and Mr. Rosenfeld found something "just short of genius" in the fusion of the instruments. According to Mr. Gunn, "there is a newer note of forceful logic in this work; it hangs together emotionally as well as structurally."

Edward Moore wrote that "Mr. Sowerby wrote a big work and he and Miss Neill gave it a big performance." In Mr. Rosenfeld's opinion, they played it "with evident skill and musical feeling." Mr. Hackett wrote that Miss Neill "played with fine appreciation for the music and a tone that was rich in quality. There was a grasp of the music and the purpose to bring out its meaning with a directness that gave it power. Mr. Sowerby played with tonal color and rhythmic accent—the kind of playing that two artists can give when both have the will to express and the technical equipment."

* * *

The new Kimball concert organ in Kimball Hall was christened Tuesday by the Belgian organist, Charles Courboin. Mr. Hackett wrote that Mr. Courboin "has the peculiar power that makes a concert organist, and he revealed the many sided wealth of the new instrument with sure touch."

As Mr. Rosenfeld put it, he "not only displayed the qualities of the instrument, but also his own great talent. . . . So absolute a command has Mr. Courboin over its mechanism that feats of technic both on the keyboards and pedals are accomplished by him with astonishing ease, and effects of power and volume welled forth." Mr. Gunn lauded his "command of rhythmic accent" and his "dazzling facility."

* * *

Among others who have been recently heard in concert are the Sametini-Reuter-Wallenstein Trio, which, to quote Mr. Rosenfeld, gave to the Brahms B major Trio a reading "which brought from the music a vital stirring, rhythmic accent, a fluent musical tone, a sharply defined phrasing and a forceful interpretation"; Stella Benson, soprano, and Eva Gordon Horadesky, contralto, who appeared in a joint recital and received laudatory newspaper notices; Alexander Sebald, who played Paganini's twenty-four Caprices in honor of the one hundred and forty-first anniversary of the composer's birth, with his accustomed virtuosity and brilliance; and Isador Berger, whose violin recital was commended by Mr. Hackett for its exhibition of "feeling for the classic style with its clear melodic outline and incisive rhythm," his "warm" tone, and clean technique.

* * *

The Apollo Musical Club under the direction of Edgar A. Nelson gave Bach's B minor Mass, with Emily Stokes Hager, Florence Evans, Arthur Boardman and Robert Maitland as soloists.

According to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, Mr. Nelson "again showed his adroitness and musical ability in his leadership of the most notable of choral works." The chorus, wrote Mr. Rosenfeld, "did some admirable work in the renditions of the involved singing and in the big ensembles."

This reviewer thought the soloists "showed concerted vocal art and a routine in their work." He commended Mr. Maitland, basso, for his "easy, florid singing"; Miss Evans for the flexibility and pleasing quality of her contralto; Mr. Boardman for the "clarity" of his tenor, and Miss Hagar for the "power and brilliance" of her soprano. Other writers commended these singers, although Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald-Examiner) thought their work not too good.

Mr. Gunn thought the choral work "admirable," and Edward Moore of the Tribune considered that there were "many impressive moments" in the performance. Karleton Hackett (Post) thought that the work was sung with "vigor and sincerity," although not with much shading.

* * *

Louise Harrison Slade, contralto, was the soloist with the Mendelssohn Club on Thursday evening. Due to the illness of Harrison M. Wild, director, Calvin F. Lampert conducted.

According to Mr. Hackett, "the club was in fine form and did excellent singing," and Mr. Lampert "had elasticity in his beat and appreciation for nuance, and the men followed him well. The results were happy." Mr. Rosenfeld found, in spite of certain minor deficiencies, "there was good singing and the tone shading was executed with taste." Edward Moore said that, under Mr. Lampert, "the chorus sang with much spirit of tone and exactness of enunciation."

* * *

The Hamilton Club Chorus, which gave a concert the same evening, "has developed into a rather stirring singing organization," to quote Edward Moore. He found the chorus displayed "distinct ability."

PADEREWSKI AT HIS STEINWAY

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

Only the most extraordinary instrument can meet the demands of the great pianists. It must give perfect voice alike to the exquisite cadences of Chopin, the blazing fervor of Liszt, the serene magnificence of Bach. It must endure years of the hardest daily practice. Always it must become a live and singing thing at a touch, ever responsive to the hand and spirit of the musician. And the perfect tribute to the supremacy of the Steinway lies in its use and ownership by such pianists as Paderewski and Hofmann, Rachmaninoff and Levitzki. So universal is this recognition that, where only sincerely artistic motives are involved, the Steinway is invariably the choice of the master pianists.

The Steinway is made in numerous styles and sizes, sold at the lowest possible price and upon the most convenient terms. The majority are bought by people of moderate means and limited incomes. Yet they are bought on the same sound principle of economy that determines their purchase by the great musicians—that of buying the best. Always the cheapest. Always the assurance of the greatest advantage and return to the owner. You need never buy another piano.

There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. *Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

Plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

QUEENA MARIO

Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company

A Typical Set of Notices Indicating this Artist's sensational recital successes. The City, in this case, happens to be Erie, Pa.

The Daily Times, October 11, 1924

Queena Mario Thrills in Superb Song Recital at Elks' Auditorium

Young American Soprano—A Singer of Much Individuality.

By ALBERT H. DOWLING, JR.

"Blest with a personality that wins her audience at sight, she backs this up with a thoroughness and sincerity in her art that touched every song she sang with that spark of something that you cannot describe but makes you feel that queer little twist inside that assures you that you are experiencing that which only comes once or twice in a season of concerts. Possessed of a voice luscious in quality in the more sustained singing and crystalline pure in the staccato of the colorature, Miss Mario used the utmost refinement in everything she sang, and touched some of the songs with a divine spark that made even the mediocre seem worthwhile. Not that there was anything of that calibre on Miss Mario's program, but we have heard the Dell' Acqua 'Villanelle' sung at some pupils' recitals (yes and at professional concerts too) where it sounded more like the description of a flight of 'dodo' birds than of swallows—but not so with Miss Mario's interpretation—vibrant and delicately wrought it breathed the essence of a mid-summer day. The sustained legato of Handel's 'Care Selve' gave promise early in the program of what a feat was to follow, and rare indeed is the coloratura who could give the velvety quality of tone which she brought to this classic. There is no need of comparing Miss Mario with Galli-Curci, Hempel or any other coloratura we have heard. There is no need of such a comparison, for this young American singer has a quality in her singing that is as individual as were her quaint interpretations of such bits as Farley's 'The Night Wind' and Liza Lehmann's 'The Cuckoo.' Of course, she sang the usual arias one expects on a coloratura soprano's recital program, 'Traviata' and 'Romeo et Juliette' but the biggest thrill of the evening came in her singing of Mrs. Beach's 'Ah, Love But a Day,' which she gave with such fervor, dramatic intensity and passionate feeling that she left the audience breathless at the close. There you have a song that has been done to death handled by an artist with a touch that transfigured it and made you long for a repetition. Time and space prevent even touching on the rest of the program, and it is only necessary to add that Miss Mario has left something with those who heard her, something that will make life just a little bit more worth living."

The Dispatch-Herald, October 11, 1924

MARIO IS GREAT HIT IN RECITAL

Distinguished Young Soprano Charms Her Audience at the Elks'

By E. A. HAESENER

"A song recital that should be recorded as one of the finest given here as far as vocalism is concerned was given last evening at the Elks' Auditorium. The particular star was Queena Mario, Metropolitan soprano, truly a 'queen of song.'

"In most cases operatic singers are not heard to the best advantage on the recital platform. This young singer is a fine exception. Endowed with a lovely voice, a charming personality and a keen intellect, Queena Maria, although yet quite young, can take her place among the super-artists of the day.

"We have heard others who have sung marvelously well, but we heard few here so skillful and sincere in capturing the mood and creating the precise atmosphere of their songs. Furthermore we know of few singers before the public today with a voice of such a luscious, pure quality and perfect intonation.

"The program was a conventional one. Mozart, Handel and Beethoven were represented in the first group. 'Care Selve' was perhaps a trifle too hurried, but it brought out the lovely lyric quality of the singer's voice. The French songs of the second group were sung with a great delicacy and charm.

"Although Queena Mario is styled a lyric soprano, it was in songs of a dramatic character such as 'Ah, Love But a Day' by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach that she touched her highest marks. We do not claim to essay the role of a prophet, but we believe that ten years hence Queena Mario will develop into one of our greatest American dramatic sopranos."

Now Booking Season 1925 - 1926

Exclusive Management: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU

33 West 42nd Street - - New York City

Cleveland Has Its Turn With Stravinsky

Visiting Composer and Nikolai Sokoloff Both Conduct at Orchestra Concert.

Cleveland, Feb. 19.—Stravinsky's Fireworks and Chant du Rossignol were given their first Cleveland hearing last Thursday by the Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of the composer. Mr. Stravinsky also conducted his Fire Bird Suite. Nikolai Sokoloff opened the program with Tschaikowsky's Pathetique Symphony.

James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer found "an astonishing cleverness" in Fireworks, and thought the Nightingale "genuinely poetic; picturesque; the product of a lively and sensitive fancy." According to Eleanor Clarage of the Times the former "is a short, animated little work, full of flashing fire and careening rockets, rumbling mild explosives and capricious bombardments, written in jaunty, irregular rhythms, and moving along at a great speed." She considered the other work "fascinating; filled with witty turns and brilliant satire."

In the opinion of Archie Bell of the News, Fireworks "is a beautiful piece of music, with gorgeous orchestration that makes huge demands upon a variety of instruments." Of the Nightingale, he wrote that "it is the most perfect representation of the Chinese scene through music that we have heard—literally a tour de force." Mr. Bell considered Mr. Stravinsky "a true prophet" and predicted that "such music as we heard last night, by all the signs and portents, will be the accepted and favorite music twenty years hence."

Less enthusiastic over the Russian composer was Wilson G. Smith (Press). He wrote that Stravinsky "is undoubtedly a genius in his manner of musical expression" but admitted that he got "neither artistic solace nor auditory pleasure" from his music. As much as Mr. Smith admired his "mechanical ingenuity" he found his works "characterized by a certain turbidity."

Cleveland Plans Opera Return

Cleveland, Feb. 24.—John A. Penton, president of the Cleveland Civic Music Association, following the successful engagement of the Chicago Civic Opera Company here, has announced a plan for a permanent opera organization. It calls for the sale of 250 shares of stock in the association at $100 each. The proceeds would be used to maintain a permanent office and staff and to help guarantee further business.

Pochon's Illness Prevents Concert

Alfred Pochon's illness compels the Flonzaley Quartet, for the first time in twenty years, to cancel a scheduled concert at Aeolian Hall, New York, today.

Chicago Civic Opera Comes to Cleveland

Gioconda, Barber, Thais, and Tannhaeuser Given; Large Audiences Turn Out.

Cleveland, Feb. 22.—An audience, unparalleled in other seasons in both size and enthusiasm, attended the opening of the four performance engagement of the Chicago Civic Opera Company in this city. The opera was La Gioconda, with Rosa Raisa, Giacomo Rimini, Augusta Lenska, Flora Perini, Antonio Cortis, Virgilio Lazzari, Antonio Nicolich, Lodovico Olivieri, Desire Defrere and Gildo Morelato.

According to the Plain Dealer, "the masterful reading by Conductor Giorgio Polacco had not a little to do with the force and finish of the production." This writer also lauded the members of the cast. Wilson G. Smith of the Press commended not only the singers, but the orchestra, the chorus and the staging.

The following night The Barber of Seville was heard by an equally large audience. Toti dal Monte was well received in her first appearance here, as were others in the cast, including Feodor Chaliapin, Giacomo Rimini, Vittorio Trevisan, and Charles Hackett. Roberto Moranzoni conducted. To quote the News, "the production of the piece was first class in every way."

In the performance of Tannhaeuser Saturday night, the artists appearing were Olga Forrai, Cyrena van Gordon, Forrest Lamont, Joseph Schwarz, and Alexander Kipnis. Mary Garden appeared in Thais in the afternoon together with Edward Cotreuil, Jose Mojica, Gladys Swarthout, and Alice d'Hermanoy. Mr. Moranzoni again conducted.

The Cleveland Orchestra gave the seventh "pop" concert of the season last week with Egerton Williams, Ben Silverberg and Joseph Terlitzy, violinists, as soloists. All three received commendation in the press.

Under the auspices of the Musical Arts Association, the Cleveland String Quartet gave a concert Monday night at Wade Park manor. According to Eleanor Clarage of the Times, the quartet, composed of Arthur Beckwith, Ralph Silverman, Carlton Cooley and Victor de Gomez, played in their customary finished manner." Lewis Green, clarinetist of the Cleveland Orchestra, assisted the quartet in Brahms' Quintet for clarinet and strings in B minor.

Newman to Leave This Month

Ernest Newman, British music critic, who has, since last fall, acted as guest reviewer for the New York Evening Post, plans to return to England early in March.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano
Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

The Washington Heights
.. Musical Club ..
Jane R. Cathcart, Founder President

AEOLIAN HALL
Tuesday Evening, March 10, 1925
At 8.30 o'clock

SONATA RECITAL BY EDWARD KREINER
Viola
and
WILLIAM BACHAUS
Piano
(Guest Assisting Artist)

Programme

I.
Sonata, Op. 11, No. 4, for Viola and Piano — Paul Hindemith
1. Fantasia. 2. Theme with Variations. 3. Finale

II.
Legende and Scherzo, from Sonata for Viola and Piano — Nikolaus Radnai

III.
Sonata, Op. 120, No. 1, for Viola and Piano — Brahms
1. Allegro appassionato
2. Andante un poco adagio.
3. Allegretto grazioso
4. Vivace

BALDWIN PIANO USED

Tickets, Parquet $1.50 and $2.00 — Balcony 50c., 75c. and $1.00
Boxes, $15.00 — War Tax 10 Per Cent Extra — On sale at Box Office

On The Music Highway

GISELLA NEU, young violinist who has been heard abroad, is to make her New York debut at Town Hall this evening. Miss Neu will play the Bach Chaconne, the Wieniawski D minor Concerto, and music by Saint-Saens, Sarasate, Hubay, Kreisler, Schumann, Popper-Auer and Vieuxtemps, with Nicolai Schneer as accompanist.

After completing her Southern tour, Rata Present returned to New York for a few days before starting out to fill several re-engagements as well as many new ones on a middle-Western trip which will take her to Michigan, Illinois, and Nebraska.

The Beethoven Orchestral Society, under the direction of Henry Lefkowitz, gave a concert Wednesday evening in the auditorium of Public School 63, New York City. The soloist was Cantor Abraham Hyman, tenor. Mrs. Hyman accompanied him in arias from La Gioconda and The Pearl Fishers.

Elsa Alsen will make her first St. Louis appearance on March 11 when she will be soloist at the Massenchor concert singing in several oratorios.

Beginning April 27 and continuing until May 5, the Metropolitan Opera Company will give the Cleveland Spring Opera Festival in the Public Auditorium there. Their repertoire will include L'Africana, Il Trovatore, Le Coq d'Or, Pagliacci, Tales of Hoffmann, Faust, Falstaff, La Traviata, Aida, and Parsifal.

With an assisting cast of twenty-five artists, Albertina Rasch will appear in concert at Carnegie Hall on the evening of April 7. She recently staged a new ballet for the Keith Albee circuit, called the Pastelle Ballet, which opened at the Palace theatre February 23.

Florence Leffert, young American soprano, will give her first New York recital at Town Hall Thursday evening, singing groups of German, French and Italian songs. Giuseppe Bamboschek will be the accompanying pianist.

On the list of soloists engaged for the Westchester Music Festival in White Plains, N. Y., this coming May appear the names of Florence Easton, Arthur Middleton, and Paul Althouse. Mr. Althouse will also be heard at the Newark Music Festival on May 5.

Marie Rappold has been engaged to give a recital during Music Week at Danbury, Conn., on May 6. On her program she will include songs by Burleigh, Carpenter, Bridge, Strickland, Hageman, Watts, and Spross.

Among Cecil Arden's March engagements are appearances in Ft. Collins, Col.; Greeley, Col.; Alliance, Neb.; Rapid City, S. D., and Glendive, Mont.

Concert Management Arthur Judson has issued a preliminary list of artists who will tour under its direction in the season of 1925-1926. Seven newcomers appear on the Judson list for next season, three sopranos, a contralto, two violinists and a pianist.

The soprano roster has been augmented by Nina Morgana, Amy Evans, and Virginia Rea. Irene Wilder is the contralto who will be with Judson, and the violinists are Josef Szigeti, who makes his first American visit, and Efrem Zimbalist. Arthur Shattuck, American pianist, will also be booked by Concert Management Arthur Judson for next season.

E. Robert Schmitz will play the Szymanowski Etudes at the Playhouse, Chicago, on March 22. He will fill an engagement at Madison on March 13, and he will be soloist with the Symphony Orchestra in Kansas City on the 19th. On the 23rd he will go to St. Paul for a return engagement.

Contracts have been signed for a recital by Gitta Gradova, young American pianist, to be played on April 30 at the Mendelssohn Club in Rockford, Ill.

Following the completion of her season with the Metropolitan Opera Company, Merle Alcock will make concert appearances in Trenton, N. J., in Frankfort, Ky., Stillwater, Ky., Excelsior Springs, Neb., Hastings, Neb., and Fort Wayne, Neb.

An injury to Ernest Schelling's wrist has compelled him to cancel his New York recital originally scheduled for today. He will, however, continue to conduct the children's concerts, appearing in New York again on March 7.

Playing in the New York Wanamaker Auditorium, Marcel Dupre played his farewell recital on February 27 and sailed with Madam Dupre for Paris on the S. S. France, after a brief American season during which the great French organist gave recitals in over forty cities in the United States and Canada, including appearances with the Cincinnati and New York Philharmonic Orchestras. M. Dupre will not return to America next season, but will devote himself to concert engagements in England and on the continent, and to composition. In addition, he will hold master classes in Bach Interpretation and The Art of Improvisation, to take place in Paris from April to September, 1925.

Through an error in an announcement regarding Kathryn Meisle, Chicago Civic Opera contralto, it was made to appear that Miss Meisle was to be under the exclusive management of the Wolfsohn Bureau. The Wolfsohn Bureau will make some bookings for Miss Meisle by special arrangement with Calvin Franklin, her manager, and it is through this arrangement that she will be connected with the Wolfsohn Bureau.

Edward Johnson, American tenor, now appearing with the Metropolitan Opera Company, has been engaged for three appearances in the Cincinnati Music Festival to appear there on May 2, 8, and 9. Mr. Johnson will sing in St. John's Passion, in St. Francis of Assisi, and in a Wagnerian program.

The tenor part in the production in New York on March 25 by the Music School Settlement Association, of Charles Wakefield Cadman's opera, The Garden of Mystery, will be sung by Ernest Davis.

Ruth Barrett, associate of the American Guild of Organists, gave the program at the regular Friday evening organ recital at Town Hall, New York, on February 20.

The Polish National Orchestra, under the direction of Stanislaw Namyslowski, will give a second New York concert at the Metropolitan Opera House next Sunday afternoon. The program will feature compositions similar in character to those played at the first concert, particularly the numbers in which the gayly costumed musicians augment their playing with chorus singing.

Carl Schlegel, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Pepito Velasco, pianist, appeared in a joint concert under the auspices of St. John's College Auxiliary, Brooklyn, on February 19.

The spring tour of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra begins March 8 in Philadelphia with concerts scheduled for Washington, Baltimore, Wheeling, and Pittsburgh. The orchestra returns on March 15 for a concert in the Metropolitan Opera House. Willem Mengelberg will conduct all the concerts on tour.

Erna Rubinstein will appear with the orchestra on March 8 as soloist in a Schubert-Beethoven-Strauss program.

Three Songs From the Chinese for voice, flute, harp and piano, by Bernard Wagenaar, Dutch composer, will have their first public performance at the next concert of the Society of the Friends of Music on March 8. The work was sketched four years ago, but was not finished until 1923.

Gladys Axman has just completed a ten weeks' tour of Eastern cities as guest artist with the San Carlo Opera Company, singing Tosca, Santuzza, and Marguerite.

Marion Rous will make her second appearance this season in St. Paul tomorrow. She will also be heard in Duluth on the 6th and in Springfield, O., on March 9.

Beniamino Gigli has been engaged to appear in Youngstown, O., early in October under the auspices of The Monday Musical Club.

The March series of Saturday night concerts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, will include an historical program outlining the development of orchestral music. David Mannes, the conductor, will begin with a work for strings only, followed by compositions requiring more and more woodwind and brass instruments.

The series, which begins on March 7, is free to the public and includes lecture-recitals on Saturday afternoons by Thomas Whitney Surette on the program for the evening.

Bianca del Vecchio, Italian-American pianist, will appear in her debut piano recital at Aeolian Hall on Thursday evening, March 5. Miss del Vecchio won the Loeb piano prize, the foremost prize at the Institute of Musical Art, in the season of 1921.

At the concert of the People's Chorus of New York on February 10 at the Natural History Museum, Abby Morrison was soloist.

Renee Thornton, who in private life is Mrs. Richard Hageman, has been engaged to sing for the Altrusa Club, of Columbus, Ohio, on April 15, when she will co-star with Carlos Salzedo, harpist. Mr. Hageman will be at the piano for Miss Thornton.

Fleta

METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

GALLI-CURCI

Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records

Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano

Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA

Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano

Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

Details in Concert-Giving

Cecil Arden Looks Forward to the Perfection of the Mechanics of Presenting Music.

by ALICE MASON

CECIL ARDEN, in her career as a singer, has devoted more than passing thought to the mechanics of concert-giving. "There is a great deal more than music in a recital," she said to her visitor, "and the failure to take proper care of the details of management and arranging has caused many a flat failure or faded what might very well be a glorious musical occasion."

Miss Arden has found there is often not enough co-operation between visiting talent and the local concert managers about the country. This is not in complaint in many cases, she explains, but it seems to her that certain faults in concert presentation can be easily removed.

This great country of ours harbors sections with individual characteristics caused by the original settling in them of people from one nation or another. It would seem an easy way to please them to give certain numbers in the language or the manner with which by birth or association they are, next to English, most familiar. There are traditions, even in this young United States, such as the French heritage of Louisiana, the Spanish-Mexican influence in Texas and New Mexico. There is an immense Germanic population in St. Louis and in the neighborhood of Chicago; in the Mid-Northern states there have settled and prospered entire townfuls of Scandinavians. These people have a natural sentiment for the art products of their parent race, and in certain towns distant from immense, polyglot New York the enthusiasm of these groups at an occasional concert where they hear the "old tongue" sung to them, perhaps even with faulty vocal rendition, is almost pathetic to behold. Why, asks Miss Arden, do not all musicians cater to this?

"But I do think away from the big centers most of a recital program in the United States should be in English, not just one scant group at the end," continued this thoughtful young singer. "You cannot blame the audience that hears a foreign tongue in song once or a few times a year, following an imperfect acquaintance with it or none at all in school days, for being inattentive, unless the voice is the most beautiful in the world.

"A little common sense and understanding sympathy on the part of the recitalist, plus the assistance of the local manager, should work wonders in overcoming our musical public's growing pains.

"The local manager must not expect to sleep on the job, either," ejaculated Miss Arden. "It is for him to know his people. Besides the matter of racial inheritance, and sectional taste in schools of music, there is a more subtle gauging of what can reasonably be expected to please. No traveling artist in a strange neighborhood can guess what one, two or three songs that appeared on some previous concert program in that vicinity it would be wise for her to repeat. Nor can she always tell from the response to her own singing which her audience would like to hear her do the next time. Advice from the local manager about this should assist her in her selection.

"There are other things I think should be changed," continued Miss Arden. "One of them is the character of many of the concert halls. Great, bleak rooms—you know the impression they immediately make on one, with nothing to relieve the forbidding atmosphere. Ghastly lights, both hideous to look at and fatal in their effect on the human countenance, which in uncostumed recital needs all possible aid in rendering an artistic effect.

"If we were a nation of paupers, it would be wiser to make the best of it uncomplaining, but we are a rich country, and the individual tax for the upkeep of a good hall in each town big enough to fill one would be negligible. In some progressive communities the assembly hall is the center of all intellectual and social life. There visiting lecturers are heard, concerts are given, motion pictures and theatricals, amateur and professional, are staged. The surroundings of all these activities should be as comfortable, beautiful, convenient, and healthful as possible. Otherwise persons are not inclined to sit in the halls; they prefer to remain at home. That is as bad for them as it is bad for the activities which are being offered them. They need the refreshment and stimulation of music, the theatre, and visiting thinkers after their long hours of work to make their livings."

Photo by Ira Hill.
MISS CECIL ARDEN

Ernest Bloch Conducts His Poem in Rochester

Rochester, Feb. 27.—At the concert yesterday of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Albert Coates, Ernest Bloch's symphonic poem, Winter and Spring, was conducted by the composer. The soloist of the occasion was Wendell Hoss, first horn of the Philharmonic.

At the evening concert of February 19 the Rochester American Opera Company furnished the chorus for the performance of the Mefistopheles movement of the Faust Symphony, and the Polovetskian Dances from Borodine's Prince Igor. Lenski's Farewell from Eugene Onegin was sung by Vladimir Rosing, Russian tenor, with orchestral accompaniment. He also sang a group of songs with Mr. Coates at the piano.

The Little Symphony, composed of twenty-four members, made their first appearance under Mr. Coates' direction before an appreciative audience on February 9.

CORIGLIANO

American Violinist

"Is an artist of great promise." "His work is painstaking." "His technical skill is unquestionable."

"YOUNG NEW YORK VIOLINIST SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT"

"Corigliano's Performance Gains Flattering Predictions for Future"

"To begin with, the young New York violinist, John Corigliano, who was yesterday's soloist, is an artist of great promise. Such are his musical gifts as to merit from musicians who heard him yesterday flattering predictions for his future. His offering was the Max Bruch Minor concerto, in which the lovely singing tone of his violin was manifest, particularly in the second movement, the Adagio in E-flat Major. There was crispness of enunciation in the final movement, and his entire essay was given with an authority remarkable for one of his years. He had splendid orchestral support. Corigliano was recalled several times."

St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Monday, Feb. 2, 1925.

"BIG CROWD HEARS POPULAR CONCERT DESPITE WEATHER"

"Corigliano, Violinist, Wins Praise from Audience at Odeon."

"Corigliano, a young violinist and a newcomer to St. Louis, was the soloist. He is a studious young man who takes his work seriously. His demeanor is quiet and his work is painstaking, and his tone is even, firm and musical. He showed to advantage especially in the adagio movement, which he delivered with feeling and good taste. There is no flash in his playing, and he performs no tricks in his execution of brilliant rhythmic passages. As an encore he played a Dvorak-Kreisler Slavonic Dance."

The St. Louis Times, Monday, Feb. 2, 1925.

"YOUNG VIOLINIST MAKES HIS DEBUT AT SYMPHONY CONCERT"

"John Corigliano, of New York, Shows Technical Skill and Musical Understanding."

"With the Bruch G Minor concerto as his offering, John Corigliano, a young New York violinist, made his St. Louis debut with the Symphony Orchestra at its popular concert yesterday. An Auer pupil, he is a credit to that great teacher. He made his instrument sing notably in the adagio. Corigliano is a musician of promise. His technical skill is unquestionable. He has an endowment of poetry and musical understanding, and these kept the show-qualities of the Bruch concerto subservient to its beauty of content. Though tried and trusted of violinists for years, it was not, as he played it, trite. His encore number was the Dvorak-Kreisler 'Slavonic Dance'."

St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Monday, Feb. 2, 1925.

Mr. Corigliano will appear at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn on April 13, at 8:15 p. m., under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

A few Available Dates This Season for Concerts and Recitals Season 1925-1926 Now Being Booked

"John Corigliano gave an excellent, musicianly and artistic performance and everyone, including the Orchestra, was very much pleased. There is a great promise in this young man and I shall not hesitate to recommend him warmly. He is going to be a man's violinist, that's the best one can say anyway of a male artist.
(Signed) "RUDOLPH GANZ."

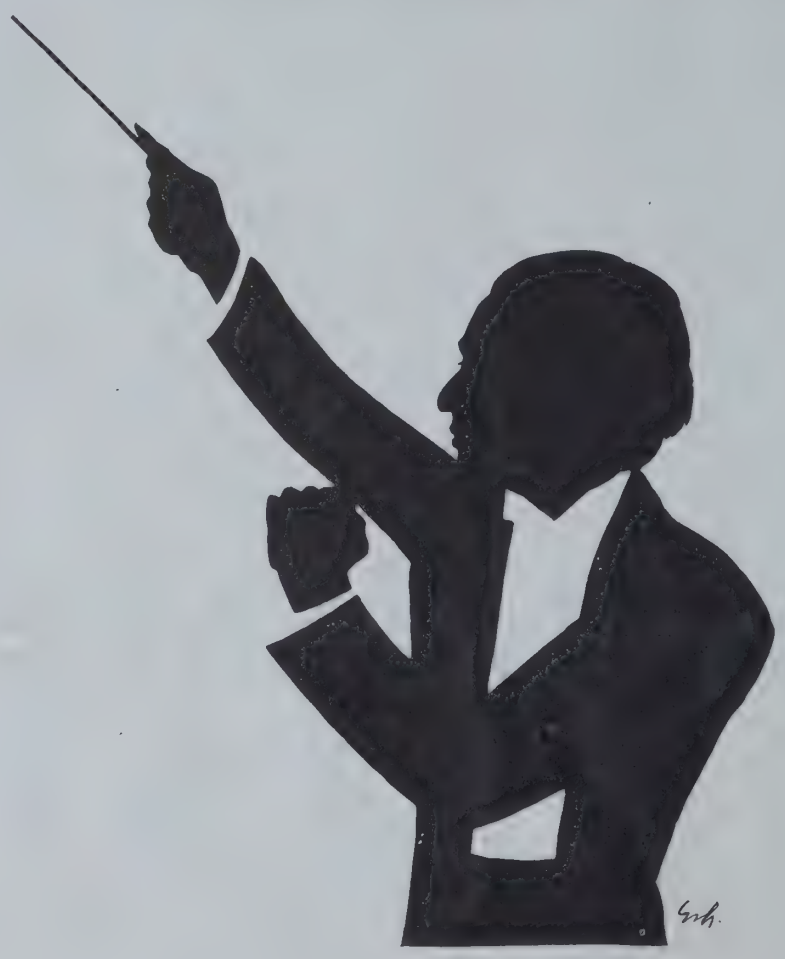
CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU
250 WEST 57TH ST., NEW YORK CITY

Thirtieth Season

CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

FRITZ REINER, Conductor



THE CONDUCTOR

Comments of London Critics, May 27th, 1924:

(Reiner) "Made the performance the event of the season."

"He (Reiner) received an ovation such as is rarely bestowed upon a newcomer."

"Shows himself a conductor of pre-eminence."

PRAGUE, MAY 30th—31st

"Reiner was the Hit of the Festival."

NEW YORK—CRITICISMS

"Conductor Reiner reached Great Artistic Heights in debut here."—N. Y. American, July 25, 1924.

"Orchestra Genius from Cincinnati given volley of cheers as he closes first New York concert."—Herald-Tribune, July 25, 1924.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"Mr. Reiner showed himself to be a Splendid conductor."—Philadelphia Public Ledger, Feb. 16, 1925.

THE ORCHESTRA

"It is one of the Greatest Orchestras in the world."—Atlanta Constitution, Dec. 12, 1924.

"There was an opulence to the strings and a glow to the brasses that was entrancing."—Pittsburg Post, Jan. 17, 1925.

"A great work had been given a Magnificent rendition." (Frank D minor Symphony).—Cincinnati Enquirer, Nov. 8, 1924.

"A performance of truly electrifying quality; one which will linger in the memory of those privileged to hear this rarely satisfying concert."—Buffalo Evening News, Feb. 11, 1925.

"No list of great orchestras can be considered complete unless its name appears thereon. And in Fritz Reiner it has a superb conductor who deserves every word in his praise."—Buffalo Evening Post, Feb. 11, 1925.

THE CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ASSOCIATION COMPANY

JESSIE W. DARBY, Manager

Times-Star Building Cincinnati, Ohio

Boston Hears Salmond in Recital

Frieda Hempel, Margaret Sittig, and Tina Filipponi Appear; Miss Giannini With Glee Club.

Boston, Feb. 25.—There has been no dearth of concert attractions in Boston during recent days. On the list of recitalists of the last week are the names of Felix Salmond, Margaret Sittig, Frieda Hempel, Tina Filipponi, Marie Mikova, and Arthur Hartmann. In addition to this concerts were given by the Harvard Glee Club and the Fox-Burgin-Bedetti Trio.

Assisted by Frank Sheridan, pianist, Mr. Salmond gave a cello recital in Jordan Hall Tuesday evening. Philip Hale of the Herald wrote that "it would be idle to speak of Mr. Salmond's technical proficiency. He is a master of the finer qualities. He is warmly emotional without ever sinking into the slough of sentimentalism. He appeals to the heart as well as to the mind." H. T. Parker of the Transcript commented that "at will Mr. Salmond's tone caught the smile or the sigh" of his music, and "curved the phrase and unfolded the contour. It spun the pattern and rhythmed the spinning."

Mr. Parker mentioned that Mr. Sheridan "proved to be less accompanist than fellow musician." According to Mr. Hale, his accompaniments are "an inherent part of the whole composition and performance."

* * *

The audience that heard Margaret Sittig's violin recital Thursday "warmed to her skill and her genuinely musical personality," in the words of the Globe reviewer. He found in her playing "first rate" technical equipment and "the much rarer and infinitely more precious gift of music." According to the Transcript reviewer, she "possesses in high degree many of the qualities that go into the making of the real musician as well as the excellent virtuoso. . . . Her tone is large, broad, pure; her bowing firm, free, capable of many subtleties. Her intonation leaves nothing to be desired."

The writer in the Christian Science Monitor thought her tone big "and, especially in the lower strings, there is much power and sweetness, with splendid depth." He found her harmonics often disappointing, however. The Herald reviewer said Miss Sittig "produces singularly beautiful tone, strong, sweet and rich. She maintains a quite unusual purity of intonation." He also commented on her "fine musicianship" and "emotional warmth" and asserted that she is "a violinist of rare talent and ability whom it would be a pleasure to hear again." This commentator mentioned that Frederick V. Sittig proved an accompanist of "remarkable merit" who is an "accomplished pianist and a sound musician."

* * *

Frieda Hempel was called upon for numerous encores by an enthusiastic audience after her recital in Symphony Hall last night. The Herald reviewer said that she sang "with the keen rhythmic sense which, this long while, has placed her on a higher level than that of most other singers, and, furthermore, with a splendor of tone in her medium register which is distinctly a new acquisition."

This writer also spoke of the "astonishing virtuosity" with which she tossed off her brilliant cadenza in the aria Ernani involami from Ernani. Among her encores was the Blue Danube Waltz which she sang with "enchanting rhythm" and high tones "sweeter than they have sounded for years." Miss Hempel was accompanied by Coenraad Bos.

FELIX SALMOND

English Cellist, Was Praised in Boston for His Skill and Artistry When He Played There Recently.

* * *

Dusolina Giannini was the assisting artist with the Harvard Glee Club which, conducted by Archibald T. Davison, gave a concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday.

The Globe reviewer wrote of Miss Giannini that her voice "is a big, clear, sonorous soprano, with dusky warmth in its low register, the resonance of a trumpet well played in forte passages, exquisite sweetness in purely lyric moments" and added that she is a "born singer." According to the Herald, she sang the folk songs "with a finish of vocal technique, a skill in use of tonal color and a mastery of interpretation."

* * *

Writing of the second concert of the Fox-Burgin-Bedetti Trio, the Herald reviewer stated: "Admirably indeed they played the evening through with brilliancy of tone and sparkle from Mr. Fox, exquisite song from Mr. Burgin, noble tone and emotional warmth from Mr. Bedetti; and from all three a finish of ensemble that calls for no less a term than perfect. To this fine ensemble they added an even greater merit. They played every bar as though they relished it." Other writers agreed.

* * *

Tina Filipponi gave a piano recital in Jordan Hall Wednesday afternoon before an appreciative audience. According to the Transcript chronicler, Miss Filipponi "possesses many interesting powers. Perhaps the chief of these is her ability to play with great speed and with great lightness, the while maintaining a tone of surprising transparent clarity. Also, her tone maintains its limpidity in lyric, songful measures, even where impassioned song demands considerable volume."

Repeat Carmen With Changed Cast

There were two changes in the cast of Carmen, presented at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on February 23. Clarence Whitehill was the Toreador, and Nanette Guilford sang Micaela. Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) wrote that Mme. Guilford acquitted herself "with ample credit." In the Herald Tribune, she was commended for "a very creditable performance." The World reported that it was "a spirited performance by one of the season's best casts."

"Grace, Fire and Poetry" are qualities found in the piano playing of

DOROTHY MILLER

DUCKWITZ

"She showed grasp, technic, intelligence, beyond the mere notes, and she seemed to impress her large audience."—Morning Telegraph.

"The pianist played with considerable clearness and much suavity."
—New York Sun.

"The song of the eternal feminine is beautiful, and one may well rejoice that there are women pianists who sing it!"
—Chicago Tribune (Paris Edition)

"Brilliant success for Mme. Duckwitz, a faithful and intelligent interpreter of the classics and of modern music."
—La Comoedia, Paris.

"She is a thorough artist and has splendid technical equipment. The audience was delighted and she was recalled time and again."
—Detroit Free Press

"A delightful combination of grace, fire and poetry."
—Toledo Blade

Management Dorothy Miller Duckwitz
145 West 77th Street, New York
CHICKERING PIANO WELTE-MIGNON RECORDS

MARIE
RAPPOLD

Singing "Aida" With the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company Wins Another Ovation.

Philadelphia Record, Feb. 13, 1925.

"The cast was headed by that generously endowed artist, Marie Rappold, who made of Aida a woman of heart and soul and a great passion. Mme. Rappold has not only a voice of rare beauty, but she has also unquestioned ability as an actress. The curtain calls for her were numerous."

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, Feb. 13, 1925

"Marie Rappold's interpretation of the title role was excellent in its histrionic and vocal aspects. She sang with rare flexibility and rich feeling and her aria 'Rittorna Vincitor' brought a robust response of handclapping, as did her splendid third act solo 'O Patrie Mia.'"

Philadelphia North American, Feb. 13, 1925.

". . . For here was Marie Rappold herself doing justice to the role of Aida as artistically and as opulently as ever in her days with the Metropolitan Company."

AVAILABLE FOR RECITALS, ORATORIO, OPERA, THIS SEASON AND NEXT

MANAGEMENT M. H. HANSON
437 Fifth Avenue, New York

Photo by Fermand de Gueldre

CASELLA

Distinguished pianist, composer and conductor, will return to America next season, beginning October 15th

H. T. Parker, of the Boston Transcript, writes of Casella, the pianist: "More felicitous playing were hard to imagine. It ran in questionless technical security, in flawless and abounding technical ease. Whatever he willed upon music or instrument, he accomplished exactly and unobtrusively. No shading seemed to evade his intention, no sonority to fall short of his desire. His touch was limpidity itself. A pianist's, a musician's mind, heart and hand may not do more."

NOW BOOKING

Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

BALDWIN PIANO DUO-ART RECORDS

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Vienna Mourns Loewe

Popular Conductor Dies; Unger and Mascagni Conduct; Novelty at the Volksoper.

The Musical Digest Foreign Correspondents:
J. B. BAUER, Damenstiftstrasse, 16-3 MUNICH, Germany.
VICTOR BELAIEV, Novinsky Boulevard 117, lodg 4, MOSCOW, Russia.
FEDERICO CANDIDA, 12 via Palermo, MILANO, Italy.
ARTHUR KURSCHNER, 48 Hauptstrasse, BERLIN, Germany.
PAUL LEWINSON, 21 Maresfield Gardens, LONDON, N. W. 3, England.
PAUL STEFAN, Hamerlingplatz, VIENNA 8, Austria.
K. H. STOTTNER, 18 Rue de Cirque, PARIS, France.

Vienna.

The music public of Vienna is mourning the death of Ferdinand Loewe who died unexpectedly recently of a sickness which was not considered serious, although he had been suffering from it for some time. Loewe was a Viennese conductor, although he led for many years in Munich, and was often engaged as guest director in Berlin and Budapest.

He only once undertook to direct opera; that was in Vienna under Gustav Mahler. His greatest significance in the music life of the city, however, came from his being a pupil and friend of Anton Bruckner, whose symphonies he brought to their present popularity here.

His most notable achievement was the work he did in popularizing good music. For twenty years he directed the concerts of the Wiener Konzertverein, which he helped to found, and which was one of the city's first permanent orchestral organizations. Before the formation of the Konzertverein there were only the Philharmonic concerts, which employed the orchestra of the opera.

Established Popular Concerts

The Konzertverein established popular concerts and concerts at cheaper rates of admission and in this way large additions were made to the public which had been enjoying serious music in Vienna. Loewe also conducted the concerts of symphony orchestra for workers which for some years had been under the leadership of Dr. D. J. Bach. It was two days after one such concert that Loewe died.

During the last two years he was considered hampered in his directing activities by his lingering illness. The Konzertverein during that time has been largely under the leadership of Paul von Klenau and Dirk Foch.

From 1919 to 1922 Loewe was director of the State Academy for Music. Joseph Marx, the composer, succeeded him in that position. Vienna feels that in the death of Ferdinand Loewe it has lost a great deal. His funeral was the occasion for a great public manifestation, and already two memorial festivals have taken place.

Once a conductor has won the approval of Vienna, he is sure to hold it, especially if the city desires to have him return for longer engagements. Such is the case with Bruno Walter, who still comes back from time to time to conduct here. His recent performance of Missa Solemnis, which he led before departing in the general direction of the United States, is still remembered for its poetry and clarity.

Before Herr Walter went to Munich he conducted for some years in Vienna, and the city still feels that it is possible that he may return to his old post with the opera. Nevertheless the feeling cannot be avoided that the choice of conductors for the Vienna State Opera has ceased to be a purely musical matter. Politics are of the greatest importance in this concern now.

Lately Vienna has heard performances under the leadership of Clemens Krauss, who used to be connected with the opera here, but who is now opera director in Frankfort. Rumors persist that he may yet return, for his concerts have given great satisfaction to public and music critics.

Unger in Debut

The young Heinz Unger, of Berlin, made his first appearance in Vienna lately. He specializes in the presentation of modern music. At his concert here he played Mahler's First Symphony, whose popularity he has been developing to the best of his ability, it is said, in his home city. The reviewers were pleased with the way he handled the work, and expressed the hope that more would be heard in Vienna of Dr. Unger.

It may become monotonous to repeat it, but the music situation in Austria remains as before repressed by the economic stress which the country continues to undergo. The State Opera in its present disorganized state is content with the most conservative of repertoires. It no longer puts on any novelties of importance or pretension, although from time to time it puts on revivals of more or less interest.

A new setting of Smetana's Bartered Bride would obviously be a performance of the greater interest, but the State Opera chose rather to put it on in the manner in which it has been heard in Vienna over and over again. Mayr in the role of the matchmaker did splendidly in this performance. By many persons he is considered the finest actor-singer in the entire company.

Mascagni Opera Revived

In honor of Mascagni, who has been living in Vienna for some time now, the Opera gave his L'Amico Fritz, which has not been heard here for some thirty years. It keeps very well, this opera, and it was generally agreed that it stands repetition nicely. There is real lyrical beauty in many parts of the score.

The performance was good. Rosette Anday in the part of the gipsy distinguished herself, and rather surprised the audience with the skill with which she herself played the violin solo which is scored for her part. Usually this is left for a member of the accompanying orchestra.

Another Mascagni piece was put on at one of the many Viennese theatres devoted to operetta, his Si. The composer was present at this premiere as conductor of the performance, a function which he fulfilled at the State Opera also when Fritz was given. At both performances Mascagni was accorded ovations by the audience.

The operetta as well as the larger work included music of delicate and touching beauty, although the modern dances which were included in the performance seemed somewhat out of place. The presentation of Si was lusty and full of good spirits.

Volksoper Struggles

At the Volksoper Josef Reitler, music reviewer of the Neue Freie Presse and director of the New Vienna Conservatory, who was appointed by the Government provisional director in order that a bankruptcy might be avoided, is doing his very best to keep the conpany's head above water.

Considerable improvement in the situation has been brought about so far. The prices of admission have been lowered, for example, but the situation is far from being assuring just yet.

This organization presented Walter Braunfel's opera, The Bird, for the first time in its career. Fritz Stiedry was the conductor, and he won a large share of the approval which the public and newspapers accorded the performance.

Among the prominent concert soloists of the last few weeks have been the violinists Vecsey, Szigeti and Erika Morini. Dirk Schafer, the Dutch pianist, who is shortly to make his American bow, won friends in his recital here. The twelve-year-old cellist Mila Wellerson aroused attention with the ripeness of her art and the skill of her technique.

Approval also was won by Katharine Goodson, English pianist, and Elizabeth Rothwell, wife of Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, who included in her program a number of songs by her husband.

PAUL STEFAN.

LOUDON CHARLTON ANNOUNCES

For Season 1925-1926 (January—February)

ALEXANDER BOROVSKY

Ira D. Schwarz photo

"A super-technician of the piano and a finely balanced artist in addition."—Ernest Newman in London Sunday Times.

NOW BOOKING

Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall, New York

Steinway Piano Duo-Art Records

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Padmavati Given at the Opera

Roussel Piece Wins Favor Again; American Tenor Sings in Tosca; an English Pianist.

Paris.

A revival of Albert Roussel's opera, Padmavati, at the Opera, met with general approval by the Paris press and public. The piece is considered remarkable, among other things, for its libretto, written by Louis Laloy. The story is told with much of the ingenuity, technical skill, and subtlety which one might expect from a play without music, and is, needless to say, high above the ordinary opera libretto in this respect.

The music of Albert Roussel is one of the best examples of what the French composers of the present day are producing. It is devoid of superficialities of structure, and establishes a dreamy mood of mystic charm. The score enhances skillfully the drama on the stage, and the varied moods of the tragedy of Padmavati are reflected in detail in the pages of Roussel's music.

One of the finest parts of the Opera performance of Padmavati was the setting. The costumes, gorgeous and varied in design, were nevertheless in good taste and harmonious among themselves. Valdo Barbey was the designer.

Most of Cast New

With the exceptions of Mmes. Lapeyrette and Jane Laval, who sang the same roles at the revival of Padmavati as they did when the opera was first given in Paris, the cast was new.

M. Dutreix, tenor, had the role of Raten-Sen. He was praised more for his singing than for his acting. Several of the dramatic opportunities presented were not developed by M. Dutreix to their fullest advantage. Exactly opposite to this were the comments on the singing and acting of M. Mauran in the part of Alaouddin. His acting was good throughout, but his voice was not of the best. Besides he did not seem perfectly at home with the score.

The tenor Rambaud made an excellent impression as Padmavati. His voice was well suited to the music which he had to sing, and he sang it with appealing beauty of tone. His acting was not impressive, and his impersonation at times was insecure and unconvincing. M. Ruhlmann was the conductor.

Tosca Sung Again

Puccini's Tosca has reached its 490th performance at the Opera-Comique, and it continues a popular favorite. Almost always it is well produced at the Salle Favart.

The feature of the most recent performance was the appearance of a young American tenor, William Martin, as Mario Cavaradossi. His unusual clarity of diction was much approved by audience and reviewers. He was in his best voice in this presentation, his brilliant upper notes being particularly effective. His singing of the part met with instant success, and he had to repeat the third act aria.

He proved in his acting a most spirited lover, and in all respects kept up the good work which has won him practically all the leading tenor roles in the Puccini operas on the list of the Opera-Comique.

As the heroine Raymonde Visconti made a deep impression. Her acting of the part had all the dramatic passion which Sardou intended his Tosca to have. Her delineation of Tosca was undoubtedly the best thing which she has done since the commencement of her engagement with the company.

Although her voice possesses certain richness and warmth, she does not seem to use her native abilities to their best advantage. She appears to work too hard when she sings. In the first act of Tosca she was at her best, but she later became tired. During the final act her intonation was unsure.

M. Boulogne as Scarpia did well, both as an actor and as a singer. There were splendid moments in his impersonation in the second act particularly. The mise-en-scene was up to the best standards of the Opera-Comique, and the orchestra played well under the direction of M. Frigara.

Cavalleria Rusticana Sung

Mascagni's popular opera Cavalleria Rusticana is put on at the Opera-Comique on the average of once a week almost. It is used generally as a curtain-raiser for some more pretentious work in the repertory. This is the opera usually chosen by the management for the debut of young singers just out of the Conservatory who have been engaged by the company.

The performances are therefore always interesting before they begin, for the audience is inclined to speculate as to what new star the rising of the curtain may produce. Frequently enough they are disastrous after they have gone on a while, for many a career heretofore hopeful has been stopped dead with a debut in Cavalleria Rusticana.

The latest presentation of the Mascagni work had Mlle. Sibille in the role of Santuzza. Her acting for the most part was convincing, and her voice was pleasing in its smoothness of tone, but her diction left something to be desired.

The tenor Oged still possesses a voice tired from overwork. The harshness of its quality was poorly suited to the part of Turiddu, which he undertook. His acting, on the other hand, was full of fervor and passion.

M. Rousseau, baritone, was not impressive vocally as Alfio, but Mlle. Destanges sang Lola pleasantly enough. The setting as usual was good, and suggested not a little of the brightness of Southern Italy. The chorus sang with spirit and acted intelligently. M. Cloz conducted.

English Pianist Heard

Howard Jones, English pianist, was heard in the first of his two scheduled Paris recitals. He played in the Salle Erard a program which exactly fitted his scholarly, delicate style. Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue he played brilliantly, and the right touch of poetry, supported by more than adequate technical skill, were displayed in compositions of Beethoven, Debussy, Chopin, and Liszt. A number on the program which was particularly well received by Mr. Howard's audience was the Dance for the Harpsichord, by his compatriot Delius.

Much interest has been aroused in Paris music circles by the presentation at the Theatre de la Cigale in Montmartre of the spectacle Femmes et Fleurs d'Espagne. It is a combination of dances, songs, and sketches characteristic of the life in Spain and represents in all their color typical provincial Spanish scenes.

K. H. STOTTNER.

ERNST VON DOHNANYI
Hungarian Pianist, Composer, and Conductor, Appeared in These Three Capacities at a Concert of the New York State Symphony Devoted Entirely to His Music.

London German Opera Season to Start May 18

London has completed arrangements for its second post-war season of German opera, reports the New York Herald Tribune. This was made known Sunday by the arrival of a cable for Bruno Walter, guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, requesting him to return to Covent Garden. He will sail shortly after completing his term with the New York Symphony. The season will start at Covent Garden on May 18.

"It is probable that the London German cycle will become an annual affair," said Mr. Walter. "The season of German music last year was the first since the war. It was greeted with the warmest cordiality. All classes of London society attended, just as in the days preceding the war.

"All of the soloists were German. The choruses were made up of both German and English singers. The orchestras, of course, the London Symphony and Philharmonic, were composed entirely of Englishmen. We played the Nibelungen cycle twice because of the popular demand."

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R E JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO
BRUNSWICK RECORDS

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: H. J. ANDERSEN, 67 East 55th Street, New York City
Telephone Plaza 7147

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Aged Italian Baritone Dies

Giuseppe Kaschmann Passes Away in Rome; Vitale Conducts Aida and Carmen.

Rome.

Giuseppe Kaschmann, the baritone who some years ago scaled the heights of popularity in Italy, died here on February 7 at the age of seventy-five. His name is inseparably connected with the history of the Italian musical theatre during the last part of the nineteenth century.

Not only was Kaschmann a singer of great ability, but his acting was one of the greatest of his talents. He had a stage presence that was invariably impressive with audiences. The historian of the operatic stage of the last generation must link this distinctive artist with his contemporaries, Tamagno, Patti, and Battistini.

Some of his finest roles were Posa in Don Carlos, Rigoletto, Telramund, and Iago. Lately, of course, he had been retired from public appearance because of his age. He was born in Lussinpiccolo, Istria, on July 14, 1850. His first public appearance in opera took place in La Favorita at the Regio of Turin in 1875.

Lucesaska as Carmen

Before an enthusiastic audience, according to the report of Il Messagero, the first performance of the season of Carmen took place at the Costanzi on February 7. The production was completely successful. The protagonist, Eugenia Lucesaska, a Roman singer, acted the role with the proper spontaneity, wile, and color, and sang well, with her voice best in its deeper range. If it had a little more power, she would be better able to do the part full justice.

She was much applauded by the audience throughout the performance, and the public approval reached its climax, properly enough, in the emotional finale.

Giulio Crimi was fervent in his singing and acting as Don Jose. He repeated the success which he had recently when he sang this role at La Scala in Milan. The reviewers of both Rome and Milan agreed that the part is excellently suited to his style.

Maria Briganti as Micaela displayed a voice of smooth, veiled quality, and sang quite to perfection the romanza of the act. The baritone Ghirardini was in his best voice as Escamillo, and Felice Belli, basso, sang the music of Zuniga with intelligence and understanding.

Vitale Aids in Success

A great part of the success of the production was due to the conducting of Edoardo Vitale. The popular conductor proved anew his musical virtues, and was acclaimed by the audience. Particularly beautiful, fluid, and well balanced were the short preludes and the introduction of the third act.

The mise-en-scene left nothing to be desired. The newspaper reviewers were unanimous in its praise. The prima ballerina, Julie Sadowa, was charming and graceful as usual. Members of the royal family attended this Carmen.

The first performance of the season of Verdi's Aida at the Costanzi took place on February 3, also under the direction of Edoardo Vitale. The presentation was noteworthy for the strength, color, and good taste with which Maestro Vitale imbued the popular score. The singers of the occasion won praise also.

The tenor Merli, it was reported in the Tribune, sang with a judgment and fullness of tone which have not been surpassed in Rome in a number of years. The Giornale d'Italia echoed this praise, reporting, "His singing came in the way of a genuine revelation." Signor Alaleona, reviewer of Il Mondo, was much of the same opinion concerning Signor Merli.

The limpid quality and loveliness of the voice of Isora Rinolfi, who sang the title part, were praised in more measured terms. She sang this role a year ago at La Scala in Milan. Signora Bertana as Amneris, Signor Inghilleri as Amonasro, and the basso Pasero as Ramfis were the other leading members of the cast. Their success was definite without being too startling. Signora Sadowa danced in this performance too, and won her usual plaudits.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Bilotti Plays in England

London.—Anton Bilotti, pianist, appeared at Queen's Hall early in February, together with Mlle. Paikin and the Kedroff Quartet, where he played a program which included Bach-Busoni, Chopin, Mendelssohn, and Liszt. His success was such that he was engaged to give a second concert at Aeolian Hall on February 24. Freda Wilson and Jacques van Lier also appeared.

ADAMO DIDUR

As Boris Godunoff, a Role Which He Sang at the Recent Repetition of Moussorgsky's Opera at the Metropolitan

Sokoloff Invited to London

Cleveland, Feb. 26.—Nikolai Sokoloff, director of the Cleveland Orchestra, has been invited to appear as guest conductor with the London Symphony Orchestra in Queen's Hall on May 29 and June 5. Mr. Sokoloff, who will sail for England May 9 to start rehearsals, will introduce at the second concert Charles Martin Loeffler's A Pagan Poem. This will be Mr. Sokoloff's sixth appearance with the London Symphony.

Furtwaengler Explains Refusal of Vienna Post

According to a dispatch in the New York Evening Post, Wilhelm Furtwaengler, German conductor who has just returned to Vienna from America, in an interview with the London correspondent for the Neues Wiener Journal, explained his reasons for declining an invitation to succeed Richard Strauss as director of the Vienna Opera and Philharmonic. He said:

"I am so beset with concert engagements that the directorship of the Vienna Opera is impossible. It would be ideal to direct the opera and the Philharmonic in Vienna, but I have just engaged myself to conduct a season of several concerts with the New York Philharmonic.

"If the emigration of German and Austrian musicians to America continues," said Mr. Furtwaengler further, "the Philadelphia and New York orchestras will seriously compete with the still unsurpassed Vienna Orchestra."

The same correspondent interviewed Bruno Walter before he left for the United States. He said:

"Negotiations are going on between me and the Vienna Opera, but I am skeptical of the outcome.

"Of course, I would go with pleasure to the Vienna Opera, which is the greatest musical institution in the world, but should do so only under certain conditions and with sufficient free time for outside engagements.

"My dream is to have an opera of my own, where the direction is entirely in my hands."

CECILE de HORVATH
PIANIST
Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Baldwin Piano De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1925
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

SUMMY'S CORNER
LEOPOLD GODOWSKY, Pianist, Composer, Edu[illegible] the very best ever written on the subject. It shows a knowledge, intelligence, lucidity and virtuosity [illegible] the master pedagogue."
Harmonic Material and Its Uses
by
ADOLF WEIDIG
Price, $3.00, plus postage
Published by
Clayton F. Summy Co.
429 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

BONCI
VOCAL STUDIO
For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.
Knabe Piano

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Now Touring the Pacific Coast
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

Sensational in Opera Triumphant in Concert
Jeritza
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
Sole management Metropolitan Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall New York City
Knabe Piano
Victor Records

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

JOSEF LHEVINNE, Cesar Thomson, and Lazar Samoiloff are likely to have for their vacation this summer the "standing room only" sign, so far as pupils are concerned, it seems.

Since the announcement that these artist-teachers will conduct classes under the auspices of the Master School of Musical Arts of California, which opens in San Francisco and Los Angeles in May and of which Lazar S. Samoiloff is the general director, reservations for lessons have come to Alice Seckels, the manager in San Francisco, from over twenty-three states. Students are coming from as far as Delaware, Vermont, West Virginia, New York, Oklahoma, Illinois and Montana.

The faculty of the Master School of Musical Arts of California includes W. J. Henderson, lecturer; Sigismund Stojowski, piano and composition; Josef Lhevinne, piano; Nicolai Mednikoff, piano; Julia Claussen and Lazar S. Samoiloff, voice; Andres de Segurola, grand opera department; Annie Louise David, harp; Cesar Thomson and Samuel Gardner, violin; Emil J. Polak, coach, and A. Kostelanetz, accompanying, sight reading and ear training.

Dr. Leo Rich Lewis, since 1895 professor of music at Tufts College, Medford, Mass., has been made Fletcher professor of music at that institution. This action of the trustees has been taken under the provisions of the Austin Barclay Fletcher legacy, by which five professorships, including one in music, were established at Tufts, each with a foundation of $100,000.

The Choral Society of Sherrill, N. Y., gave its first concert of the season under the leadership of its new conductor, Frank Parker of the Utica Conservatory of Music, Monday night, February 16, before an audience which filled the Plymouth Congregational church of Sherrill.

The program consisted of part songs by Chadwick, Fisher, Cadman, Clokey and O'Hara and the Motet Judge Me, O God, by Mendelssohn. Assisting artists were Ruth Brown and Carleton Allen, violinists, and Zella Holmes, organist. The society is to give another concert late in the spring, with Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha's Wedding Feast as the feature work.

Vittorio Trevisan has returned from his engagement with the Chicago Civic Opera Company engagement in Boston and has resumed teaching in his Chicago studio.

Two Aeolian Hall concerts for invited audiences are announced to be given by the David Mannes Music School, the first on March 17 and the second on April 23. These will be the initial public concerts to be given by the school.

Since the Mannes School was founded nine years ago, the annual student recitals have numbered about thirty, culminating in programs by the opera class, the string choir and instrumental soloists. The interest in the performances has increased in such proportions that the recital hall is no longer large enough for those who wish to attend the spring concerts.

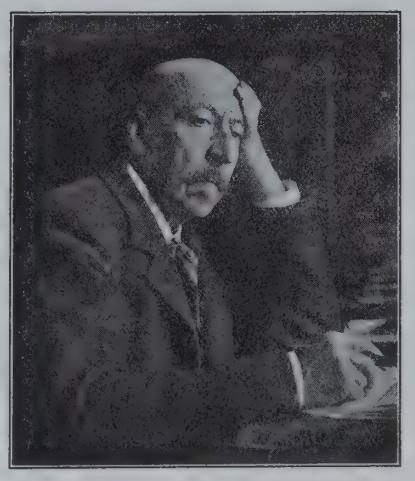
On March 17, an operatic concert will be given under the direction of Giulio Silva when excerpts from Gluck's Orfeo, Rossini's Barber of Seville, and the Norma and Sonnambula by Bellini are to be presented by soloists, chorus and the String Choir, the last-named augmented for the occasion by professional woodwind and brass players.

The second Aeolian Hall program to be given by the String Choir and piano, violin, cello and vocal soloists, will include original compositions by pupils of the school.

Marie Peralta, director of the Peralta Organ School, has accepted the position of organist for the Sunday morning service of the North Shore Community Church, held at the Knickerbocker Theatre, Chicago. Early in March, Miss Peralta plans to give a recital at the Midway Masonic Temple.

The Young Professional Musicians' Contest will be held by the Connecticut Federation of Music Clubs on March 7 in Sprague Memorial Hall, New Haven, under the direction of Mrs. Clayton Hotchkiss, state chairman of the contest. Prizes of twenty-five dollars each will be awarded to the winner in voice, male and female; violin and piano, while the winner holding the highest mark of any will receive a similar amount.

A recital was given recently in the Watertown High School (N. Y.) by Mary Wood, pianist, and Edna Bachman, soprano, under the auspices of the Watertown Morning Musicales, Inc., for the benefit of the Clara Rasay Willard Scholarship Fund. The young artists, who were warmly received, are pupils of Frank LaForge and Ernesto Berumen.



CH. M. WIDOR

Secretary of the French Academy of the Fine Arts, and Director of the American Conservatory of Fontainebleau.

A song recital was given recently by the pupils of Frank Parker at the Utica Conservatory of Music. Grace Hughes, Bernice Breslin, Helena Schafer, Ronald W. Coates, Grace Cunningham, Thomas P. Owens, Mildred Ueltschi and Jeannette Scherline sang. Mr. Parker was at the piano.

The College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University, announces a series of six historical lecture-recitals by Mme. Tina Lerner, Russian pianist, to begin Wednesday, March 4, with a recital each week for six weeks. Mme. Lerner's programs will present eighty-four of the standard pianoforte compositions, beginning with those of the early composers for the harpsichord and including a number of compositions by modern composers.

During the same period Mme. Lerner will conduct a master class in piano at the university, and Vladimir Shavitch, conductor of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, will direct a master class in conducting.

Henry Cowell, American composer, was the guest of honor at the February 21 meeting of the Clarence Adler Club, an organization of piano pupils from the New York studio of Clarence Adler.

A new New York studio has been opened by Frederic Warren, singing teacher and founder of the Frederic Warren Ballad Concerts.

Resnikoff Resigns From Eastman School Faculty

Announcement is made by the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, that Vladimir Resnikoff has resigned his position on the faculty, the resignation to take effect at the close of the present season. Mr. Resnikoff for the past three years has been a prominent member of the violin faculty of the school, serving in the capacity of examiner in that department in addition to his teaching of advanced students. He has also been first violinist of the Kilbourn Quartet during the same period and concertmaster of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the conductors of which are Albert Coates and Eugene Goossens.

Mr. Resnikoff came to the Eastman School of Music recommended to the school by Ottocar Sevcik, whose pupil Mr. Resnikoff was for years in Vienna. Mr. Resnikoff was chosen by Mr. Sevcik to be the soloist in 1914 of the London Festival given in the latter's honor. Later when Mr. Sevcik left Vienna to come to this country his advanced classes at the Vienna School of Violin fell to Vladimir Resnikoff.

Mr. Resnikoff's debut in this country as a concert artist was made in the Eastman Theatre in Rochester two seasons ago as soloist with the Boston Symphony, Pierre Monteux conducting. He has also been appearing in recital during his period of service at the Eastman School.

The director of the Eastman School, Howard Hanson, has expressed the cordial feeling existing between that organization and Mr. Resnikoff. No successor to Mr. Resnikoff has yet been selected by the school.

Two recent violin recitals under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club, of which Jane R. Cathcart is founder-president, were those given by Elizabeth Trevors at Aeolian Hall on February 24, and by Michael Anselmo in the same hall on February 22.

An orchestra composed of children ranging in age from seven to twelve years appeared in public concert in Town Hall, New York, on the afternoon of February 7. The orchestra is that of the Neighborhood Music School on the East Side. The school's senior orchestra also played several numbers.

The ninth annual Intercollegiate Glee Club contest will be held at Carnegie Hall, New York, on the evening of March 7.

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

V. TREVISAN
Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

EMILIO ROXAS
VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

FOUR new songs of Herbert Bedford are issued by J. & W. Chester, London. They are his To a Waterlily at Evening, Homecoming, The Heart Has Chambers Twain and The Coming of Love. The same mood of romance and rich color pervades all four of these works, which are distinctive in harmonic and melodic material without being in any sense untraditional. Mr. Bedford has very gracefully avoided the danger of oversentimentality which his choice of subject put before him.

A number of new songs of varied mood are published by G. Ricordi & Co., New York. Beatrice Fenner's I Wonder is a ballad of attractive melody and light accompaniment. Fuyez l'Amour, by Giulia Recli, is a song of the Abbot of Reims dating about 1750. It is a piece full of French wit and spirit. The text of the song is in French, and it is issued in keys suitable for both high and low voices.

Percy J. Starnes' Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin is a Berceuse Religieuse, as the title would suggest, after a poem of Mrs. Browning. It achieves a moving mood of simplicity.

Charles Bennett is represented in the new Ricordi issues by a number of new vocal pieces. His Night Wind is quite worthy of the poem of Eugene Field, to which it was written, and One Star, after a poem by Jessie Rittenhouse, is a tender song romantic in its flavor.

The Oliver Ditson Company adds several new numbers to its series of part songs edited by Victor Harris. Alfred Bachelet's Night Beloved has been arranged as a three part song for women's voices under his hand, and Mr. Harris has altered for the same combination of voices Gabriel Faure's serene and beautiful Claire de Lune, after the poem of Paul Verlaine.

Minnie T. Wright's Ave Maria is published in two ranges (G. Schirmer) and includes a violin obbligato. Winter Watts is the composer of three vocal pieces of unusual distinction, Song Is So Old, Miniver Cheevy, and Dark Hills. The accompaniments have individuality of their own, the harmonic flavor is original, and the texts, especially in the Miniver Cheevy, aid appreciably in the effectiveness of these songs. Here seems to be material for the concert singer.

Lully and Opera

(Continued from page 5)

of June, 1669, we have the Abbe Perrin, associated with the Marquis de Sourdeac, in possession of a license to establish in Paris an academy "for the purpose of having publicly presented and sung operas and music-dramas and French verse, like the performances given in Italy." The new theatre opened on March 19, 1671, with Pomone, an opera by Cambert, the composer conducting. This work, Pomone, is therefore the first French opera and June 28, 1669, the date of the founding of the Paris Opera.

Lully Profits by Dissension

The Academy, as is often the way with academies, was torn by disputes. Lully was quick to profit by these dissensions, and aided by Madame de Montespan managed in 1672 to secure the license which three years previous had been granted to Perrin. With this privilege Lully became monarch of French opera, and he wielded his stern scepter for many years. His power in his domain was absolute. No works but his own were presented, and he persecuted his former rival, Cambert, with such relentless hatred that he, the composer of the first French opera, was obliged to seek refuge in England, where he died in 1677.

Lully obtained everything he desired—honors, glory, fortune. He even won the credit of founding an opera that was three years in existence before he became its dictator. To the contemporaries of Lully his music meant quite a different thing than it does to us. We are apt to find it (barring occasional exceptions) cold and without character. Those of his time found it warm, pulsating with life and passion. Madame de Sevigne wrote, "I do not believe that any music save his will be used in Heaven," and her outburst is only one of the countless approbative explosions Lully was responsible for.

Prohibited All but His Own Works

In view of the fact that from the time he received his license (1672) to the time of his death (March 22, 1687) Lully allowed no works but his own to be performed at the Paris Opera, and as he had reduced his composing to a "system," music made scarcely any progress during that interval. With what fitness did Boileau one day remark to Lully, "You are not only the first musician of our century, but the only one!"

Lully's theatre was an extremely personal product, since all who performed therein were his pupils. He taught his artists to sing, to walk, to gesticulate and his dancers to dance. Every member of the orchestra received lessons from him. Before his time France could not boast of one "passable" instrumentalist, and through him the French violinists became the foremost in Europe.

THE PARIS OPERA

A View of the Grand Stairway of the French Music Theatre Which Recently Celebrated Its Fiftieth Birthday.

An Eclectic Composer

Except for the foregoing, Lully contributed nothing to the art of music as it was in his time. His manner of writing for the orchestra he got from Carissimi; the cut, or form of his melodies from Cavalli. For the form of the preludes to his operas he resorted to the conventional overtures of the court ballets (ouverture a la francaise—i. e., slow introduction, rapid movement, return to the introduction), which type continued in use until the middle of Eighteenth Century, copied and imitated in all countries where opera was practiced.

In general, the operas of Lully are nothing more than "notated declamation." The music is merely the auxiliary of the poetry, follows it step by step without daring to depart from the path indicated. His recitatives are logical, but they are rhythmically weak and monotonous. His choruses are simple to a degree and his duets are feeble. "My recitative,' he said, "is made only to be spoken, and I insist that it be completely unified." Thus the music of Lully, made to please the French of the Seventeenth Century, "addressed itself above all to the intelligence." To those for whom it was written it was a "beautiful imitation of spoken language," strong in appeal to their literary aesthetics and attractive to the ear.

PERHAPS the hardest task in the world is that of translating from one language to another the rhymed wit of a good comic play.

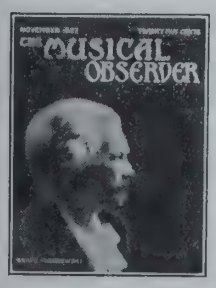
In this sort of work it is doubly difficult to translate the libretto of an operetta much of whose charm is dependent upon the skillful play of words, for here the original rhythm must be retained to fit the music. In his English version of The Marriage of Figaro, Mozart's comic opera, H. O. Osgood has tackled his task valiantly. The result is not quite a W. S. Gilbert libretto, to be sure, but it is very close in meaning and brightness to the original Italian text of Lorenzo da Ponte. More could not be asked.

Mr. Osgood made this translation for William Wade Hinshaw's Chamber Productions, and his version has already stood the test of performance. The libretto is published by the University Music House of Ann Arbor, Mich. Incidentally the publishers would have done well to include the Italian text in their booklet, but they have not done so.

Spirit and Music, by H. Ernest Hunt (published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York), approaches music not from the point of view of technique, or history, or interpretation in the ordinary musical sense, but attempts to emphasize the spiritual message of music. Mr. Hunt believes that the true purpose of music is to assist in breaking down "leanings towards a gospel of materialism with all its naked selfishness," and to aid mankind to catch some of the tenuous message of spirit. Persons who do not believe that music is moral will think as little of Mr. Hunt's views on music as he does of theirs.

Barrere Plays With Orchestra

New Haven, Feb. 28.—The New Haven Symphony Orchestra, David Stanley Smith conductor, gave the fourth concert of its thirty-first season in Woolsey Hall Sunday, under the auspices of the School of Music of Yale University. Georges Barrere, flutist, was the assisting artist.



This Coupon Is Worth 25c

LET'S GET ACQUAINTED!

If you are interested in a Music Magazine full of good, practical, interesting, novel reading matter and carefully selected musical compositions, mail this coupon with 25 cents and let us send you two issues of the MUSICAL OBSERVER.

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME ..... ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... STATE .....

RE JOHN Mc CORMACK

"In Prime Form"

"John McCormack's admirers jammed the utmost capacity of Carnegie Hall last night, frankly rejoicing to find their tenor hero in prime form at the outset of a new season. The singer met them in a mood of high musical endeavor, such as has for years given artistic interest to his annual return." — The New York Times.

Michael Anselmo, Violinist, was the recitalist at the Washington's Birthday concert under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club.

Wagner Ring Cycle Starts

The first Ring cycle given by the Metropolitan Opera Company for several years was opened Thursday afternoon with the presentation of Das Rheingold.

W. J. Henderson of the Sun considered it "a praise-worthy performance" and added that "it was not, however, in the qualities of the individual impersonations that the production attained its level, but in the co-ordination of all the elements." Olin Downes said in the Times, the performance "had exceptional unity and effectiveness." Deems Taylor wrote in the World that the performance was excellent and that Mr. Bodanzky "conducted a splendidly structured and timed orchestral reading that brought vitality to the whole performance."

For Ernest Newman (Post) the "honors of the evening were easy." He called Nanny Larsen-Todsen "competent" as Fricka, and Maria Mueller "a charming Freia." Mr. Newman continued, "The Erda of Karin Branzell was a sterling piece of work . . . she gave restrained but effective expression to the dramatic warning it was her function to pronounce." The Wotan of Michael Bohnen Mr. Newman considered "adequately portrayed in voice and manner," and he was especially pleased with the make-up of the giants, Leon Rothier and James Wolfe. Curt Taucher, according to this chronicler appeared to better advantage as Loge than as others of the Wagnerian characters whom he has portrayed. Gustave Schuetzendorf's Alberich, George Meader's Mime, and the Donner and Froh of Ralph Errolle and Carl Schlegel were lauded by Mr. Newman.

Mr. Bohnen and Mr. Taucher were deserving of the highest praise, in the opinion of Pitts Sanborn, who called the performance the best it has ever had in New York. He also spoke well of the performances of Mr. Meader and Mr. Schuetzendorf. Mr. Taucher's portrayal of the stealth and cunning of Loge were particularly effective, in the opinion of this reviewer.

Of the scenic effects he said, "the mounting of the opera was oftener an asset than a liability." Mr. Newman went even farther, placing the scenic effects only second in effectiveness to the work of the leading characters: "The settings were striking, but they did not divert the attention from the more essential elements of the opera. They were what scenery ought to be."

"The dignity of his bearing, the proud deliberation of his gestures, and the sonority and eloquence of his voice" combined, in the opinion of Mr. Taylor, to make Mr. Bohnen's "the most arresting single performance." This observer wrote, "There was not a single performance that was less than capable," and he mentioned in particular "Mr. Schuetzendorf's powerful impersonation of Alberich, Mr. Meader's excellent Mime, and the beautifully sung Erda of Mme. Branzell." Mr. Taylor continued, "Mme. Larsen-Todsen had comparatively little to do as Fricka; that she did it well goes without saying. Miss Mueller was an appealing Freia, the three Rhine maidens (Charlotte Ryan, Phradie Wells, and Marion Telva) were unusually good, and Mr. Rothier was an impressive Fasolt."

Both Mr. Taylor and Lawrence Gilman felt that in the scenic effects for the Rheingold the stage managers of the Metropolitan had done at least as well as they have ever done in any Wagnerian production. Mr. Gilman also had especially good words to say of the singing and commanding acting of Mr. Bohnen, although he felt that Mr. Taucher was not up to the finer points of the part of Loge. The Herald Tribune writer spoke of Mme. Larsen-Todsen as "admirable in her pathos and her dignity," and called Mr. Schuetzendorf's interpretation "a vivid embodiment of malignant hate," and one which employed "memorable force and passion."

Mr. Downes wrote: "Mr. Bohnen's Wotan seems to be one of his best parts. Stature as well as voice befitted the host of Valhalla. The music of Erda was intoned with true solemnity and feeling by Miss Branzell. Miss Mueller was Freia, truly youthful, fresh-voiced, appealing in the expression of emotion. Mr. Schuetzendorf's Alberich was drawn with simplicity and yet intensity of expression. Mr. Meader's Mime of Rheingold is if anything even better than his Mime in Siegfried, Mme. Larsen-Todsen was a dependable Fricka."

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
ZANE GREY'S
"THUNDERING HERD"
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
RICHARD DIX in
"TOO MANY KISSES"
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street
Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
"LADY OF THE NIGHT"
WITH NORMA SHEARER
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

It seems that Edward Johnson has excellences other than those having to do with voice, style and histrionic resources. Commenting on his recent Canio in the New York Metropolitan's latest Pagliacci, W. J. Henderson wrote in the New York Sun: "Mr. Johnson boasts a waistline and a stage presence few tenors possess."

* * *

Houston, Tex., is preparing for the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America, which is to be held there in May. Its symphony orchestra will play two programs, and a well known and experienced conductor is being sought for that occasion.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Balch of Los Angeles are visiting in New York. Mr. Balch is the sponsor of one of the leading chamber music organizations of that city, and Mrs. Balch is a member of the advisory board of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

* * *

Sophie Braslau is the newest singing artist who is to ask consideration of the Berlin public. When this conscientious contralto is heard there next May she should add to the laurels already reaped by those who have convinced Berlin folk that they know how to sing.

* * *

Rather severe rappings the New York State Symphony received for its concert of last Wednesday evening.

* * *

Out in California they are making considerable of a fuss over the violin playing of Albert Spalding. He is reaping—and almost wherever he appears—rewards for his talents and his continuous efforts.

* * *

Mme. Amelita Galli-Curci sails for Australia today on the S. S. Ventura from San Francisco. In addition to Homer Samuels, Mme. Galli-Curci's husband, the party includes Jack Salter, Manuel Berenguer, flutist, and madame's maid. The tour, which is the singer's first in Australia and New Zealand, will consist of between thirty and forty concerts, opening at Sydney on March 28. The party will return to the United States early in August.

* * *

Prominent in the New York Capitol Theatre motion picture music program is Douglas Stanbury, who finished recently his first season as a member of the Chicago Civic Opera Company. The young Canadian baritone shows the benefits of the experience thus gained.

* * *

Meeting Marion Telva after she had appeared as one of the Rhine maidens in the Metropolitan's performance of Das Rheingold last Thursday afternoon, Lines-o'-Newser was informed that it is not simple to sing while being suspended from the waistline on a bit of steel wire. Never having tried it, we do not actually know, but judging from the look of things Miss Telva's remarks are undoubtedly true.

* * *

Atlantic City now has a rival to its famous boardwalk. It is in the form of serious concerts, in which widely known artists take part. Last Saturday night at Chalfonte-Haddon Hall Nina Morgana and Louis Graveure appeared in a joint recital, with Arpad Sandor, pianist.

* * *

Beniamino Gigli sang his season's farewell at the Metropolitan last night. On Thursday Giovanni Martinelli, now recovered from his long illness, returns to Don Giulio's casts.

* * *

Incidentally, Martinelli will be one of the tenor stars at the coming summer opera season at Chicago's Ravinia Park.

* * *

Presently New York will have permanently in its midst again the dynamic Sam Macmillen, who recently resigned the managership of the St. Louis Symphony in order to undertake a new venture.

* * *

Sears, Roebuck & Co. have gone into radio broadcasting and are in search of artists to help make good music programs.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser spent several hours in the city of fraternal affection last Thursday. A flying trip of inspection was made of the Curtis Institute of Music and the Zeckwer-Hahn Philadelphia Musical Academy . . . where faculties of distinguished teachers are attracting the serious music student.

* * *

In the evening he heard Alexander Smallens conduct the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company through the sugary measures of Il Trovatore . . . and a sold-out house applauded lustily.

* * *

Between the acts Mrs. Henry M. Tracy, president of the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, and Dr. C. S. Hirsch, who presides over the destinies of the Philharmonic Society, had many interesting things to say about the trend of things musical.

* * *

Next morning Lines-o'-Newser and Impresario Smallens drove back to New York with "Ferrando" Fred Patton—and there was much interesting discussion about singers operatic and those of operatic possibilities for next season.

* * *

Following the return of Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra from its tour in the South, which included a trip to Cuba, the conductor was guest of honor at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harkness Flagler at the Hotel Ambassador on the evening of February 22 to mark the fortieth anniversary of Mr. Damrosch's conductorship of the New York Symphony.

* * *

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, proved his versatility as well as his histrionic powers at Palm Beach recently when, disguised as a butler, with a false mustache and sideburns, he waited on the eighteen guests of Mr. and Mrs. William May Wright at a dinner party at their home. Mr. Heifetz not only served the dinner with decorum and poise, but made himself useful opening the door and announcing the guests. He removed his disguise and joined the guests after the meal.

* * *

Andreas Pavley writes from Cuernavaca, Mexico, to tell us about the "glorious" weather and bull fights.

* * *

The Mexicans must be quite fond of the Pavley-Oukrainsky brand of dancing, for Andreas adds that the original three weeks' tour south of the Rio Grande has been extended to five.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

W. J. Henderson
—Reporter
See Page 17

VOL. VII. NO. 21 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Mr. William Andrews Clark, Jr., founder, sole guarantor, and president of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. Mr. Clark is now in New York City.

Bulletins of News

Edward Ervin has been announced as successor of B. Edward Porter, retiring associate manager of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

It has been announced that Jessie W. Darby has resigned her position as manager of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. Her successor will be Charles Pearson. The resignation will take effect May 1.

MILAN, March 8.—Zandonai's new opera, I Cavalieri di Ekebu, had its world premiere at La Scala last night. Arturo Toscanini conducted, and the cast included Signor Lo Judice, tenor; Signor Autori, baritone; and Signora Elvira Casazza, contralto. The opera was enthusiastically received by the public, and the press declared the premiere an outstanding success.

C'aude Debussy's Pelleas and Melisande, composed to the play of the same name by Maurice Maeterlinck, will be revived at the New York Metropolitan on Saturday afternoon, March 21, according to an announcement of General Manager Gatti-Casazza. With this production Mr. Gatti-Casazza will have fully carried out his promises as to novelties and revivals planned for this season at the Metropolitan.

The cast of the production will include Lucrezia Bori, as Melisande; Louise Hunter, as Yniold; Kathleen Howard, as Genevieve; Edward Johnson, as Pelleas; Clarence Whitehill, as Golaud; Leon Rothier, as Arkel; and Paolo Ananian, a physician. Louis Hasselmans is the conductor.

On the occasion of his one thousandth public organ recital, Professor Samuel A. Baldwin of the College of the City of New York was honored by the City of New York, the College, and a capacity audience at his recital in the Great Hall of the institution last Sunday afternoon.

PARIS, March 9.—Moritz Moszkowski, Polish pianist and composer, died here yesterday at the age of seventy-one. Born in Breslau, Moszkowski received his musical training at the Dresden, Stern and Kullak Conservatory in Berlin, where he later taught. He moved to England, and later to this city, where he has made his home since 1897.

NICE, March 7.—The Mayor of Nice has reconsidered his decision and will allow Mme. Ganna Walska to sing in the Opera House here. He has stipulated, however, that Mme. Walska must advance the 50,000 francs to cover the seating capacity of the house.

Giuseppe Lusardi, Italian Impresario, Dies in Milan

MILAN, March 4.—Giuseppe Lusardi, the leading music agent of Italy, died suddenly here this morning at the age of sixty. He is survived by Signora Lusardi, his wife, and a married daughter.

The lyric theatre of Italy suffers a severe loss in the passing of Lusardi. He supported many provincial theatres with his own private capital, organized many operatic companies from season to season, and arranged series of performances, standing the great preliminary expenses without which they could not be launched.

He was the Italian representative of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company, and his offices on 16 Via San Pietro all'Orto in this city were always the headquarters of Giulio Gatti-Casazza when the General Manager of the company stopped here.

Giuseppe Lusardi was the agent of some of the leading Italian artists of recent years, including Caruso, Bonci, Serafin, Gigli, Martinelli, Galli-Curci, de Luca, Bori, Muzio, Storchio, Lauri-Volpi, and many others. Besides his connection with the Metropolitan, he was agent of La Scala in Milan, and for some years of the Colon Theatre in Buenos Aires. He was also owner of the musical paper Il Corriere di Milano.

Eastern Supervisors Will Meet Next Week

Educators and Musicians to Address New Haven Convention.

Music supervisors from twelve States will convene at New Haven, Conn., March 18, 19 and 20, for the eighth annual session of the Eastern Music Supervisors' Conference.

A busy program has been arranged that is primarily educational, although the inspirational and recreational elements will not be lacking. There will be round-table discussions of various phases of public school music instruction, demonstrations, addresses by noted educators and musicians, concerts, a reception, banquet and dance. Indications are that almost a thousand music supervisors will attend from Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia.

Headquarters of the conference will be at the Hotel Taft, and the meetings will be held in Sprague Hall, of the Yale School of Music.

Following is the program scheduled:

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 17

7:00—Registration at Headquarters, Hotel Taft.

7:00-8:00—Mezzanine Floor of Hotel—Informal Receptions, Movies, Theatres, etc.

8:30—Room A. Meeting of Executive Board at the Hotel.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 18

9:30-11:30—School Visitations, New Haven Public Schools.

9:30-11:30—"The Public School Orchestra Round-Table," New Haven High School. Chairman, Mr. Harry E. Whittemore, Director of Music, Manchester, N. H.

(Continued on page 20)

Carnegie Foundation to Aid Music Schools in Standardizations

Pledges Financial Support for Two Years to Newly Formed National Association.

FOUNDERS ARE JUBILANT

At the meeting held in Rochester, N. Y., on February 28 by representatives of the newly formed National Association of Schools of Music and Allied Arts, President Kenneth M. Bradley reported that the Carnegie Foundation of New York had agreed to finance the organization for a period of two years in its undertaking to define courses of study and to standardize a system for the granting of credits. This is the association which declared a short time ago, for a code of ethics calculated to bring about a betterment in specific respects of procedure amongst reputable music schools.

The Rochester conference was productive of the report of the commission on curricula and unit courses in which was recommended an outline of study leading to the granting of teachers' certificates, diplomas and degrees, together with entrance requirements for classified pupils.

The organization, at the moment, is one of individuals acting for the respective institutions they represent. When courses have been defined in detail, methods of measurement in terminology reached, and the various other points covering standardization are agreed upon, the various committees' reports will be printed and distributed to the member schools . . . and then the school units will be assembled and the association will begin to function as such. It is expected that this will be brought about by the time the next meeting of the association is scheduled, in November next.

The officers and committeemen of the association are: Kenneth M. Bradley, president, Bush Conservatory; Charles N. Boyd, treasurer, Pittsburgh Musical Institute; Burnet C. Tuthill, secretary, Cincinnati Conservatory of Music; vice-presidents, Harold L. Butler, Syracuse University; William MacPhail, MacPhail School of Music; Arthur W. Mason, Louisville Conservatory of Music; Edwin J. Stringham, the Wolcott Conservatory of Music, Denver.

Advisory Committees — Ernest Bloch, the Cleveland Institute of Music; George W. Chadwick, New England Conservatory of Music; Frank Damrosch, New York Institute of Musical Art. Commission on Curricula—Howard Hanson, Eastman School of Music; Gilbert R. Combs, Combs Broad Street Conservatory, Philadelphia; John J. Hattstaedt, American Conservatory of Music; Earl V. Moore, University School of Music, Ann Arbor; Harold Randolph, Peabody Conservatory of Music; Louise Westervelt, Columbia School of Music, Chicago. Commission on Ethics—Peter C. Lutkin, Northwestern University; George C. Williams, Ithaca Conservatory of Music; Francis L. York, Detroit Conservatory of Music.

(Continued on page 28)

Spalding Appears on Coast

Violinist Lauded in San Francisco Recital; Chamber Music Society and Symphony Concerts.

San Francisco, Feb. 23.—Albert Spalding, American violinist, was heard in recital at the Scottish Rite Hall on Friday evening. The reviewers were agreed that this was one of the outstanding music events of the local season.

Charles Woodman in his review in the Call called Mr. Spalding's appearance a "great concert," and expressed the opinion that this artist "has developed considerably since he was here last year." The reviewer of the Herald felt that "Mr. Spalding is at once a thorough musician and performer." Ray Brown, observer of the Chronicle, also commented on the violinist's development: "The expert technician of a few years ago has ripened into a poetic interpreter who is even more persuasive than on his visit here late in 1923."

At its fourth concert of the season the San Francisco Chamber Music Society confined itself to string quartet playing. "I have never heard from them playing more suavely phrased, more admirable in its fusion of voices or more subtly shaded in expression," were the words of Mr. Brown in the Chronicle. In the Call Mr. Woodman spoke of them as "admirable artists," while in the Examiner Mr. Mason said: "Not even in New York and Boston is the attendance at concerts of chamber music equal to what it is in San Francisco, and for that we must thank Louis Persinger and his colleagues." The program consisted of the Smetana E minor Quartet, the Haydn Quartet in D, op. 64, and three small numbers, a Scherzo by H. Waldo Warner, Valse Ridicule by Casella, and Ernest Bloch's Pastorale.

* * *

At the ninth Friday concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra Alfred Hertz offered the Mozart G minor Symphony, the Lalo Concerto for cello and orchestra and Rubin Goldmark's Negro Rhapsody. Walter Ferner, first cellist of the orchestra, was the soloist. The Examiner writer, Mr. Mason, felt that "the G minor was given in a manner that was a joy to Mozarteans, the Lalo was excellent in craftsmanship, but wanting in qualities which stir an audience to enthusiasm, and Goldmark's Negro Rhapsody is full of color and not without blatancy."

Mr. Woodman wrote that "Mozart's G minor was given a spirited interpretation, though perhaps with rather too heavy a hand; the Lalo concerto has many beautiful passages and Walter Ferner gave them in exquisite tones with splendid technique." This writer in speaking of the Negro Rhapsody said: "It has more the character of jazz, unlike anything I have ever heard at a Symphony concert and unworthy in theme, construction or orchestration to be compared with the soul-stirring negro spiritual." The Herald reviewer, on the other hand, felt that "the Negro Rhapsody is negro to the core and a courageous experiment which at times is quite triumphantly successful in the writing of really American music of a serious calibre." This writer thought the Mozart "very well played" and that "Mr. Ferner, apart from some noticeably rough bowing, played the Lalo Concerto with clarity and grace."

Of the Goldmark number, Ray Brown wrote: "The treatment of the seven song themes and the subsidiary subjects is skillful, but that very skill has led him in a superfluous complexity of pattern, and there are times when the texture is too thick . . . the solo voice in the Lalo was eloquent under the hands of Walter Ferner."

* * *

Wagner, Alfred Hertz, and Florence Easton were the stirring combination in the San Francisco Symphony's final popular concert given in the Civic Auditorium. The program included the Prelude to Parsifal, the Tannhaeuser Bacchanale, the Prelude to Lohengrin, the Meistersinger Prize Song and the Finale of the Rhinegold. Miss Easton sang Elsa's Dream, Dich Theure Halle, and the Liebestod. The reviewers had only praise for Mr. Hertz, the orchestra, and Miss Easton.

M. J. C.

Corigliano Soloist With Ganz

St. Louis, Feb. 24.—John Corigliano, young American violinist, was soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rudolph Ganz, at a recent popular concert in the Bruch G minor Concerto.

According to the Globe-Democrat, Mr. Corigliano proved himself "an artist of great promise," playing with "an authority remarkable for one of his years." In the Post-Dispatch he was lauded for his technical skill and his "poetry and musical understanding." This reviewer also commented that Mr. Corigliano was "a musician of promise."

The writer in the Times asserted that he "is a studious young man who takes his work seriously. His demeanor is quiet and his work is painstaking, and his tone is even, firm and musical." In this chronicler's opinion, Mr. Corigliano "showed to advantage especially in the adagio movement, which he delivered with feeling and good taste." He was recalled many times, and played a Dvorak-Kreisler Slavonic Dance as an encore.

Opera Bill for Rochester

Following its appearance at the Eastman Theatre in Rochester last season, the Metropolitan Opera is returning to Rochester for two performances this season.

Falstaff will be sung Wednesday evening, May 6, with Mmes. Bori, Mario, Telva, and Howard; and Messrs. Scotti, Tibbett, Tokatyan, and Didur. Tullio Serafin will conduct. Boris Godunoff will be the offering on the following night with Mmes. Gordon, Dalossy, and Howard; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Mardones, Errolle, and Tibbett, with Papi conducting.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

WEDNESDAY

Siegfried (matinee)—with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen and Telva; and Messrs. Taucher and Schorr; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Boheme (evening)—with Mmes. Bori and Hunter; and Messrs. Martinelli, Scotti, Rothier, and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

THURSDAY

Andrea Chenier — with Mmes. Rethberg and Gordon; and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, de Luca, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

FRIDAY

Petrouchka (revival) and Pagliacci—the former with Mmes. Galli and Rudolph, and Messrs. Bolm, Bonfiglio, Bartik, and Agnini, Mr. Serafin conducting; the latter with Mme. Bori and Messrs. Johnson, Danise, Tibbett, and Bada, Mr. Papi conducting.

SATURDAY

Aida (matinee) — with Mmes. Rethberg and Gordon; and Messrs. Martinelli, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Tristan and Isolde (evening) — with Mmes. Larsen-Todsen and Branzell; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bohnen; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

MONDAY

Freischutz—with Mmes. Rethberg and Mario; and Messrs. Taucher, Bohnen, and Rothier; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Society Chooses American Works for Publication

The Society for the Publication of American Music at its annual meeting in the studio of Edwin T. Rice on March 1, selected works for publication during the current season.

On this list are a Sonata for harp and pianoforte in one movement by Carlos Salzedo; a Trio for piano, violin, and violoncello by Frederick Ayres, and a Sonata by Aurelio Giorni for piano and viola (or cello). The character of the different compositions is widely divergent; the harp ensemble being a modern virtuoso composition, making use of every tonal resource of the two instruments, and the other numbers are more conservative in their modernism.

The Advisory Music Committee who examined the scores was composed of Messrs. Barrere, Bauer, Betti, Clifton, Goldmark, Isaacs, Kortschak, Schmitz, Stock, and Whithorne. The Board of Directors also took part in the decision.

As the publication of all three works involves considerable expense it may be necessary to postpone the printing of one of them. It will be possible to publish them during the current season only if a large number of new memberships are received. Members on payment of their fees are entitled to copies of the music published.

Present Trovatore With Marie Rappold

Alexander Smallens Conducts Philadelphia Civic Opera Performance; Patton Sings.

Philadelphia, March 1. — Another sold-out house greeted the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company's production of Il Trovatore Thursday night. According to the Public Ledger "the spirit with which the opera was performed was one of the most effective elements."

This writer said Marie Rappold as Leonora was in "even better voice than when she appeared as Aida . . . and gave the difficult arias with excellent effect." Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) wrote that "her fine natural voice and long experience enable her to present the character in a manner seldom heard." The North American reviewer said she "sustained her role well" and in the Record, she was lauded for her "colorful singing."

The Ledger commented that Beatrice Eaton, as Azucena, "steadily improved both vocally and histrionically" and that Fred Patton, Fortunato de Angelis, and Ivan Ivantzoff did "excellent work." According to Mr. Muschamp, Miss Eaton's voice and histrionic abilities are well suited to the part, and the chronicler in the North American asserted that she gave a most "moving interpretation." This writer asserted that "the principal roles were well taken by a capable and trained cast, whose voices left nothing to be desired." The cast was lauded by the Record, too.

Alexander Smallens was commended by this reviewer for his handling of the score, and Mr. Muschamp wrote that he "controlled the music in a masterful manner." The Ledger writer commented that he conducted "with his usual ability," while, to quote the North American, "perhaps the loveliest part of the entire performance was the orchestral accompaniment by the excellent artists under the baton of Alexander Smallens." The chorus received special commendation from the commentators, as did the rest of the cast which included Helen Botwright, Nino Mazzeo, and Albert Mahler.

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Stokowski Introduces Arthur Bliss Novelty

Polish Peasants' Orchestra Gives Concert; Elsa Alsen in Joint Program.

Philadelphia, March 4. — Arthur Bliss' Melee Fantastique was introduced to the Philadelphia Orchestra audience at the Friday concert, conducted by Leopold Stokowski. To quote the Public Ledger reviewer, it proved to be "a most interesting work from the technical side, but which left surprisingly little effect after it had been played."

This writer continued that "the rhythms of the work are very modern and therefore strongly syncopated. The orchestration is novel, original, and, in many places, extremely effective. . . . It shows an excellent knowledge of orchestral resources and a good natural gift; its weakness, at least at first hearing, seems to be that the effect which the work produces is virtually nil."

The Record chronicler observed that "the work is characterized by colorful, rhythmic structure, and, while it is modern in style, it has many qualities agreeable to the ear." Stanley Muschamp (Inquirer) commented that "the colors of the tone-palette are clearly but incoherently used, with the result that the music sounds dry and brittle." The work was considered meaningless by Linton Martin of the North American, who wrote that it was "naive to the point of artlessness, and, above all, it is inconsiderately long." Mr. Stokowski also played the Brahms Third Symphony, the Strauss tone poem, Don Juan, and Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture.

* * *

Another orchestral concert of the week was that given by the National Polish Peasants' Orchestra, conducted by Stanislaw Namyslowski. The program consisted entirely of Polish music and was played by the musicians in their native costumes. In their spirited playing of their native music they were likened by the Bulletin writer to the American jazz band.

* * *

Elsa Alsen and Helen Bock were heard in concert Monday under the auspices of the Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association in the Fleisher Auditorium. Mme. Alsen opened the program with four Brahms songs, which, to quote the Ledger, "were given with the beautiful vocal quality and artistic feeling which she always possesses." Mr. Muschamp wrote that Mme. Alsen "has a fine voice of large tone, which she uses well. She is decidedly an operatic singer and displayed her talent to best advantage in the selection from Wagner's opera."

Miss Bock, pianist, "showed considerable pianistic ability and good taste in the choice of compositions," according to Mr. Muschamp. In the Ledger it was said that she "showed a very promising talent."

* * *

A program of chamber music was given before the Ethical Culture Society Thursday by Emanuel Zetlin, violinist; Reinhold Schmidt, baritone, and Carola Spaeth, pianist.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

Cecilia Hansen Again Appears in New York

Violinist Repeats Her Impression of Last Season, and Is Praised in Reviews.

In her violin recital at Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 1, Cecilia Hansen disclosed "a warmth of style and an authoritative, as well as radiant personality" in the words of the Times reviewer. He continued that Miss Hansen not only returned "a more persuasive artist" but "reaffirmed those other qualities of tonal beauty, delicate technique and incisive temperament."

The Sun chronicler said she "revealed an astonishing development in the emotional qualities of her art" in addition to "mellow ripeness and maturity of tone." Together with her accustomed purity of tone, according to this writer, was "a greater sense of depth and sonority, a richer texture, a warmer color than this artist has revealed before." In conclusion, this writer said that "her simple style, with an excellent command of dynamics and a wealth of warm color, made this Miss Hansen's most effective and impressive performance."

Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) blamed the weather for certain crudities of tone, but added that she frequently summoned "beautiful sounds" from her instrument, and her playing "is at all times alive with the keen joy and abounding relish of the thing . . . it always remained vital and communicative in this repect." Mr. Peyser congratulated Miss Hansen and Boris Zakharoff, assisting pianist, for their playing of Szymanowski's Sonata in D minor.

According to the Herald Tribune, the violinist "produced a remarkably rich, mellow flood of sound, larger in volume and more even in texture than in her orchestral appearance. Her playing, technically skillful as usual, was marked by more vigor and dash."

Arrange Cleveland Festival

Cleveland's Music Festival is to take place from April 27 to May 5. One of the features of the occasion will be the production by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York of nine operas and a concert. In addition to the principal singers, there will be an orchestra of seventy-five, the full chorus of one hundred, and complete corps de ballet of fifty.

Delegates from neighboring forty-eight cities and towns convened recently to discuss allotment of tickets and other business details. The Operatic Festival will be for the benefit of the Cleveland Music School Settlement. F. E. Drury and Philip Miner, who obtained the contract for the appearance of the Metropolitan, are completing the personnel of the sponsoring committee.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

Cecilia Hansen was praised again for the artistry of her playing at her New York recital a week ago Sunday.

Martinelli Welcomed in Return After Illness

Giovanni Martinelli was warmly welcomed on his return to the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on Thursday evening as Canio in Pagliacci. At his entrance there was an ovation which stopped the performance for several minutes, and at the conclusion of Vesti la Giubba there was another outburst of applause which lasted five minutes.

The Herald Tribune called it "a notably sincere and comprehensive tribute to a highly regarded artist." This review stated that Mr. Martinelli's illness, which has kept him from singing for nearly three months, had no ill effect on his voice, in spite of an occasional unsteadiness in top notes. According to the Sun, he was "apparently as hale and hearty as ever, for his voice was in excellent condition and revealed not a trace of fatigue, and in other respects his performance deserved praise."

As the Post reviewer put it, "aside from a slight huskiness, the hero of the occasion was in excellent voice. He threw himself into the part with everything he had, giving it a much better performance histrionically than is customary with him."

During the ovation at the end of the performance Mr. Martinelli was moved to tears by the enthusiasm of the audience on his recovery.

Spargur Quartet Gives Last Concert

Seattle, Feb. 25. — The Spargur String Quartet gave the last concert of its series of four in the Olympic Hotel here last night. The Quartet, which is composed of John Spargur, first violin; Albany Ritchie, second violin; Hellier-Collens, viola, and George Kirchner, violoncello, gave Ravel's Allegro Moderato its first performance.

Anna Diamond Plays

Anna Diamond, pianist, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 28 of numbers by Liszt, Schumann, Chopin, MacDowell, Weber and others. To quote the Herald Tribune, "her performance suggested talent, though as yet not entirely developed."

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 21

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Walter E. Koons, Executive Editor Alexander Fried, Managing Editor

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Bruno Zirato, Business Manager

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Improving Our Music Schools

Progress made by the National Association of Schools of Music and Allied Arts in its efforts to bring about a more orderly, effective and ethical procedure is of a character to prompt widespread rejoicing in music circles of this country.

The record of the accomplishment—though still of a preliminary sort—appears elsewhere in this issue of The Musical Digest. It is a record to encourage all who have at heart the welfare of conscientious and high-minded endeavor in music instruction and counsel.

Standardization of music study courses, and the arrangement of a uniform method for the granting of credits, have long been needed by those music and allied arts schools of the United States which promulgate and practice ideals. There are the best of reasons for the establishing of entrance requirements for classified pupils; and abundant justification for such institutions to reach a common ground for the granting of teachers' certificates, and diplomas and degrees of the various kinds which at present obtain.

Necessary as all these matters are, attendant upon them is still another requisite: that of establishing and maintaining unswervingly a code of ethics which will serve to stabilize and to develop sincerity and integrity . . . and to eliminate, by degrees, existing practices which are not alone damaging to the teaching fraternity at large but which work injury upon the student-body of those music schools wherein commercialism is the paramount thing.

Exaggerated and flamboyant advertising; the engendering of false hopes for careers in the minds of entering-pupils who lack qualifications for achieving careers; and unjustifiable cutting of rates and the offering of questionable scholarships in the hope of attracting pupil patronage are methods which need to be crushed.

The enticing of pupils from another school, or privately conducted studio, is nothing less than downright malpractice . . . as is the unwarranted criticism of another institution or private teacher.

The United States has been approaching gradually an enviable position with respect to the instruction offered in all branches of music and the allied arts. With a wealth of able and conscientious teaching talent available, it has needed solely, it would seem, some such cooperation of dominating forces capable of analyzing, then of prescribing for, the defects which exist.

It is the adherence to upstanding principles of certain splendid institutions (and private teachers also) which has brought a realization of the imperativeness of making a great constructive move. This, together with the recognition of those other needs already touched upon, doubtless interested the Carnegie Foundation to help in a financial way towards the desired ends.

A full year will doubtless be required to start this Association to functioning. But if there be courage, as well as wisdom, in the preparations—and if each of the members be held thereafter to strict accounting and practice of ethics, as in other portions of the established procedure—this country can become preeminent in music and allied arts instruction, and achieve for music, music educators, and music pupils what otherwise would be utterly impossible.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

MANY vices have been attributed to the music of Arnold Schoenberg, but they have usually been temperamental shortcomings that his critics have pointed out in his music, faults of intention and of style. It has generally been admitted that his technical attainments are great.

For my part I cannot see how the Viennese modernist can avoid in much of his music the charge of bad and bungled orchestration.

It seemed to me that this fault was particularly noticeable in his Serenade, Opus 24, which was given for the first time in this country at the last concert of the International Composers' Guild in New York. More than once during the seven episodes in this composition Schoenberg was expressing his musical ideas in such extreme ranges of his instruments and in such indiscriminate combinations that clarity of timbres, mixed or single, was hopelessly lost.

The instruments scored in the Serenade are clarinet, bass clarinet, mandoline, guitar, violin, viola, cello, and, in one episode, a bass voice. At this performance there was no guitar, but a piano transformed into a sort of harpsichord seemed to be playing its part. This doubtless helped to thicken the orchestration, for the tone of the adapted instrument was too heavy and too resonant, it seemed, for the guitar part.

In any case there was more at fault than that. The composer several times combined his bass clarinet and cello in their lowest ranges with his plucking instruments in such a way that simply a smudge of tone, indeterminate both as to pitch and color, resulted. A composer has the right to give his themes to any instrument he may think will fit them best, but he is writing bad music (music which an audience will not even find interesting, no less moving) if whole passages pass in inarticulate jumbles of vibration.

SCHOENBERG has a bad habit of disregarding certain inevitable facts concerning the psychology of the listener. That is another way of saying that he often over-writes his ideas. It must take a particularly morbid, patient mystic to be moved at the eighteenth stanza of Pierrot Lunaire as he is at the first.

Schoenberg has a lyric idiom of the most poignant expressiveness. It is swift, sharp, and intense. Beside the sensitive impressionism of his melody-recitative the diatonic manner of expression of the earlier Lieder sometimes is apt to seem artificial and literal (as Chabrier's Espagna beside Debussy's Iberia, perhaps), but too often he does not know when to stop. Heine and Housman were skillful and more restrained. Their moods are crystallized in a dozen lines or less.

Sometimes Schoenberg also observes the limitations of his idiom, yet too often his agonies of the sensitive soul drag on ad nauseam. The listener becomes tired, and his mind steeled against all impression.

The style of this composer incidentally seems to me essentially vocal. His rhythm tends to be conversational rather than musical in the traditional sense. Instruments cannot bring it out as can the voice.

TO A considerable extent the modernists have right on their side in presenting their music in public no matter how atrociously it may assail the ears of the traditionalists. After all the various guilds and leagues are known for what they are, and music lovers need not attend the concerts of experiment and innovation unless they want to hear the latest things in music.

Now I can recall performances of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and of Chopin's A flat Ballade and of the Kreutzer Sonata, played under the most conservative auspices, which were almost the death of me, but I have usually survived easily my adventures among the moderns. Forewarned IS forearmed.

THEN again, there are novelties and novelties in music. Early this winter the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England, visited Dublin, under the leadership of Hamilton Harty, and gave the Irish premiere of Brahms' First Symphony.

Come to think of it, the communities in the United States which have yet to hear the premiere of Mozart's G minor Symphony, are considerably in the majority.

IN ONE of his last Saturday articles Ernest Newman wrote his impressions of the orchestras which he had heard in this country. He spoke of his feeling while listening to them that he was observing faultless machines which could not break down, whereas the less fully rehearsed orchestras of London often gave the listener the impression that he was embarking on something of an adventure in which the end of a difficult score might be happily reached, or then again might not.

In fact the American orchestras have their adventures, too, although one is not likely to know about them unless one has kept in touch with private rehearsals. During the summer concerts of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the Lewisohn Stadium, Messrs. Van Hoogstraten and Reiner played entire symphonies and difficult symphonic poems with no rehearsal at all. It is true that the musicians knew the former conductor quite well, but they did not know Mr. Reiner at all, and many of his interpretations were markedly different from anything which they had known before.

Then again what the reviewers in New York seemed unanimously to consider one of the outstanding performances of a soloist with orchestra here this season (the playing of a fifty-minute concerto) was prepared on the morning of the concert in something less than fourteen minutes.

And I recall that last year when he started to rehearse Strauss' very difficult Domestic Symphony Mr. Mengelberg called for a show of hands among his musicians, and discovered thereby that two-thirds of them had never gone through the score in a concert before. Rehearsal time unfortunately ran short in the preparation of this work. The orchestra did not get within thirty pages (there are four times that many in all) of the end of the score, but when the Symphony was played I doubt whether anyone without inside information was aware that the last page had not been studied as fully as the first.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

Mastering Mastery in Music

Approaching the Problem From the Psychological Standpoint Appears to Be a Necessary First Step

by G. E. BOLTWOOD

HORACE GREELEY offered a bit of advice, years and years ago, on the advisability (for certain young men) of going West. That once great editor regarded opportunity as raging about somewhat in those regions nearer the Pacific coast than the Atlantic seaboard. And yet, had Greeley lived in this age, he probably would have amended his now historic utterance. He might, and doubtless would have remarked: "Go West, young man—and you too, young woman."

Such comment would have been peculiarly pertinent in view of the way doors are opening for young folk who have ambitions—particularly music ambitions. One reason is the recent growth on the Western slope for getting what so many career-seekers are bent on finding. That something is instruction calculated to put under their feet a foundation that will not sway when demands are made, subsequently, which only the very capable can fulfill.

Not that the East has not equal opportunities of the sort, and plenty of them. It is that three thousand miles beyond where the sun sets hereabouts there is rising a golden opportunity for music instruction . . . a sort of music golden gate, since it is to be reared at no great distance from the nautical entrance to San Francisco harbor which has been thrust into stories galore.

The institution is the Master School of Musical Arts of California; and in a way, it is designed to be the first institution of its kind the State of California has known.

When the project was first proposed the news was conveyed to the readers of this publication. Then came subsequent information, as matters developed and the project took on a character of form presaging substance. Now the time is approaching for the formal opening—next April 26—of this Master School. It should be an occasion, and it will be if its director has anything to say . . . which it is safe to state he will have. For Lazar Samoiloff, of New York, is the person referred to; the person, no less, who conceived the idea for the school when he was conducting in San Francisco, last summer, his first master-class in singing in that Far-Western city.

The Samoiloff idea, plus the enthusiasm and financial support of Mrs. Alice Campbell Macfarlane, plus also the financial and moral support of prominent San Franciscans, stand as the responsible factors for giving gifted young men and women their chances to obtain instruction and counsel of a post-graduate order. Yes, and there is to be another personality figuring in the undertaking: Miss Alice Seckels, a manager of music endeavors. Miss Seckels is to be the business administrative head of this institution, which, after the current season of four months, will operate for one half of each year . . . from May until November.

"Exceptional music talent should be permitted free rein," said Mr. Samoiloff in discussing the project he is waiting impatiently to have launched. "That means the assembling of a staff of teachers equipped to impart instruction of the foremost order. "With it," he admonished, "should go scholarships for those who merit such instruction but who have not the means of acquiring it."

Oval Photo by Bizin

Mrs. Alice Campbell Macfarlane, patroness of the new Master School of Musical Arts, and Lazar S. Samoiloff, director of the school and head of the vocal department. In the insert is Alice Seckels, manager of the school.

Here, at the outset, is a benevolent spot in the fabric of the Master School plan. Still, if public spirited men and women—with one leader offering to supply a large sum of money for the purpose—had not come forward to assume the expense, such beneficence would have been out of the question. For, be it known, it requires no slight expenditure of finances to gather under one roof a faculty of eminent music pedagogues. Cash guarantees, in somewhat formidable proportions, are required to secure the services of such members of the music fraternity as will be present at the metaphorical roll-call of this Master School next June. As, to wit: Josef Lhevinne and Sigismund Stojowski, for pianoforte instruction; Cesar Thomson and Samuel Gardner, violin; Mr. Samoiloff, himself, and Mme. Julia Claussen, in the vocal department; W. J. Henderson, music reviewer for the New York Sun, as lecturer; Felix Salmond, head of the cello classes; Annie Louise David, harpist; Andres de Segurola, for the opera department; Emil J. Polak, coach, and Mr. Mednikoff, piano.

Here is an array of names. And each of these musicians offers two scholarships . . . in addition to those made available by the Master School itself. "To help the needy and talented students" is part of its announced creed. It is to be hoped that the help will be of a nature which helps those worthy of help to help themselves—for that is the truest form of aid, a form which cultivates in the one thus benefitting a spirit of independence.

Yes—and there is another feature planned to make this Master School conveniently accessible to all those who are attracted to it. Its operating time, between the coming May and the following September, is to be divided between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Music study of a summer has gotten to be quite the fashion in this fast-growing music country of ours. It began, some fifteen years ago, in a mild sort of way in the Middle West. Then Chicago propelled the start which, if I understand aright, was made somewhat farther West. Lately the Pacific coast has been a sort of communing-ground for music students, and teachers also, who lived at distances somewhat remote from the Windy City. The mountains of music prowess proceed to go to the Mahomets; and so the movement grew until now there are a considerable number of distinguished music pedagogues who hurtle westwards, when warm weather descends, and linger up and down the Pacific coast until their duties in New York call them thither.

Thus far, however, the Western invasion by Eastern music-folk has been of the individual sort. Teachers whose names shed lustre operated, and will continue to operate, independently. But now there is to ensue a school presenting a group of masters . . . and mistresses too, since some of the California Master School instructors are of the sex feminine.

I talked with Mrs. Macfarlane when that lady was vis ting recently in New York, to confer on essentials touching the School with Director Samoiloff. "It is to be a memorial to my parents," she said. "They loved music. Now and again," she confessed, "I discovered some young person I regarded as specially gifted, and felt it a priv.lege to make it possible for them to get on in their music work. That, no doubt, is largely responsible for my feeling so sympathetic with Mr. Samoiloff's idea to establish a Master Music School. My one objective is to see it hold true to its ideals; to be constructive and to function efficiently."

Miss Seckels, who is practical, turned an appraising eye in my direction when the question was put to her of the magnitude of the project.

"Yes, it is a large undertaking," she conceded, "but that very fact will aid us in carrying on. California is musically sophisticated," said Miss Seckels. "It knows a thing or two musically; and so does every State nearby which sends pupils to the fine music instructors who are to be found all along the Pacific coast.

"With superior standards to uphold, it was realized by all of us connected with this project how imperative was the demand to make the staff of teachers one having two outstanding elements: ability and prestige.

"What Mrs. Macfarlane has stated is echoed by Mr. Samoiloff, and by me also. We have a goal to attain which is to be won alone through conscientious and unremitting endeavor. Since the music talent in the Far West is of an exceptional order I believe that there will be results justifying the existence of an institution modeled on broad lines."

MARION TELVA
Contralto Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Building, New York City

Elisabeth Rothberg
SOPRANO
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT. ARTHUR JUDSON
FISK BLDG NEW YORK
PACKARD BLDG PHILA PA
BRUNSWICK RECORDS
HARDMAN PIANO

Returning to America

SEASON 1925 - 1926

ONEGIN

Contralto

METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

Mme. Onegin's third American tour, beginning about October 1, 1925, and extending to about April 1, 1926, is almost completely booked. A few engagements are still open and will be alloted to early applicants provided that these engagements fit into Mme. Onegin's itinerary.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

By arrangement with International Concert Direction, Inc.

FISK BUILDING
NEW YORK

PACKARD BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA

STEINWAY PIANO

BRUNSWICK RECORDS

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

ON A CERTAIN AFTERNOON some fourteen months ago the writer found himself in the Los Angeles Philharmonic Auditorium.

Now there, in the Los Angeles Philharmonic Auditorium, is music to be heard during the winter months . . . on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and also on certain Sundays when the sun shines (as it does mostly in California, forgetting the rainy season).

It is perhaps that this auditorium matters not so much as specific events which take place within it, the most important by far being the concerts of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra—an organization now approaching the close of its sixth consecutive year.

The chronicler remembers his first hearing of that body of instrumentalists, nearly three and a half years ago. Subsequently, too, more than a twelvemonth later when further development had ensued. The Los Angeles Philharmonic impressed him on that latter occasion as, without a doubt, one of the foremost symphony orchestras of this country . . . which means, in these days, one of the foremost symphony orchestras of the world.

SOME EASTERNERS will lift their eyebrows at that, wondering, in all probability, whether things at those concerts sounded as they really were; for, be it known, the east entertains a hearty regard for what is its own, and, in matters of the arts, has not come to a complete apprehension of just what the west has lately achieved in those arts . . . rather particularly in the symphonic branch of music.

The recorded opinion of the chronicler, long since set forth in print, called forth from several persons versed in orchestral affairs questioning comment. His judgment, theretofore respected (to an extent, at least), was hauled out for examination. Could he count up to fifty? The point was one at issue. Then a few of these querulous persons happened in at the Los Angeles Philharmonic Auditorium and, after hearing the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, made their way leisurely to this chronicler to commend his discernment which, they were ready to testify, was not, after all, as completely out of good working order as at first had been supposed.

LOS ANGELES, good readers, may be three thousand miles from the Fifth avenue of New York and yet be ever so near it in what its symphony orchestra has grown to be and to do. Listening to its playing brings relief—at any rate to those who have ears that play them no tricks, and who dare pluck courage thereafter to speak their opinions.

No feeble or niggardly effort brought about that miracle, since it is nothing less . . . the upbuilding of this orchestra in a short space of time. Up and on has it gone, strengthened steadily in personnel, co-ordinated more compactly with each passing year, and polished to that fineness which admits of the giving—at the conductor's demand—either broad sweep of tone or exquisite chiseling of detail.

Another year, perhaps, though mayhap it will be two years, and the people of the east may have the opportunity of discovering for themselves that the chronicler's words have not been lightly used. For such an organization cannot be kept from a pilgrimage to those places whose education in the symphony orchestra development of the country must be incomplete until they have had spread before them the evidence of what vision and determination and initiative can accomplish in a spot commonly looked upon as far from fertile symphony orchestra soil.

Let the matter rest there . . . if the belief continues to persist that Los Angeles, because of its remoteness, must take what it can for its orchestra instrumentalists. Those travelers mentioned, who know what they know—once they listen attentively—have come back from Los Angeles with one mind: That Los Angeles has what it has in the way of an orchestra.

THE ENTHUSIASM of those speakers, and a chat the chronicler had with Mrs. Balch, a member of the Los Angeles Philharmonic advisory board (who recounted the advance which has been made in attracting added patronage to its concerts), are responsible for the relating of the foregoing facts. The Los Angeles Philharmonic is getting on and getting recognition. None of the prophet in his own country business. Instead, a whole-hearted movement sweeping forward behind its one prized music institution; an institution that is rising, monumental-like, to an everlasting place . . . to endure, in all probability, for whatever time its founder has in mind to make it endure.

William Andrews Clark, Jr., controls the destiny of this orchestra. He brought it into being; he alone supplied the funds for the annual deficits; his unselfishness has been the source of supply and the factor which is molding Los Angeles into a music center.

True, he has had assistance—able assistance. Conductor Walter Henry Rothwell has contributed service of an invaluable character. The men and women of the board of directors, and allied boards, have labored intelligently and faithfully. But Will Clark has been the wellspring; and he can survey his handiwork with pardonable measure of gratification in an effort that is mounting steadily upwards, to engrave ineffaceably as a public benefactor his name.

Such, in bare outline, is the substance of a story which one day will than this. In any other state save California, and in any city save Los Angeles, the achievement would be less impressive because less difficult. Then, too, this happens to be the twentieth century.

RECOGNITION of American musicians as interpretative artists representative of a nation is being accorded by Germans. On rare occasions only has it been hitherto evidenced; now it is forthcoming in tributes paid to a singing actress which drive so directly at nationalistic reflection as to compel consideration of the significance of its underlying aspect.

Until this season Miss Eleanor Painter was identified chiefly with light opera affairs. Although she began her career in Germany, some ten years ago, most Americans have forgotten or are unaware that it was in serious opera. Recently she foreswore inconsequential things musical in favor of the substantial; and the critical verdict of her endeavors beyond the Atlantic is of a character to prompt pause and analysis of an achievement which, in its estimate, touches more than the passing of judgment upon an individual task performed.

There can be no questioning the individualty of the American people. They are unique in many fields, as they are unique in appearance and bodily movements and in thoughts. Since in the arts they have had lesser opportunities and still scanter traditions (because of the relative infancy of the country), it perhaps was to be expected that America's music interpreters should reveal more of adopted methods than methods indigenous to the land itself. For how, one might properly inquire, could our instrumentalists and singers develop a procedure in these interpretative arts eminently nationalistic?

"How and where?" rises the chorus.

Perhaps the answer lies: "In opera."

There, at any rate, is offered opportunity for originality in expressiveness. And it is possible that out of engrafted traditions from other countries there may develop gradually the elements of a nationalistic—an American—impress.

IF THE REPORTS of German music reviewers concerning Miss Painter's Cio-Cio-San in Madama Butterfly be accurate appraisals of her artistry, then must this American be regarded with a watchful eye. While she has appeared lately in Germany as Manon in the Massenet work of that name, as Mimi in Boheme, as Nedda in Pagliacci, and as Marguerite in Gounod's Faust, it is her Cio-Cio-San that has apparently moved German music commentators to write of her in almost extravagant fashion.

Adolph Weissman, in the Berlin Z. Mittag, wrote in part of her performance at the Berlin Staatsoper: "The poor little Japanese maiden of Puccini found last night a finished, matchless, and model interpretation. Eleanor Painter, who is remembered for her distinguished and charming art, knows so thoroughly how to animate to a living being this playful, loving, and finally unhappy creature that there was not the slightest suggestion of the 'theatre.'

"It was as if she were born for this role, for she made it her own with every vein of her body, with every look, with every movement of her expressive little hands and, not to forget, with a voice not so slender but it can be made suddenly to bloom to the very topmost notes. The packed house was moved to ovation after ovation to this new Butterfly."

Friedrich-Carl Kobbe, in the Braunschweiger Landeszeitung, stated in one portion of his review (concerning the artiste's appearance in Braun schweiger): "She is as Butterfly, the costumed Eleanor Painter from America. And she does well to be Eleanor Painter from America. . . . Her characterization is Anglo-Saxon. . . . To this small circle of the select belongs Eleanor Painter, from America. Her Butterfly is a matter which cannot be prized merely as a role, though as such it would be extraordinary. But she is so gifted with the powers and riches of a great temperament, of an artist, a woman, a Being, a Race, that one went home not only enriched by an experience, through which one will long afterwards tremble, but enriched also by inspirations whose circle reaches far beyond the confines of Puccini—the opera—the theater. It is also worthy of mention that the guest raised the whole performance to her level."

AND only a few days ago, in San Francisco, Albert Spalding, violinist—also an American—so aroused his auditors that, in the words of Charles Woodman, writing in the San Francisco Call and Post, "Men and women stood on their seats, waving their arms, shouting their applause and crying for more. . . . It was a great concert," continued that reviewer. "Spalding has developed considerably since he was heard here last year."

Ray C. B. Brown of the San Francisco Chronicle testified that Spalding "had a rousing reception," and, later, that "with every succeeding visit Spalding shows a steadily maturing artistry and a more assured mastery in interpretation. . . . The expert technician of a few years ago has ripened into a poetic interpreter who is even more persuasive than on his visit here late in 1923."

According to William Foster Elliott of the San Francisco Herald, Spalding "enjoys the almost unique distinction of being an American violinist who is conceded a place in the top flight, both in this country and abroad."

Detailed analysis of the artist's technique, tone, and interpretative resources as disclosed on the occasion referred to need not be set forth here. The point to be emphasized is that he is giving in his playing something distinctive, something individual, and beyond all doubt something essentially nationalistic.

Whatever he may have learned, or where, he is American in what he portrays; in his manner and his methods.

Thus we have, on the one hand, an instrumentalist — a virtuoso — recognized in his own land, and abroad too, as a pre-eminent artist; and on the other hand, in a foreign country, an American artiste of the opera who appears to be a singer who can act and an actress who can sing . . . also reflecting national characteristics.

THERE are other American musicians who deserve a place with these two who are singled out for consideration here because of achievements of the moment.

If, finally, our finest native interpretative musicians are attracting attention for qualities which can be identified as racial, it would seem that we have arrived at a period of artistic dawning indicative of perhaps greater things to come.

Sincerity and the development of individuality will do more to place Americans where they rightfully belong in music than any slavish, if successful, imitation of others—especially if they be foreigners. Self-expression should be given an unfettered rein. To be checked, or amalgamated with what is not nationalistic, can only dwarf its ultimate blossoming.

Let American interpretative artists bear all these matters in mind, and heed the precedent established by the subjects of this discourse . . . and of those others who merit classification, through their gifts and accomplishments, with them.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Miss Gisella Neu

Making her American debut, Gisella Neu, sixteen-year-old Hungarian violinist, apeared at Town Hall, New York, on March 3. In Saint-Saens' Rondo Capriccioso, which was done "with rich tone on the lower strings, and with evident taste," Miss Neu displayed "individuality and playful rhythm," according to the Times.

The writer in the Herald Tribune wrote that the debutante displayed "a tone of a generally warm quality and satisfactory fullness, but not without occasional slight ruffling of its surface and a drier quality in moments of technical complexity. She seemed more sure of herself in the Wieniawski D minor Concerto, which also was marked by a tone of agreeable, although not entirely impeccable, quality and technical competence."

The Sun reviewer found Miss Neu "a young player of sincere purpose and in certain respects gifted for violin performance. In the Bach Chaconne and the Wieniawski Concerto she disclosed no little appreciation of musical content and some good phrasing. Unfortunately her tonal assets and general technical powers were hardly adequate." Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail found little to commend in the concert.

Miss Grace Divine

Grace Divine gave a recital of songs at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 27. Her program included Meyerbeer's aria Lieti Signor from Les Huguenots, and songs by Strauss, Joseph, Marx, Brahms, and Frank la Forge, with the latter acting as accompanist.

In the Sun, the reviewer asserted that Miss Divine "revealed a pleasant voice, but she possessed little skill in delivery or style. In lyrics of a light character she displayed more commendable qualities and with her brilliant stage presence . . . she won much applause from a large audience." The Times reported that she "achieved a real success" in her own genre, and the Herald Tribune writer said she displayed "a voice of considerable volume and range with fullness and resonance at either end of the gamut. In her German numbers there was a certain hardness of tone, an effect of vocal power but not fluency, but the singer was at her best in the French numbers, where ease and smoothness of tone appeared in an expressive interpretation marking a distinct advance over the preceding group. Her diction was commendable." Alison Smith (World) wrote that her volume of tone "was gratifying in its fullness and enthusiasm but too explosive and uneven for any coherent effect."

State Symphony

The State Symphony Orchestra, Ignatz Waghalter conducting, gave its eighth and last Sunday concert at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, March 1, with Evsei Belousoff, first cellist of the orchestra, as soloist.

In Tschaikowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme, Mr. Belousoff "discovered a fine, emotional tone in the romantic sections of the piece," according to the Times commentator. He proved a "well equipped player, technically dexterous, with a tone of good size and mellowness, except in some faster passages, when it clouded," in the opinion of the writer in the Herald Tribune. The reviewer in the Sun reported that Mr. Belousoff "played the variations with good tone, admirable sentiment and the skill their difficult passage work demands."

The Post writer said that the cellist gave a good account of himself with "a sympathetic interpretation" of the work. According to the Times, Mr. Waghalter conducted the third Leonore Overture, the Tannhaeuser Overture, and Tschaikowsky's Pathetique Symphony "with his customary sincerity and regard for his composer."

Frank Sheridan

According to Herbert F. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail, Frank Sheridan, who was heard in a piano recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on February 26, "challenged consideration as a balanced and matured artist. . . . His performance disclosed in every case a thorough soundness of conception, a clean and ample technique, and a notable instinct for the singing qualities of the piano."

The World reported that he gave "an uncommonly effective" recital, and the reviewer in the Times found in his playing a "freshness, a fluent and easy control, a cool, sensitive idealism—which gave the true measure of his talent."

In the Sun, the chronicler lauded his intellectual and emotional qualities as well as his assured style and "his keen sense for melodic detail, a quick response to the more subtle colors of modulations."

The writer in the Herald Tribune commented that Mr. Sheridan "played with marked power and technical brilliance, dispensing his energy with ability to produce light, rippling passages . . ." and that he "proved himself a musician of unusual caliber."

Gives Seventh Opera Recital

Charlotte Lund gave the seventh of her series of operatic recitals in the Princess Theatre, New York, on the evening of February 22. She described the action of Puccini's Madama Butterfly, and sang excerpts from it. N. Val Peavey, baritone, accompanied Miss Lund on the piano, and sang with her.

Bori-Johnson

Romeo et Juliette was given for the second time this season in New York on March 4 by the Metropolitan Opera Company with Lucrezia Bori and Edward Johnson singing the title roles. Louis Hasselmans conducted, and others in the cast were Mmes. Delaunois, and Wakefield, and Messrs. de Luca, Bada, Paltrinieri, Picco, Ananian, Didur, Rothier and Gustafson.

According to the World, Mr. Johnson acted with "such sincere and simple dignity, as to bring new life to this long-suffering role. . . . He brought to the part a vocal fluency and a definiteness of characterization which revealed new convincing qualities in this incurably romantic hero." The reviewer in the Sun said that Mr. Johnson's "superb diction, his masterly and moving control of mood in the balcony scene are but details of an interpretation well nigh flawless in histrionic respects." This writer agreed with the World that he was not in his best voice, although "in lyric recitatives of a more quiet character his voice was used with much skill and beauty of tone." In the Herald Tribune, his "expressive and dramatic skill" were lauded. The Times asserted he was the most romantic Romeo since de Reszke and Saleza.

Mr. Johnson shared the honors with Miss Bori, according to this review, and the Post chronicler stated that both singers "have an intuitive appreciation of the essential rightness of intonation, pose and gesture that gives their work the subtle distinction of appearing effortless." The Herald Tribune writer thought Miss Bori's performance one of "notable charm."

The reviewer in the Sun mentioned her "inimitable portrayal of Juliette" which was a "delight to the eye and ear. . . . The entire range of her voice revealed a rich beauty and fullness of tone not always obtained even by this dependable artist."

Graveure in Farewell Recital

Louis Graveure, baritone, gave his final New York recital of the season at Town Hall March 1. The reviewers found him in good voice, and the chronicler in the Sun remarked that "his program was an admirable one, calling for a wide range of interpretative powers, with demands on every part of his voice."

R. Emmet Kennedy

With the assistance of Jeanne de Vinus, soprano, R. Emmet Kennedy gave a "Dixie" program of stories, folksongs, New Orleans street calls, and negro spirituals at Town Hall, New York, Wednesday evening.

To quote the Herald Tribune, Mr. Kennedy displayed "a baritone voice of agreeable tone and ample size, with interpretative skill." The writer in the Sun commented that "he tells his stories with a smooth inflection of voice and remarkable command of negro dialect, and the same comments might apply to his use of his baritone voice as he sings." According to the Post, "he sang with the fullest appreciation for the art of his colored friends. His voice is negligible, but he has all the fascinating tricks of the negroes." Miss de Vinus, in the opinion of the Herald Tribune writer, "sang with animation, and also displayed marked talent for whistling."

Miss Adele Bliss

A large and responsive audience heard Adele Bliss' annual New York song recital in Aeolian Hall Wednesday evening. Miss Bliss was assisted by Vladimir Dubinsky, cellist.

The Sun chronicler stated that "her style had much charm and her voice, while not always firm and smooth, had freshness and resonance. According to the writer in the Herald Tribune, "she displayed a voice of considerable volume and freshness, with expressive ability, but there was uncertainty of tone in her higher notes, a tendency to cloudiness, ruffling of the surface and an occasional wandering from pitch. But Miss Bliss' tone gained notably in clearness and steadiness when she reached the numbers sung in Russian."

Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) commented on the "engaging piquancy" in some of her work, and the Times writer found some "dryness" in her singing. This reviewer said that Mr. Dubinsky "exhibited a beautiful tone." The World did not carry an analytical review of the concert.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

CLARENCE ADLER
PIANIST
Instruction for Advanced Pupils
137 West 86th St. Telephone
New York Schuyler 3580

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building, Copley Sq., Boston, Mass.; or
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 21, 192
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Stringwood Ensemble

A new chamber music organization, the Stringwood Ensemble, made its New York debut in Aeolian Hall, March 2. The musicians are Josef Stopak, violin, Samuel Kuskin, second violin, Michael Cores, viola, Abram Borodkin, cello, Simeon Bellison, clarinet, and Arthur Loesser, piano.

The program consisted of Mozart's Quintet in A, a trio version of Stravinsky's Histoire du Soldat, Saint-Saens' Quintet, an Andante on a Jewish folk theme by Krein, and a sketch by Prokofieff on two Jewish themes. Olin Downes wrote in the Times that the new ensemble "made a notably favorable impression." He added that the members "are not only gifted individual performers; they play with a true sense of ensemble; their tonal balance and mutual understanding betoken a new concert organization which should prove of value to the musical public." Mr. Downes thought that Mr. Loesser displayed his "fluency and his gifts as an ensemble player" in the Saint-Saens work.

According to Deems Taylor (World), "the newcomers seemed to understand one another very well. The strings, while not extraordinary, either in richness or volume, are well balanced, and the players in their various permutations and combinations performed with intelligence, taste and excellent unanimity of purpose." F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune said they played a "remarkably smooth, well unified program." He also lauded Mr. Loesser's "brilliance and perfect blending in ensemble."

Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that their performance was commendable, and W. J. Henderson commented in the Sun that the ensemble "promises well." The reviewer in the Post wrote that their work was "mathematical in its precision and balance," with occasional "delicacy of expression."

The Stravinsky work was given its first hearing here in this form and was thought ineffective by most of the reviewers. As Mr. Taylor said, it "did not stand its reduced version very well." The Prokofieff pieces, which also were a first performance, showed skill rather than creative effort, according to the consensus of the reviewers. Mr. Sanborn found in it "humor and melody."

N. Y. Hears Mme. Jeritza in Concert

Assisted by members of the New York Symphony, under the direction of Josef Stransky, Maria Jeritza made her farewell New York appearance of the season in a concert in the Metropolitan Opera House February 24. The concert was given for the benefit of the Boys' Club of New York.

Mme. Jeritza was, in the opinion of the reviewers, in excellent voice, and the audience was insatiable in its demands for encores. According to the Times reviewer, the orchestra, under Mr. Stransky's leadership, "not only did yeoman service in the accompaniment of Mme. Jeritza's songs, but it added greatly to the artistic level of the evening" by performances of pieces of Wagner, Bach, and Smetana.

Francis Macmillen

In his recital at Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 3 Francis Macmillen was assisted at the piano by Richard Hageman. Mr. Macmillen played a Goldmark Aria, the Kreisler-Pugnani Prelude and Allegro, Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole and the D minor Brahms Sonata for violin and piano.

Pitts Sanborn (Telegram-Mail) asserted that the violinist met the varied requirements of this program "with his customary breadth of sympathy and technical resourcefulness. In the Lalo battle horse of all fiddlers his playing had elegance and the requisite brilliancy. . . . The smaller pieces were treated with the proper delicacy and finesse." According to the Sun reviewer, Mr. Macmillen "played better than he has for a long time. His tone was firm and full, with plenty of warm color, and the phrasing of the Pugnani Prelude was sensitive and effective. Mr. Macmillen has a sound musical style."

The Herald Tribune chronicler found him "in excellent form, with considerable brilliance and dash, and a tone of generally clear and fluent quality, if not entirely free from clouds. He was especially happy in the last group." In the Times the commentator mentioned that in the slower movements Mr. Macmillen "came near perfection."

Mme. Martha Phillips

After an absence of three years from the New York concert stage, Martha Phillips gave a recital at Aeolian Hall February 24. In the words of the Times reviewer, "to a stage presence graced with quaint hooped gown, she added intelligent musicianship in songs of Brahms, and a novel group in Swedish . . . Without emotional tone-shading, there was variety in selection and in surroundings that gave a pleasure of simple charm."

According to the writer in the World, Mme. Phillips "has a soprano voice of light and engaging quality which she uses with a careful realization of its limitations and with a crisp and decisive delivery." Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) found her voice colorless with a "breathy" tone. The Herald Tribune Chronicler wrote that her soprano "was of good size, and flowed forth with an agreeably smooth, even quality of tone." Myron Jacobsen made his first American appearance as accompanist. August Rodeman was assisting flutist.

Mme. Leschetizky Plays Again

At her second New York recital in Aeolian Hall on February 20, Marie Leschetizky "played with more smoothness and evenness than before," according to F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune. The Sun reviewer said she displayed the same "intelligence, clarity and a fine grasp of form."

Oliver Denton

Three piano concertos were offered by Oliver Denton at his Town Hall recital in New York on March 2. Accompanied by a small orchestra, conducted by Chalmers Clifton, he played Bach's E major Concerto, Haydn's D major, and Beethoven's in B flat.

According to Olin Downes of the Times, Mr. Denton "proved his sincerity and the depth of his musicianship by refraining from anything that could come between the audience and composer." Mr. Downes thought that the pianist brought to his interpretation of Bach "his substantial equipment as a pianist, an obvious appreciation of form, and straightforward musical style." Herbert F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail) commented that Mr. Denton "caught the breezy sparkle" of the Hungarian rondo "delightfully."

The Post reviewer remarked that he performed the three concertos "with ever-increasing brilliancy" and commended the able assistance of the orchestra "under the spirited leadership" of Mr. Clifton. The writer in the Sun said that Mr. Denton presented these works "with musicianly taste" and that they were "admirably interpreted."

In the Herald Tribune, the commentator considered that he "played with delightful clarity, with a musicianly sense of contrast and style, with fluent and assured technique." This writer also commended Mr. Clifton.

Giovanni Gallurese

Giovanni Gallurese, the opera by Italo Montemezzi which but recently received its first American production by the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York, was given a matinee performance at the Metropolitan on February 28. The cast was the same as at the first performance, and Mr. Serafin again conducted.

Indicative of the critical reaction to the matinee was the statement in the World that "a second hearing reveals no further signs of inspiration, or of the magic which makes The Love of the Three Kings a haunting masterpiece, but at least it has settled down vocally into a smooth and competent production." The writer in the Sun commented that the performance was "uneven." Maria Mueller had sung three days in succession, and the reviewers seemed largely agreed that the strain showed in this opera. The Herald Tribune, however, reported that her voice "showed no sign of the ordeal."

Verdi Requiem

Verdi's Manzoni Requiem was given at the Metropolitan Opera House Sunday evening, February 22, with Marie Sundelius, Jeanne Gordon, Beniamino Gigli and Jose Mardones as soloists and with Tullio Serafin conducting.

According to H. F. Peyser (Telegram-Mail), it was an excellent performance of the beautiful work "under the superbly vitalizing leadership of Tullio Serafin, whose guidance lent surpassing distinction to the entire performance."

In the words of the Herald Tribune reviewer: "The performance was notable with thorough co-ordination between soloists, chorus and orchestra, under the skillful direction of Mr. Serafin. The soloists were in good voice, with a clear, smooth quality in the tones of Mmes. Sundelius and Gordon, likewise of Mr. Gigli, whose soft notes had a memorable beauty in Domine Jesu. Mr. Mardones sang with artistic, most effective expressiveness, all four soloists faring well in this regard. The chorus displayed an unusual volume and clarity of tone."

The Post writer thought both the chorus and soloists "sang finely, and Serafin conducted with fine understanding and skill. The Times reviewer agreed. According to the Sun, "the individual singing was on a high level of excellence and Mme. Sundelius, who has not been heard here for some time, sang with great beauty of tone and purity in style, although her intonation was not always impeccable."

Sunday Symphonic Society

Under the direction of Josiah Zuro, the Sunday Symphonic Society gave its sixth free concert at the Criterion Theatre on March 1, with Helen York as soloist.

Miss York sang Sir Henry Rowley's Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark, "with delicacy and charm," in the opinion of the Sun writer. The Post writer agreed, and the Times commended her for her "round and flexible coloratura soprano" and continued that "she did her trills and staccati extremely well, but her highest notes were a shade sharp."

In the Adagio from Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor, Drago Jovanovitch, violinist, William Kautzenbach, violist, and Gdal Salesski, cellist, played the solo passages. The other number was Rimsky-Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice.

CARYL BENSEL
SOPRANO
"Possessing a charming personality and a voice of rich quality and fullness of tone, Miss Bensel proved a delightful singer. A number of encores were insisted upon."—St. Petersburg Times, Fla., Feb. 14, '25.
Management MOLLIE CROUCHER
Metropolitan Opera House Bldg.,
1425 Broadway, New York

DOROTHY MILLER DUCKWITZ
AMERICAN PIANIST
Will accept a limited number of pupils
CHICKERING PIANO WELTE-MIGNON RECORDS
Management Dorothy Miller Duckwitz, 145 West 77th St., New York City

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will accept a limited number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Praise Maria Ivogun In Cleveland Debut

Cleveland, March 2.—Maria Ivogun made her local debut as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, conducted by Nikolai Sokoloff, Thursday night, in songs by Strauss and Mozart.

Exemplary of the enthusiasm manifested by the reviewers following the concert is the following statement by Eleanor Clarage in the Times: "Mme. Ivogun, who is as lovely an artist as ever, charmed the eyes and ears of Clevelanders, is the possessor of a voice of amazing sweetness. Although light in quality, its pure tones carry with exquisite clarity, and her bravura passages are arrestingly free from the shrillness so common to the coloratura voice." In the Strauss air, acccording to Miss Clarage, "her flute-like tones soared above the natural range of the soprano voice."

Archie Bell (News) asserted that "a marvelously controlled voice is hers, a small, lusciously sweet voice, and a technique that is well nigh flawless." Mme. Ivogun gave the Mozart song "brilliancy and particularly beautiful tone production" and the Strauss was sung "with absolute ease, with a glorious voice that was at all times beautiful to hear and not merely a demonstration of vocal fireworks."

According to Wilson G. Smith of the Press, "she disclosed a voice of fine sympathetic quality, and a coloratura technique that rivaled a flute in its charm and facility. It has an adolescent character to it that adapts itself to mezza voce rather than emotional or dramatic singing."

The reviewer lauded Mr. Sokoloff and the orchestra for their performance of Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration and Don Juan.

St. Matthew Passion to Be Sung

Bach's St. Matthew's Passion music will have two performances by the Philharmonic Orchestra in conjunction with the Schola Cantorum on April 13 and 14, with Willem Mengelberg conducting. The first performance will take place on a Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall, the second on a Tuesday evening in the Metropolitan Opera House.

The soloists so far engaged are Elisabeth Rethberg, soprano; Sophie Braslau, contralto; George Meader, tenor, and Gustave Schuetzendorf, baritone. Mme. Wanda Landowska will play the harpsichord.

MME. MARIA IVOGUN
Coloratura Soprano, Whose Tour Has Carried Her Across the Continent, Was Heard in Recital in New York Saturday Afternoon.

Gabrilowitsch Conducts Elegy of Rudolf Mengelberg

Detroit, March 1.—Bronislaw Huberman, as soloist, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch shared the honors of the concert of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra Thursday, according to the consensus of critical opinion.

The novelty played by Mr. Gabrilowitsch was Kurt Rudolf Mengelberg's Symphonic Elegy. Mr. Player found a substantial idea in the work, although it was "defective" in form in his opinion. It was his reading of the Beethoven Seventh that won Mr. Gabrilowitsch great applause.

Mr. Huberman, in the Mendelssohn Concerto, "gave distinction to a work which is in itself only of moderate consideration unless prettiness can be exalted into genius by superb presentation," to quote Cyril Arthur Player of the News. Eugene Leuchtmann wrote that "at times a bit too unrestrained, his playing never varied from the fervid and musicianly reading he gave to the impassioned and beautiful opening movement." As Ralph Holmes commented in the Times, "his tone is robust rather than luscious, and he seemed so intent on the inner content of the work that Thursday evening he sometimes sacrificed its beauty momentarily."

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Musical Chicago En Courant

Mme. Bloomfield Zeisler's Golden Anniversary; Two Russians Visit the Windy City.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, March 3.

IN A RARE burst of enthusiasm, Chicago rose to its collective musical feet last Wednesday night, in response to the rousing "Tusch" with which the Chicago Symphony Orchestra greeted Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler's entrance to the stage of Orchestra Hall. The applause was tumultuous, prolonged, and sincere. The event was Mrs. Zeisler's golden debut, or rather the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of her earlier debut at the age of eleven years. The capacity of the hall was the only limit to the brilliant audience which had gathered to do homage to an old friend and a great artist. A golden occasion, all in all, even to Mrs. Zeisler's golden gown. Even the usual floral offerings had been converted into gold to add to the large sum realized by the concert for the benefit of a permanent fund for the relief of incapacitated worthy musicians and their families. This is to be administered by the United Charities of Chicago.

The concert itself reflected all the beauty and sincerity that have marked Mrs. Zeisler's long and honorable career in Chicago. As on the occasion of her youthful debut, she played the Andante in F major for piano alone, by Beethoven, and with the assistance of Mr. Stock and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the A minor concerto by Schumann and that in F minor by Chopin. As an encore she added the Litolff Scherzo, which has always been a particular Zeisler tour de force.

BUT THE CONCERT didn't end it. Chicago was determined to make it Zeisler week, and opened its heart and purse strings to that end. Mrs. Zeisler was feted by the Arts Club at a luncheon on Thursday, and welcomed some four hundred who had gathered to do her honor at a dinner at the Drake Hotel on Friday night. Frederick Stock acted as toastmaster. There were speeches by Karleton Hackett on behalf of the music critics; Horace Oakley, as vice-president of the Orchestral Association; Ernest Urchs of New York, member of the firm of Steinway & Sons, whose piano Mrs. Zeisler has played for thirty-seven years; Donald Robertson of the Civic Theatre; Arne Oldberg of Northwestern University, and Robert Stevens of the University of Chicago, who presented a "pot of gold" ($160) on behalf of the Zeisler Club, all pupils of Mrs. Zeisler, to be added to the concert fund.

There were other tributes besides speeches. A bust of Mrs. Zeisler by Lorado Taft was unveiled, Claire Dux said it with song, and Jacques Gordon played his eloquent fiddle. Finally, Mr. Stock read a few of the more than two hundred congratulatory telegrams that had reached Mrs. Zeisler from fellow artists in all parts of the world. Among them were messages from Walter Damrosch, Israel Zangwill, Sergei Rachmaninoff, Willem Mengelberg, Sidney and Louise Homer, Jascha Heifetz, Mischa Levitzki, Olga Samaroff, Bruno Walter, Rubin Goldmark, Alfred Cortot, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Georges Enesco and Albert Spalding.

Mrs. Zeisler protested that so many eulogies made her feel as though she were at her own funeral. "But," she said, "I want to thank all America, and particularly Chicago. They have belied the old saying that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country."

THAT THE WEEK might not belong entirely to Mrs. Zeisler, there was other music. Igor Stravinsky remained in Chicago long enough to present a program of his works at the Arts Club on Tuesday night, consisting of songs with the composer at the piano and Greta Topadie singing, and part of the Histoire du Soldat, Jacques Gordon playing the violin, Robert Lindemann the clarinet, and Stravinsky conducting from the piano. The compositions ranged in time from 1905 to the present, and varied in dissonance in direct ratio to the date of writing. So, the Pastorale was an early example of lovely and fairly formal writing, while the Histoire du Soldat as arranged for piano, violin and clarinet, produced hitherto unsuspected sounds from those instruments.

The critic-pianist whose function it was to turn the leaves of the piano score during the latter number confessed that never had he found it necessary to concentrate so closely on the written page, the constantly changing rhythms offering immense difficulties.

AND STILL the Russians come! Another brilliant debut was that of Alexander Brailowsky, who played the Saint-Saens' Fourth, or C minor Concerto, with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on Friday and Saturday of last week. He made a great success with both audiences, adding post-programs of encores.

THAT NATIVE talent reaps rich reward in Chicago was emphasized again on Thursday night at the Pop concert of the orchestra, when Herbert Quick collected his prize winning appearance with the orchestra, playing Gesangscene, Opus 47, by Spohr. He had previously met all comers in the violin contest promoted by the Society of American Musicians, his appearance with the orchestra being the reward of merit.

The record of a Kreisler recital is always the same. Auditorium sold out; enthusiasm great; program typical, with numbers large and small played as only Kreisler can play them.

Theodore Kittay, tenor, who has lifted his voice in various of the Balaban and Katz Chicago Theatre Opera performances, gave his first recital program at Kimball Hall on Sunday. His program was made up of songs and arias well known and favored by tenors of the lyric persuasion. In his first group, of Stradella, Giordani and Handel, he had the assistance of Wilhelm Middelschulte at the new Kimball organ.

CLAUDIA MUZIO will sing her farewell of the season in a song recital at Orchestra Hall on Tuesday evening. The concert is for the benefit of the De Paul Settlement.

Claire Dux is using Chicago as a focal point and radiating in and out of the city as her engagements call. March 23 is tentatively picked as the date of her Chicago recital, the hall to be announced later.

Brailowsky Plays in Chicago

Appears With Symphony Orchestra Under Stock; Prize Violinist Also Heard; Varied Recitals.

Chicago, March 3.—Alexander Brailowsky, pianist, was soloist at the orchestra subscription concert last week, and the list of recitalists here included Fritz Kreisler, Theodore Kittay, M. Jennette Loudon, Helen Fouts Cahoon, Mmes. Tony Abele and Maria Gerdes-Testa, the Muenzer Trio, and the Berardinelli Symphony Orchestra. At the last popular symphony concert Robert Quick, violinist, was assisting artist.

Mr. Brailowsky played Saint-Saens' C minor Piano Concerto at the regular Friday concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Frederick Stock. The novelty of the program was Herman Hans Wetzler's Visions, conducted by the composer. Mr. Stock also led the orchestra through the third Leonore Overture, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

According to Karleton Hackett of the Post, the soloist "made a brilliant success. His playing was poetic, finely poised and with a virtuoso command of the keyboard. There was a clarity of thought and a grace of expression in keeping with the spirit of the music. . . . The melodic phrases he brought out with beauty of tone and imaginative feeling." Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News that Mr. Brailowsky displayed "his own uncommon gifts as to piano mastery; a touch which runs through the gamut of tone shades; a brilliance in rapid running passages; a tremendous amount of power and a fleet and light style" as well as "a feeling for emotion and poetry."

Edward Moore, of the Tribune, lauded his display as "first class piano playing" and asserted that "he communicates electric sparks at all times." On the other hand, Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald-Examiner) commented that, although the soloist showed technical facility, there was no "spark" in his playing.

In Mr. Hackett's opinion, Mr. Wetzler "proved himself thoroughly qualified with the baton" and his composition had "vigor in the melodic thought and richness of color in the harmonic setting." Mr. Rosenfeld felt, in spite of the "remarkable skill" in instrumentation, the "fine lyric themes" and the "consistent tonal background," the work lacked novelty or originality. He also remarked that the composer brought out an excellent performance from the orchestra. Mr. Gunn praised the skillful orchestration, but considered most of the themes reminiscent.

* * *

At the popular concert of the orchestra on Thursday the soloist was Robert Quick, winner in the violin section of the recent contest for young American artists.

Mr. Gunn wrote that Mr. Quick proved "that his command of tone extends to the most delicate shades and graduations of texture; that he is keenly sensitive to the melody's curve of beauty; that his technical command is already well developed." Mr. Rosenfeld also commended him, and Edward Moore commented that he "accomplished a first class performance with suave, refined tone, excellent spirit and technical development." In Mr. Hackett's opinion, there was in his playing "appreciation for the music, purity of tone and clean technique. . . . The melody he gave with poetic feeling and warmth of tone and the bravura passages came out with clarity."

* * *

Four thousand music lovers neard Fritz Kreisler play at the Auditorium Sunday afternoon. Mr. Gunn found the violinist's tone still unequaled "in purity, in velvet smoothness, in spiritual beauty." To Mr. Hackett he is "the supreme artist, and still at the very top of his powers." Other reviewers found him in excellent form.

* * *

Theodore Kittay, tenor, "disclosed some uncommon gifts of voice and manner," according to Mr. Moore, in his recital Sunday at Kimball Hall. Mr. Moore continued that each of his songs "was a bit of fine art, splendidly sung by a fine voice, and excellently accompanied by Wilhelm Middleschulte at the organ." Mr. Gunn thought that "the brilliant, virile timbre of his voice was effectively displayed." Karleton Hackett wrote that Mr. Kittay "has a tenor voice of good quality, range and volume."

* * *

A Chicago pianist, M. Jennette Loudon, on the same day played at the Playhouse "with persuasive logic and understanding," to quote Mr. Moore. The writer in the Post commented that Miss Loudon played "with musicianly understanding, good tone, and clean technique. There is always clear understanding of what she wishes to express, and careful adjustment of the means." Mr. Gunn admired the understanding and sympathy with which she played.

* * *

In her Chicago debut, Helen Fouts Cahoon, soprano, was well received. As Mr. Rosenfeld expressed it, "Miss Cahoon developed a pleasant, light voice of considerable flexibility and a style which showed refinement and musical training. Her personality on the stage is ingratiating, and, though the voice is not one of great volume, it is pure and cleverly handled." In the Post she was commended for a voice "of unusually high character" which she had under "excellent control" in the lighter passages. Edward Moore spoke of her "slender voice that can travel high and rapidly."

* * *

The third subscription concert of the Muenzer Trio was given last Thursday. According to Mr. Rosenfeld, they again disclosed their commendable teamwork in two unfamiliar works, Gustav Jensen's B minor Trio, and a B flat major Trio by Robert Fuchs. Mr. Moore commented that their playing was better than the music they offered. Their "feeling for ensemble" was lauded by the Post reviewer, and Mr. Gunn wondered "at the expenditure of so much admirable reproductive art on works of so little value."

A recital of music for two pianos was given by Mmes. Tony Abele and Maria Gerdes-Testes at Recital Hall, with Arthur van Eweyk, bass-baritone, as assisting artist. According to Karleton Hackett, they played "earnestly," but with a certain lack of mutual understanding. Mr. Rosenfeld, on the other hand, thought they showed "good ensemble and clear technical exposition." Mr. van Eweyk's "clear enunciation" was mentioned favorably.

Under the direction of N. Berardinelli, a small orchestra gave a concert at Orchestra Hall for the benefit of the Pythians' Orphans' Home at Decatur. The soloists were Vittorio Arimondi, bass; Miss Montello, soprano, and A. Mannarelli, tenor.

Chicago Opera on Tour
(Last Week)

TONIGHT
Thais—in the Music Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio.

WEDNESDAY
Romeo and Juliet—in the Music Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THURSDAY
Gioconda—in the Music Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio.

FRIDAY
Mefistofele—in the Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis.

SATURDAY
Gioconda — in the Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis.

SUNDAY
Rigoletto (matinee) — in the Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis.

Guests to Lead in Portland

Portland, Ore., Feb. 26.—The resignation of Carl Denton, conductor of the Portland Symphony Orchestra, will take effect at the end of this season. Three guest conductors have been invited to appear with the orchestra this spring. Jacques Gershkowitsch will conduct one concert in March, and Theodore Spiering and Paul Kruger the subsequent two. Mr. Denton will continue his conductorship of the Portland Symphony Chorus. He has been orchestra conductor here for six years.

Wolfsohn to Manage Hackett

Charles Hackett, tenor of the Chicago Civic Opera, has signed a contract to be under the management of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau next season.

Chicago Arts Club Presents Stravinsky

Russian Composer Assists at Piano in Program of His Chamber Music.

Chicago, March 1.—The Arts Club of Chicago presented Igor Stravinsky in a concert of his own music last Sunday. The Russian composer-pianist was assisted by Greta Torpadie, soprano; Jacques Gordon, violinist, and Robert Lindemann, clarinetist. Mr. Stravinsky was introduced by John Alden Carpenter.

In addition to the Suite, Histoire du Soldat, a Prelude for piano, Chanson du Pecheur and Air du Rossignol were presented. Edward Moore of the Tribune spoke of the "bitter humor" of the Histoire du Soldat, which he found stimulating. According to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, "it was new music, but it cannot be said that it was at all times pleasant."

Glenn Dillard Gunn (Herald-Examiner) was inclined to think it grotesque and entirely lacking in any beauty, in spite of its stimulating rhythm. Karleton Hackett of the Post was also most impressed by the "vitality of the rhythmic pulsations."

Mr. Hackett commented that "the playing was brilliant. Stravinsky is a forceful player of his own music. He wants sharp outlines, heavy accents and striking contrasts. His desires were admirably carried out by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Lindemann."

The songs were sung by Mme. Torpadie, to quote Mr. Hackett, "with evident understanding and good will," although her tone was not always "pleasing." Mr. Gunn found her "a brilliantly competent artist with a rarely eloquent voice." Mr. Rosenfeld wrote that Mme. Torpadie "disclosed a pliable, high soprano voice, which she used with skill, and she also interpreted her music artistically and with evident understanding." Her "cool, intelligent manner of singing" was admired by Edward Moore.

Hold Music Club Contest

Eva La Pierre and Walter H. Preston (both of New York) were awarded first honors in a contest held in the Wanamaker Auditorium February 25 by the New York Federation of Music Clubs. The judges were Mario Chamlee and Jeanne Gordon of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and H. O. Osgood.

There were eight contestants entered in the competition, which was the fourth annual contest. The winners are eligible to compete in the district meeting of music clubs in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York, when selections will be made for the National Federation of Music Clubs' biennial contest in Portland, Ore., in June.

JOYCE BANNERMAN

Soprano

Second American Concert Tour 1925-26 Now Being Booked

For Dates, Terms and all Particulars Address:

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT ANNIE FRIEDBERG Metropolitan Opera House Bldg., New York City

G I G L I

Season 1924 - 1925

36 Appearances in 18 Weeks at the Metropolitan Opera House in

"Marta".
"Madama Butterfly".
"L'Africana".
"Fedora".
"Falstaff".
"La Gioconda".
"La Boheme".
"Cavalleria Rusticana".
"Andrea Chenier".
"Lucia".
"Mefistofele".
"Tosca".
"Verdi's Requiem".

Principal Concerts This Season

Oct. 17, Denver, Colo.
Oct. 20, Detroit, Mich.
Oct. 22, Akron, O.
Nov. 21, New York, Biltmore Musicale.
Dec. 1, New York, Bagby Musicale.
Dec. 20, New York, Metropolitan Club.
Jan. 15, Washington, D. C., White House.
March 5, New York, Astor Hotel.
March 8, Boston, Mass.
March 12, Scranton, Pa.
March 15, Hartford, Conn.
March 26, Rochester, N. Y.
March 30, New York, Carnegie Hall.
April 5, New Haven, Conn.
April 15, Greenwich, Conn.

Mr. Gigli will spend the months of May and June in Berlin and other cities of Central Europe where he has been engaged for an extended tour (20 appearances)

Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway - New York City

VICTOR RECORDS HARDMAN PIANO

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

STATESMEN have had boulevards named after them, heroes of history have had their names perpetuated in rechristened cities, but there are few musicians who can boast of having had a town renamed in their honor.

Not that Clarence Adler boasts about it. In fact, it was with difficulty that he was induced to go into any detail. Finally, modestly and with a deprecatory smile, he told the story of how Averyville became Adlerville.

It all started a long while ago when Clarence Adler dreamed of some day establishing a summer art colony in surroundings suitable for congenial study and recreation. After years of hoping and planning, he at last found what was to him the ideal situation. Up in the Adirondacks, not far from Lake Placid, he built his camp just outside the little village of Averyville, N. Y. He named his new colony Karen-ni-o-ke, which means, according to an Iroquois legend, "the place of beautiful song."

With the idea of combining study with amusement, he conducted there last summer, for the first time, master classes in piano playing.

The practice bungalows at the camp are located in the pines, not far from the main building. Each house is so secluded that every student can have perfect quiet.

"And we don't spend all our time studying, either," declared Mr. Adler, his enthusiasm mounting as he talked of his pet venture. "We go on hikes—the surrounding country is beautiful—and those of us who want have the opportunity for tennis, golf, fishing, canoeing and horseback riding. We had some memorable hay rides last year, and on cooler evenings we would sit around the open fire in the camp, and toast marshmallows and tell stories. And then, of course, we had concerts, to which the townspeople were always invited."

In response to my question as to how the country people reacted to these concerts, Mr. Adler replied that not only did they form a silent and appreciative audience, but also that their enthusiasm was such that he planned to give several more programs this summer.

"We had concerts by the New York Trio and the New York String Quartet," he continued, "and, although I know there were times when, due to their lack of musical education, our neighbors did not quite understand the chamber music, they were most attentive, and showed a desire to learn more about it. I have invited Ernest Bloch to come up this summer to give some lecture-recitals, but I have not yet heard his decision."

Thus Mr. Adler was led to tell of the circumstances which led to the rechristening of Averyville. Practically every name of the householders in the vicinity was on the petition to change the name of the community, and the town board readily gave its official sanction. In fact, so proud of its new artist colony in Adlerville that it recently expended several thousand dollars on a broad new road to the camp.

K. K.

Dushkin Plays Gershwin Excerpts

At his second violin recital of the season in Aeolian Hall on February 22, Samuel Dushkin played Blair Fairchild's Rhapsody on old Hebrew themes for the first time in America and George Gershwin's A Short Story for the first time anywhere. Another novelty was the Melody and Scherzo from Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, as a violin and piano number.

"A plaintive theme of characteristic flavor formed the basis" of the Fairchild work, according to the Herald Tribune reviewer, and it was "grateful violin music, giving Mr. Dushkin a chance to display the purity of his highest tones and the mellowness of his lower ones." According to the Herald Tribune, the Scherzo offered the violinist "opportunity for technical display and tones of familiar and unfamiliar timbre." The Post writer said that Mr. Dushkin "confirmed the good impression" made at his first recital.

Werrenrath in Unusual Program

The unconventionality and interest of the program offered by Reinald Werrenrath at his Carnegie Hall recital in New York on Washington's Birthday received the unanimous commendation of the reviewers. He sang three Danish songs in their original tongue; modern German Lieder by Schmalstitch, Mittler and van Eyken; the Credo from Otello; a group of sea songs, and others by English and American composers.

Deems Taylor (World) mentioned that Mr. Werrenrath seemed to be bothered by a cold, "but it would take more than a cold to dim the natural beauty of his voice, the clarity of his diction and the supple smoothness of his phrasing and style." According to Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail, "he is always increasing the size and scope of his repertory and singing the new songs well." The other reviewers wrote similarly.

CLARENCE ADLER

St. Louis Operetta Plans

St. Louis, Mar. 1.—The operettas which are to be produced at the Municipal Theatre this summer and the artists who will take part in the productions have been announced by the Municipal Theatre Association. Only three principals of the last summer season will return, and the ten works tentatively chosen for this year are all new to the series.

The operettas selected for probable production are the Count of Luxembourg, Ruddigore, Dolly Varden, Rob Roy, A Night in Venice, Her Regiment, Erminie, Mlle. Modiste, Cavalleria Rusticana and H. M. S. Pinafore.

Yvonne d'Arle will be prima donna of the company, which will include Eleanore Henry (also in leading roles), Beatrice Mershon, Leo de Hierapolis, Forrest Huff, John E. Young, Detmar Poppen, Roland Woodruff and William McCarthy. The season will begin on the evening of May 25, and performances will be given nightly for ten weeks. Charles Previn will again be musical director.

Schumann Program Played

Harold Bauer gave his second New York recital of the season in Aeolian Hall on February 28 in a program of Schumann's piano music. To quote Olin Downes of the Times, "it was one of the most impressive examples of his art he has offered the public in recent seasons. He is the past master of Schumann's piano style."

Miss Giannini Gives First N. Y. Recital

Dusolina Giannini sang in Carnegie Hall, New York, on February 28 for the benefit of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club. This was Miss Giannini's first concert in two seasons, during which time she has, to quote the reviewer in the Times, "matured those natural gifts of golden vocal powers which so early had promised a wide range of expressiveness and which most recently have won as distinguished recognition abroad as in her native America."

In her singing of Handel, Beethoven, Mozart, Wolf, Gounod, a group of Italian songs, and one of the English airs, according to the writer in the Times, "her command of opulent resources for tone-shading befitting word and phrase, delicate nuance and broad outline, bespoke the artist thinking for herself the thought of the composer."

The Tribune commentator remarked on the "remarkable volume, fullness and carrying power of Miss Giannini's voice" and added that "it did not seem as impeccably smooth as it has on some other occasions." Miss Giannini was accompanied by Frank LaForge.

To Play American Music

Two concerts of works by American composers will be given at the rooms of the Beethoven Association, New York, this month. The first will take place Saturday evening, the second a week later. The concert will be given under the auspices of the American Music Guild, which includes in its roster Marion Bauer, Chalmers Clifton, Louis Gruenberg, Sandor Harmati, Charles Haubiel, Frederick Jacobi, A. Walter Kramer, Harold Morris, Albert Stoessel, and Deems Taylor.

Lucia Given in Concert Form

At the Sunday concert at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on March 1, Lucia di Lammermoor was given in concert form. The cast included Queena Mario and Grace Anthony and Messrs. Tokatyan, Ballester, Mardones, Bada and Paltrinieri. Giuseppe Bamboschek conducted. According to the Herald Tribune it "was a thorough and painstaking production." The Sun reported that "the principals were in good voice and the chorus sang admirably."

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARYON VADIE (LYRIC DANCER)
OTA GYGI (VIOLINIST)
with
The Maryon Vadie Dancers and Mary Izant, pianist
Management
EVELYN HOPPER
Aeolian Hall New York City

GRAVEURE
IN
LEADING MUSIC CENTERS
Graveure the Master-Interpreter! (Toronto, Canada, Mail.)
His voice exerts hypnotic influence over his listeners. (Vancouver, B. C., Daily Province.)
Wonderful baritone is Graveure! His merit cannot be assessed by comparison with any of his predecessors of recent times here. (Ottawa, Canada, Journal.)
Management:
Metropolitan Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City

WHEN THE CRITIC EXHAUSTS
HIS SUPERLATIVES ON

ELENA GERHARDT

Photo by Nickolas Murray, N. Y.

"Reviewers the world over long since exhausted their superlatives in vain attempts to describe and annotate the subtle beauty, the perfect artistry of Miss Gerhardt's interpretations. The reviewer in the presence of an artist so admirable can do nothing but forget his task of criticism in sheer enjoyment."

—P. R., Boston Globe.

* * *

"I long ago exhausted my superlatives upon her, and have nothing new to say."

—Ernest Newman, N. Y. Evening Post.

* * *

"By common consent over half the world, Miss Gerhardt is mistress of the ways and means of song. When she sings, the cup is brimming."

—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript.

* * *

"To some people Elena Gerhardt is gospel, to others she is a singing lesson, but to us she typifies the consummate interpreter."

—Harvey B. Gaul, Pittsburgh Post.

GEORGE ENGLES
has the honor to announce the management of this distinguished artist

SEASON 1925 - 1926 NOW BOOKING

Available October, November and December, 1925

Concert Management:
GEORGE ENGLES
Aeolian Hall - New York

STEINWAY PIANO

Levitzki Gives Cincinnati Concert

Claire Dux Sings With Orchestra in All-German Program; Symphony Quartet Heard.

Cincinnati, March 2.—Mischa Levitzki, pianist, played before a large audience at the Sinton ballroom Monday evening under the auspices of the Clifton Music Club. His program included the Bach-Tausig Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor, a Brahms-Gluck Gavotte, Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques, a Chopin group, and a miscellaneous group.

The reviews were all favorable regarding Mr. Levitzki's playing, although several of the writers mentioned that Cincinnati has had a surfeit of concert arrangements of Strauss' Blue Danube Waltz, one of which was included in his program.

* * *

Claire Dux, soprano, was soloist in songs of Mozart and Mahler in the most recent subscription concerts of the Cincinnati Orchestra, Fritz Reiner conducting. The program was all-German, and included Beethoven's Egmont Overture, Brahms' Fourth Symphony, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

To Mr. Goldenburg, reviewer of the Enquirer, Mme. Dux was a "striking, magnetic personality." He praised her singing and also the conducting of Mr. Reiner, whom he found "in most gracious mood." Mrs. Smith in the Times-Star wrote similarly in regard to conductor and soloist. This writer preferred the Mahler group to the Mozart. She also paid tribute to the "delightful obbligato" of Mr. Heermann in one Mozart aria.

Mrs. Plogstedt, reviewer of the Post, reported that Mme. Dux "scored a success," and in regard to Mr. Reiner she expressed the opinion that he revealed "his real worth more completely" than at any other time this season. Mr. Wilson, of the Commercial-Tribune, admired "the delicate artistry of Claire Dux" and her voice of "light but penetrating sweetness." This writer also had words of praise for Mr. Reiner and the orchestra, especially concerning the performance of the Brahms.

* * *

On the evening of February 17 the Cincinnati Symphony Quartet, consisting of Emil Heermann, Sigismund Culp, Edward Kreiner, and Karl Kirksmith, gave a program at the Hotel Gibson. The program included only Haydn's C major Quartet and Paul Hindemith's Opus 10, in F minor, for the same group of instruments.

Mrs. Plogstedt commented in the Post on the "advantage afforded to the Hindemith composition" as it was played by the excellent quartet. Mrs. Smith wrote in the Times Star that she found the Hindemith work hard to follow, very largely because of its superfluity of ideas. This reviewer praised Hr. Heermann for his playing of the theme of the second movement. The Haydn Quartet was called a thing of "sheer delight," and the reviewers agreed also as to the charm and artistry with which it was played.

Charlotte Sandman Angert, soprano, gave a recital at the Hotel Alms the same evening, assisted by Walter Heermann, cellist, Ewald Haun, flutist, and Lucille Eilers, accompanist. The writers agreed with Mrs. Plogstedt that Mrs. Angert's voice displayed "exquisite purity and fine range," and was used with "nice discretion."

That morning the Matinee Musical Club presented a program by active members. A Dohnanyi Quintet was given by Ilse Huebner, pianist, and Mrs. R. E. Wells, Mrs. W. S. Simpson, Uberto Neely, and Stephen Deak, strings. Dell Kendall Werthner, soprano, and Rose Pitton Kabbes, contralto, sang a group of duets, and Mrs. Lilian Tyler Plogstedt played some piano selections. After Mrs. Mary Ann K. Brown had sung a group of modern songs, the club chorus sang under the leadership of Mrs. Adolf Hahn.

The last Sunday afternoon popular concert was conducted by William Kopp in the absence of Mr. Reiner. The program included Massenet's Sous le Tillens, with Joseph Elliott, clarinetist, and Karl Kirksmith, cellist, as soloists; Liszt's Dream of Love; a Strauss Waltz; and Victor Herbert's March of the Toys. According to Mr. Wilson, the concert "won a triumph and tremendous applause for Mr. Kopp and the orchestra."

Nadia Boulanger gave a lecture-recital with the Matinee Musicale at the Sinton recently on modern music. She received praise in the press.

Other recent Cincinnati concerts have been the appearances of the London String Quartet, the Orpheus Club, and Beatrice Mack, soprano. A large audience greeted the British chamber music organization with applause which was repeated in the newspaper reviews. "Each participant is an artist of high rank," declared Mr. Goldenburg in the Enquirer. The other reviews agreed as to the high quality of the playing. The program included Beethoven's E minor Quartet, H. Waldo Warner's Fairy Suite, and Mozart's D minor Quartet.

Cecilia Hansen, violinist, assisted the men's chorus of the Orpheus Club in its second concert. Mrs. Plogstedt was Miss Mack's accompanist in her song recital. Comments were that a "lovely quality, equable facility, charm of personality, and a fine diction" combined to make this appearance a success. B. G.

Shavitch Again in Syracuse

Syracuse, Feb. 19.—Vladimir Shavitch conducted last Saturday noon the first concert of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra since his return from his guest appearance as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra some weeks ago. Clara Clemens, soloist at this concert, sang an aria from Wagner's Rienzi.

Mme. Schnitzer Cancels Series

Owing to illness Germaine Schnitzer has had to cancel the remaining concerts in her series of romantic piano music at Chickering Hall, New York.

BRUNO WALTER

Whose Sincerity and Musicianship Have Been Lauded Again on His Return as Guest Leader of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Composer to See Petrouchka

Igor Stravinsky will be present in person at the revival of his ballet, Petrouchka, at the New York Metropolitan Opera Friday evening. The composer went over details of choreography with Adolph Bolm, the creator of the new setting of this work. The scenery and costumes have been designed for the revival by Serge Soudeikine and Tullio Serafin will conduct the performance, which will be followed by Pagliacci.

The cast of Petrouchka will be as follows: Rosina Galli, as the ballerina; Adolph Bolm, as Petrouchka; Giuseppe Bonfiglio, as the Moor; Ottokar Bartik, as the old magician: Armando Agnini, as the merchant; Florence Rudolph and Rita de Leporte, street dancers; and Lilian Ogden, Jessie Roggie, and Florence Glover, gypsies.

Petrouchka is a puppet story. The opening scene is one of a public square in Petrograd in which a magician is giving his puppet show before a motley crowd. He sets down his little ballerina with her two companions, the romantic Petrouchka and the sensual Moor. A fierce quarrel breaks out between the two men over the possession of the ballerina. Petrouchka is shut in a dark den, there to bemoan his fate, to make a futile effort to escape, to fail in his attempt to win the sympathy of the ballerina, and finally to be driven forth to die at the hands of the Moor.

This violent episode causes consternation among the crowd of onlookers until the magician shows them that what lies dead on the ground is not a man but only a rag doll.

Walter Opens Season With N.Y. Symphony

Eduard Zathurezky and Marmein Dancers Assist Orchestra on Its Return From Tour.

Bruno Walter took up the baton as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, New York, on February 26. Eduard Zathurezky, violinist, was soloist in the Mendelssohn Concerto. Mr. Walter conducted his second program with the orchestra on March 1. The two most recent children's concerts, one of which had the Marmein sisters as soloists, were conducted by Walter Damrosch and the visiting leader.

Olin Downes (Times) wrote that Mr. Zathurezky has "fleet fingers and an uncommonly big and brilliant tone" as well as "sensuous temperament and musical impulse." In the Sun he was commended for a "neat, deft touch, a style of considerable eloquence, a tone of crisp delicacy, and a display of confident technical virtuosity."

According to the World, he "thoroughly justified the favorable impression made on his first appearance." The Herald Tribune writer said he played "with a clear tone of notable volume and fluency, technical agility . . . and a straightfordward, unaffected manner of performance."

Mr. Walter, to quote this reviewer, gave an "orthodox, accurate, and, on the whole, very satisfactory" performance. He conducted the Eroica Symphony "with characteristic authority and musicianly understanding," in the opinion of the World chronicler. The Sun reviewer thought his reading "finely proportioned and sincere."

At his second concert, the guest conductor offered the Rienzi Overture, Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique and the Tannhaeuser Bacchanale. He again received commendation in the newspapers.

The children's concert on February 21 was the first appearance of the orchestra following their Southern trip. On February 28, the Marmein sisters (Miriam, Irene, and Phyllis) danced to an orchestral accompaniment conducted by Rene Pollain. Mr. Walter directed the other numbers.

According to the Sun, the dancers "again proved their ability to entertain artistically" and F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune wrote that they gave a favorable impression of skill and grace.

Fleta
METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

Sensational in Opera Triumphant in Concert
Jeritza
Now Booking
Season 1925-1926
Sole management
Metropolitan Musical Bureau
Aeolian Hall
New York City
Knabe Piano
Victor Records

"He is a virtuoso—there are few more brilliant ones; yet in his case, the musician, the poet, the interpreter, has conquered the virtuoso. He has given a new honor, a new dignity, to that somewhat dubious word."
—LAWRENCE GILMAN

BACHAUS

By LAWRENCE GILMAN

"Mr. Bachaus is geared to play Brahms. He has the necessary largeness and masculinity of style, the tonic vigor, the blend of sanity and fervor, the poetry that is never languishing nor oversweet."

"Mr. Bachaus made a highly gratifying success with last night's crowded house—gratifying, because he is one of the most musicianly and impressive artists now playing the piano in public. Invariably he sinks himself in the music he would convey. He is a virtuoso—there are few more brilliant ones; yet in his case, the musician, the poet, the interpreter, has conquered the virtuoso. He has given a new honor, a new dignity, to that somewhat dubious word."

--New York Herald Tribune, Feb. 13, 1925.

Photo by G. Maillard Kesslere

By DEEMS TAYLOR

"The memorable feature of last night's Philharmonic program was William Bachaus' performance of the Brahms second piano concerto—aided and abetted, of course, by the orchestra.

"Luckily for the music, the piano part, important and grateful though it is, is so lacking in spectacular qualities that it is not likely to attract any pianists except those who are interested primarily in the music. Mr. Bachaus was an admirable choice. His performance, besides being beautifully blended with the texture of the surrounding orchestra, had deep imaginative and poetic qualities, and superb vitality. It was a masterly achievement by an artist who once more demonstrated his right to be placed in the first rank of living pianists."

---New York World, Feb. 13, 1925.

By OLIN DOWNES

"He played the noble and familiar composition with the fidelity and enthusiasm of the fine musician that he is. The technics of the concerto remain ugly and in many places present ungrateful problems to the pianist. It is one of the tributes to Mr. Bachaus' playing that the difficulties he faced were not thought of by the listener and that nothing came between the audience and the music."

—New York Times, Feb. 13, 1925.

By W. J. HENDERSON

"The B flat piano concerto of Brahms is not parlor music and it is not for little girls to play. To perform it properly is a man's job and a man had it last evening. Mr. Bachaus gave an interpretation which was distinguished chiefly by rhythmic insistence and splendor of tone. The first and second movements he performed in big, burly style, with flashes of softer feeling. The prodigality and fervor of the movements, aptly mentioned in Lawrence Gilman's program notes, were adequately published.

"The slow movement, which has such a fathomless depth of sentiment, was beautifully done and in this capable assistance was given by Cornelius Van Vliet, who played the eloquent 'cello solo. The finale was noteworthy for its exquisite nicety of shade and dynamics. It may be added that the pianist's technic was a joy."

—New York Sun, Feb. 13, 1925.

By FRANK H. WARREN

"Those who were fortunate enough to be there listened to one of the red letter musical events of the season."

—New York Evening World, Feb. 13, 1925.

Next American Tour, Jan. 1 - May 1, 1926—NOW BOOKING

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

FISK BUILDING
NEW YORK

BALDWIN PIANO
DUO-ART RECORDS

PACKARD BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA

W. J. Henderson—Reporter

Dean of New York Music Reviewers Considers His Profession a Branch of Newspaper Work.

By KAY KENNEDY

W. J. HENDERSON is a music critic who is, first of all, a good newspaper man. And he has some very emphatic and clearly defined ideas on the function of the critic. Sitting in the comfortable living room of his hotel apartment in the West Forties, he outlined briefly, but convincingly, his conception of the duties of the newspaper reviewer.

"It is up to the critic to make people think about art as an art. By that I mean that it is necessary for him to induce the public to give the subject their consideration from that point of view." Mr. Henderson paused, then in a more vehement tone added, "I don't care whether those who read my reviews agree with me or not—when someone writes me or tells me that my statements about a certain recital were all wrong, and then tells me why he thinks they were wrong—well, then I'm satisfied, because I know that I've won that man.

"The reason that I've won him is because I've made him think. I've stimulated him to consciousness of the art and to the formulation of his own opinions. I don't care what my readers think—so long as they think something! Even if a reader gets hopping mad and then proceeds to tell why he is, I've accomplished something."

He smiled as he leaned back in his chair.

"So you see this all leads up to the secondary—but no less important—function of the critical writer. As I have said, the first thing to do is to make your readers think for themselves, and to do this the reviewer must report the concert, just as a fire, or a prize-fight, or any other occurrence of interest to the public must be reported. And this implies, of course, that the reviewer should have thorough grounding as a newspaper man—that he must be a first class reporter.

"It has always seemed to me that the least important part of criticism is to give a verdict on a performance, and that the most important is to start a discussion of the music at that performance. A musical reviewer on a daily paper ought to present a vivacious, accurate account of events in the world of music. He must learn to 'cover' a concert in the same way that a sport writer covers a prize-fight and be prepared to inform those readers who are interested in the subject of what took place—and how it took place. You musn't misunderstand me, however, and think that I believe that to be a music writer one need only be a good reporter. Naturally, he must know what he's writing about. It would be fatal for a reviewer to hear an opera singer sing an entire act out of tune and not know that it was being sung out of tune!"

Mr. Henderson started in on his journalistic career early in life. When he was still a schoolboy in the little town of Freehold, N. J., he worked for the local newspaper and received his first lessons in journalism under Major James S. Yard, who was then editor of the paper.

After he had been graduated from Princeton he came to New York and got a job on the Tribune. According to Mr. Henderson, this was the only metropolitan paper at that time that would take on a "green" college man, and as a result it served as a school of journalism to many newspaper men.

"While I was there," said Mr. Henderson, "I did almost every blessed thing that there is to do in a newspaper office, except be managing editor! I not only worked on the night city desk, the telegraph desk, but did general reporting as well."

After three years with this paper the young Henderson went over to the Times. It was there that he got the opportunity that started him on his career in musical journalism. One night he was sent up town to report a meeting of the Liederkranz. Ordinarily it would have been only worth a couple of sticks, but there was a big concert put on, and Henderson felt that it was, in his words, "big stuff." Theodore Thomas' orchestra played, and two new works were introduced.

When the young reporter got back to the office he wrote, instead of the expected small news item, a long review of the concert. The result was that he was taken on as assistant to the music critic of the paper and succeeded him when he left.

In 1902 W. J. Henderson went over to the Sun—"for the reason any man leaves one paper for another"—where he has been ever since. There have been several changes of administration during that time, but he has remained.

"Don't you ever get tired of hearing concerts, Mr. Henderson?" I asked. "Don't you ever feel jaded or 'fed up' on them?"

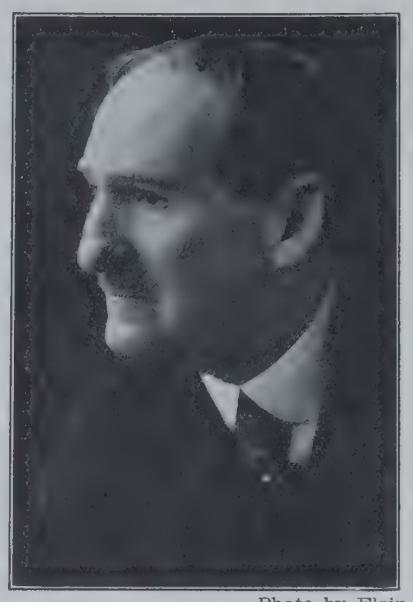

Photo by Elzin

WILLIAM J. HENDERSON

"Never! And I never will as long as I love music—and I'll do that as long as I live. Of course there are times when the mediocre concerts, the actually bad concerts, bore me. But then there is always the thrill of the unexpected. I go to hear a new pianist—it may be another Paderewski. A violinist is to make his debut—the possibility of another Kreisler." Mr. Henderson's eyes snapped. His whole attitude, as well as his voice, evidenced his enthusiasm.

"I'll never forget the night Dick Aldrich and I dropped in to hear Mischa Levitzki. We came in late and stood in the back with our hats and coats on, intending to listen for perhaps ten or fifteen minutes. At the end of the first number I turned to Aldrich and said, 'Well, I guess we're going to have to stay to hear this boy, Dick,' and so we went on down to our seats and stayed for all of the concert.

"It was more or less the same the first time Paderewski played here. We had heard of this Polish pianist, who had played in London, and that they had liked him there, but we really knew nothing about him. He was playing here three times that first week. The first night the auditorium was one-third full. The next day every musical writer came out with columns of praise of the new artist. The second night the hall was two-thirds full, and at his third concert there was a capacity audience!"

When I asked him to tell of some of the musical occasions that stood out in his memory he hesitated and studied the shiny surface of the piano meditatively.

"That is a most difficult question, because there are so many events that come back to me vividly as memorable occasions. For instance, the first performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the old Steinway Hall. Or the time that Sembrich appeared at a benefit concert at the end of the first season of the Metropolitan Opera and played a violin concerto with orchestra, a Chopin ballade on the piano and as an encore sang Ah, Non Giunge! She also played a violin obbligato while Christine Nilson sang. As far as I know this was the only occasion when one artist did three things at a concert—and did them well." Once again Mr. Henderson seemed to ponder over memories. . . . And then he smiled.

"Of course one of the most memorable events was when I heard the first orchestral performance of L'Amore dei Tre Re. As it began to open up I realized the beauty of the music, the fiber of the composition. I went over to George Maxwell and I told him that he had a winner. He protested that it hadn't been a success in Europe, but I prophesied that it would be here.

"One other thing stands out very clearly in my mind. That was one Saturday afternoon when I heard Lili Lehmann, Jean and Edouard de Reszke and Kaschmann sing Tristan and Isolde. Never before or since have I heard such a perfect performance. I asked Jean one day not long after what was the secret of this perfection, and he told me that it was just one of those rare performances when everything came perfectly together. Everything was in perfect accord and met at just the right place."

Kochanski Plays in Cambridge

Cambridge, March 1.—Paul Kochanski was the assisting violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, here on Thursday. Ravel's Tzigane was introduced here by Mr. Kochanski.

According to H. T. Parker of the Transcript, the soloist transformed the Vivaldi Concerto "into a golden web magical to follow, while each arabesque became, under his hand, a new wreath of fancy." The orchestra was a background "to a tone in which the shimmering brightness, the pungent sweetness, the gentle and undulating voice of the violin, were as one."

Nadia Boulanger gave a lecture at Payne Hall Tuesday on The Evolution of Modern French Music. Mlle. Boulanger illustrated her remarks on the piano.

Musicians Depart

Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, and Nadia Boulanger, organist, left New York for France on the S. S. France on March 1. Renee Chemet sailed on the Rochambeau the same day.

WILLIAM GUSTAFSON

Basso, Metropolitan Opera Company

"William Gustafson a man of taste and bearing * * * an excellent Mozart singer * * * sings with the sympathy of one who admires and understands." (Brooklyn Eagle.)

"In excellent voice * * * sang long and varied program * * * interested audience applauded generously." (Brooklyn Times.)

"Mr. Gustafson made an excellent impression, the audience expressing hearty approval at the end of every group. He interprets his songs with much skill * * * voice of great power and ample compass * * * artistic discretion." (Newport Herald.)

"Every number was liked and at times the enthusiasm ran so high as to amount to an ovation." (The News-Newport.)

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Direction of EVELYN HOPPER - Aeolian Hall, New York City

On The Music Highway

HERMA MENTH gave the first of her series of piano recitals in Cleveland March 7 before the Women's Club. On April 7 she will play her third recital at Hollins College, Hollins, Va.

Cecil Arden will be heard in recital in Ogden, Utah, on March 16.

Among the divertissement numbers of the programs by Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn and company to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on the evening of March 17 and on Tuesday afternoon and evening, March 31, will be included Tragica, an experiment in the dance as an independent art without music. Another feature of the program will be a suite of five American sketches to music by Eastwood Lane and John Philip Sousa.

Salvatore de Stefano, harpist, has been engaged to give a special musical program at the graduation exercises of the Margaret Booth Private School for Girls at Montgomery, Ala., on May 28.

Clarence Gustlin, pianist, gave an "interp-recital" of Frank de Leone's American opera, Alglala, in Peoria, Ill., on February 26. Mrs. Anna Lucy Smiley, soprano, assisted in the recital, which was given under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club.

Luella Melius, who recently appeared as soloist with the London Symphony Orchestra, has been engaged for a concert in Albert Hall, London. Mme. Melius will be busy during March with operatic engagements in Nice and Monte Carlo, and at the Madrid Royal Opera. In April she will appear in Paris and Italy. It is expected that she will return to this country next season.

Among the spring festival engagements which will be filled by Judson House is an appearance with the Bridgeport, Conn., Oratorio Society on April 21. The tenor will sing in the concert performance of Aida, which will be given by the society. Fred Patton, who sang in Aida with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company on February 12, will sing in the concert performance in Bridgeport. After Bridgeport he sings with the Philadelphia Mendelssohn Club on April 22, and in Ithaca at the Ithaca Music Festival on April 23 and 24.

This Friday George Liebling, pianist-composer, will give his second Chicago recital in Kimball Hall.

Albert Spalding, American violinist, has been engaged to appear before the Philharmonic Society of New Orleans next February.

A large audience attended the concert given by the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco at the Dominican College at San Rafael last month. The program of this concert, which was the fourth of the Metcalf Series, included Borodine's D major String Quartet, the Nocturne and Scherzo by Arthur Foote for flute and strings, and a group of shorter pieces.

Erna Rubinstein will play the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in the Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday.

Beniamino Gigli, tenor, who is on tour following the completion of his engagement with the Metropolitan Opera Company, appears in Scranton, Pa., Thursday, in Hartford, Conn., on Sunday, and in Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 30. After two April engagements (in New Haven and Greenwich, Conn.), Mr. Gigli will sail for Europe on the S.S. France on April 18 for appearances in opera and concert in Germany during May and June.

A second New York recital by Shura Cherkassky, the thirteen-year-old boy pianist, is scheduled for Aeolian Hall this Saturday afternoon. The program includes numbers by Bach, Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, and a modern group of Rachmaninoff, Mana Zucca, Stojowski, and Moszkowski.

Edwin Hughes, American pianist, appeared at a concert devoted to the works of American composers at the Hotel Ambassador in New York on Washington's Birthday, and has been engaged for a similar appearance in Washington, D. C., on March 23. His second New York recital of the season will take place on March 22. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes recently appeared in a two-piano recital at the MacDowell Club in New York.

Winifred Byrd has been engaged for a concert at Aeolian Hall, New York, on March 24, for the benefit of the American Association for Birth Control. This is her second benefit concert of the season. On December 9 Miss Byrd played at Aeolian Hall for the benefit of the Stony Wold Sanitarium.

Allen McQuhae, tenor, has been engaged by Professor Howard Lyman, director of music at Syracuse University, Syracuse, N Y., to sing the tenor role in The Swan and the Skylark at the university on May 7.

Rafaelo Diaz, tenor, sang on March 2 for the Texas Club at the International House, and on March 5 at Rochester in the big Eastman Theatre series, where he appeared jointly with Margarete Matzenauer.

The second and last of Yolanda Mero's New York recitals this season will be given at Aeolian Hall on Monday afternoon, March 16.

Mischa Levitzki at his final recital of the season in Carnegie Hall on March 14 will play Beethoven's Sonata Op. 101, which he has not played here since his all-Beethoven program five years ago, commemorating the composer's one hundred fiftieth anniversary.

Plans have been drawn for the erection of a theatre in New York to be occupied by the Opera Players, Inc., an organization recently formed to create a repertory grand opera company. Work on the theatre will commence shortly, and it is intended by Opera Players to produce there next season a number of operas in intimate form. The new organization is under the direction of Enrica Clay Dillon, general stage director of the Washington Opera Company.

The third and last of her intimate song recitals was given by Marguerite Sylva at Wallack's Theatre, New York, on March 1, with the assistance of Henrietta Maston, Albert Barber, and Corinne Wolersen.

Marie Morrisey, contralto, has been engaged for three appearances at the Hays (Kansas) Festival in May, for performances of the Messiah and of Elijah.

Miss Morrisey, whose home is in Chicago, has been in New York recently for the purpose of recording for the Brunswick Company.

Articles of incorporation have been filed in New York state by the Women's Symphony Orchestra of America through its attorney, M. M. Baker. The proposed capital of the new orchestra is $250,000 and the incorporators are E. Kuyper, T. Henry, and D. Cook. Elizabeth Kuyper, head of the organization, has recently been rehearsing thirty-five of the proposed sixty members of the orchestra. It is said that she has enlisted the support of local music patrons including Otto H. Kahn.

Donizetti's Lucia was sung at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, for the benefit of St. Joseph's Summer Institute on February 24. Emilia Sapienza, soprano, made her debut in the title role, assisted by Giuseppe Reschiglian, Alfredo Gandolfi and others. The performance was under the direction of Messrs. del Orefice and J. C. Cavere.

The sixty-fourth public service of the Pennsylvania Chapter of the American Guild of Organists was held in St. Michael's Lutheran Church, Germantown, Philadelphia, Friday evening, February 6. The choir of St. Michael's Church, William T. Timmings, organist and choirmaster, rendered the service.

The organ prelude, John E. West's Fantasia in F, was played by Edward R. Tourison, Jr., organist of the Second Baptist Church, Germantown, and the organ postlude, the Allegro movement from Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata, was played by H. Gordon Thomas, assistant organist St. Michael's Church. Frederick Stanley Smith, organist at Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, played, as a voluntary, the Finale from his own Sonata in A minor.

Two other numbers by Philadelphia composers were featured on the program. These were H. Alexander Matthews' devotional hymn anthem, Father, Once More Within Thy Holy Place, and Frances McCollins' The Lord Is King.

S. Hurok, Inc., have announced that Mischa Elman, violinist, will be under their exclusive management for the season 1925-26. Mr. Elman's tour next year will mark his fifteenth season in this country. It is planned to open his season in New York on November 1.

In his farewell recital in the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York, before returning to Europe, Marcel Dupre, Belgian organist, played his new Passion Symphony, Bach. Widor variations on Old Folks at Home, Dixie and the Star-Spangled Banner. As an encore, he played the Marseillaise. M. Dupre does not plan to return to America until the season 1926-27.

Caryl Bensel, soprano, was heard in recital in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The Philharmonic Group, the members of which are Dorsey Whittington, Carl Schlegel, and Charles Kivey, appeared on March 4 in St. John's College in Brooklyn. Other March appearances will be in New Brunswick, N. J.; in Washington, D. C. (where they will make two appearances); in Baltimore and in Trenton.

A Bach organ recital was given by Lynwood Farnam in the Church of the Holy Communion on March 2 in cooperation with the Musicians' Committee for completing the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

CALVIN COXE
Tenor and Voice Teacher
Tone-Production, Diction
Complete Repertoire
570 W. 156th St. N. Y. City
Billings 1593

WINIFRED BYRD
America's Pianist
Management: Marie Gouled
25 West 42d St., New York

RICHARD HAGEMAN
STUDIOS
257 WEST 86th STREET
NEW YORK CITY

CONDUCTOR
Metropolitan Opera Co. for Thirteen Seasons; Ravinia Park Opera Co.; Chicago Civic Opera Co.; Fairmount Park Symphony Orchestra of Philadelphia.

VOCAL COACH COMPOSER ACCOMPANIST

Among the prominent artists, who are coaching or who have coached or with whom Mr. Hageman has enjoyed the reputation of being associated as accompanist, are: Frances Alda, Lucrezia Bori, Sophie Braslau, Inez Barbour, Anna Case, Julia Claussen, Emmy Destinn, Claire Dux, Olive Fremstad, Anna Fitziu, Geraldine Farrar, Lucy Gates, Alice Gentle, Thelma Given, Jeanne Gordon, Mabel Garrison, Louise Homer, Frieda Hempel, Florence Hinkle, Marie Ivogun, Margaret Matzenauer, Edith Mason, Nellie Melba, Florence Macbeth, Ruth Miller, Greta Masson, Claudia Muzio, Luella Meluis, Marie Moressey, Nina Morgana, Haru Onuki, Margaret Ober, Irene Pavloska, Rosa Raisa, Ann Roselle, Marie Rappold, Leonora Sparkes, Marie Sundelius, Renee Thornton, Marcia VanDresser, Marie Zendt, Paul Althouse, Pasquale Amato, Luca Botta, Alessandro Bonci, Pablo Casals, Guilio Crimi, Rafaelo Diaz, Mischa Elman, William Wade Hinshaw, Orville Harrold, Herman Jadlowker, Jan Kubelik, Fritz Kreisler, Morgan Kingston, Riccardo Martin, Jose Mardones, Giovanni Martinelli, Basil Ruysdael, Joseph Schwarz, Antonio Scotti, Albert Spalding, Johannes Sembach, Carlos Sedano, Reinald Werrenrath, Efrem Zimbalist, Renato Zanelli, etc.

Vocal and Dramatic Preparation for Concert, Opera, Oratorio
Instruction in Orchestral Conducting
A Limited Number of Pupils Accepted in the Art of Accompanying
Mr. Hageman will teach at the Chicago Musical College from June 29 to Aug. 1

FOR LESSONS AND APPOINTMENTS ADDRESS
MISS M. MYERS, SEC'Y. TELEPHONE 5627 SCHUYLER

Boston Hears Noted Recitalists

Maria Jeritza, Winifred Macbride, Macmillen, Zathurezky, and Sciarretti Feature Music Week.

Boston, March 3.—Among the instrumentalists who were heard here in concert during the last week were Francis Macmillen, Eduard Zathurezky and Julius Durleshkaivich, violinists; Alberto Sciarretti, Winifred Macbride, Howard Goding and Walter Hansen, pianists, and Daisy Jean, cellist. Maria Jeritza gave the only song recital of the week.

Mr. Macmillen was accompanied by Richard Hageman in his recital in Symphony Hall Thursday. Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor wrote that the violinist played in "a direct and simple fashion, albeit musically." . . . In matters of tone and technique Mr. Macmillen "reveals a mastery of all the resources of the instrument."

The Globe reviewer commented that "his tone is full and sweet without being forced. He phrases musically and plays with keenly felt but unexaggerated rhythmic effects." The chronicler of the Transcript considered him a firm technician and continued that, in the Lalo Symphonie Espagnole his tone, "intense and even brittle, now heightened its beauty and suggested in the vastly subdued pianissimo of the rondo that sensuous hunger which Kreisler alone can extract from measures of the kind."

* * *

On Monday Eduard Zathurezky played in Jordan Hall. Mr. Mason wrote in the Monitor that "the most striking characteristic of Mr. Zathurezky's playing is its repose, which must not be mistaken for coldness, for his tone is warm and colorful, and he plays with evident understanding of the music." The violinist "is not lacking in virtuosity," according to Mr. Mason, "but his virtuosity is not of the cheap, showy variety. In short, he is a well equipped violinist and a musician of more than ordinary attainments."

The reviewer in the Transcript found Mr. Zathurezky "serious minded and self controlled," shunning "every trick of the physically displayful violinists." His tone, to quote this writer further, was "resonant, warm, full flavored of the strings and the wood of the fiddle. It flows amply and freely in measures of sustained melody, engaging and stirring the ear. It is flexible and diversified with figures and ornament." In the Herald the chronicler commented that he played the Paganini variations "most musically . . . with sweetness when they allowed it, always with dignity and with a vigor which made even the most perfunctory engrossing."

Julius Durleshkaivich's violin recital Tuesday was commended by Mr. Mason for its display of considerable natural technical facility. This writer considered the artist's tone and technical command "uneven," but added that Mr. Durleshkaivich "has violinistic talent; and, more than this, he has a musical nature coupled with a degree of musical understanding." The Transcript reported that he showed natural ability, but lack of adequate control and training.

* * *

Maria Jeritza was loudly applauded by an audience of unusual size and enthusiasm in her concert appearance here. The reviewers commented on her charming stage presence, but found that, hampered by the restrictions of the concert platform, her singing was not in its best form.

The Globe chronicler found her singing "highly dramatic and worthy of her reputation" in the operatic arias and English ballads. He wrote that "her voice is powerful and naturally of great beauty. . . . For the most part she sang well." He commented that she was "the most fascinating person to watch" he had ever seen in concert.

According to the Herald, Mme. Jeritza proved herself "an opera singer first and foremost. . . . She has beauty, charm and personality." The soprano was assisted by Emil Polak at the piano, and Maximilian Rose played several violin solos.

* * *

With the exception of Liszt, Dohnanyi and Chopin, the program given by Mr. Sciarretti in Jordan Hall consisted of Italian compositions from the time of Frescobaldi to the present. One of the novelties was Pick-Mangiagalli's three Mignardises.

To quote the Transcript, "technique of more than usual polish and refinement Mr. Sciarretti has in abundance. Tone with him is often very lovely, though in forte and fortissimo it is usually rather thin and hard." The Herald commentator considered him "manifestly a player of fine talent . . . with a cool, crisp tone that had distinct individuality."

Winifred Macbride also gave a piano recital in the same hall on Saturday. She played John Ireland's Ragamuffin "excellently, with a strong tone that sounded well, firm technique and admirable rhythm. In the Ravel she added real brilliancy to her equipment, and the Rachmaninoff Prelude she played with warmth," in the opinion of the Herald observer.

* * *

The Transcript wrote of Mr. Goding's piano recital on Thursday that it showed musicianship of a very high order. This writer considered that his technique "is large and secure, though it practically never dazzles or overwhelms. His tone is rich, luscious, of considerable flexibility. Powerful sonorities he piles up without hint of hardness or coarseness."

According to the Globe, "he played with his accustomed dynamic force and his usual sense of contrast." The Monitor writer said he "successfully differentiates various styles. . . . His splendid technique was always subservient to the intelligent and appropriate interpretation of the music he played."

Walter Hansen, recent winner of the Mason and Hamlin prize at the New England Conservatory of Music, plays, according to the Monitor, "with a clear, brilliant tone and plainly feels his music." To quote the Transcript, his technique is "crisp, clean-cut, able to cope with major difficulties."

* * *

In a combination cello, harp and song recital Daisy Jean appeared at Jordan Hall Thursday. In general, the reviewers admired her most as a cellist. The Monitor said that she played the cello "with beauty, emotional power and technique," and added that her technique "embraces speed, clearness, splendid bowing and good light notes."

In the Transcript review she was called "a knowing exponent of her instrument," and the Globe chronicler commented that she played "with a keen sense of melody and a musicianly feeling, but with a technique not always impeccable." The Transcript writer also commented that "her voice is of excellent quality, with some especially lovely high notes."

* * *

The Temple Choirs, under the direction of Henry Gideon, presented The Builder, a Biblical music drama by Eleanor Wood Whitman, Monday. The presentation of the work was commended by Mr. Mason.

* * *

A joint recital was given by Marie Mikova, pianist, and Arthur Hartmann, violinist, a week ago Thursday in Jordan Hall, in which the artists played solos and duets.

Miss Mikova, according to the Monitor, "gave a good account of herself" and played some things "with fine expressiveness." The Herald writer considered her "a good technician" but said her playing lacked ardor and imagination. The Transcript commentator lauded her "technical virtuosity," but deplored the tendency toward the colorless she displayed.

To quote the Monitor, Mr. Hartmann "is a player of acknowledged talent. He brings an authoritative interpretation to whatever he plays. A master of brilliance, resonance, and clean rhythmic vigor, he plays with a feeling for the essential unities of composition." According to the Herald observer, he is "an excellent musician and a skilled violinist" and played throughout with "technical proficiency, musical sensitiveness, a smoothness of tone that was occasionally very beautiful, a mood that caught the sombre beauty of the music." The Globe writer found the concert monotonous and lacking in inspiration. In the opinion of the writer in the Transcript, the ensemble playing was excellent.

Recent Press Comment on the conducting of

N. LINDSAY NORDEN

Mendelssohn Club, 225 Voices. Philadelphia Orchestra, 104 Players

"The concert showed some of the best choral singing that has been done in this city for a long time. . . . The organization with great spirit and fine tonal quality sang a number of selections requiring versatility both in voice and in interpretation. . . . An orchestral sketch, "Silver Plume," an effective piece of composition and orchestration by N. Lindsay Norden, Conductor of the Club, was very well received by the large audience. The work of the chorus was very impressive many times; its balance was excellent and the tonal quality left little to be desired, while the dynamics were effectively rendered, and the blending with the orchestra also was very beautiful. It is to be hoped that choral singing in Philadelphia will gain a fresh impetus from last evening's concert."—Public Ledger.

"It sang upon this occasion Brahms' noble 'Song of Destiny' and Mendelssohn's characteristically fluent 'Hymn of Praise.' It sang them well, with admirable volume and quality of tone, and with the precision its members have attained under the skillful directorship of N. Lindsay Norden. . . . Of the playing of the Orchestra under Mr. Norden's direction there is no need to speak."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Presiding over his forces, Mr. Norden compels the impression of absolute intelligent appreciation of the results to be attained, so successful is he in conducting both choral and instrumental harmonies. Indeed so large was the force under his baton that it was necessary to attach the old fashioned and discarded 'apron' to the Academy platform to accommodate the musicians."—Evening Bulletin.

The Curtis Institute of Music

Founded by Mary Louise Curtis Bok

A national institution offering a thorough musical education by the foremost artists of distinguished accomplishment

THE Institute is housed in two of the largest and most beautiful residences of Philadelphia, renovated to suit the needs of their new purpose, thus ensuring a quiet, home-like environment of simple beauty.

The students are brought into personal contact with the distinguished artists who are on its Faculty, while recitals by the foremost artists of the world, symphonic concerts by The Philadelphia Orchestra, and opera by The Metropolitan Opera Company, of New York, are available at The Academy of Music, three squares distant.

A full catalog is at the disposal of anyone addressing
THE CURTIS INSTITUTE OF MUSIC
Rittenhouse Square Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Steinway pianos exclusively

Eastern Supervisors to Meet

Educators and Musicians Will Speak Before New Haven Convention Next Week.

(Continued from page 1)

"The Orchestra in the Grades."
"Organization of the High School Orchestra."
Mr. Victor Rebman, Director of Music, Yonkers, N. Y.
Demonstration: A Regular Rehearsal, Mr. W. E. Brown in charge, Director of Music, New Haven, Conn.
1. Tuning Routine.
2. Familiar Selection.
3. Sight Reading.
4. Interpretative Practice.
5. Familiar Selection.
Discussion.

9:30-11:30—Wooster School, Miss Pauline Meyer, Director of Music, New Britain, Conn., will give demonstration of model lessons in Music Appreciation. Grades 1-6.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 18

1:30-1:45—Community Singing—Arthur F. A. Witte conducting.
1:45-2:30—Formal opening of the Conference with address of welcome by Mayor Fitzgerald, Superintendent of Schools, F. H. Beede, and Dr. James R. Angell, President Yale University. Response by the President of the Conference, R. W. Grant.
2:45-3:15—"Training Versus Instruction" —Charles L. Ames, Member State Board of Education, Conn.
3:15-3:45—Address—Dr. Hollis Dann, Director Dept. Public School Music, New York University.
3:45-4:15—Albert Edmund Brown, Dean Public School Music, Ithaca Conservatory, N. Y., in a Program of Songs.
4:30-5:30—Publishers' Exhibit at Hotel Headquarters, Room 117—Yale Room.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 18

8:15-9:30—Sprague Memorial Hall—Concert by Horatio Parker Choir, David Stanley Smith, Conductor.
10:00-12:00—Informal Reception and Dancing, High School, charge Physical Training Department.

THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 19

9:30-11:30—School Visitation, New Haven Public Schools.
9:30-11:30—"Voice Production in the Public Schools Round-Table," Prince Street Grammar School.
Chairman, Miss Esther Greene, Director of Music, Oneonta Normal School, New York.
Demonstrations with small groups of children.
The Child Voice, unassigned.
The Boy's Changing Voice, Mr. Wm. Short, Supervisor of Music, Northampton, Mass.
Vocal Class Instruction, Mr. Frederick Haywood, New York City.
Discussion.
9:30-11:30—Junior High School—Round-Table.
Chairman, Mr. Charles Miller, Director of Music, Rochester, N. Y.
9:30-11:30—Selections by four Seventh Grade Choruses, Orange Street School, Miss Ethel L. Higgins, New Haven, conducting.
1. Some work in interpretation with piano accompaniment.
2. Sight reading by phrases (classes singing separately in rotation).
3. Sight reading by entire chorus (with words or with syllables, in alternate phrases).
4. Quartette singing (one quartette from each class singing together).
5. A lesson in appreciation, Miss Grace Pierce, Supervisor of Music, Arlington, Mass.
6. Selection.
"Junior High School Organization," Mr. George Abbott, Director of Music, Schenectady, N. Y.
"Courses in Theory and Practice," Mr. Ralph Baldwin, Director of Music, Hartford, Conn.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 19

1:30-1:45—Community Singing, Albert Edmund Brown conducting.
1:45-3:00—Annual business meeting with election of officers, reports of committees, etc.
3:00-3:30—Address Professor Peter Dykema, Director Dept. Public School Music, Columbia University. "Tests and Measurements in Music Education."
3:30-4:00—Address, Dr. Luther A. Weigle, Yale University.
4:00-4:45—Concert by Yale University Glee Club.
5:00-5:30—Publishers' Exhibit at Hotel Headquarters, Room 117—Yale Room.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 19

6:00—Various Alumni Dinners.
8:15-9:45—Woolsey Hall, Concert, Haydn's "Seasons" by 600 High School pupils of New Haven, William E. Brown, Director of Music.

FRIDAY MORNING, MARCH 20

9:30-11:30—"A Musical Clinic" under the direction of T. P. Giddings, Director of Music, Minneapolis, Minn.

MISS ANNA CASE
Sang Yesterday in Her Only Recital Appearance in New York This Season.

Grades 1-8 will be taught in rotation by Mr. Giddings, Truman Street school.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 20

1:30-1:45—Community Singing.
1:45-2:15—Address, Dr. Max Schoen, Carnegie Tech., Music Appreciation.
2:15-3:00—Address, Franz Proschowsky, New York City.
3:00-3:30—Address (Illustrated), "Piano Accompaniments," Mr. George Gartlan, Director of Music, New York City.
3:30-5:00—Publishers' Exhibit at Hotel Headquarters, Room 117—Yale Room.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 20

6:30—Annual Banquet at New Haven Lawn Club.
Chairman—Wm. E. Brown.
Toastmaster—James Price.
Speaker—Dr. Charles M. Bakewell, Yale University.
Entertainment.
Community Singing.
Helen Leavitt in "The House That Jack Built."
Testimonial appreciation to Samuel P. W. Cole (pioneer supervisor, retired).
Violin and Piano Sonata by two prominent musicians.
10:30-12:00—Singing in Lobby of Hotel.

Koussevitzky Leads All-Russian Program

Boston, March 3.—The only unfamiliar number on the all-Russian program conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at the Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was Glazounow's Eighth Symphony. The rest of the program included Glinka's Overture to Russlan and Ludmilla; Liadov's Kikomora, The Enchanted Lake, and Baba-Yaga, and Tschaikowsky's Romeo and Juliet Overture.

Philip Hale wrote in the Herald that, in spite of the "solid structure, the scholarly workmanship, the technical skill displayed" and the occasional "examples of ingenious orchestration," the Glazounow Symphony had little emotional appeal. According to Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor, "his music is sonorous, there are effective bits of scoring, there is here and there a passage of felicitous harmonization, but the thematic material as a whole is characterless."

In the opinion of Warren Storey Smith (Post), "marvels of contrapuntal ingenuity are to be found in this symphony. Structurally it is a notable achievement. . . . It is dignified, serious, often stirring and impressive," but "it is devoid of striking individuality." The reviewer in the Globe found passages "with real power," although the general effect of the work was one of "labored dullness."

* * *

Frederic Joslyn was the soloist at the sixteenth concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. According to the Herald, he sang "decorously, with most resonance in his lower notes." The Globe writer found his voice "of pleasing quality, and the audience received him with enthusiasm."

GRAINGER

Triumphs from Coast to Coast

"A distinctive musical personality, vigorous, original and refreshing, who dazzles with his brilliance and charms with his poetry."
"Daily Times," Seattle, Wash., Oct. 28th, 1924.

"The loveliest thing about Grainger's piano playing is his superb pianissimo. Again and again—exquisite feeling for soft notes. He gives one the impression that when most pianists think they are playing extremely soft it really is mezzo-forte after all."
"Daily Times," Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 19th, 1924.

"Grainger, who has played for us before, gave a performance so vital in spirit, so electrical in sparkling dynamics and so poetically rhapsodic that it seemed impossible that he has ever done so well."
"Chronicle," San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 11th, 1924.

"Grainger and Muzio get capacity crowd, at least 500 persons were turned away."
"Daily Tribune," Chicago, Ill., Dec. 1st, 1924.

"Grainger played with musicianship and a singing tone. His heavy chords rang with the clearness of a beautifully toned bell."
"Free Press," Detroit, Mich., Nov. 28th, 1924.

"Grainger played the Grieg concerto in such masterly fashion of power, buoyancy and tender lyricism in perfect blending as he has never done this or any other work here."
"Journal," Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 6th, 1924.

"The years may not wither nor repeated contacts stale the pleasure of Mr. Grainger's individuality. Other pianists may be this, that or the other, yet not one—even Mr. Rachmaninoff—suffuses a presence over a concert-room as does Mr. Grainger."
"Evening Transcript," Boston, Mass., Jan. 12th, 1925.

"Grainger is a pianist to whom one may listen with pleasure quite indefinitely."
"Post," Boston, Mass., Jan. 11th, 1925.

"A throng came to hear an unconventional program. Mr. Grainger was in fine form, giving the Bach number a magnificent close, with his usual blend of crisp clarity and notable power thoroughly in evidence."
"Tribune," New York, Jan. 6th, 1925.

"His gusto is always infectious, and his playing is so clean and lucid that one has the feeling of taking a walk with him on a bright frosty morning and admiring the spring and energy he puts into every step."
"Evening Post," New York, Jan. 6th, 1925.

DURING 1925-26 AVAILABLE FROM NOVEMBER 1ST TO APRIL 1ST

Management: ANTONIA SAWYER, Inc. - Box 446 White Plains, N. Y.

COLUMBIA RECORDS STEINWAY PIANO DUO-ART ROLLS

Opera Heads Washington Music

Chicago Company Gives Tannhaeuser, Boris, Lucia, and Thais; Damrosch Leads Ninth Symphony.

Washington, Feb. 28.—The main event of the past month, the visit to Washington of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, may be taken as a direct result of the building of the new Washington Auditorium. And further enterprise on a large scale is to be expected. There is promised the Bach Choir of Bethlehem in the B minor Mass in Easter week, and Morris Gest has been throwing out feelers as to the practicability of producing The Miracle here. Certain inconveniences in the arrangements of the big building which have been brought to light by experience, will be remedied, and its usefulness assured.

As for the Chicago Opera Company, it offered a varied fare in Tannhaeuser, Boris Godunoff, Lucia di Lammermoor, and Thais. Attention centered perhaps too much in the stars of the cast, but the work of those taking minor parts and the sonorous and picturesque chorus won spontaneous recognition too. Scenery and stage settings came in for praise, although the stage,—built though it is for an auditorium of six thousand seats,—looked cramped in the big ensembles. The orchestra, good in itself, was generally considered overpowering, whether conducted by Weber, Polacco, or St. Leger. Only in Thais under Moranzoni was there no complaint made on that score.

Of the opening night Kate Scott Brooks of the Herald wrote that Rosa Raisa won a triumph for herself in the role of Elizabeth and Joseph Schwartz made an equally artistic success as Wolfram." Jessie McBride of the Times thought the honors went to Cyrena van Gordon and Mr. Schwartz. Forrest Lamont did his final scene very well although "ineffective" at first, in the opinion of this writer. Mme. Raisa's Elizabeth she found "gripping," but "with a fine dramatic sense, there was yet lacking that commanding heroism of Wagner, that forcefully proclaimed German diction that belongs to these heroines. Her Prayer was exquisite in its picture."

Of Boris Helen Fetter of the Star wrote that "the manner in which Chaliapin actually lives the role of the mentally tortured czar is awe-inspiring." She reported Mr. Chaliapin as saying: "It is the soul of Russia—this role." Miss McBride called the interpretation "the greatest towering portrait that any stage may rise to. Yet the opera as a whole is a masterwork in which Moussorgsky taxes the resources of a cast to the utmost." But in the three tenors demanded, Messrs. Cortis, Mojica and Boscacci, the basses Cotreuil and Lazzari, and in the women, Gladys Swarthout, Augusta Lenska, and the others, Miss McBride felt that the Chicago Opera "met the requirements most notably."

Lucia di Lammermoor with Toti dal Monte in the title role was as Italian as its predecessors were German and Russian. Even the enthusiasm manifested in the mad scene took on an Italian quality, although Washington lacks the foreign elements in its population that hang over the rail and lead the applause on their respective nights at the Metropolitan in New York. Antonio Cortis took occasion here to show great power in the last act.

The concluding Thais,—a matinee and the best attended of the four performances,—was dominated by Mary Garden, theatrical to the last degree but impressive in appeal, direct and convincing, especially in the more subtle developments of the role. Mrs. Poe, of the Post, found that Mr. Cotreuil as Athanael "had dramatic fervor and was always with the picture as the fiercely earnest and spiritually exalted mystic." The local management for the series of performances was undertaken by Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

Mrs. Greene presented also Ruth St. Denis and the Denishawn Dancers to a capacity audience; Fritz Kreisler, of whom nothing new is to be said; and the New York Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Washington had a proprietary interest in this aspiring undertaking, as the chorus was composed of its Choral Society, the Church of the Covenant Choir, the Rubinstein Club, and the Interstate Male Chorus. The unconventional seating of these forces occasioned some press criticism, but the precision in attack and pitch and the devoted enthusiasm was found beyond question.

The quartet, Ruth Rodgers, Helena Marsh, Fraser Gange and Charles Stratton gave all that could be asked. Mr. Damrosch and his men played the night before in the Fine Arts course, which offered Marion Rous in her clever lecture-recital "What Next in Music?"

Alexander Brailowsky and Zlatko Balakovic brought Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's Morning Musicales to a conclusion for the season. T. Arthur Smith, Inc., presented a violinist of first rank in Paul Kochanski. Gregory Ashman's accompaniments, said Mrs. Brooks in the Herald, were "worthy of the soloist—which is sufficient praise." The second concert of the Washington Chamber Music Ensemble was distinguished by the good playing of the National String Quartet under Henri Sokolov, and, more especially by Mr. La Salle Spier's song cycle to verses from Browning's Pippa Passes, sung by Gretchen Hood to a rich accompaniment of piano—played by the composer—and string quartet. Schubert's Forellen Quintet concluded the program.

M. G. S.

Walter Will Lead Mason Work

Daniel Gregory Mason's Symphony in C minor is scheduled to be played by the New York Symphony Orchestra, Bruno Walter conducting, at its Sunday afternoon concert in Aeolian Hall, New York, on March 15. Liszt's Mazeppa and Schubert's Unfinished Symphony will complete the program.

The Center for Modern Music

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

RACHMANINOFF PLAYS "THE TROIKA"

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

It is true that Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, Hofmann—to name but a few of a long list of eminent pianists—have chosen the Steinway as the one perfect instrument. It is true that in the homes of literally thousands of singers, directors and musical celebrities, the Steinway is an integral part of the household. And it is equally true that the Steinway, superlatively fine as it is, comes well within the range of the moderate income and meets all the requirements of the modest home.

This instrument of the masters has been brought to perfection by four generations of the Steinway family. But they have done more than this. They have consistently sold it at the lowest possible price. And they have given it to the public upon terms so convenient that the Steinway is well within your reach. Numerous styles and sizes are made to suit your home. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and ideals. And each waits only your touch upon the ivory keys to loose its matchless singing tone, to answer in glorious voice your quickening commands, to echo in lingering beauty or rushing splendor the genius of the great composers.

*There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

plus transportation

STEINWAY & SONS, STEINWAY HALL
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

Soloists Assist in Philharmonic Concerts

Wanda Landowska Plays Mozart; Van Vliet Is Cellist in Don Quixote.

Wanda Landowska played Mozart's Concerto in E flat for piano and orchestra at the concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, Willem Mengelberg conducting, on Thursday evening. Mr. Mengelberg also played the Eroica Symphony and Bach's Prelude to Cantata No. 174 and the Adagio from the Organ Concerto in C major in Siloti's arrangement for strings.

In the Sun W. J. Henderson wrote that "the performance of the Concerto was something to be cherished in the memory as one of the exquisite accomplishments of this prolific season. Mme. Landowska played with ravishing tone and with a scale of dynamics not only most favorable to her instrument, but fully in keeping with the character of Mozart's conceptions and the instrumental outlook of his time. She displayed a technique which for purity, crystalline clearness and infinite variety of tonal gradations could not be surpassed."

Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that "in the andante Mme. Landowska broidered on Mozart's melody with that oneness of spirit with the master that has seemed nothing short of miraculous." In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times she played "with a self-abnegation, a depth of feeling and purity of style past praise." The Post was equally commendatory.

The feature of Mr. Mengelberg's concert on February 27 was Strauss' Don Quixote, which was new to the Philharmonic programs. The reviewers welcomed the musical character study and felt in general that Mr. Mengelberg's reading expressed the intentions of the composer with clarity and fitness of expression.

Cornelius van Vliet played the cello part, as well as the cello solo in Haydn's Concerto in D major. He was praised by the press for his playing in both numbers. Olin Downes wrote that "it was one of the finest readings of the cello part of Strauss' work that we remember and a performance in itself."

At the students' concert on Wednesday night Mr. Mengelberg gave the Beethoven Eroica Symphony and Strauss' Ein Heldenleben, in which Scipione Guidi played the violin solo. The week previous at its Sunday concert the orchestra played Stravinsky's L'Oiseau de Feu, Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony and Mozart's serenade for string orchestra, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik. Ernest Schelling conducted the third pair of children's concerts by the orchestra on February 21, emphasizing the woodwind section of the orchestra, which first desk men illustrated.

Savannah Aims for Civic Opera

Savannah, Ga., Feb. 28.—M. M. Hopkins is chairman of a committee which is sponsoring a self-supporting civic opera association in Savannah to produce operas with casts made up of local singers. The committee is made up of members of the Thursday Morning, Saint Cecilia, Savannah Music Clubs, and the Opera Study Club.

Third New York Recital by Kreisler

Fritz Kreisler gave his third New York recital February 21 before an audience which filled Carnegie Hall to capacity.

Stokowski Conducts Last Guild Program

John Barclay Sings; Schoenberg, Eichheim, Satie, and Varese Novelties Given.

The orchestra at the third concert of the International Composers' Guild in Aeolian Hall, New York, March 1, was composed of members of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and was conducted by Leopold Stokowski. The assisting artist was John Barclay. The four numbers on the program, all of which were first performances here, were a Serenade for small orchestra and baritone by Schoenberg, Eichheim's Malay Mosaic, a Suite of Dances by Erik Satie, and Edgar Varese's Integrales.

Lawrence Gilman (Herald Tribune) found the Schoenberg "feeble, tedious, infertile and fundamentally derivative" and the Malay Mosaic a "poetic and ingenious fantasy" although reminiscent of his other works. More tolerant than the other reviewers, Mr. Gilman considered that, although Varese's music meant little to him, it "stood squarely and solidly on its own feet" and had the virtue of sincerity.

According to Deems Taylor of the World, "the proceedings were a bit depressing" with Mr. Eichheim's piece "the most euphonious of the lot." Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that the Satie dances were trifles, but "crisp, tuneful, pungent, bright." The Malay Mosaic Mr. Sanborn thought "monotonous, rambling and unconscionably long." The Post reviewer commented that the humor in the Satie dances was too obvious, and that the Eichheim work "was the most interesting offering . . . with a fascinating exotic quality."

W. J. Henderson (Sun) thought this work dull, but liked the humor of the Dances by Satie. In the opinion of Olin Downes of the Times, the Malay music was the most beautiful of the evening. He congratulated John Barclay—"talented artist that he is"—for his singing of the thankless and difficult voice part in the Serenade.

Mr. Stokowski and the orchestra were commended generally and the consensus of the reviewers of the Varese Integrales was that it was noisy and too long.

Paris Opera Now Housed In its Thirteenth Home

Paris.

The Paris Opera, which early in January celebrated its fiftieth birthday in its present house, has so far in its career occupied thirteen auditoriums. In its long career the institution has been located in the following places in Paris:

1671-1672—Rue Mazarine.
1672-1673—Rue de Vaugirard.
1673-1763—Palais Royal.
1764-1770—Tuileries.
1770-1781—Palais Royal.
1781—Rue Bergere.
1782-1794—Boulevard Saint Martin.
1794-1820—Rue Richelieu.
1820—Rue Favart.
1821—Place Louvois.
1821-1873—Rue le Pelletier.
1873-1875—Place Ventadour.
1875-1925—Present Opera.

From the time of the foundation of the Paris Opera down to the opening of the auditorium in use today 547 different works were presented; from the opening of the new opera down to the first of January, 1925, about 140 different works were given. This does not include the vast number of musical compositions not operas and ballets which the Paris Opera has presented

I. S.

Opera Re-engaged

Chattanooga, Tenn., March 4.—The Chicago Civic Opera's second season here was such a success that Sam Read, president of the Opera Association and also president of the Chamber of Commerce, has announced that the company will be engaged for three performances next year.

The first performance, a week ago Monday, was Thais with Mary Garden. At the Tuesday matinee, Feodor Chaliapin sang Boris Godunoff, and that night Rosa Raisa was heard in Tannhaeuser. This last was the most popular and was attended by a capacity audience.

John Charles Thomas, baritone, gave a recital Friday evening at The Memorial under the auspices of the Memorial board. He was cordially received by a large audience.

Tonight, under the auspices of the Chattanooga Music Club, Pablo Casals, cellist, will appear.

Re JOHN Mc CORMACK

"A Hint to Students"

"Mr. McCormack, in splendid voice, singing with the technique which few can equal today and none can surpass, and with even more than his usual curious power of lending lustre to a pebble till for the moment it gleams like a jewel.

"It is much to be hoped that many 'Handel and Mozart singers' were in attendance, to learn what they should do."—Boston Herald.

JOSEPHINE LUCCHESE

Critics and Audiences Acclaim the "American Nightingale" in all her appearances (Season 1924-25)

"It is almost invidious to make comparisons but we must enthusiastically commend the Gilda of Lucchese, which was conspicuous not alone for the physical beauty of the singer but for the extremely fine conception of the woes of a betrayed damsel, and a most charming vocalization of the role. We have seldom heard 'Caro Nome' sung better."—New York Evening Post.

"Last night in Lucia Lucchese scored one of the greatest triumphs of her career before the largest house ever played in this city. At the close of the 'Mad scene' there was a tremendous demonstration lasting many minutes."—S. L. L., Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"The performance soon developed into a triumph for Lucchese. Her voice carries beautifully and the creamy texture constantly delights the ear. It is a voice without wavers or uncertainties; one feels no fear for its ability to meet any exigencies even in the dazzling shower of the mad scene with its incredible trills and high notes. Miss Lucchese made it all seem music eminently worth singing."—Rochester Herald.

"Lucchese's singing of the role brought her a thundering acclamation that left no doubt as to what a standing-room-only audience thought of her voice. She sang to a house that was packed."—Pittsburgh Gazette Times.

"The talented coloratura sang the role with a vocal beauty and a dramatic force that well merited all the applause accorded her. The artist is a singing actress of unmistakable ability. Winsome, appealingly pathetic in her interpretation she was given as much praise for her dramatic portrayal as for her splendid vocal ability."—Detroit Free Press.

"Hers is a voice of crystaline clarity and she uses it with such ease and delicacy that the person who comes to criticize remains only to marvel and enjoy. Her technique is so perfect as to be wholly unobtrusive and almost imperceptible and she colors everything she sings with the charm of her own gracious personality."—Carl B. Adams, Cincinnati Enquirer.

"She sang with all the purity, sweetness, technical sureness and musical charm which one had learned to expect of her. What the audience perhaps feels more than any other quality, aside from the actual vocalization itself, is a certain delicate sympathy in interception and a special refinement of intonation. She is lovely and she sings beautifully." — St. Paul Pioneer Press.

"Such an exceptional artist is Josephine Lucchese. She combines the gift of great coloratura skill in singing with true and well developed talent for convincing stage action. Her final triumph was supremely well earned."—Victor Nilson, Minneapolis Journal.

●●●●

For Terms and Dates, Wire or Write
ADOLFO CARUSO
Personal Representative
808 Harrison Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

The Musical Digest Foreign Correspondents:
J. B. BAUER, Damenstiftstrasse, 16-3 MUNICH, Germany.
VICTOR BELAIEV, Novinsky Boulevard 117, lodg 4, MOSCOW, Russia.
FEDERICO CANDIDA, 12 via Palermo, MILANO, Italy.
ARTHUR KURSCHNER, 48 Hauptstrasse, BERLIN, Germany.
PAUL LEWINSON, 21 Maresfield Gardens, LONDON, N. W. 3, England.
PAUL STEFAN, Hamerlingplatz, VIENNA 8, Austria.
K. H. STOTTNER, 18 Rue de Cirque, PARIS, France.

New Casella Ballet Produced

Il Convento Veneziano Presented in Milan; Revive Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel.

Milan.

A new choreographic comedy of Alfredo Casella, Il Convento Veneziano, had its world premiere at La Scala on the evening of February 7. It shared the program with a revival of Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel, which immediately preceded the ballet. The libretto of the novelty is the work of J. L. Vaudoyer.

The reception of the new work by the public was only moderate in its warmth. The story, although original in a mediocre way, seemed static, monotonous and not well adapted to the two ways in which the authors intended that it should be told, that is, pantomime and the dance. It did not win the audience or convince it of its plausibility. It is one of those tales which works about inevitably toward the happy ending, but which lacks any piquancy, although it is overdosed with sweetness.

Nor did the choreography succeed in developing movement or in creating any great degree of dynamic life. True enough, the authors were determined from the very beginning that the spirit and mood of plain dancing should not be banned from their work as it has been from other modern works of the sort. Somehow, nevertheless, the impression is given that the dance mood is artificial, and that it does not spring spontaneously from the nature of the story which is being told.

Finale Effective

The only part of Il Convento Veneziano which was vigorously effective was the finale, whose rhythmic vitality and choreographic movement really had strength.

As for the music of Alfredo Casella, it must be said that it contrasts absolutely with the style demanded by pantomime and the dance. Nor can it be said that irrespective of the purpose for which it was intended has it any great vitality or color. It seemed for the most part spread too thin, too mixed in style, too artificial and empty.

What must be praised without stint in the production of Il Convento Veneziano was the setting of the ballet. The fantastic scenery and picturesque costumes were most charming. Signor Caramba did wonders with them. Cia Fornaroli and Rosa Mascagno were more than equal to the demands of the story, dancing with charming grace and agility. Maestro Panizza conducted with impeccable musical taste.

Hansel and Gretel

Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel, which was the first performance of the double bill, was given the same evening for the first time in twenty-three years in Milan.

The public seemed to appreciate the revival and to penetrate easily the subtleties of the score, upon which, in fact, the entire value of the opera is based.

The production did full justice to Humperdinck's work. Unqualified praise was accorded Maestro Panizza, who interpreted the music of the opera with the proper touch of fantasy and lightness. Not even the most minute of themes in the work was obscured in the unusually lucid performance. The conductor brought out the spirited, festive and poetic moods equally well. No warmer and more spontaneous applause has been given a leader at La Scala this year than Maestro Panizza received that night.

The leading roles in the opera were taken by Signore Couchita Supervia and Maria Ines Ferraris, respectively the Hansel and Gretel. Both displayed good voices which favored the ears of the listeners with perfect intonation and keen sense of rhythm. Their acting was discreet and pleasing, if not exceptionally life-like. The audience must have thought with regret of the passing of the artist who created the role of Hansel at La Scala in 1902, Rosina Storchio.

The baritone, Carlo Morelli, sang and acted remarkably well. His limpid and flexible voice was at its best, and he recited the ballad most effectively. Signora Casazza was but a mediocre Strega. The mise-en-scene was striking.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Austrian Librettist Sues For Broadcast Royalties

HUGO VON HOFFMANNSTAHL, the Austrian poet who has written the librettos for all Richard Strauss' more recent operas, is suing the German broadcasting monopoly for damages for introducing one of his works in a radio program without his permission, according to a dispatch in the Evening Post.

After hearing the arguments advanced by Hoffmannstahl's counsel and the attorney for the defense, the court decided to take a fortnight off in which to consider the decision. The decision will be of great interest, as it will establish a precedent on the question of whether authors are entitled to royalties on works broadcast by radio.

Nanny Larsen-Todsen

Swedish Dramatic Soprano

SCORES A TRIUMPH AS ISOLDE

at the Metropolitan Opera House

The Opinions of the New York Critics:

The New York Herald Tribune

"She was touching, she was eloquent, she had something of the sweep and authority, something of the grand manner, of the great Isoldes of an earlier day. . . . Her 'Liebestod' had a strangely sybilline ecstasy and a beauty of tragic elevation that were extraordinarily affecting."

LAWRENCE GILMAN.

The New York World

"She played the Irish Princess with regal impressiveness, fire, passion, and tenderness, and a blazing sincerity that held her audience spellbound from the rising of the curtain on Tristan's ship until the moment she sank back, dying, in the arms of Brangaene by the body of her dead lover. It was a confident, surely conceived, and superbly sustained piece of operatic acting, and it stamps her as an artist to be reckoned with.

"Her performance was almost as impressive vocally as it was dramatically—more so, if one regards the terrific demands of the part. . . . She sang with enormous variety and eloquence, and when the occasion demanded, electrifying power."

DEEMS TAYLOR.

The New York Post

"Much of the charm of the representation was the Isolde of Nanny Larsen-Todsen, which was completely satisfying. From her first appearance on the deck of Tristan's ship to her death in the arms of Brangaene beside the body of her dead lover, she was the Irish Princess, regal, passionate, tender, sincere, holding the audience spellbound with her consummate art in song and acting. It was a great performance in every respect and the new Scandinavian prima donna added one more to the characters in which she has triumphed."

ERNEST NEWMAN.

The New York Times

"The fact is she sang yesterday with tonal color and authority. She presents Isolde with a fire, a majesty and sweep of line. There was a greatness of spirit commensurate with that of the music. There was dramatic proportion and climax, and the sustaining of mood in accordance with dictates of music and text. This was an impressive impersonation."

OLIN DOWNES.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

London Season Picks Up

Paderewski and Sauer Give Piano Recitals; Rose Quartet Pays Annual Visit.

London.

The week of February 15-22 in London was marked by two virtuoso concerts, the more significant of which, probably, was the appearance in the Albert Hall of Ignace Paderewski on the evening of the 17th. The Polish pianist, as a mark of homage to the veterans of the Allied army, is giving a number of concerts in the principal cities of England—of which this was the first—the whole proceeds of which are to be given to the British Legion, the counterpart here of the American Legion in the United States.

Ever since the announcement of this free-will offering was made, the press has been full of expressions of gratitude for what it has generally called an act of unparalleled generosity. Now, after the first concert, the critics are equally enthusiastic about the pianist's art.

Find Pianist Unchanged

"Times have changed," says the Telegraph critic, reminiscing over Paderewski's early appearances, "but not, or hardly, Paderewski. He is still the poet par excellence of the piano, the lyric poet, that is. Take him all in all, there is the same almost uncanny intimacy, clarity, neatness, delicacy, finesse that have characterized his playing since his early professional days at Stuttgart. For him there is no tearing of passion to tatters. Calm, restrained, he is in all that he does, and all is so amazingly differentiated, so wonderfully apt to the music played. But why say more? There is of a truth but one Paderewski, and over him the years have rolled lightly by—heaven be thanked!"

Percy Scholes, in the Observer, was evidently as favorably impressed, but said in direct criticism only, "Generally speaking, the best pieces and the best playing went together." The Sunday Times writer went on: "On the ground of his virtuosity alone, Mr. Paderewski would be justly deemed incomparable. But not only can he beat the virtuosi at their own glittering game of legerdemain. There is no other living pianist who can reveal so acute a sensibility of the poetic content of music of the classical and romantic schools. His spirit was fully upon him" on the occasion of the concert under review.

Rose Quartet

The other virtuoso concert of the week was the annual reapparance of the Rose Quartet of Vienna. As last year, the critical response to the efforts of this veteran and much-respected ensemble seemed, to this writer at least, by no means commensurate with their artistry. But opinions in these matters will always differ. Thus the Observer critic wrote: "Strength and homogeneity of tone are evident, together with a well-poised rhythmic 'stance' that is never disturbed. The extreme refinement of some of our visiting organizations is not sought; the tone is conceived for broad and virile rather than for exquisitely finely-drawn effects." The Sunday Times conceded only unanimity of ensemble. Both these reviews were just paragraphs.

The Telegraph critique was rather more favorable. The writer, noting that the moderns would probably be unsympathetic to the temperament of the Viennese body, continued: "For these exponents of what is pre-eminently the classical school of string playing, purity is the thing—purity of conception, which becomes dignity and loftiness, purity of tone and intonation, which gives their reading austere beauty and character. They give us violin or cello tone as the great players of the past understood tone—both in volume and in quality. There were moments when the full sonority of the quartet might have been thought a match for any organ. And the four players are matched to perfection. Their unanimity is beyond praise."

Sauer Gives Recital

Immediately after the recital of the quartet, the Wigmore Hall was refilled to hear Emil Sauer's pianoforte concert. "There was some remarkably brilliant and dexterous playing" at this affair, wrote Mr. Legge in the Telegraph. "There seems to be nothing in the way of pianistic effect that Mr. Sauer cannot manage with an ease and security that in themselves suffice to hold the attention captive. He has in a rare degree the art of the grand manner, not disdaining rhetoric on occasion, but never—or rarely—allowing the spectacular element to confuse the issue." Yet "there were unconvincing moments." The Sunday Times remarked that: "It was a real pleasure to welcome again a veteran representative of the school of interpretation that aims at making vocal the genius of others."

Two symphonic concerts round off the account of the important events of the week—an L. S. O. affair at which Wilhelm Furtwaengler made his postponed appearance, and a Queen's Hall afternoon, under Sir Henry Wood, Senor Jose Iturbi, pianist, winning commendation for concerto and solo numbers.

ADOLPH BOLM

Will Have the Title Role in the Revival of Stravinsky's Ballet, Petrouchka, at the Metropolitan Friday Evening.

Handel Opera in Cambridge

What the press described as "an act of justice long overdue" was the revival of Handel's Semele at Cambridge by local amateurs on February 10. The performance seems to have had all the qualities implied by the word "amateur" in the best sense, and deep gratitude is expressed by most of the reviewers for the opportunity of hearing the work once more. Hardly more than the air Where'er You Walk is now ever sung on the concert stage.

The story is that of the fable familiarized by Ovid. Semele, an earthly maiden beloved of Zeus, has aroused Hera's jealousy. The goddess-mother, disguised as a servant, appears to her rival and, seemingly sympathetic, urges Semele to demand of Zeus that he take his true god-like form before her. It is, of course, death for a mortal to look upon the Olympian splendor, and Zeus, knowing this, is reluctant to comply. The unhappy maiden, however, urged on by Hera, continues to entreat this mark of doubtful favor—finally only too successfully, for the god yields and comes down from heaven in a thunderbolt which kills her.

Music Arouses Enthusiasm

The Telegraph's correspondent wrote: "What music! Surely Handel's contemporaries, when they were not blinded by prejudice, must have thought that nothing else was left for composers to do after him. An error, of course. . . . (Still) there is something Olympic about Handel at his best—and he is at his best in Semele. It is not only the mastery of his choral writing, but the combination of clearness and majesty, of sweetness and simplicity that astounds us. Music today is infinitely more touching, more affecting, more intensely human than then it was. But that serenity, that stateliness have gone forever—that is our loss. Nothing that has been written since has the grandeur of some of these choruses."

Beecham Substitutes

In London itself the week of February 8-15 was again fairly unexciting. The London Symphony Orchestra, deprived of the services of Wilhelm Furtwaengler (delayed on the Atlantic in his return from New York), secured the services of Sir Thomas Beecham for its most recent concert. The press, without prejudice to Mr. Furtwaengler, be it said, agreed that this was "a blessing in disguise."

A broadcast symphony concert had listed Bruno Walter as conductor for a program made up of Wagner and Berlioz excerpts. The principal baritone of the Munich opera, Herr Wilhelm Rode, was the soloist, but for some reason the critical verdicts were not as favorable as they might have been. The Sunday Times declared the singer "fervent if not particularly resonant," while the Observer thought him "indeed a very sound artist, with a pleasant if not a very varied vocal color."

In addition to these events on the larger scale, there were given several of a series of historical chamber music recitals given by the Lener Quartet, a program of eighteenth century vocal music, in which Miss Dorothy Silk and the sextet of English Singers participated, and a concert of unaccompanied choral music—Bach, madrigals and modern English music—by the London Choral Society. P. L.

Fleta Sings in Madrid

Madrid, March 4.—The fiftieth anniversary of the first performance of Bizet's opera Carmen at the Opera Comique in Paris in 1875 was celebrated last night at the Royal Theatre. Miguel Fleta, the Spanish tenor, a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York, sang the role of Don Jose.

King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, the Infantes of Spain, members of the Military Directorate and of the Diplomatic Corps and other prominent personages attended. Senor Fleta received an ovation.

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill. Aeolian Hall, New York

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Youth Conducts at Augusteum

Willy Ferrero, Known as Child Prodigy, Returns; Rome Hears Girl of Golden West, and Pianist.

Rome.

At the ripe age of twenty years Willy Ferrero, known as a conductor-prodigy in Italy ever since he was a child of seven, was conductor at the Augusteum concert on February 8. His studies completed, he is no longer regarded as a prodigy here, but as a leader of mature talents and pretensions. This was his first public appearance in some years, for he retired a few seasons ago and devoted himself to private study.

The public of the Augusteum received him at first with reserve, but by the time he reached the end of the First Symphony of Beethoven, which was the first number on his program, he was accorded what amounted to an ovation.

Signor Alaleona wrote in Il Mondo: "Of the prelude to Mascagni's Maschero Willy Ferrero offered such a lucid and vibrant performance that the entire audience was unanimous in its demand for a repetition. The youthful conductor maintained his success through the remainder of the program, which included the Gigue of Martucci; the Scherzo of Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream; and the Prelude to Wagner's Meistersinger."

The youth's most recent studies took place in the Vienna Conservatory, where he worked with Springer. He composed while there a symphonic poem, which will shortly have its first performance.

Puccini Work at Costanzi

Puccini's Girl of the Golden West was given at the Costanzi Theatre on January 30. Edoardo Vitale was the conductor of the evening, and a large part of the applause of the audience was directed toward him in recognition of his work. Under his leadership the orchestra was docile and flexible, and the singers and chorus were visibly so affected by the fire and enthusiasm of his directing that they all gave performances of the first order.

Signor Gasco, the reviewer of La Tribuna, wrote that Signora Iva Pacetti (Minnie) displayed, in spite of indisposition, a voice of the finest tone, and strong in its highest range. This critic presaged a brilliant future for the young soprano.

The tenor Crimi sang with moving expression the two arias, and his voice at all times during the evening was voluminous and flexible, riding clearly above the orchestra in passages of full orchestration. The baritone Parvis was an excellent Jack Rance.

The other members of the cast also deserved praise: Tega, Nardi, Dentale, de Petris, Uxa, Pellegrino, Viltani, and de Franco. The newspaper reviewers were of one opinion in hoping that the opera would have several repetitions this season.

Pianist Appears With Orchestra

One of the important recent recitals at the Augusteum was the appearance of A. Ariani, pianist, with an orchestra conducted by Alfredo Morelli. The soloist's program included two concertos played with orchestra, Chopin's E minor and Beethoven's E flat. As a solo group he played also Schumann's Carnival.

F. C.

Sing Parsifal in Strasbourg

Strasbourg.

The event of the season at the Municipal Theatre here has been the performance of Wagner's Parsifal. The brilliance of the production from all points of view has eclipsed the operatic ventures of many seasons. Much of the credit for the success of this Parsifal is due to M. H. Villefranck, director of the theatre, but the chief praise is due to Paul Bastide, who at the head of the orchestra did wonders with the Wagnerian score.

Vocally, Louise Mancini, the Kundry, was the center of attraction. Histrionically, the artist showed considerable talent and warm temperament. The tenor, Carrere, in the title part sang with great lyrical beauty, but at times his voice lacked luster. His acting was convincing.

In the part of Gournemanz the basso, Grommen, made a deep impression. Jose Danse was an excellent Amfortas, both vocally and histrionically. The chorus, re-enforced by members of the local Conservatoire and of the Concordia Argentina, was directed by M. E. G. Munch, and did excellent work. The scene of the flower maidens was enhanced by the beauty of the voices of the singers and the rich color of the setting.

R. S.

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Society, standing with Gino B. Baldini, Assistant Manager of the orchestra, in one of the beauty spots of Havana, Cuba, which the orchestra visited for a series of four concerts on its recent Southern tour.

Bordeaux Hears Mme. Vix In Performances of Salome

Bordeaux.

A series of performances of Richard Strauss' Salome, with Genevieve Vix in the title role, has been given at the Municipal Theatre here. Mme. Vix was especially engaged for these performances by the directors of the theatre, Renee Chauvet and G. Maurt-Lafage.

According to the Bordeaux newspaper reviews Mme. Vix gave a wellnigh perfect interpretation of Salome. Her singing was excellent, and her unusual acting abilities were displayed from moment to moment as the drama progressed.

In the dance of the seven veils Mme. Vix appeared herself, and was heartily applauded for her grace and passion. Mlle. Yvonne Alard and MM. Tindel and Charat contributed toward the performances the successes which they were. The orchestra was remarkable under the leadership of M. G. Razigade, and the general setting of the opera was an effective element in its presentation.

R. S.

Belgian Tenor Makes Paris Debut at Opera-Comique

Paris.

A leading tenor of the Theatre de la Monnaie of Brussels, M. Burdino, who recently joined the company of the Opera-Comique, made his debut as Don Jose in Carmen in the Salle Favart. The reviewers were in the main of the opinion that the debut was successful.

The young tenor seemed somewhat nervous in the first act, and his unsteadiness influenced his singing. In the second act he was more at ease. His singing of the Flower Song was so well appreciated that the applause of the audience compelled him to give an encore.

Physically M. Burdino made an excellent impression. He looks the part of the operatic hero in a way which few singers can equal. His voice was good too. The tone was even in all ranges, and his high notes flowed easily and without strain.

Mme. Chenal as Carmen seconded the new tenor with her interpretation of Carmen. This is one of the best portrayals in the entire repertory of the Opera-Comique. M. Bourdin was unsuited in the role of Escamillo, so that his impersonation was not impressive. M. Frigara was the conductor.

English Pianist Heard Again

For his second recital in the Salle Erard Mr. E. Howard Jones, English pianist, selected his program from the works of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, and Delius. The three preludes of the last-named composer, which hearkened somewhat to Debussy, made one regret that more English compositions were not included in this recital. Again Mr. Jones showed that he has more than technical virtuosity as a pianist. He interprets with intelligence and poetic spirit.

The movement of the voices in the Bach pieces was brought out with unusual clarity. The broad sentiment of Beethoven, and the delicate poetry of Chopin were equally well produced.

K. H. S.

BONCI

VOCAL STUDIO

For particulars regarding lessons apply directly to Signor Bonci at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and 72nd Street. Telephone Endicott 1900.

Knabe Fiano

MARJORIE MEYER

SOPRANO

Management: Standard Booking Office, 17 East 42d St., New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

BARITONE

MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York

KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

JOHN McCORMACK

EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist

MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY

511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

MORE than 700 persons attended the ninth annual convention of the Nebraska State Music Teachers' Association, held in Lincoln on February 9, 10, and 11. Fifteen hundred names of musicians were added to the mailing list of the association as a result of the musical survey made of the State by Adrian Newens of the University School of Music.

No stand was taken by the convention on the question of standardization and licensing of teachers, which was one of the topics under discussion. New officers were elected and the invitation was accepted to hold the 1926 convention in Omaha.

George Boyle gave a piano recital at the Institute of Musical Art, New York, on February 28. Bach-Liszt, Bach-Busoni, Gluck-Brahms, Chopin and three compositions by Mr. Boyle made up the program.

A recent addition to the faculty of Fordham University is Frank Patterson, composer, whose The Echo was awarded first prize offered by the Opera in Our Language Foundation of Chicago. Mr. Patterson will give a course in musical composition.

Helen Morgan, artist-pupil of Edoardo Petri, has been heard recently in Chicago.

The Italian Ministry of Public Instruction, according to a report recently received from Rome, has announced the establishment of a summer school of music for advanced study of foreigners in general and Americans in particular. The use of the Villa d'Este at Tivoli has been given by the Italian government. The nine weeks' course will commence on July 6.

The director of the school will be Ottorino Respighi, who will also teach the class in composition. Also on the faculty will be Ernesto Consolo, Mario Corti, and Delia Valeri.

Leo Ornstein will continue next season as head of the piano department of the Philadelphia Musical Academy, according to an announcement from the Academy.

The soloist at the concert given by the Associated Glee Clubs of America at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on March 31 will be Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. Nearly 1,000 singers will take part in the choral singing.

Louis Lane, pianist, and artist pupil of Edwin Hughes, appeared recently in concert in White Plains, N. Y., and Farmingdale, N. J.

Madalyn Maier, soprano, pupil of Francis Rogers, has signed a contract for a four months' tour of the larger cities in the South and Middle West, to begin in May.

An informal lecture on The Dance was given at the New York studio of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Olmstead, March 1. This was one of a series which Mr. Olmstead is giving for his vocal pupils and invited guests. He spoke of the influence of the dance upon the development of musical forms, and made interesting comparisons of the different classical dances. The illustrations were taken from the classic dances of Bach, arranged for violin and piano by Mrs. Olmstead and played by Mary Tanner Fairchild and Mrs. Olmstead and danced by Marie Fluegel and Alice Smith.

The National Association of Schools of Music and Allied Arts held its second general meeting in Rochester, N. Y., on Saturday, February 28, as the guest of the Eastman School of Music in that city. Preliminary to the general meeting, there was a meeting on Friday of the Commission on Curricula under the chairmanship of Howard Hanson, to prepare its report and recommendations on the standardization and interpretation of courses of study. It was the business of the general meeting to discuss the report of this commission and adopt such standards as make possible the proper rating of students in the different schools.

Four concerts were given during February by the members of the Cranberry Piano School (New York and Brooklyn). Mr. Cranberry made a short introductory address before each concert, the last of which took place on February 28 at the home of Mrs. Charles Rutan van Etten, in Brooklyn. Appearing in this recital were Emily Abel, Edith Anderson, Anita Wilkes, Carol van Etten, Adelaide Sullivan, Shirley Holloway, Maurice Giraldi, Betty Doig, Ruth Burritt, Ruth Crosson, Eleanor Olney, Grace Castagnetta, and Charlotte Rado.

Horatio Connell, baritone, and member of the faculty of the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, was heard in recital recently at the Institute.

CARL FLESCH

Who Teaches in the Violin Department of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, With His Little Russian Protege, Isaac Briselli.

Peter W. Dykema, head of music education at Teachers' College, Columbia University, who spoke on Significant Tendencies in Music Teaching Today at the sixth annual convention of the Virginia Music Teachers' Association, held in Richmond, February 13 and 14, advocated that musical instruction should be provided for children by taxation.

He advanced as his thesis that children receiving adequate musical training in the public schools "will be turned back into the body politic a happier, more contented and more forward looking set of people."

Two French singers, known in America, will have charge of the vocal department of the Fontainebleau School of Music this summer. They are George Maugiere and Thomas Salignac.

The Woman's Club of Sarasota recently presented Alexis Tcherkassky, baritone, in a recital, assisted by Ruth Shirley, soprano, and Mrs. Jessie S. Pamplin, accompanist. Miss Shirley is a pupil of Mrs. Pamplin.

Singing Teachers Outline Instructors' Qualifications

As a result of recent charges filed with the New York City authorities accusing some alleged singing teachers of incompetence, many prominent teachers in New York expressed their realization of existing abuses and pledged their co-operation to remedy the evil.

With this in mind, a group of men, all of them singers and teachers of singing and members of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing, recently discussed the problem of setting forth in simple and plain terms what they think the requirements are that every teacher of singing must possess to warrant his considering himself a teacher, naming only such endowment and attainment as is fundamental and indispensable.

As the result of this discussion the Academy has adopted for its own guidance and offers to professional colleagues and the public at large the following qualifications:

1. A good general education, including a thorough knowledge of the correct pronunciation and use of the English language.
2. An ear, accurate in judging pitch and quality of tone.
3. At least five years of study with competent teachers of singing.
4. Musicianship, including knowledge of the history of music, elementary harmony, form, analysis, style, and the ability to play the piano.
5. Ability to demonstrate vocally the principles of singing.
6. Ability to impart knowledge.

The New York Federation of Music Clubs of which Mrs. Harry Leonard Vibbard of Syracuse is president, recently presented five new instruments to the band and orchestra of Auburn prison. This was made possible by special contributions from the Morning Musicales of Syracuse, the Salon Musical of Syracuse, the Rochester Morning Musicals, and the Monday Musical Club of Albany, together with personal donations from interested club members; no money was taken from the Federation treasury.

The winners of the scholarship of $100 each, awarded by the Schubert Club of St. Paul, Minn., in its third annual contest for students scoring the highest number of points, were George Rosen, violin; Marie Luedke, voice, and Winifred Reichmuth, piano. The trials were conducted by Mrs. R. E. van Kirk, and seven local musicians were judges.

The Institute of Musical Art gave its twelfth annual public concert in Aeolian Hall, New York, February 25, with Franz Hone, violinist, and Anna Levitt, pianist, as soloists with the orchestra. The Madrigal Choir of the Institute sang five a cappella numbers.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

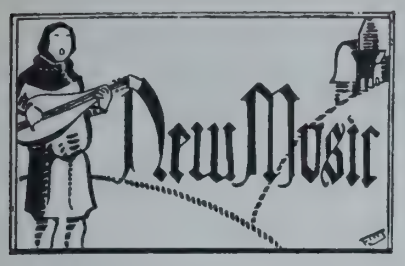
WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

PIETRO CIMINI
CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



SIX WALTZES from the Opus 39 of Johannes Brahms have been issued in a concert arrangement by Richard Burmeister. The edition is published by the Oliver Ditson Company.

The waltzes included in this group are those usually numbered 13, 2, 4, 6, 15 and 1. Mr. Burmeister has been careful to close the series in the same key in which it started, B major.

In so far as the edition of the waltzes with respect to fingering and phrasing is concerned, the editor's work is at least satisfactory, but the attempt to link the pieces together is crude. There are five measures of introduction which might better be omitted. They remind one of the vamp in an ordinary popular song. Besides, they detract effectiveness from the motif of the composition by giving it once too often.

Between the first and the second waltzes of the set there are included five measures of modulation. As in the other modulatory passages introduced in this edition, the harmonic process selected is mainly that of sequence. A figure is repeated rising or falling in the scale until the editor has reached the key he wants. In almost every case the work is ineffectively done because instead of keeping the music going, as the bridge passages intend, they give the feeling that the music is dawdling about, trying to work into something or other.

As a grand finale the recapitulation of the first theme in the B major waltz (No. 1) is extended in an octave passage which also leans heavily on the sequential method of modulating toward a strong cadence. The effect is not very good.

The feeling from beginning to end of the arrangement is that it would be much more musical to play the waltzes, whether these six, or any other permutation or combination of them, one after another with pauses between. In these days of harmonic adventure it is not necessary to grease the listener carefully from one key to another quite remote by an elaborate modulatory process, no matter how skillful. There can be a certain fascination in the abrupt change of key color from one episode to another in the playing of a group of short and concise pieces.

Miss Ligotti in Second Program

Erminia Ligotti gave her second New York recital at Town Hall February 26 with Michael Anselmo as assisting violinist, and Romualdo Sapio accompanying. To quote the Herald Tribune writer, Miss Ligotti again displayed "a voice of satisfactory volume, and a quality of tone that was generally clear and pleasing. . . . Vivacity and expressive capacity were marked assets."

Seattle Music

Seattle, Feb. 27.—The newly organized Seattle Oratorio Society, J. W. Bixel, conductor, presented Judas Maccabeus before a good sized audience. This was the first appearance of the organization, and it was well received.

Frederic Dixon, American pianist, gave a concert on February 13 in the auditorium of the First Christian Church.

Alice Seckels, manager of the Master School of Musical Arts, with headquarters in San Francisco, visited here in the interests of the school during the current month.

Guy Maier and Lee Pattison delighted a large audience by their ensemble playing upon their first appearance in Seattle on February 11.

A concert tendered to the music lovers of Seattle by the Rice-Watters Company, representing the Edison Company, featured Betsey Lane Shepherd, assisted by Jacques Glockner, cellist. The Spanish Ballroom of the Olympic Hotel, where the concert was held, was filled to capacity.

The Seattle Musical Art Society presented the newly organized Davenport Engberg String Quartet, assisted by Edouard Potjes, pianist, and Walter Nash, cellist, on the occasion of its Third Morning Musical. The Schubert Quintet, Kreutzer Sonata by Beethoven, and the Tschaikowsky Quartet, Op. 11, were given.

The Ladies' Lyric Club and the Amphion Male Chorus joined forces under the leadership of Mr. Graham Morgan and gave Handel's Samson. The Presbyterian Church auditorium was well filled. The soloists were chosen from the organizations. Mr. W. H. Gerrard made a good impression as Manoah.

Sergei Rachmaninoff was heard in recital at the Metropolitan Theatre on February 19 and played to a packed house.

On February 23 the Spargur Quartet made its final appearance for the season. Many works new to Seattle have been presented this winter, and the constantly increasing attendance shows the appreciation of the public.

Mme. Pavlowa and her organization danced to packed houses for four performances, given in the Metropolitan Theatre under the management of Frank P. Hood. H. G. S.

Photo by Daguerre

FREDERICK CHOPIN

As Portrayed by Jean Val in the Motion Picture by the Name of the Composer, One of the Music Master Series, Which Was Played at the New York Rivoli Theatre Last Week.

Prepare American Opera

Rehearsals are in full swing at the studio of Charles Trier for the world premiere of The Garden of Mystery, the American opera by Charles Wakefield Cadman, which will be given at Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 20 for the benefit of the Association of Music School Settlements. The libretto, adapted by an American, Nellie Richmond Eberhart, from Nathaniel Hawthorne's famous story, Rappaccini's Daughter, enlists a cast not only native born but of pioneer stock.

George Walker will sing the role of Rappaccini; Helene Cadmus will take the part of Beatrice; Yvonne de Treville, that of Bianca; Ernest Davis, Giovanni; and Hubert Linscott, Enrico. Howard Barlow will conduct.

The remainder of the evening's program will include songs of Cadman sung by the Indian Princess, Tsianina, with the composer at the piano; the Woodland Suite of MacDowell, and a violin solo by Max Pollikoff.

Gigli in Metropolitan Farewell

Beniamino Gigli made his farewell appearance with the Metropolitan Opera Company in L'Africana March 2. Mr. Gigli was given a three minute ovation after O Paradiso and recalled before the curtain many times. Elisabeth Rethberg, who sang Selika, was reported to be suffering from a cold. Nevertheless, the reviewers were unanimous in their praise of her singing.

CARL VAN VECHTEN is a clever man and a clever writer. At present he is writing clever novels; when he was younger he wrote musical criticism. A group of his papers on musical subjects, Red, has been published lately by Alfred A. Knopf, New York.

In his Valedictory Mr. Van Vechten writes of his youth as a music critic, and how his interests gradually turned in different directions. He rationalizes somewhat about this transformation, but the rationale is not convincing even to himself. At any rate he dropped out of the world of music. What has persuaded him to appear again on the musical scene again he does not say, but now he has gathered together a number of his essays, all of which have appeared in print in past years, and issued them anew. Some of them are a little out of date, but all are thoroughly interesting and brisk reading for musician or layman. Mr. Van Vechten's cleverness takes care of that.

The various articles treat of innumerable subjects, for the author (in this respect of the schools of James Gibbons Huneker, George Jean Nathan, and H. L. Mencken) never resists the temptation to mention a name, and he bites therefore into many apples.

Mr. Van Vechten is interested in movies in connection with music. He discusses several possibilities in the connection of these arts. He looks forward to the time when music will be so aptly synchronized with motion pictures that every minute mood of the story on the screen will be enhanced by fitting musical representation. He also plays with the idea of the use of movies for program notes in making clear to audiences exactly what is happening in the music which they are hearing.

The author writes of the depiction of heaven and hell in music, on the re-writing of masterpieces, on American music, on hearing what you want when you want, and so on. The last essay, while entertaining, includes not a little nonsense. Mr. Van Vechten discourses on the fitness of surroundings in the hearing of certain compositions. He makes connections between Brahms and beer gardens, Ornstein and Manhattan Bridge, Don Quixote and the farm-yard, Sinfonia Domestica and department stores, etc., which are rather worthy of the editorial department of a certain Chicago daily whose editorial articles on music are by now famous.

But Mr. Van Vechten knows when he is joking, which is a virtue. Red should be read.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

"Music & Letters"
FOUNDED 1920
The British Musical Quarterly
100 pages: 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
"Music and Letters is the best thing of its kind that is published, and forms a valuable addition to the library."—Musical Standard, August 23rd, 1924.
LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

Former Senator Clark Expires in New York

Pioneer in Copper, He Also Was a Devoted Patron of the Fine Arts.

Former Senator William Andrews Clark expired suddenly last Monday week, at seven-thirty p. m., in his New York home, 962 Fifth avenue. Although eighty-six years old, he was in moderately good health until a few days before his death when he succumbed to a cold. His physical resistance was unequal to overcoming pneumonia, which developed. Funeral services were held last Friday afternoon, and the remains of the distinguished pioneer in copper placed in the Clark mausoleum at Woodlawn cemetery, near New York City.

While the world at large has generally identified former Senator Clark as a discoverer and developer of mining properties and a financier, his friends knew him as a patron and lover of the fine arts. Although he himself played no active part in the upbuilding of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, he took a keen pride in the work accomplished by his son, William Andrews Clark, Jr., who is its founder and sole guarantor.

The interest of this distingushed American in the cultural side of life was evidenced in his collection of objets d'art . . . which he began to acquire after he had attained middle age in life and could afford the time to thus indulge himself. He even mastered the French language, spent several months a year in France, and, by degrees, assembled and had placed in the gallery of his distinctive New York mansion paintings, tapestries, panels, and other art objects which—quite apart from their vast intrinsic value—were fitting tributes to the taste of a discerning and appreciative connoisseur. It was in this Clark art gallery that the former Senator had built a fine pipe organ, which he loved to have played for him.

There was displayed constantly in the life of this illustrious citizen a quality of initiative, industry, sagacity, and courage which carried him while still a comparatively young man to a pre-eminent place in the industrial affairs of the nation. He entertained broad and sound views in his estimate of essentials and of men; and he recognized and rewarded efficient and loyal service.

Former Senator Clark was married in March, 1869, to Miss Kate L. Stauffe, of Connellsville, Pa., who died in 1893. They had two sons, William Andrews Clark, Jr., and Charles W. Clark, and two daughters, Mrs. Lewis Rutherford Morris and Mrs. Mary Clark de Brabant. In May, 1901, former Senator Clark married Miss Anna E. La Chapelle. They had two daughters. Of the grandchildren, William A. Clark, III, son of William Andrews Clark, Jr., who reached his majority last December, is the oldest.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
"The Goose Hangs High"
ALL STAR CAST
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"THUNDERING HERD"
WITH JACK HOLT AND LOIS WILSON
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Baritone, Sang His Season Farewell to New York Last Week and Is Again on Concert Tour.

Carnegie Foundation to Aid Schools to Standardize

(Continued from page 1)

Among other members of the association are: William Boeppler, Wisconsin Conservatory; Felix Borowski, Chicago Musical College; Charles Wakefield Cadman, University of Southern California; Kate Chittenden, American Institute of Applied Music; Nellie C. Cornish, Cornish School of Music; Carl Faelton, Faelton Pianoforte School; E. R. Kroeger, Kroeger School of Music; Earl Rosenberg, Horner Institute; Grace H. Spofford, Curtis Institute.

As a result of a report of the Commission on Ethics at the recent meeting, the following recommendations for the member schools were made and adopted by the Association:

1. That all advertising be strictly accurate, avoiding exaggeration and flamboyance.
2. That no teacher in one school be approached by another school without the full knowledge and consent of the school where the teacher is already employed; and that incompetent teachers be not engaged for ulterior reasons.
3. That no direct attempt be made by one school to influence the students of other schools or private teachers to change, and no false hopes of advancement or promise of engagements be made to influence students.
4. That teachers give due credit for work done by students with a former teacher, not claiming such students as their own until at least one semester's instruction has been given.
5. That the granting of unearned degrees or diplomas be condemned.
6. That unjustifiable cutting of rates or offering of fake scholarships to increase attendance be discouraged, and the number of free or partial scholarships be restricted.

Harmati Wins Award

The prize of five hundred dollars offered by the Chamber Music Association of Philadelphia for the best string quartet submitted has been awarded to Sandor Harmati for his composition, Recollections.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
"THE DENIAL"
WITH CLAIRE WINDSOR AND WILLIAM HAINES
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

You can't keep a good tenor down it would seem . . . judging by the vocal resources exhibited by Giovanni Martinelli at his recent reappearance with the New York Metropolitan Opera Company—and the enthusiasm which prevailed in the audience over his safe return.

* * *

A story is running around in Europe to the effect that certain aspirants for opera recognition, who are buying their appearances with cash, have caused a wave of disapproval and displeasure in their direction. Statements are made that the continuance of this practice is keeping out of debut opportunities singers (and Americans) who deserve to have them.

* * *

Now and again one reads (in some music journal willing enough to publish it) an advertisement setting forth the success (?) at some foreign opera house of a singer (?) whose singing reputation is not of the best.

* * *

Still—reading is not always believing.

* * *

The New Orleans Item publishes the following concerning Robert Hayne Tarrant, the music impresario:

"Mr. Tarrant will celebrate Mardi Gras by wearing green smilax, royal purple violets and yellow calendula, featuring the official colors of the Carnival. Bat-wing tie of royal purple, crepe de chine handkerchief of the same hue; cinnamon brown spring suit, with hat to match and purple feather to denote gay season before sackcloth and ashes; canton crepe shirt and wing collar."

* * *

Make way for a new baritone, one Thomas Denijs, who is Dutch, and will sing the music of Christus in the approaching performance of Bach's St. Matthew's Passion Willem Mengelberg is to conduct in New York's Carnegie Hall.

* * *

D. Edward Porter, retiring associate manager of the New York Philharmonic, is of medium height and rotund. Edward Ervin, his successor, is tall and slender. Charles Pearson, who will take charge of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra business affairs, is betwixt and between. Just what the physical characteristics of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra new manager are cannot at the moment be revealed—though Lines-O'-Newser knows the man who is being considered for the job.

* * *

Quite an array of celebrities attended the repetition generale of Mandragola, Ignatz Waghalter's operetta, at the New York Princess Theatre last Wednesday evening.

* * *

Charles Hackett, the Chicago Opera leading tenor, will have his concerts booked for him by Wolfsohn. The two Charlies—Hackett and Wagner—have shaken hands and called off their business association, which began when Hackett joined the Metropolitan Opera Company some eight years ago.

* * *

That admirable pianist and accompanist, Arpad Sandor, sailed away for Germany last week on the SS. Cleveland. He will appear publicly in many European cities before he returns, next autumn, for his United States concert activities.

Giulio Gatti-Casazza has been much moved by the sudden death of Giuseppe Lusardi, the Italian agent of the Metropolitan. On hearing of his death Mr. Gatti-Casazza said of him, "Lusardi was a man of great intelligence, and of generosity too. I had business and personal relations with him for twenty years, and during that time my admiration for his honorable personal qualities grew from year to year. He died much too soon."

* * *

And now we have another conductor—none other than Sandor Harmati, who has been first violin of the Lenox String Quartet since its founding, and has just won the $500 prize in composition offered by the Philadelphia Chamber Music Society.

* * *

Burnet Tuthill, general manager of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and secretary of the Society for the Publication of American Music, spent a few days in New York last week. So did Kenneth M. Bradley, who is prime mover in the National Association of Schools of Music and Allied Art, so recently brought to the favorable notice of the Carnegie Foundation.

* * *

John McCormack played golf at Ormond Beach, Fla., last Tuesday. He was followed about by a large gallery. They must have been expecting him to start singing at any moment, for, according to reports, John's golf game was more to listen to than to watch. Statistically minded spectators turned in fabulous scores for the Irish tenor, but he insisted that several hundred of his practice swings had been included in the computations by mistake.

* * *

Maria Mueller, new soprano of the Metropolitan, has been a busy singer of late. A fortnight or so ago she sang in Das Rheingold on Thursday, in Die Meistersinger on Friday, and in Giovanni Gallurese on Saturday. Perhaps for convenience Miss Mueller is having her meals served in the wings . . . a la six day bicycle race.

* * *

The New York cops have many talents (maybe that for catching crooks is among them). Now there are sixty-five of them, the Police Band under Captain Paul Henneberg, touring about the country to show what they can do in a musical way. Before starting out they tried out their stuff on the home town folks. Everything went well . . . but then Marguerite d'Alvarez helped them.

* * *

Giuseppe Danise took a few high notes in his car in Central Park last week. He discovered that while one can sing thirty miles an hour and be applauded for it in an opera house, an open road in the Park is different. The magistrate rated Giuseppe's transgression at $25. While he was paying the fine the baritone had a far-away look in his eye. He was counting up the number of notes he would have to sing in the next Pagliacci to make up the sum.

* * *

Mme. Charles Cahier has two pressing dates in April, one with the New York Philharmonic on the fourteenth and one at the San Francisco music festival on the eighteenth. She proposes to go from coast to coast by airplane. Rather high range for a contralto.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Opera in the Flesh
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 22 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, MARCH 17, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

MAR 21 1925

W. Franke Harling, New York composer, whose one act opera, A Light From St. Agnes, will be given its premiere by the Chicago Civic Opera Company next season. Minnie Maddern Fiske is the librettist.

Bulletins of News

The ten weeks of opera to be given at Ravinia Park, Chicago, will begin on June 21. Among the artists who have been engaged to appear are Rosa Raisa, Lucrezia Bori, Graziella Pareto, Florence Easton, Giovanni Martinelli, Armand Tokatyan, Giuseppe Danise, Leon Rothier, Virgilio Lazzari and Giordano Paltrinieri. Gennaro Papi and Louis Hasselmans will conduct, and Armando Agnini will be the stage manager.

Philadelphia, March 16.—The New York Philharmonic Orchestra will give three concerts here next season, according to a recent announcement. The conductors scheduled to appear are Arturo Toscanini, Willem Mengelberg and Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

An American opera by W. Franke Harling, New York composer, will be given next season by the Chicago Civic Opera Company, it is reported. The name of the piece is A Light From St. Agnes. Minnie Maddern Fiske is the author of the book, which was presented some years ago as a play with Mrs. Fiske in the cast.

The opera is in one act and three scenes. It is understood that Rosa Raisa, Forrest Lamont, and Georges Baklanoff will create the leading roles, and Giorgio Polacco will conduct the premiere.

Ernest Schelling, one of the organizers of the benefit "piano festival" given last December by fifteen pianists at which $13,000 was raised to purchase an annuity for Moritz Moskowski, Polish pianist and composer, is negotiating with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to see if it is not possible for the company to defray the funeral expenses of the composer, who died before he received the annuity. The terms of the arrangement with the company stipulated that it should take the entire sum raised, and guarantee to pay the composer monthly $104 for the rest of his life, but he died shortly after the first payment was made.

Stravinsky's Petrouchka was revived at the Metropolitan Friday evening. The composer was present. Mr. Serafin conducted, and Mme. Galli and Messrs. Bolm, Bartik, Bonfiglio, and Agnini took part. A digest of the reviews of the ballet will appear in The Musical Digest next week.

Mme. Maria Jeritza, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will probably sing at Covent Garden, London, during the opera season there this spring. Arrangements for her appearances have not been completed.

Alglala, the American opera by Frank de Leone, will be presented by the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company under the direction of Alexander Smallens next season.

Taucher Suffers Bruises And Broken Finger in Fall

CURT TAUCHER escaped from his fall during the Wednesday afternoon performance of Siegfried at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, with a broken finger, some bruises, and a great deal of muscular soreness, an X-ray examination disclosed.

The audience that filled the house, Conductor Artur Bodanzky, and his fellow artists were unaware of the near-tragedy when Mr. Taucher stepped into an open trap-door on the stage during the change of scenery hidden only by the clouds of steam in the last act, and fell twenty-five feet into the cement-paved cellar. His fall was unobserved except by two stage hands, who rushed to his assistance. In spite of his injuries, Mr. Taucher insisted on continuing until the end of the opera.

He was unable to appear in the scheduled performance of Tristan und Isolde Saturday evening. Siegfried was substituted, with Rudolf Laubenthal in the title role.

N.Y. Symphony Will Move to New Hall

Society Quits Aeolian; Musicians Granted Pay Increase.

Among the important new plans for the activities of the New York Symphony Orchestra next season which have been announced by Harry Harkness Flagler, president of the Symphony Society, are the grant of an increase in pay to the musicians of the orchestra, and the transfer of a number of the concerts of the Society to the new Mecca Auditorium.

The members of the New York Symphony Orchestra will be paid $10 more per week in response to the feelers put out recently by Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. Several weeks ago the New York Philharmonic Society granted its musicians a similar rise.

Mr. Flagler announces further that the Sunday afternoon concerts of the Symphony Society, increased in number from sixteen to twenty, will be transferred from Aeolian Hall to the Mecca Auditorium, which extends through from Fifty-fifth to Fifty-sixth streets, east of Seventh avenue. This auditorium was completed some months ago, and has a seating capacity of nearly four thousand, although it has only two balconies.

